The break in the investigation stemmed from a statement by an unidentified man who said he and four others attended the meeting and planned the bombing.

Allen, a cripple, told arresting officers: "If its the bombing you're interested in, I don't know anything about it. I've never even seen a stick of dynamite." Detectives said they found penciled drawings of a Nazi swastika and anti-Semitic literature in Allen's home.

UNDER ARREST in addition to Allen and Bright were Robert A. Bowling, 25; Luther King Corley, 26, and Kenneth Chester Griffin, 32, all of Atlanta.

Investigators said they believe that when the $200,000 Atlanta blast is solved, it will clear up other synagogue bombings in Miami and Jacksonville, Fla.; Nashville, Tenn., and an attempted dynamiting in Birmingham, Ala. All the bombings have occurred in the past eight months.

Each Side Lays Blame On Other

New Meeting Call Soon, Says Mediator

By BERNADINE MARTIN
Journal Star Staff Writer

Negotiations between UAW Local 974 and Caterpillar Tractor Co. were recessed indefinitely last night, and a strike of more than 12,000 workers continued into the fifth day.

FEDERAL MEDIATOR Francis L. Sheridan said this morning he will call the two sides together soon, but would not commit himself on when.

In statements issued each side blamed the other for the stalemate.

The company said the union refused to accept a settlement offered on what it considered the union's own terms. At the point where it made this offer, the union backed away from its own statement, the company charged.

Local 974 denied this, and said the stumbling block is the company position that in order to get economic benefits which "come close" to the "pattern" established in the automotive industry and offers in the implement industry, the union must drop its request for contract language changes.

"This we are unwilling to do." Duane (Pat) Greathouse, UAW vice president said.

THE OBSTACLE developed, Greathouse said, after two major items of "procedural" difficulty had been disposed of.

He said it had become apparent that both the company and the unio had these difficulties in what to talk about first in bargaiinng which were major stumbling blocks to reaching a settlement.

"The company was insisting on splitting off the Morton and Mossville plants from East Peoria for representative, grievance procedure and seniority purposes, and the union was desirous of central negotiations covering all of the plants where UAW is the bargaining agent."

When the company said it was prepared to drop its request for separation of the plants, the union took the position that it would also drop its demand to bargain centrally.

"IT WAS the position of the union then that with these two items disposed of, we could be in a position to take the established economic pattern, and to negotiate, based upon their merits, those contract changes which were necessary in the present Local 974 agreement," Greathouse said.

"This the company has flatly refused to do." he continued. "It is the position of the company that in order to obtain an economic settlement which comes close to equalling the pattern established elsewhere the unin must drop its request for all needed contract changes."

THE COMPANY statement made no reference to the contract language changes.

"Negotiations have failed because the union would not accept this settlement offered on the union's own terms." Roger Kelley, East Peoria plant labor relations manager, said. "We pointed out that this obviously demonstrated a lack of good faith on the union's part and placed the responsibility for the continuance of this unnecessary strike squarely on the union's shoulders," the statement concluded.

Sheridan said the company and union had been meeting steadily for the last six or seven days, and he recessed negotiations because he felt

Continued on Page B-1

Peoria Journal Star

SUNDAY
CONTINUING
THE PEORIA TRANSCRIPT ESTABLISHED 1855 | THE PEORIA JOURNAL ESTABLISHED 1877 | THE PEORIA STAR ESTABLISHED 1897

Published Daily at War Memorial Drive, by The Peoria Journal Star, Inc.
Second class mail privileges authorized at Peoria, Ill

MEMBER AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATION

National advertising representative: Ward Griffith Company, Inc., New York, Chicago, Detroit, Boston Atlanta, San Francisco, Charlotte, Portland, Ore., Philadelphia.

United Nations Today

On this, the first day of worldwide United Nations Week, we cannot conscientiously offer three cheers for the 13-year-old organization. It has failed too conspicuously to do what it set out to do.

But neither can we say, "Let's scuttle it," because out of its failures there is beginning to emerge something that gives us hope.

Our best bet is to concentrate on those things which experience has shown may be possible for the U.N. Putting the American emphasis on those things, rather than on the failures, may hasten the evolution of an organization that will be a more effective keeper of peace than the dismal diplomacy upon which the world now relies.

Consider, for example, the proposal outlined last week by Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold. He has taken up President Eisenhower's suggestion of a U. N. "peace force." It is a relatively timid concept. It would be a paramilitary force, never used in combat except in self-defense. In its ranks would be no citizens of any of the five permanent members of the Security Council. It would be sent into a danger zone only with the consent of the country involved.

Even such a weak "force" will be opposed by the Soviet Union. Yet it would be the beginning of a way to make U. N. decisions something more than mere policy declarations.

A U. N. peace force would not have stopped the Soviet suppression of the Hungarian revolt. Nor would it have prevented the Korean war. But a similar group is now keeping peace in the Gaza strip. What is done in a small way might conceivably become the key to effective enforcement of U. N. decisions.

It is impossible to think of the U. N. today as an effective deterrent of Communist military ambitions. The Reds will take what they want unless they are opposed by superior force.

But we have learned that they can be hurt by adverse world opinion, and the U. N. General Assembly is an ideal sounding board. Widespread condemnation of Russia for its brutality in Hungary proved that.

There have been endless violations of the U. N. Charter and there will be more. But at the same time, some of the U. N. organizations have been making substantial progress. There are vast areas for constructive work—assistance to underdeveloped countries, raising world health standards, and control of thermonuclear force, to mention only three.

The U. N. does not much resemble the world peace organization that we pictured 13 years ago. But it begins to show promise of usefulness in limited areas.

It is in those areas that American support will be most helpful.

Varsity Letters For Brains

In some areas at least it appears that recognition finally is being given to outstanding students.

The board of education at Asbury Park, N. J., has voted to award varsity "A's" similar to the letters given athletes to all students who receive a yearly general average of 90 or higher. The scholastic letters will be the same size as those awarded athletes and will have a white border and a glod lamp of knowledge on the cross bar.

Some schools give awards for outstanding scholarship but most of them do not present letters of comparable size with those earned by the athletes. But why shouldn't scholastic awards be at least comparable with athletic trophies? Isn't learning rather than athletic prowess the principal reason we maintain our schools? You might not think so, judging from the comparative recognition given achievement in athletics and in scholastic endeavor but it is.

It should be a source of gratification to Peorians that this city's school system has not lagged behind in attributing importance to the academic program of our schools. The requirement that all students participating in extracurricular activities must maintain passing grades is the latest development along these lines. Formerly athletes were excluded from these requirements but there is no reason they should be placed on a plane apart.

Peoria in requiring scholastic achievement from all students is setting the pace just as much—and perhaps more effectively — than Asbury Park is by awarding letters for high scholarship.

Women Support Tough Driver Licensing

Tough driver license law enforcement, such as Illinois has had under Secretary of State Carpentier, is gaining strong support from the public.

Typical is this statement by Mrs. B. V. Todd, national safety chairman of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, delivered at the annual meeting of the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators:

"Women will support tougher state driver licensing practices to remove unfit drivers from the road because more and more the safety of their families is threatened by the reckless and incompetent driver in today's heavy traffic."

The public acceptance of strict enforcement of the driver license laws, as evidenced by Mrs. Todd's statement, is an indication of a realization that the unfit driver is a principal cause of traffic danger and that the only way to get him off the highway is through the lifting of his license.

The strictest kind of enforcement of license regulations has the support of the great majority of automobile drivers who feel a growing concern for the safety of themselves and their families. License administrators are on the right track in cracking down on incompetent and unfit drivers.

Gomer Bath

Straws In The Wind

Land Of the Free

A Peoria businessman had a small errand that took him across the river to the Caterpillar plant. It never occurred to him that the picket line would give him any difficulty. But he was promptly stopped there.

"You're not going in there," said a picket.

"Who says I'm not?" asked the businessman, irritated by the peremptory order.

"I say so," promptly replied the picket.

"Look, I have nothing to do with the strike. I don't work here and have no connection. I'm entirely neutral."

"You can't go in," said the picket.

"You heard what the man said," added another picket.

"I'm not buying or selling anything," said the businessman. "I came over to pick up a small article from the office. What right do you have to stop me?"

"You try to go in there and you'll see," was the reply.

"You heard the man," said the other picket. "Beat it."

A third picket approached. The businessman saw he had no chance to win that argument. He left.

"Oh! say, does that star-spangled banner yet wave O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?"

* * *

Episodes

Never let the little things
Ever get you down.
Just try to smile and carry on
And do not wear a frown.

It takes a lot of episodes
To make a problem big,
So do not nourish little ones.
(Each hog was once a pig.)

J. Marie Phillips,
Cuba, Illinois.

* * *

Bitter Lesson

Greater love hath no man than this, that he sit patiently beside wife (or son or daughter) as she practices car-driving. He suffers the agonies of a thousand imminent crashes, suppresses countless yells of warning, pushes on the floor boards with all his might, and finally gets out weak, trembling and exhausted.

* * *

Network Trouble

"Network trouble," Peoria television station WMBD told its audience at 6:15 p.m. Tuesday.

There was network trouble, all right, but not the kind the audience was led to believe.

The trouble was that CBS news was using a filmed report by Richard Roll on the Anshai Emeth Temple bombing in Peoria, and Mr. Roll is news director of another Peoria TV station, WTVH.

WMBD's deception kept Peorians from seeing the first local newsman make a national TV network.

* * *

Useless Statistics

Every 11 minutes, someone in this country dies in a traffic accident. Every two minutes someone dies of cancer, and every 52 seconds there is a heart disease death.

But every 16 seconds a couple gets married and every 7½ seconds a baby is born.

New Hope A-Nesting

Confident Living

You Can Learn From People

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Nino is a taxi driver in Rome. We first met some years ago when he drove me throughout Europe before we had discovered the fun of drive-it-yourself.

Now we were back in Rome for just three days and another friend, Giulio Rossi, who runs a garage in the Via Purificazione, met us at the airport. He told us that Nino's wife had died, and that Nino could no longer drive for him since that required trips away from Rome. Now Nino was driving his own cab, but, even so, he would love to take us for an afternoon in one of Giulio's cars.

The Lord blessed Nino with one of those glorious personalities for which radiant is the only word. He gets all tied up in his English, so excited is he about everything. He threw up his arms in a gesture of welcome when he saw me, and embraced me with such outgoingness that I just knew he loved me. It's a wonderful thing to know that someone really loves you just for yourself.

"I'M SO SORRY about your dear wife," I said. Nino fumbled with his wallet and pulled out a rather soiled and battered mourner's card such as are given out at funerals. It told about what a kindly, good woman she was. My friend stood pathetically looking at her picture. "I must care for the children alone . . . be mother and father," he said bravely.

"It must be awfully hard to carry on without her. She was indeed a beautiful soul," I said.

A strange look of peace came over Nino's face. "It is God's will," he replied with deep feeling. "God gave her to me, then He took her to Heaven. God helps me. I shall meet my angel again. God, He is very good."

Of course, this was a simple and not at all unique conversation, but suddenly I felt a strong sense of fellowship for this swarthy, genuine hearted man. He is Italian, I am American; he a Catholic, I a Protestant; he a taxi driver, I a preacher and writer. But what difference was there between us? Love made us brothers. He is my friend and I his, and I learned deeper faith from him.

It's rather amazing how some people are always wanting to meet so-called VIP's, celebrities, big shots, well known names. Many famous personalities are indeed fine persons, brilliant and interesting. And of course we can learn much from those who have done so much. If you expose yourself to such people, some of what they have may rub off. But not everybody associates with the well known for that purpose, but rather to bask in so-called celebrity glory. In my own experience rich values have been given me by those who are not known to fame or fortune. I think gratefully of them and prize their friendship.

George Matthew Adams

Whence Comes Comfort? It Comes From Heart

I wonder how many there are who recall the comforting arms of a mother? I recall this comfort vividly. I think of the childhood bumps and falls, and the little disappointments and sorrows—but that mother smoothed them all away. She brought comfort, the same as Jesus brought comfort to His followers, as an understanding friend has so often brought to each of us the warmth, hope and comfort that we all so much need.

There are persons whose presence immediately gives cheer and warmth to all about them. As though they were dedicated to be helpful and inspiring. How wonderful if we all might be this kind of a friend!

So much of our unhappiness can be tracked to loneliness. Big and little alike, however, experience loneliness, and its quickest cure comes when we turn the tables on ourselves and make it our business to try and put a little light and hope into the life of someone else. It's surprising how soon we discover that we are not lonely at all!

So much of our unhappiness can be traced to loneliness. Big and little alike, however, experience loneliness, and its quickest cure comes when we turn the tables on ourselves and make it our business to try and put a little light and hope into the life of someone else. It's surprising how soon we discover that we are not lonely at all.

Comfort comes from the heart. Never mind how it gets there. The thread of purpose runs through all our good intentions and fine impulses. From the hills, also, comes comfort. Their eyes scan great distances. They are the first to experience the rising of the sun, and its setting in the western sky.

All nature is symbolic of much that is forever alive within us—love, sympathy, a wholeness toward others. Nature is forever shedding its glory, being lavish in her generosity. From Nature we get our cue to life! Earth is our Mother. From her come all our comforts.

George Magenheimer

Dots And Dashes

You think animals and birds don't know what's going on and what to do to protect their own interests?

Take the case of Jasper the owl.

Jasper is a barred owl with a wing spread of 36 inches who lives in White Pines Forest State park. He's a beautiful bird with sleek feathers and a wise and benevolent expression who calls at the lodge each evening to be fed.

Recently a story—fortunately a false rumor — got going around that the state division of parks and memorials was going to get rid of Jasper. We don't know what the basis of the story was but nevertheless the rumor became rather widespread. A great many people wrote in to the parks division to protest against the reported order and to plead for Jasper's life.

Apparently the story got back to Jasper and he knew exactly what to do. Two weeks ago when William R. Allen, state superintendent of parks and memorials, visited White Pines with a party of downstate editors and publishers, Jasper decided to plead his case personally.

When Bill Allen got up Sunday morning after spending the night in one of the cottages, there was Jasper perched right over his door, cooing softly and blinking his eyes as if to prove that he was a gentle and desirable bird who never did any one any harm and who certainly didn't deserve to be killed.

He wasn't in any danger, of course, but he proved his point. If there had been any intention to dispose of Jasper he almost certainly would have averted that fate by going to plead his case directly with the big boss.

SPEAKING of birds and animals, owls are supposed to personify wisdom and Jasper proved that by seeking out the state superintendent. No owls came around my cottage but the squirrels kept me awake part of the night scampering over the roof right above my head. Guess that puts me in my place.

WHITE PINES abounds in all sorts of animals. A little chipmunk was prowling around the entrance to the lodge, apparently looking for some goodies. He wasn't the least bit perturbed by the people going in and coming out of the door but just kept up his search for something to eat.

Raccoons are plentiful around the park, too, and Mr. Allen told us about one which kept a woman visitor and her dog penned up in their cabin most of a day simply by occupying the porch of their cottage.

THE STATE PARKS are excellent places for the study of nature, trees and flowers as well as animals. The state employs naturalists who conduct tours at both White Pines and Starved Rock. We met both Mrs. Suess at White Pines and Bob Burns at Starved Rock. They conduct daily tours through the parks, explaining the trees and geological features, when they are on duty, and it is well worth any one's time to join one of their tours.

Cartoon Comments On Sputtering G. O. P. Campaign

When The Political Rains Came

Hesse in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat

'Happy Birthday . . . And I'd Like A Big Slice'

Berryman in the Washington Star

Maybe This Will Get Action

Brett in the Miami Herald

'But, Sahib, We Were Getting Used To Hay'

Mauldin in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Roll, Dick

7

PRESENTATION

ON

RICHARD T. ROLL

AGE -- 39
MARRIED
2 DAUGHTERS

Education -- High School, 10 years study of piano and music theory.

358 TWIN LANE SOUTH
WANTAGH, N. Y.
PHONE -- SUnset 1-6484

20 years in radio work

News---Sports (commentary and play-by-play) ---Commercial announcing--- Moderating---Narration---Writing---Acting---Singing.

WHIZ ---------- Zanesville, Ohio.

WHIO ---------- Dayton, Ohio.

WTOL ---------- Toledo, Ohio.

NBC-WTAM ------- Cleveland, Ohio.

WTFM ---------- Tiffin, Ohio.

WLOK ---------- Lima, Ohio.

Liberty Broadcasting System --- Washington, D.C. and New York

Columbia Broadcasting System -- New York.

MILITARY SERVICE --- 1½ years in France and Germany with 44th Infantry Division.

BACKGROUND SHEET #1.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM
New York

Joined CBS in June, 1952 as writer and assistant to Allan Jackson. Travelled with Mr. Jackson on numerous personal appearance tours and assisted him in covering the 1952 political conventions and the Eisenhower Inauguration.

Wrote and aired 6 P.M. Saturday news on CBS Radio network for eight weeks, subbing for Edward P. Morgan.

Subbed for Jim McKay on CBS-TV sports program.

BACKGROUND SHEET #2.

LIBERTY BROADCASTING SYSTEM
Washington and New York

Joined Liberty in May, 1951, as Director of News and White House Correspondent in Washington.

Wrote and aired three 15 minute newscasts daily on some 400 LBS stations.

Wrote and delivered a 15 minute review of the week's news each Sunday.

Directed and moderated two special half hour shows weekly:

"PUBLIC HEARING," which featured two or more outstanding Congressmen debating or discussing an important issue of the day, and

"YOUTH AND THE DRAFT," which was designed to give listeners the latest news on the draft and how it would affect young America. For this, I worked through Mrs. Anna Rosenberg and the Defense Department; Selective Service and the American Council on Education. Regulars on the program each week were Selective Service Director General Hershey and Dr. Arthur S. Adams, President of the American Council on Education. In addition, a high ranking officer from one of the services would appear as the show highlighted that particular service, explaining the opportunities for young men or women in that branch. Dr. M. H. Trytten of the Educational Testing Service was the guest several times, explaining the Draft Deferment Tests.

Also handled "THE UN AND YOU," a 15 minute weekly program highlighting various segments of the United Nations.

Attended the news conferences each week of President Truman and Secretary of State Acheson, as well as covering Capitol Hill.

Held private conferences each week with State Department officials, such as Assistant Secretary Dean Rusk, Ambassador at Large Phillip Jessup, BACKGROUND SHEET #3.

LIBERTY BROADCASTING SYSTEM
Washington and New York

Under Secretary John Hickerson, Assistant Secretary for Near Eastern Affairs Burton Y. Berry and Thomas Cabot, Assistant Secretary for Foreign Aid.

Covered many special events for the network, such as Armed Forces Day at Bolling Field.

Was transferred to the New York operation of LBS in October, 1951.

Wrote and delivered two 15 minute news broadcasts to the network each day.

Wrote and announced daily 15 minute news show for Westbrook Van Vorhes, sponsored by Sears Roebuck.

On the side, did film narration for Army Signal Corps Photo Center, Long Island City, N.Y.

BACKGROUND SHEET #4.

FORT INDUSTRY COMPANY
WLOK Lima, Ohio

Joined WLOK in August, 1949 as Program Director and Director of News and Sports.

Besides programming the station, aired several news programs daily.

Also did sports programs and play-by-play of several sports.

Conducted interviews with important personages, such as Senator Robert Taft, Governor Frank Lausche, Dr. Phillip Fleming and many others.

Arranged and moderated Junior Town Meetings and other public information shows of that type.

Directed, produced and acted in weekly half-hour dramatization of official cases from the files of the F.B.I.

Did film narrations and acting for both commercial and feature films.

BACKGROUND SHEET #5.

TIFFIN BROADCASTING SYSTEM
WTFM Tiffin, Ohio

Ventured into my own business in 1947 as Manager and part owner of small FM station.

With small staff and even smaller capital, did both administrative and operational duties. Edited and aired the news and handled play-by-play accounts of sports events, along with other types of announcing.

At the same time, I taught Radio Speech and Drama at Heidelberg College for two years.

BACKGROUND SHEET #6.

NATIONAL BROADCASTING COMPANY
WTAM Cleveland, Ohio

Was taken to WTAM in 1942 by McCann-Erickson as news reporter for the Standard Oil Company, doing two news broadcasts daily.

Also did commercial announcing and handled special events, including Cleveland Browns and Ohio State Football and Cleveland Indians Baseball.

In 1947, when the "Time Forum" was held in Cleveland, I interviewed such world leaders as Italian Premier Alcide DeGasperi, Jan Christian Smuts, Jan Masyryk, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and many others.

Did other news broadcasts for Metropolitan Life Insurance Company; Sweetheart Soap; Richman Brothers Clothes.

Did network cut-in commercials for Camay on "Pepper Young" program.

Helped cover National Soap Box Derby from Akron and National Open Golf Tournament in Cleveland.

BACKGROUND SHEET #7.

COMMUNITY BROADCASTING COMPANY
WTOL Toledo, Ohio

Was taken to WTOL by McCann-Erickson in 1941 as news reporter for the Standard Oil Company.

Had complete charge of news room, airing several news shows daily myself.

Conducted round table discussion each week on current affairs.

Scripted and conducted a series of shows which highlighted the various important industries in and around Toledo.

Acted as supervisor for play-by-play broadcasts of Toledo games in the American Association.

BACKGROUND SHEET #8.

MIAMI VALLEY BROADCASTING CORPORATION
WHIO Dayton, Ohio

Joined WHIO in 1937 as news and sports announcer. Did several news and sports programs daily, as well as other commercial announcing. Did play-by-play accounts of University of Dayton football and Cincinnati Reds baseball, and other sports events including the Ohio Open Golf Tournament.

Handled special broadcasts on frequent occasions for CBS from Wright and Patterson Air Force Bases.

MC'd stage shows for RKO Colonial Theatre.

BACKGROUND SHEET #9.

WALR BROADCASTING COMPANY
WALR (now WHIZ) Zanesville, Ohio

Began my radio career at WALR in 1935. Was hired as general announcer, specializing in news and sports.

Besides announcing duties, played piano and sang on regular programs, and -- on the side -- directed my own dance band.

Rollins, Chas B.

March 14, 1958

Dear Dr. Rollins:

Thank you for your recent letter. I appreciate your suggestion of a subject to be covered in my programs and regret that, like many other interesting idea, it is impossible to find a place for it at the present time, but we will keep your idea on file.

I am indeed grateful for your interest in the programs.

Sincerely yours,

Dr. Charles B. Rollins
Rollins Chiropractic Health Center
Highway 70
Hickory, North Carolina

mcc

DR. JACK ROLLINS
DR. CHARLES ROLLINS

DR. D. B. ROLLINS
DR. LILLIE G. ROLLINS

ROLLINS CHIROPRACTIC HEALTH CENTER
HIGHWAY 70, HICKORY, N. C.
OFFICE PHONE 4129 — STEAMBATH PHONE 4120

March 3, 1958

Mr. Ed Murrow
CBS-TV
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

We have never met, and I doubt that we ever will. After watching your programs over the years, I believe you are not afraid to discuss controversial subjects, such as cigarettes. The subject that I would like for you to investigate and discuss is Chiropractic care. Mr. Murrow, did you know that over two million new patients, every year, go to Doctors of Chiropractic? Over thirty million patients have been to Doctors of Chiropractic. I believe the American people would be more interested in a program investigating Chiropractic than even your cigarette program. Doctors of Chiropractic would welcome your investigation of any of our Colleges. Have the Doctor of Medicine on the opposing side. I believe, Mr. Murrow, a program of this would be the most viewed program of the year.

I know the power of the drug companies and of the AMA, so if you are unable to put on a program about Chiropractic, well, it was still a good thought. Someone once said, there is a principle,so designed, to keep man in ever-lasting ignorance, and that principle is condemnation without investigation.

Best of luck, Mr. Murrow, and who knows, maybe some day we will meet.

Sincerely yours,

Charles B. Rollins, D.C.

Charles B. Rollins, D.C.

Romm, Harry.

August 21, 1958

Mr. Harry Romm
Columbia Pictures Corporation
1438 No. Gower Street
Hollywood 28, California

Dear Mr. Romm:

I regret the delay in answering your letter of July 30. Mr. Murrow is on vacation and I was not until recently able to obtain his answer about participating in SENIOR PROM.

I regret to tell you that, due to an increase of his already heavy schedule this fall, Mr. Murrow has had to decide against doing anything in addition. I am returning the script enclosed.

Very truly yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow.

enc.

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION
1438 NO. GOWER STREET
HOLLYWOOD 28, CALIFORNIA
HOllywood 2-3111

July 30, 1958

Mr. Ed Murrow
485 Madison Ave.
17th Floor
New York City, N.Y.

NO!

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I spoke with your Mr. Beck here in Hollywood who suggested I contact you through our New York office.

Enclosed is a script of "Senior Prom". The narration involved on pages 1, 2, and 3 is self-explanatory. There would be no visual shots, just the voice coming over. You can see from the enclosed script that the amount of time involved should be very short.

Ed Sullivan and many other nationally known names are appearing in this picture to help me with the project and I can't think of anyone I would rather have than you to do the narration.

Irving Moross of our legal department in New York will contact you to get your reaction. If you agree to do it we can record it either in New York or California, whichever is convenient for you.

Thanking you in advance for your consideration, I am,

Very sincerely,

Harry Romm

Harry Romm

HR:ap
Enc.

Romulo, Carlos

May 28, 1958

Your Excellency:

Very many thanks for your letter of May 16th and your cordial invitation to breakfast with you on June 24th in order to meet President Garcia.

I would gladly get up at any hour to meet you and your President, but unfortunately, present plans call for me to be out of town on June 24th. I am sorry.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

His Excellency,
Carlos P. Romulo
Embassy of the Philippines
Washington, D. C.

mcc

May 16, 1958

Dear Mr. Morrow:

As you know the President of the Philippines is coming to the United States on a state visit in response to an invitation extended to him by President Eisenhower. He will be in New York on June 22, 23, and 24. His schedule is so crowded with many activities prepared for him by the State Department and the City of New York that he has hardly a minute to himself.

However, President Garcia expressed to me his earnest desire to have a heart-to-heart talk with you and other leading American communication leaders and it is for this reason that I am taking the liberty of inviting you to a breakfast at the Jensen Suite, Waldorf-Astoria, on June 24 at 8:30 A.M.. I know it is an ungodly hour but I hope you can find time to give us the pleasure of your company. He asked me to write to you and specifically mentioned your name.

In the hope that you will honor us with your presence and with the assurance of my high regard and esteem, I am

Sincerely yours,

Carlos P. Romulo

Mr. Edward R. Morrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York City

Ron, M.

January 10, 1958

Dear Mr. Ron:

Many thanks for your cordial letter of December 23.

I wish that I might do as you ask and write an article for the forthcoming issue of the Israeli Journalists' Yearbook. Unfortunately, I cannot do so, since the pressure of my radio and television schedule at this point, leaves me absolutely no time in which to do any writing. I am sorry.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. M. Ron
General Secretary
Association of Israel Journalists
Sokolov House
4 Hakirya Street
Post Office Box 7009
Tel-Aviv, Israel

mec

אגודת העתונאים בישראל
בית־העתונאים ע״ש נחום סוקולוב
תל־אביב, רחוב הקריה 4 • ת. ד. 7009 • טלפונים 21650, 27111
ASSOCIATION OF ISRAEL JOURNALISTS
SOKOLOV HOUSE
TEL-AVIV, 4 HAKIRYA ST. • P. O. B. 7009 • TEL. 21650, 27111

Tel-Aviv, 23rd December 1957.

Mr. Ed. Murrow, C.B.S.
New-York

Dear Colleague,

The forthcoming issue of the Israeli Journalists' Yearbook, which is scheduled to mark the tenth anniversary of the State of Israel, will carry, as a special feature, the contributions of a selected number of foreign correspondents who have visited Israel.

We shall be grateful if you will contribute to our Yearbook, by rendering your impressions of your tour of this country, or of any particular experience, or by telling about your encounters with Israeli statesmen.

The manuscript, to the extent of 1000-1500 words, would have to reach us until the first part of February 1958.

Yours sincerely,

M. Ron

M. Ron
General secretary

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - Charles Collingwood

Wednesday, February 8, 1956
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv! A friend of mine said today "it's easier to live in Israel than to understand it." For example, there is slightly less than two hundred thousand Arabs still living in this country. They are obviously a potential fifth column. I talked with the Mayor and the Superintendent of the schools of an Arab village; population about forty-five hundred. They told me they had complete political equality. About 90% of the village voted in the last election. Their teachers were paid the same as teachers in the Jewish schools. Within the last year water has been brought to the village and now there is a faucet in every home. Water is no longer carried in from the well. Health has improved. The Mayor said everyone in the village listened to the Arabic broadcast from across the borders. He said the people in his village would like to have their neighbors and relatives who have left THE country; would like to have them come back. The Israeli Government, he said, was gradually doing something about reuniting families. He and his fellow-Arabs had to get a permit to travel in Israel. That, he said, was abit of a nuisance but aside from that he had no complaint.

There are some rather startling figures published in this morning's paper. Approximately 70% of Israel's imports are now being paid for by German reparations or other non-recurring funds. Immigrants are still coming in at the rate of four or five thousand a month. A planeload from India this morning, a shipload from Morocco tomorrow. These people must be housed, fed, given jobs, taught Hebrew and in many cases must be taught elementary personal hygiene and the use of modern cooking and eating utensils. This formidable task does not appear to confound officials in Jerusalem. Last night I raised the questions of balance of payment, the defense budget, the whole matter of how Israel could become a sound economic unit with Foreign Minister Sharett. He said he did not know the answrand added with complete seriousness that he believed in miracles, that the creation and survival of the State was in itself a miracle. He denied that Israel had any expansionist designs and contended that it would grow upward than outward; smaller farms, more people on less ground, greater concentration of factories. Mr. Sharett said the U. N. vote of censure came as no surprise, that it was regarded as a single isolated case without regard to the whole series of provocations and border incidents that had preceded it. He echoed what Prime Minister Ben-Gurion had told me a few days earlier, namely, that there is no possibility of Israel's accepting paper guarantees as a substitute for defensive arms. Sharett maintained that due to the size and location of Israel an Arab attack might well prove decisive before debate, consultation and action by the U. N., or any other group of powers, could produce effective retaliation or defense.

Right now, this country could be accurately described as a garrison state. The chief-of-staff told me yesterday something which is obvious even to the casual observer, that the collective farms, particularly those along the frontier, are an integral part of the defense system, that a well-organized kibbutz is the equivalent of a well-trained company, permanently in position, familiar with every inch of terrain and deeply rooted in the soil. Its defense requirements are equally obvious: aircraft, artillery and armor. I watched some paratroopers in action yesterday. They were as good as any I have ever seen, all volunteers. They get a dollar-and-a-half extra a month as "jump" pay. One of them laughingly explained: "We're all mercenaries." The women serve only two years in the army, are paid about five dollars a month. The only way they can escape service is to get married. But in spite of the universal military character of the country there is more political and personal freedom here than anywhere else in the Middle East. There are ten political parties, ranging from Right to Left, including a small Communist Party. There are ten daily newspapers. They are free to contend that Ben-Gurion is incompetent or that Sharett's foreign policy is leading the country to disaster, and some of them do. Some of the immigrants, who had never known freedom before, find it a heady wine in a country where they had been led to believe everything was milk and honey. There is no doubt that there are people here who are both bitter and disappointed. No one in the Government tries to conceal it,but their number is not considerable. This is the smallest melting pot with the greatest variety of ingredients and nearer the hot fire of Arab nationalism than has ever before been seen. No one pretends to see the future clearly, but no one seems to fear it. If a miracle is required, and it may be, there seems to be a feeling in this country that one is just around the corner.

This is Ed Murrow recording from Tel Aviv.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, Feb. 6, 1956
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv!

This country of Israel is so small that a reporter can cover much ground in twenty-four hours. Here is a quick summary of one such period: Fishing on the Sea of Galilee, 11:00 o'clock at nite, bright stars overhead, the lights of Tiberius on the far shore. The fishermen use a big ring net. First a rowboat goes out, equipped with a huge bright light on the stern, shining down on the water. It sits there for a couple of hours, attracts the fish. Other boats then surround the light boat with the big net, draw it together at the bottom and haul it in. As they pull at the net, they sing songs straight out of the Bible. Many of the young men came here from Austria. The Israeli attack against a Syrian position, for which she was censured by the U.N., occurred about two miles north. You ask the fishermen what they think about it. They shrug and say it wasn't very pleasant sitting out there in the light boats, being shot at.

When the boats near the shore, the strains of a quartet playing Mozart seep out thru the trees, a concert in the recreation hall. It's more like an Army barracks. Faces old and young, from the four corners of the earth soak up the music. Early in the morning the collective farm is awake. The shepherd takes his flock to the hills, also his rifle - the frontier is only two miles away. You drive down around the bottom end of the Sea of Galilee, across the River Jordan, up thru Tiberius to a rich valley stretching in from the Sea of Galilee, and there on the hillside you encounter a man from Montana-- big, bluff, and obviously enjoying himself? -- Bud Mullahan, agricultural chief of our Point 4 program. Cattle are grazing on the hillside, brahma bulls crossed with native cattle. The cowboys are Israeli. Can they work cattle? "Sure", says Bud. Are they good farmers? "They love the soil" - and Bud is a little surprised, since the Jews have been away from the land for about two thousand years. He is teaching young Israelis scientific farming, speaks enthusiastically of one ranch down in the south where they have figured out exactly how many cattle it will handle before the first head is moved onto the ranch. Mullahan remarks that Mary Magdalen was born just down in that little village. The Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes occurred behind that clump of trees down by the sea; and the Sermon on the Mount was just over that hill.

In the irrigated valley below they get two crops of tomatoes from the same plant. The man from Montana is enjoying himself. You drive to Nazareth, stop at a cafe, the radio is blaring swing music. You encounter two young Americans, ex-Navy boys; they have a big dirt-moving outfit in Haifa, been doing a lot of the work for the Government. They're now working on a scheme with Arab farmers in Israel. They want to move in with eight rigs, six bottom ploughs, work around the clock and really do some ploughing. They think the Arabs are going to go for it, too.

You drive down to an airfield - a fighter wing, commanded by young Colonel Weizmann, nephew of Chaim Weizmann. He has a few Meteors, British jets, a type now being retired by the Royal Air Force, a few Spitfires and a few American P-51s. When his boys aren't flying they're cultivating gardens or milking cows or riding motorcycles. You ask him if his runways are really long enough for the Meteors, and he replies, "oh, yes, also long enough to handle F-86s". He explains that Israel is so small, he has trouble getting room enough for navigational training, always danger of violating a frontier. If he flies eight Meteors in spread-out battle formation, the wing man on the left will be along the edge of the Mediterranean and the one on the right almost over the Jordanian border. Four jets take off, heading for the border; it's only about six miles away. The colonel remarks, "The boys have to be careful of their turns and their instrument flying." You ask him how it feels to command these obsolete aircraft when the Egyptian Air Force is building up with Russian-made gear. He smiles and says, "It would be nice to have equality." The security officer asks that you do not mention name or location of the airfield. The Jordanians could practically read the numbers on the planes on the ground with a pair of powerful glasses. This country is as security-conscious as Britain was during the blitz.

Judging by the newspapers and conversations with officials, there is not the slightest possibility that Israel will settle for anything less than qualitative defense equality with the Arab world. They don't know how they're going to get it. But one thing is clear: they are convinced that their reliance must be in their own strength and not in paper guarantees from one or several nations. There are former Poles, Czechs, Roumanians living here who have fresh memories of how such guarantees worked for them in the past.

This is Ed Murrow recording from Tel Aviv!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

Rooker, T.

November 11, 1959

Dear Mr. Rooker:

Thank you for your recent letter and for your kind comments regarding Mr. Murrow programs. I regret that since Mr. Murrow is on a year's leave of absence and will be traveling abroad for most of the next ten months, it will not be possible for him to reply to your letter. I am sorry to disappoint you.

Sincerely yours,

Secretary

Mr. Theodore Rooker
2423 W. Harlan Street
Philadelphia 21, Pennsylvania

Theodore H. Rooker
2423 W. Harlan St.
Philadelphia (21) PA.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow

Distinguished Sir:

This letter I pray will receive your kind attention. I'm a former convict, one who not too long ago was released from a state penitentiary. I served almost eleven years of a ten to twenty years sentent. Since my return to society I'm forced to admit that just being on the outside has been one sheer nightmare. While being detained I was fortunate in being able to hear your nightly programs sponsored by (Amoco) The American Oil Co. Those programs were the greatest source of inspiration to me. Just to hear your, (and I quote) "This is the news", was and still is the most pleasant music to my ears. You made me think deeply. You instilled within me the knack of positive thinking. I began to take an interest in things of beauty. I studied music, and can now arrange, write, and play three musical instruments. Each day I'm in direct contact with juvenile delinquents. I've sought to obtain aid in trying to prevent them from trugging the same paths I taken. But I'm sorry to report that there are no takers. I can't find a job no matter how hard I try. I've gone so far as to write to the Mayor, but to no avail. I've taken peoples word, that to be honest with intended employers would secure me a job, but that to has not helped. That is why I'm endeavoring to secure your aid. I'm certain there are others in the same situation that I find myself. Some are afraid to reveal their past, others are bitter and seek revenge. However I assure you that I'm not in either category. I'd be most anxious to tell my story so that some errant boy or girl may go up the right road. And I hasten to add that I've a story to tell. I listened to you narrate the story about the cripple boy who got killed in New York. But the one thing that impressed me most about you was that you seem to be so impartial in any situation. You are truly great. That story you brought to television called, The Autobiography of A Missle, moved me no end. There should be more programs like it on T.V. I made a terrible mistake in the past, and as of now I'm still paying for it. Will it never end? Perhaps you can supply me with the answers. May I hear from you in the near future?

(continued)

(continued)

(continued)

(continued)

(continued)

Respectfully yours

I remain,

Theodore H. Rooker

Roosevelt, Eleanor (Mrs.)

1230 Park Avenue
New York 28, N.Y.
April 6, 1958

Dear Governor Stevenson:

And it came to pass that man gave birth to the Hydrogen Bomb,
And men holding power sacred were elated;
Yet; a Governor, Adlai E. Stevenson,
Scholars renowned in the field of science,
Clergymen whose voices rang round the world,
Men of goodwill in every corner of the globe,
Warned!
"Man will be annihilated,
All life on earth, befouled, obliterated."
Our Leaders -- they were not dismayed --
"A Clean Bomb" was their answer.

A common man said:
"'A Tale That Was Told' is the answer.
The earth was threatened with devastation,
Mankind was threatened with extermination,
And men of good will -- bewildered -- sought the brotherhood of man."

Patience, my friends,
'Tis a struggle for the minds of men.

My concern is the future, a challenging future, a changing future. We need men who will respond to the challenge to change with ideas and with heart.

--Senator Herbert H.Lehman,
March 29, 1958

We look to ourselves -- and we are not ashamed. We are proud of what freedom has wrought -- The freedom to experiment, to inquire, to change, to invent. And we shall have to look exactly in the same directions to solve our problems.

--Governor Adlai E. Stevenson (Address at Columbia University on Nation's Moral "Crisis",
June 5, 1954)

Conclusion of a letter, June 30, 1957:

"I think they are wrong and I would take another course but you and I must not despair of our country. We must work to try to change these judgments."

-- (Mrs.) Eleanor Roosevelt

I am indebted to you for your kindness in sending me a copy of your thought-provoking essay, "Strange Are The Ways of Man."

The problem which you set forth with such deep feeling and sincerity is one which we hope men of good will may some day successfully resolve.

--District Attorney Frank S. Hogan

(The Father Of Our Country Speaks) "You have treated this unique theme with a soaring concept that is indeed epic."

--District Attorney Frank S. Hogan

Patience, my friends,
'Tis a struggle for the minds of men -
I followed your counsel

The New York School of Social Work
Columbia University

June 27, 1956

Comment on the enclosed article, "The Crime of Age and Other Crimes."

"I do appreciate your thinking of me and wish it were in my power to bring about some solution of the problem you have so graphically and clearly portrayed.

Within the month I have served as a colleague on an Educators' Conference with Dr. Herbert C. Hunsaker of the Sociology Department at Purdue University. I learned from him that with a grant from some foundation he is about to engage in a rather serious and extended study of problems related to gerontology. Because I think "The Crime of Age and Other Crimes" would be of particular interest to him, I am taking the liberty of forwarding it to him," ...

--Dean Kenneth D. Johnson

As you know, the legislature of the State of New York, the vote unanimous, declared discrimination against age (45-65) in employment illegal. The bill awaits the signature of Governor Harriman.

"I Am A Son Of God" -- September 1, 1957

"I shall long cherish the book, 'I Am A Son Of God'..."

-- Louis (Selzer)

(Editor, Cleveland Press, National Chairman, Brotherhood Week, February 1957, 1958)

Rev. Dr. D. de Sola Pool
The Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue

October 12, 1957

Dear Mr. Epstein:

Please excuse the delay in my acknowledging your having sent me a copy of your "I Am a Son of God." It arrived when I was working under great pressure and it is only now when the holy days are passed that I can write to thank you.

I truly appreciate your thought of me after many years, and I am thrilled to see my name associated with so many others to whom you deservedly give recognition.

Your words certainly stimulate interest, and I am grateful to you for letting me share in them.

Sincerely yours,

D. de Sola Pool

"If mankind is to survive we must learn to guide our own lives and help our fellow men through human brotherhood and love of our neighbor the world over.

"The Universal Declaration of Human Rights should be learned in every school. It should be proclaimed from the pulpits of every faith, and the world over men should study how to make a reality of its words."
--Sermon - Rev. Dr. David de Sola Pool, December 7,1957

A Tale That Was Told 1-1-58 Title page

The earth was threatened with devastation,
Mankind was threatened with extermination,
And men of good will - bewildered - sought the brotherhood of man.

Comment of a distinguished scholar in the field of science; the subject matter, Part I of the manuscript of a book, "America -- Hallowed Mother."

"I do not have the acute power of expression you possess. Reading the fire of your remarks and their logicalness awes me. I am deeply impressed with the literary lashing and indictment. But are you not extending yourself too severely? This worries me.

"I have hesitated to write you sooner merely because I wanted to understand all you wrote. As a matter of fact it is presumptuous to say that I have achieved the full significance of your implications and at the same time the nobleness of your thoughts. Your writing is not easily forgotten."

"America -- Hallowed Mother" is a hazardous venture, far beyond a simple, humble common man with little knowledge and countless failings.

"The writer's only responsibility is to his art. He will be completely ruthless if he is a good one. He has a dream. It anguishes him so much he must get rid of it. He has no peace until then."

--William Faulkner

I know little, I understand less, yet this I know.
Patience, my friends,
'Tis a struggle for the minds of men --
I followed your counsel.

"I have read with much interest and profit the copy of your article 'Personal Life Insurance Trusts'....I could wish that you had extended your discussion so as to include a consideration of how far the rule of perpetuities applies to the so-called 'trust settlement' now being made in such vast numbers throughout the country by the insurance companies."

--William R. Vance
(Professor of Insurance Law, Yale University School of Law, February 20, 1937)

University of Pennsylvania
Wharton School of Finance and Commerce

October 25, 1939

Dear Mr. Epstein:

Thank you ever so much for your letter of October 24, transmitting a reprint of your article on "Insurance Settlement Agreements and the Rule Against Perpetuities." I am very glad to have this article because of the importance of the subject. The analysis you furnish is a very thorough one and certainly will do much to help clarify the situation.

I am wondering if you have an extra copy of the article to spare for deposit in the Lippincott Library. If so, I shall have the same catalogued at once, so that the article may be available to the many students who are specializing with us in the field of insurance. If you do not have a spare copy, I shall want to deposit in the library, the one you have sent to me, though I should like your article for my library.

Thanking you for your kind remembrance, and with deepest appreciation for the article, I remain as ever,

Yours very sincerely,

S. S. Huebner
(Dr. Solomon S. Huebner, Professor of Insurance)

"I greatly appreciate your thoughtfulness in sending me a copy of your article, Insurance Trusts, Insurance Agents and the Practice of the Law. The subject is one that deserves to be broadcasted."

--Harold R. Medina, October 27, 1938

"I believe you have been of very great service to our committee, and through the legislation that will follow, to the people of the State of New York."

--Foster Piper

(Chairman, State of New York, Joint Legislative Committee For Recodification of Insurance Law, November 24, 1939)

Securities and Exchange Commission
Washington February 18, 1939

("Personal Life Insurance Trusts" - "Insurance Trusts, Insurance Agents and The Practice of The Law.")

I appreciate your writing in regard to our investigation and the two articles by Albert Epstein, Esq., on the subject of life insurance trusts were read with interest.

This subject is clearly of importance to all persons interested in protecting the public from unsound legal advice and it is equally worthy of the attention of those studying the practices of insurance companies.

Yours faithfully,

William O. Douglas, Chairman
(Justice Douglas, Supreme Court of The United States)

Patience, my friends,
'Tis a struggle for the minds of men; for freedom and the dignity of man;
Decisions morally wrong -- no law can vindicate or render just, no man or men can vindicate or render just.

Liberty is on trial for liberty without justice is freedom chained.

May God watch over you and keep you well.

With devotion,

Faithfully yours,

Albert Epstein

Enclosures:

The Crime of Age and Other Crimes
Insurance Trusts, Insurance Agents and The Practice of The Law
Insurance Settlement Agreements and The Rule Against Perpetuities

THE CRIME OF AGE AND OTHER CRIMES

by

Albert Epstein

May 7, 1956

In 1754 a Star was born,
Beacon of faith and hope;
Her loins have given us noble sons,
Their vision encompassed the globe.
The World, bewildered, came to her,
Revealed his desperation;
Her arms reached out - beseeching God,
God heard her prayers;
Her loins brought forth her noblest son,
'Man's Right to Knowledge and the Free Use Thereof',
Beacon of faith and hope.

To those - and many there will be
Who think these thoughts fantastic -
To those who laugh and scoff and say:
"These are delusions of a mind that dreams,"
There is only one reply:
"Man forges the tools
And casts the weapons of destruction;
God wills the Brotherhood of Man,
Beacon of faith and hope."

Our Founding Fathers sleep,
And yet they live
Their spirits restless;
The ominous clouds disturb them
For they have seen, and, seeing,
Know all things there are to see and know.
They fly to us on wings of Faith,
Enfold us in their arms;
"Evil cannot emerge triumphant,"
Their love and wisdom tell us;
"Have faith in God,
Have faith in man"
They plead;
"The Brotherhood of Man will light your way."

Freedom may be silenced but it cannot be destroyed since it dwells in the heart and in the soul of man. Prophecy may be silenced but it cannot be destroyed since it is conceived in and emerges from the mind of man and is, therefore, the child of thought. Necessity is a relentless and unconscionable master. May the judgment rendered be reviewed by a Higher Court and reversed.

"The final cause of law is the welfare of society."
-- Justice Benjamin N. Cardoza

Articles in Life Insurance

Personal Life Insurance Trusts (for the layman)
The Preparation of Personal Life Insurance Trusts
The Illusion of Cheap Term Insurance (for the layman)
Life Insurance Tells His Story (for the layman)
Personal Life Insurance Trusts
Insurance Trusts, Insurance Agents and The Practice of The Law
Insurance Settlement Agreements and The Rule Against Perpetuities
Life Insurance Seeks Justice
Safeguarding Your Life Insurance

Work in other fields

Migraine, The Devil's Charger
The Crime of Age
The Father Of Our Country Speaks
Our Heritage
The Brotherhood of Man
Other Poems
A Way Of Life
Other Thoughts

In preparation

The Sad Tale of Brother Tom and Why He Crossed The River Styx

"Let us have faith that right makes might; and in that faith let us to the end, dare to do our duty as we understand it."
-- Abraham Lincoln

Princeton University
Princeton, New Jersey

President's Room October 13, 1954

Dear Mr. Epstein:

I wish to thank you for your volume "A Way Of Life". It is a most interesting work, and I appreciate your thoughtfulness in sending it to me.

Faithfully yours,

Harold W. Dodds

An esteemed American comments on "A Way Of Life".

"...How your victory was won -- how you passed through that incredible fire with your ideals and convictions not shattered but tempered -- was one of the most amazing and inspiring things I have ever read.

"I was inspired too, by another victory that you did not count as one -- your struggle for justice with the insurance company [The Spring of 1952]. It was a tragic tale, for it showed how pitifully far are some who are high and mighty from what we, and they too, know to be right. But it was also a damning tale for those 'important' men of fantastically mean and petty souls. Yours was the victory in spirit -- the one that counts, as they know too, deep inside...

"I could go on and on writing about the act of faith and dedication that is your book."

Supreme Court
State of New York

Chambers of Irving L. Levey, Justice
June 18, 1946

Albert Epstein, Esq.,
c/o Johns Hopkins Hospital
The Marburg Building
Baltimore, Maryland.

Dear Albert:

I cannot tell you how delighted I am to learn that you are on the upgrade. I guess that it is just a long fight, but if I know you and the faith you possess, together with the excellent care that you are now receiving, the result will be all to your liking, namely, complete recovery.

I am not certain as to my summer plans but I assure you that if I am within striking distance of Cape Cod, you will hear from me forthwith.

In the meantime, keep getting better so that we can resume the very delightful luncheons in the near future.

As ever,

Irving

Justice Levey's prophecy proved true, although powerful drugs outlived their usefulness, causing violent reactions, and ravaging pain had to be endured without any form of relief. Three years passed -- my doctor, a distinguished psychiatrist and neurologist, examined me in his office in The New York Hospital; his opinion, March 29, 1949 -- "There is no trace of migraine."

Migraine in the most diabolical, demoniacal, malignant form known to medical science had been conquered. I wrote to my revered doctors at Johns Hopkins. They were elated.

A tired man, tired beyond description, but confounding medical science in many ways, physically sounder than men much younger in years.

There were problems. My wife's nerves were strained to the breaking point -- there is a limit to human endurance. I did not know which way to turn, yet I considered myself one of the most fortunate of human beings.

I did not foresee that racial prejudice, the chief cause of my devastating breakdown, would rear its ugly head again. Had not the State of New York, in which I resided, enacted a law declaring racial prejudice in employment a crime?

I did not know that age was an unpardonable crime.

I did not know that my work in the mammoth industry of life insurance, approved by renowned jurists, fortunately welcomed by distinguished lawyers, by eminent authorities and scholars, by leaders of bar associations, by legislative bodies in the State of New York and Washington, was a crime against men, women and children.

I could not foresee, as a crime against humanity, work in other fields engaged in since my recovery to the present day, work which taxed the mind, the heart, the body and the soul -- the expression of the vague thoughts of a common man, a humble American, written in the hope that they might, perhaps, prove helpful in some minute manner in a trying world -- thoughts fortunately approved by eminent jurists and scholars, by revered ministers and rabbis, by illustrious men in public life, by men and women honored throughout our nation.

The final passages of a letter dated May 11, 1952, addressed by the writer to a distinguished American:

"Your use of the word sympathize is, at best, ill-chosen. I did not ask, I did not seek your sympathy. I abhor your use of the word. Truth and Justice crave no man's favor. They seek truth and justice.

"I sought justice; it was denied me. Injustice was fortified by injustice. ... I do not wish to hear from you. I have the right to refuse to subject myself to any further acts deliberately and knowingly designed to destroy my rights as an American citizen and as a human being.

"Robert Vogeler concludes his book, 'I Was Stalin's Prisoner', with these words taken from the Book of Common Prayer: 'Grant us grace fearlessly to contend against evil, and to make no peace with oppression; and, that we may reverently use our freedom, help us to employ it in the maintenance of justice among men and nations.'

"As long as I shall live, sir, I can only hope that God will give me the will, the courage and the strength to try to follow this path."

Paragraph of a letter...

"No one can say that the writer does not revere his country; no one can say that he does not believe in our way of life; no one can say that he does not believe in free enterprise. He does not, however, believe in ruthless racial prejudice."

There was no reply.

Strange indeed are the ways of esteemed and ardent advocates who guard the gates of freedom and the sacred road to justice.

The opening sentence of a letter received from Justice Samuel H. Hofstadter of The Supreme Court of The State of New York:

"It was good to hear from you; and thank you heartily for sending me a copy of your fascinating letter to _____."

Truth and Justice reigned supreme with this esteemed jurist.

"Through wisdom is a house built; and by understanding it is established."

-- Proverbs

It is almost instinctive for the mind to resist as unreasonable any conclusion that it disapproves of. Abuses creep in, we become critical, there are honest differences of opinion, and yet even though discussion may become bitter it enables us to discover a remedy and a solution. We should have the wisdom, the courage and the tolerance to welcome unfavorable criticism. We should weigh it calmly, judiciously and without prejudice, so that we may discover and use what is good therein. We should oppose not resentfully or impatiently, but rather with good judgment and sound reasoning what is wrong, harmful or unjust.

Strange are the ways of man, even stranger are the motives which govern the ways of man. One of our most difficult problems is the human being whose mind is disturbed, whose nerves are frayed and torn. Our hospitals and mental institutions, if they were perfection itself, are only a heartbreaking attempt at a solution. Psychiatrists, so limited in number, if multiplied twenty-fold, cannot solve the problem in our harrowing world. Human beings can do so much, for the science of medicine has yet to discover a substitute to take the place of a kind thought, a generous act, a gentleness which bears with it the gift of the corner of the heart of a human being.

The writer speaks feebly, with the faintest of voices, for countless Americans. He is merely an invisible shadow in a landscape but even a shadow, unseen yet sensed, brought into the light of day may aid, in some small way, to correct evils which no American citizen of good will and true conscience can condone; nor will he if he believes in God, and God's way of life, sit idly by and say, "Let those who are elected to public office concern themselves with such matters, they matter not to me."

It lacks understanding that leaders of industry and business should continue a policy of silence and indifference, a policy of active support of a system of employment that is nothing less than a distortion of the principles of justice upon which our nation was founded. I question the right of those gentlemen who given great authority and power cast upon the scrap-heap labeled "Useless and Worthless," unnumbered numbers of human beings. Are we moulding a nation of tools and machines, a nation of countless dependents, or a nation of free and independent souls? Let these gentlemen pause to think. Let them measure and weigh the staggering burden they are storing to be laid upon the shoulders of our youth.

The crime of age, be it middle-age or age further advanced in years. The indignities, the humiliation, the hardship human beings are subjected to because of an invisible, impregnable barricade which -- shunning wisdom, justice and reason -- segregates competency and incompetency. And men in the prime of mental maturity are viewed as worn out machines to be cast aside, sentenced and shackled without a day in court, a right granted by justice to the most vicious criminal; judged, all too often, by others chained to an illusion or imprisoned by an iron-clad rule.

The judgment rendered shuns wisdom -- Do we not spend countless millions of dollars each year to develop the minds of our children? Are not scholarships totaling huge sums given away each year to provide for the education of those whom we think may achieve something worthwhile in the years to come? Is it wise to waste the knowledge, the ability, the wisdom which can be garnered only through years of experience, observation and study? Is it wise to destroy priceless assets and with them the dignity of man? Have we forgotten; the thoughts the mind gives birth to survive all ages? Reason ponders the strange ways of man, the motives which govern the strange ways of man.

The judgment rendered shuns justice -- They are not beggars beseeching alms, seeking nebulous favors. They dread more than anything, pity, sentimental sympathy. They who fought for our way of life, who have overcome obstacles incomparably greater than the barricade of age which we have erected against them, are bewildered. Caught and drawn into a whirlpool, unable to combat its merciless and relentless tides, grasping at phantom straws with flickering and ever-receding hope of rescue, we should pose these questions, -- "Why have we added to their confusion by condemning them to glass houses, to mountain tops, to charitable and welfare organizations? Does justice deprive men of their freedom and obscure their path with mist brewed with despair, resentment, fear, a denial of all their hopes? Does justice deprive men of their right to earn a living? Automatic, unalterable, the judgment rendered -- "Too Old - Too Old" -- resounds like a cry of eternal punishment to create a macabre atmosphere grimmer than the spectre of the Grim Reaper. Science has not yet contrived to stay the onward march of time. Years increase and speed forward by the will of God. Their progress is inevitable, inexorable, irrevocable.

They have not been idle through the years. Their net has been cast repeatedly into dangerous and obscure waters. It has not always returned to them unrewarded, empty and barren. But now, they are dwellers of cities -- lost in a wilderness as yet unexplored by man -- pursuing an endless circle, returning forever to the point of beginning. A sign of horror, "Middle Age" or "Age Further Advanced In Years", dangles above their heads.

There are countless lost souls, tormented lost souls, immersed in a flood of hopelessness and despair, and countless numbers will be added;because we do not hear, we do not see, we do not understand -- because we do not want to hear, we do not want to see, we do not want to understand. The reservoir is full, it overflows its banks, the springs which suckle it are never dry.

The leash of life is short, woven from invisible and ever-changing thread -- a horseman, at times astride a ray of sunshine soaring through the clouds, at times astride the Devil's charger plunging madly into the depths of hell. Misfortune may strike with the speed and ferocity of a thunderbolt, with the savageness of a hurricane; it may burst forth with the fury of an earthquake, until the earth rocks and falls apart, opening a hideous maw to suck the head, the body and the soul into a cavern as terrifying as Dante's Inferno, then to close its jaws with the crushing force of mountains of ice.

We grope and feel our way. Our minds may be filled with doubt as to the advisability of setting aside present rules. But dare we -- who gives us the right to allow these rules to become the bars of a jail which imprisons us, dims our sight and blots out truth and justice, wisdom, reason and understanding? To alter, to modify -- a change benefiting those who, because of circumstances beyond their control, are unable to help themselves or to speak for themselves -- is the lifeblood of our nation. It has helped to make us the most humane, the greatest nation in a sad and tragic world facing unknown tormented years of turbulence and critical uncertainty. Is it not true that only when Trial and Error embraced did they give birth to the child, Discovery? Is it not true that only when Truth and Mercy embraced did they give birth to the child, Understanding?

Fully realizing its invaluable and incalculable contribution to our fabulous achievements -- wizards waved a sorcerer's wand -- a personnel office is a burial ground for men such as these, a mirage in a land of darkness, neither substance nor shadow, mysterious and foreboding; extending a ghostly hand promising succor, withdrawing its promise -- extending a ghostly hand promising succor, withdrawing its promise. Reaching out hesitatingly, desperately, despairingly in all directions -- debasing, foreign to their souls -- many would welcome the magic of Circe. Strange indeed are the ways of man.

Is it not the duty of justice to seek to discover the truth by searching inquiry, to prize reason above law where law is without reason? Is it not wiser to build than to tear down? Should not justice balance the scales, placing on the one side the good, on the other side the evil? Are we not all cast from the same mold? God has no favored children.

A breakdown resulted in years of enforced idleness; a chair was my bed, a table the pillow to rest my head. Pain wore a path on our living-room floor, day and night. Medical science deplored its infirmity. Hospitals, specialists, striving to discover some means of relief were reluctantly forced to say, "There is no relief, there is nothing more we can do" -- the pain judged "fiendish", impelling an opinion, "No man can live in such agony." Prophecy was silenced by an apparition which appeared at Johns Hopkins "as if out of a tomb," to quote an observation made months later by one of its revered specialists. I could not live, I died a thousand deaths. God, my wife, and my doctors, were at my side; I lived. Neither my head nor my back are bent. Fingers and hands are as steady as the fingers and hands of a surgeon.

A specialized law practice destroyed, the problem of earning a living for my wife and myself, my age 60, and I was a criminal -- the crime of my age, the crime of my faith, a Jew. I sought a position. All jobs were denied me. Discourtesy in several of the many personnel offices visited crossed the borderline of shamelessness. Letters to officials guiding the destiny of large companies and corporations were greeted with evasive replies or wholly ignored. To all of these gentlemen, my requests evidenced the tortured gasps of an ancient tossed upon a scrap-heap labeled "Useless and Worthless." Realistic free enterprise had nothing to offer me except humiliation and work which youth and middle age shunned. I had no choice, I accepted.

I had been seared too often and scarred too deeply to be deluded by honeyed words conveyed by a sheet of paper, to be deceived by whispered assurances, "As soon as an opening presents itself," so readily and easily evaded -- murmuring delusions which glimmer as weakly as the flickering light of a candle in the blackest pit. Where racial prejudice raised its revolting and malevolent head, the evil was hidden, secret and contaminating, the law merely severing a single strand of the hair on its head.

I served my country in World War I; seriously ill, letters will testify that I offered to serve in World War II in any part of the world where I might be of use in any capacity. I am a plain, simple, common man, lacking knowledge, possessing failings in abundance. I claim none of the qualities of a hero, but I have faith in my country and in our way of life and I would barter neither for any other way of life on God's earth. I was born in New York City. My father voted when he reached the age of 21; my mother when the law granted women the right to vote. I believe in our Declaration of Independence, I believe in our Constitution, I believe in our Bill of Rights. I have tried to live that belief. If I am not an American, what am I?

We seek, all too often, to overwhelm by force rather than to defeat our adversary by reason. To call a man a fool does not make him a fool, to say that he is ignorant does not prove his lack of knowledge. To reply with bitterness, with harshness, with ridicule, with scorn, is far from convincing. We may win, we may even destroy, and yet, are we actually the victors? Have we not truly stooped to conquer?

Perfection is a quality not to be found in man or even to be desired in man, but found, perhaps, in the tools created by man, tools which may lead to man's destruction. And yet, in a world in which truth has become an illusion, in a world in which suspicion and distrust rear their ugly heads like a double headed monster befouling and making almost superhuman the efforts and the tasks of honorable men, does it not shame the country we revere to destroy the dignity of man.

A common man, with little knowledge, nevertheless I have the right to inquire; I have the right to be enlightened. Let me, therefore, question these gentlemen....

Remain idle, let others do it, share no burden? Keep silent, no matter what the cause, no matter what the cost? Human beings have ears and hear; they have eyes and see; they have minds and think. Can minds in our great democracy, the only hope of mankind, be locked and sealed? Can a mind be fettered; can it be imprisoned behind iron bars? Can the thoughts which nourish and sustain it be chained; can they be imprisoned behind iron bars?

I wish to learn your interpretation of our Declaration of Independence, of our Constitution, of our Bill of Rights? I wish to learn how you envision our way of life? I wish to learn how you envision the way of life our young men fought and bled and died for.

Millions of our fellow-countrymen, of all colors, of all creeds, would pose the same questions.

There is a law, The Golden Rule. If man would heed its call, no one could ask for more, and Peace would reign upon our earth. There are laws, God given laws -- The Ten Commandments -- which do not appear in the inscribed statutes evolved by man, and yet they have ruled the conscience of all men of good will since man became aware of the fact that there is a God Who is Almighty.

The sages have cautioned since time which defies memory: "Prejudice begets Prejudice." This truth, child of their prophetic vision, cannot be repeated too often, for such truths, fathered by wisdom and understanding -- brewed with justice tempered by mercy -- bear endless repetition. Until the wickedness of Prejudice is cast aside, until it is no longer nourished openly or secretly, until it is uprooted from the hearts of men; our earth shall know no peace, our minds shall know no peace, our souls shall know no peace, our bodies shall know no rest.

Conscience takes us in her arms and lulls us into sleep. She awakens us, reassures us, reasons with us, censures and condemns us. She transforms the timid into heroes, the heroes into cowards. The weak advance with the courage and the invincibility of giants; the giants recoil, daunted, to wither. She is more than wife, husband or child; mother, father, sister or brother. She guards our honor yet holds us in bondage. Captives, we can neither divorce her, reject her nor escape her. If she dies, though we retain the breath of life, we also die.

I could not understand. I could see only one hope for man's salvation -- freedom from the despotic, paganish forces of communism, freedom from prejudice. I was puzzled and troubled. I knew that all men were created equal, that God willed the brotherhood of man and above everything -- Mercy -- without which man is no longer man. I set down my thoughts, rejected them, destroyed them, accepted them, hoping, praying for light and guidance, for wisdom and understanding, for strength. I was an ordinary man striving to attain the unattainable. I did not know, I could not judge. I was burdened by countless failings, by limited knowledge. When men and women honored throughout our beloved country approved, I thanked The Almighty.

Reason frowns, puzzled and troubled,
She does not understand:
"Books are banned and books are burned,
Publishers recoil with horror,
Outraged, they cry!
'You cannot suppress thoughts,
You cannot annihilate thoughts;
The press,
Universities and scholars,
Distinguished jurists and men of science,
All echo the warning:
'You cannot suppress thoughts,
You cannot annihilate thoughts,
You dare not destroy the mind of man, --
Dictators, tyrants and despots,
fearing Truth, crush Thought,
commit this monstrous crime."

Reason frowns, puzzled and troubled,
She does not understand:
"An Iron Curtain protecting and nourishing Injustice?
An Iron Curtain transforming man into God?
You cannot suppress thoughts,
You cannot annihilate thoughts,
You dare not destroy the mind of man, --
Dictators, tyrants and despots,
fearing Truth, crush Thought,
commit this monstrous crime.

"Is this man's salvation?
Does might make right?
History records empires dissolved into dust,
Conquerors banished, consumed by fire and sword."

Reason frowns puzzled and troubled,
She does not understand:
"Man is not God --
Question the philosophers;
Socrates, Plato and Aristotle,
Bacon, Spinoza and Voltaire.
Ask them ...
Is this justice?
Is this truth?
Is this wisdom?
Is this morality?
They answer; Voltaire speaking:
'By what right could a being created free, force another to think like himself?'

"Question the poets;
Homer, Virgil, Dante,
Milton and Shakespeare.
Ask them ...
They answer; Dante speaking:
'Often, my brother, to avoid some peril
An action has been done reluctantly
That ne'er, indeed, should have been done at all:
Upon this point I wish thee to reflect,
So that, together, both of us speak truth.'

"Question the sages,
The wise men of China;
Confucius, Mencius, Lao-tzu.
Ask them ...
They answer:
'Kwan said: 'Now the whole kingdom is drowning;
how is it that you do not save it?'
Mencius replied:
'A drowning kingdom must be rescued by right principles, not like a drowning person, by the hand.'

"Question those with the wisdom of a Solomon, Question gentle Gandhi.
Ask them ...
They answer; Proverbs...
'The rich and the poor meet together:
The Lord is the Maker of them all.'

"Question the prophets;
Joshua, Isaiah, Jeremiah.
Ask them ...
They answer; Isaiah speaking:
'And in mercy shall the throne be established:
and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging, and seeking judgment, and hastening righteousness.'

"Question your great jurists;
Marshall, Holmes and Brandeis,
Cardoza, Hughes and Stone.
Ask them ...
Is this your Declaration of Independence?
Is this your Constitution?

Is this your Bill of Rights?
Is this Man's Right to Knowledge and the Free Use Thereof?
Is this The Dignity of Man?
Is this Morality?
Is this the sober second thought of the American community?
Is this the Conscience of America?
They answer:
'Man is not God,
You cannot suppress thoughts,
You cannot annihilate thoughts,
You dare not destroy the mind of man, --
Dictators, tyrants and despots,
fearing Truth, crush Thought,
commit this monstrous crime.'"

For wisdom is better than pearls: and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it.
-- Proverbs

Wisdom meditates, reflects:
"Man forever fighting man
When there is so much to be conquered ...
Fear and ignorance,
Disease -- bodies wracked with pain --
Poverty -- men, women and children, hungry, naked --
Homes that are hovels,
Homes that are broken --
Grief which thrives and swells and bursts its bonds,
Surges forward and overflows its banks;
Tears flood our stricken earth.

"Man forever fighting man
When there is so much to be conquered ...
Frenzy overwhelming the savagery of the ocean,
Typhoons, hurricanes, prideful of their dark destruction,
Roaring wind and implacable rain,
Swirling, howling, swollen waters,
Barbed edged currents of cold and heat,
Hailstorms with the teeth of devilfish ...
The earth trembles -- a volcano is enraged --
The bowels of mother earth are rendered.
Sadists -- none can be appeased.

"Man forever fighting man
When there is so much to be conquered ...
Hate and arrogance,
Greed and selfishness,
Tyrants and despots;
The crimson bloody tides brewing the whirlpool of man's anguish.

"Man forever fighting man
When there is so much to be conquered ...
Man forges the tools
And casts the weapons of destruction."

Wisdom meditates, reflects:
"The rich man, humble, sheds his robe of gold and silver,
The rags of the beggar are divine."

Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research

July 1, 1959

Dear Mr. Roosevelt:

Thank you for your letter of June 23.

I shall be happy to join the New York Committee of the Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research, but must point out to you that I shall be out of the country for the greater part of the next twelve months, while taking a sabbatical year. However, if you do not consider this a disadvantage, I shall be glad to join the Committee.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. James Roosevelt
Congress of the United States
House of Representatives
Washington, D. C.

mc

JAMES ROOSEVELT
26TH DISTRICT, CALIFORNIA

WASHINGTON OFFICE:
325 HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING
CAPITOL 4-3121, EXT. 525

Congress of the United States
House of Representatives
Washington, D. C.

LOS ANGELES OFFICE:
5308 WEST ADAMS BOULEVARD
WEBSTER 4-0144

June 23rd, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C. B. S.
485 Madison Ave.
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am writing to share with you the extraordinary gratification derived by the 1,100 people who attended the Founders Dinner of the Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research on May 23rd at the Hotel Astor.

This landmark in America's crusade against the scourge of cancer received recognition on the floor of the United States Senate in an historic speech by Senator Richard L. Neuberger. Enclosed is the excerpt from the Congressional Record containing this address. As you will note, it singles out the Eleanor Roosevelt Institute as a central factor in our country's effort to find a cancer cure.

Ground will be broken for the new Institute at the American Medical Center at Denver in October. At that time national TV programs and celebrations throughout the country will be dedicated to the building of the only Institution to which mother has given the use of her name.

Would you therefore consider joining the other community leaders and public figures as a member of the New York Committee of the Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research? Please be assured that there will be no undue impingement on your time or finances.

Let me take this opportunity to thank you for your consideration of this life-saving project.

Sincerely yours,

James Roosevelt

JAMES ROOSEVELT

JR:slg
encls.

Congressional Record

United States of America

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 86th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Vol. 105 WASHINGTON, TUESDAY, MAY 26, 1959 No. 85

FOUNDING OF THE ELEANOR ROOSEVELT INSTITUTE FOR CANCER RESEARCH AT THE AMERICAN MEDICAL CENTER

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, the name of Eleanor Roosevelt has become synonymous in our time with humanitarianism and good deeds. As the name of her illustrious husband is forever associated with the conquest of infantile paralysis, so the name of Mrs. Roosevelt may in the future be linked with the possible conquering of an even more formidable medical problem—that of cancer.

In New York City, on May 23, 1959, occurred the founders' dinner of the Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research at the American Medical Center in Denver, Colo. Of course, Mrs. Roosevelt herself was the guest of honor. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, head of our mission to the United Nations, and I were the speakers. Miss Faye Emerson, a member of the Roosevelt family, was mistress of ceremonies. Representative JAMES ROOSEVELT and Miss Marian Anderson, the gifted singer, appeared briefly on the program, as did Jerry Lewis, the noted comedian.

Since 1904 the American Medical Center has played an active part in the gradual solving of the grim dilemma of tuberculosis. Now that this disease has yielded in substantial measure to antibiotics and to improved techniques in chest surgery, cancer is a logical goal of study for the talented researchers and dedicated scientists on the staff of the American Medical Center. Indeed, a special honor award was presented May 23 to Philip and Gussie Diamond of New York, who were among the original benefactors of the American Medical Center some 55 years ago.

It was a high privilege for me to participate in a banquet attended by 1,200 people, which paid tribute to that illustrious woman whose sympathy for the oppressed is so genuine and so enduring—Eleanor Roosevelt. Ambassador Lodge made a most moving address which described the esteem in which Mrs. Roosevelt is held at the U.N. Marian Anderson heralded Mrs. Roosevelt's innate simplicity and goodness. I praised the enlightenment of scientists who, in honor of Mrs. Roosevelt, were turning from tuberculosis to the greater and more urgent cause of cancer. JAMES ROOSEVELT, son of the guest of honor, expressed the gratitude of the entire Roosevelt family to those whose financial generosity is making possible this heroic undertaking in the field of science and medicine.

Messages of approval and good wishes were received from President Dwight D. Eisenhower, Vice President Richard M. Nixon, Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, Mayor Robert F. Wagner, National Democratic Chairman Paul M. Butler, Senator Jacob K. Javits, Senator Kenneth Keating, and many others.

Inasmuch as the Vice President is presently the occupant of the chair, I desire to digress briefly from my prepared remarks to point out that I think one of the principal highlights of good humor during the evening occurred when the Vice President's message was read. In this message he pointed out that although he and Mrs. Nixon had traveled throughout the world, whenever he was in a country, be it remote or well known, he always learned that Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt had been there before them.

Mrs. Roosevelt herself spoke only briefly. Yet, as usual, she was succinct and in perfect taste. She said the cause was crucially important, and it was this compelling cause—namely, freeing mankind from the menace and fear of cancer—which had prompted her for the first time to lend her name to an organization of this kind.

Mr. President, all possible approaches and efforts must be combined in the study of the causes and possible cures of cancer. This means cooperation among private groups such as the American Cancer Society, the Sloan-Kettering Institute, the Damon Runyon Cancer Memorial Fund, and the soon-to-be-begun Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research. It also means increased Federal support for the National Cancer Institute, which is part of the National Institutes of Health, and which sponsors some 73 percent of all cancer research in this country.

I think my colleagues will be interested to learn, incidentally, that the new institute at Denver honors Mrs. Roosevelt during her 75th birthday year. This remarkable woman, still full of vitality and energy, will be 75 in the fall. We so regard Mrs. Roosevelt as indestructible that none of us ever thinks of her as becoming older—like ordinary human beings. She is in a class by herself, as we all realize. Ambassador Lodge said that her reputation in the world—the love and affection in which she is held—are assets to the United States.

Some people may wonder if all this research in the field of cancer will do the job, will make a breakthrough to rescue mankind from such a scourge. I only can give the answer written in the New York Times of February 22, 1959, by its eminent medical editor, Dr. Howard A. Rusk. He wrote:

> When will the scientific breakthrough come to solve the riddle of cancer? Tomorrow or in the indefinite future.
>
> No one knows. What We do know, however, is that the more scientists who are at work on the problem in laboratories all over the world the greater are the odds for solution, and the quicker that solution will come.

I subscribe thoroughly to Dr. Rusk's attitude on this crucial matter. Who knows? Perhaps some scientist, working in the laboratories of the new Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research, at Denver in the foothills of the majestic Rockies, may participate in that eventful and epochial breakthrough.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to conclude my remarks with a very brief statement prepared by Eleanor Roosevelt herself, in describing the reasons why she has lent her illustrious name to the Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research, at the American Medical Center in Denver, Colo.

I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a document which is pertinent and timely to both public and private undertakings in the field of cancer research. This is an interview from the May 25 issue of U.S. News & World Report with Dr. John R. Heller, the eminent Director of the National Cancer Institute. In this interview, Dr. Heller emphasizes that, because of medical research, an increasing number of cancer patients are being saved and cured, but that much still remains to be learned before cancer can, in any sense of the word, be regarded as a disease that has widely responded to successful treatment.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

> This hospital and research institute is closing a gap in the cancer field which needs serious study. There are all too few facilities in our country which can combine outpatient and hospital care of cancer victims with both clinical and basic research tied together.
>
> I have in the past refused to give my name to any institution in this country. This Institute, however, will serve such a vital purpose that I have consented to make an exception in this single instance. The Institute can be of the greatest value for the estimated 40 million Americans now alive who will be stricken by cancer.
>
> I hope that eventually this Institute will be able to broaden its scope to help cancer research in other countries. In this way it can make a profound contribution to the health and peace of the entire world.

[From the U.S. News & World Report, May 25, 1959]

IF YOU'RE WORRIED ABOUT CANCER—ADVICE FROM AN AUTHORITY

(Interview with Dr. John R. Heller, Director, National Cancer Institute, U.S. Public Health Service)

Question. Dr. Heller, is cancer a growing threat, or does it just seem to be that way because of the prominence of people suffering from cancer?

Answer. I think cancer continues to be a growing threat because the population is greater and more of us are growing to the older ages where cancer strikes oftenest. However, better diagnosis, better understanding on the part of the medical profession, a growing alertness on the part of individuals make it seem that we are having more cancer.

Question. Would this be true of all types of cancer?

Answer. Lung cancer is on the increase. I dont' think there is any doubt about that. Other cancers—for examle, stomach cancer—definitely are on the decrease. And some other rarer forms of cancer are decreasing in occurrence. Lung cancer and cancer of the gastrointestinal system are the ones which we fear most from the standpoint of their occurrence and, of course, danger to our population.

Question. Why are we more concerned about those?

Answer. Well, for one thing, the outlook is rather grim with lung cancer and, despite the decreasing amount of stomach cancer, the outlook is rather grim with stomach cancer, too, primarily because these sites are inaccessible and we cannot diagnose them early enough.

Question. What advice would you give to people who are concerned about these and other forms of cancer?

Answer. I think one of the first things that any person ought to do is to go to his physician or his clinic for regular checkups.

Question. Is there something that an individual should look for—any telltale signs?

Answer. Yes. There are a number of signs and symptoms which an individual can watch out for—such things as a lump that doesn't go down, a sore that doesn't heal, bleeding for which there is no explanation, unexplained changes in bowel habits, or persistent hoarseness. Those are the sort of things that an individual, when confronted with them, should at least promptly have looked into.

Question. For the individual concerned about lung cancer, it there anything special he should do?

Answer. An individual who is 45 years of age and over—and certainly one who is a heavy user of cigarettes—should have his physician check his chest by an X-ray and by physical examination, I would say, at least every 6 months.

Question. Would this be everybody?

Answer. Most anyone over 45, and certainly men over 45, whether you smoke or not, because lung cancer will attack men who don't smoke. However, most of the men who have lung cancer are those who are heavy cigarette smokers.

Question. Is it pretty well accepted now scientifically that cigarette smoking is a cause of lung cancer?

Answer. I would say that it is. I think that most of the scientific data show that excessive use of cigarettes gives one a greater risk of acquiring lung cancer.

Question. Do you think heavy smokers should cut down a bit?

Answer. Well, that's my view. I think that, if a man is a heavy smoker, if he can't quit completely, he ought to cut down as much as he can. And the best thing to do, I think, is to cut it out if he can—if he feels that he can give up the habit.

Question. For cancer in general, is there anything a person can do to double-check on all these warning signs?

Answer. An individual, first of all, has to watch his own body physiology and watch his skin and watch for the things which may mean cancer. If there is something that doesn't seem quite right to him, then I think that he should promptly go to his physician.

Question. And even though he has no symptoms, he should still go regularly for a checkup?

Answer. By all means.

Question. What should the checkup include?

Answer. The average physician in his offices has enough tools to do a good physical examination. It means that the physician is able to check the systems of the body which he knows from experience are most likely to be invaded by cancer.

By inspection and palpation and listening to the chest and the heart and giving as thorough an examination as he knows how—and they're pretty good—I think that most of the cancers that will be present can be picked up.

Question. Is the outlook improved now for the successful treatment of cancer?

Answer. I think it is. Certainly, the chances of getting well from given cancers are improving all the time, and, despite the rather dull tools we may have for some cancers, nevertheless, with better preoperative management, postoperative management, better understanding of anesthesiology and all of the general care of the patient, the outlook is better.

Around the turn of the century, maybe 1 out of 20 was being saved. Then, 6 or 8 years ago, it was one out of four. Now it is one out of three. With the tools now available we should be able to save one out of two.

And, while some people don't like odds like that—well, neither do we—nevertheless, it is so much better than it used to be that I have every reason to believe that we will improve them all along—"we" being the scientists and the medical profession.

Question. What types of cancer are yielding best to treatment?

A. I would say that the lower-bowel cancers are yielding best to surgery, and cancer of the thyroid now yields very well to surgery and other treatment. Most of the cancers that are accessible—certainly cancer of the reproductive organs of the female—are better treated and better handled now than ever before.

Question. These, then—the more common types—are really the ones that are doing the best—that is, we're getting the best results, with the exception of lung cancer?

Answer. That's right. The ones that have been killers in the past now are beginning to yield, and, of course, I think thats' gratifying, because, if we can cut out the big killers, then we can get after all the rest of them.

The only one that has us really worried is carcinoma of the lung, which is mounting in occurrence. Of course, it's pretty rought to do anything with cancer of the lung unless it's picked up very, very early.

Question. How soon could cures for most of the common types of cancer be expected?

Answer. Well, that's a "toughy." I don't know. It would depend entirely on the cancer. Of course, if you can get a cancer that you know is a very early one and very promptly excise it, then I think you can expect almost a 100 percent cure. The trouble of it is that so frequently cancers which appear to be small already have spread to other parts of the body and one simply does not know it. The surgeon is reluctant or hesitant to say whether or not a cure might be effected in that particular instance.

Question. But for, say, lung cancer and stomach cancer, which are common among men, and for breast cancer among women, you don't see any immediate cures?

Answer. No, I don't. I wish I could say tomorrow or the next day, but I think, while the mortality rate probably will go down—I hope steadily—it won't go down fast. Nevertheless, I don't see anything right around the corner which could be construed as being excessively hopeful or favorable.

Question. Are there any chemical approaches that look very promising?

Answer. Well, in the chemical-therapy programs generally there are some drugs which look to be very good, but nothing that is the answer to all our prayers, or a miracle drug for cancer, yet. I think we have more and better compounds for treatment of far-advanced cancer all the time, but still we don't have the ones we'd like to have. I hope we have them sometime in the future.

Roosevelt, Geo
Mrs.

January 11, 1958

Dear Mrs. Roosevelt:

I regret the delay in answering your letter of December 20th.

I have heard from my friend, Bill Bollman concerning the suggested program on "The American Merchant Marine --Our Fourth Arm of Defense," and regret very much that it will not be possible for SEE IT NOW to do a show on this theme in the immediate future. As you know, our air time is somewhat limited (we do only nine of these shows a year) and we are already committed for the rest of this year.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. George E. Roosevelt
580 Park Avenue
New York 21, New York

mcc

Mrs. George E. Roosevelt
580 Park Avenue
New York 21, N. Y.

December 20, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York 21, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your "See it Now" program is most interesting and informative. I am one of the legion of admirers of this outstanding program.

Recently, our Executive Secretary, William P. Bollman, III, wrote to you regarding "The American Merchant Marine--Our Fourth Arm of Defense," as a theme for a future "See it Now" program. The overall story of the American Merchant Marine, from Sailing Ships to the Nucular Age, is facinating, educational and pictorial. It would provide excellent material for a "See it Now" telecast.

I am extremely interested in the American Merchant Marine and have been Chairman of the American Merchant Marine Library Association Board since 1945. I would appreciate the opportunity to discuss this project with you at length and trust that you will be able to lunch with Mr. Bollman, and myself.

I am leaving tonight to spend Christmas with my son and his family in Atlanta, Georgia. I expect to return on December 27, and hope that you will provide the opportunity for Mr. Bollman and myself to meet with you.

With all good wishes for a happy holiday season.

Sincerely yours,

Mildred C. Roosevelt

Rosen, Len

February 16, 1959

Dear Mr. Rosen:

I have your nice letter stating your ideas for a television show.

Unfortunately, I have no control over any programs other than those which I am at present producing.

If you wish to pursue your ideas, I suggest you contact our Director of programs for Public Affairs, Mr. Irving Gitlin.

Sincerely,

Mr. Len Rosen
250 West 43 Street
New York, New York

Mario Trombone
ASSOCIATES
PUBLIC RELATIONS • PUBLICITY
250 WEST 43rd STREET • NEW YORK 36, N. Y. • WIsconsin 7-6025 — 6000
BRyant 9-4862

TV pgm. material

January 26, 1959.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I wonder if you might be interested in the following...

This summer, an entire city will pay tribute via a ten-day festival to several persons: a crusading journalist, a former Mayor, a farmer, an industrialist, an author, a humorist, a lecturer, a philanthropist.

As you've probably guessed, the above-named are all one person: P. T. Barnum. In addition to having pursued the various careers described above during his fabulous lifetime, Barnum was also, of course, the world's greatest showman and publicity genius. He was also, upon more than one occasion, roundly cursed as a charlatan, swindler and hoaxster.

However, as for the City of Bridgeport, Conn., which will stage its 11th Annual Barnum Festival this year during the last week of June and the first week of July, Phineas Taylor Barnum was a fearless and courageous citizen who...

...fought against rate-gouging tactics of the local gas and waterworks companies;
...as a member of the Connecticut State Legislature, successfully battled the railroad lobby - - and later saw the sale of his many books banned on local trains;
...became a newspaper editor at the age of twenty-one when a local editor refused to print Barnum's letters denouncing certain religious fanatics. Barnum's articles in his own newspaper, though true, succeeded in landing him in jail for two months;
...donated Seaside Park, a huge recreational area, to the city;
...developed Bridgeport as an important industrial center;
...donated land on which to build schools and churches;
...donated his palatial home to the University of Bridgeport;
...promoted free band concerts for recreation of factory workers;
...beautified the city by planting thousands of trees at his own expense;

(more)

Mario Trombone
ASSOCIATES
PUBLIC RELATIONS • PUBLICITY
250 WEST 43rd STREET • NEW YORK 36, N. Y. • WIsconsin 7-6025 — 6000
BRyant 9-4862

...involved himself with a clock manufacturing firm, persuading it to move to Bridgeport to help create employment - - and subsequently suffered a personal loss of $500,000. (He later cleaned up his debts and started a new fortune by lecturing and writing on "The Art of Making Money."

The Barnum Museum in Bridgeport contains a permanent collection of Barnumania, personal belongings of Barnum, Tom Thumb, Lavinia Warren. The curator of the museum is Barnum's distant relation and she's written several books about him.

Barnum himself was a prolific author - - in addition to penning his own life's story (revised several times) he wrote several books about his travels.

I think there's an interesting story about Barnum, the dual personality: the fast-talking, fabulous showman, and the civic-minded philanthropist. I think there's another story in the manner in which a city displays its pride in a favorite son via this annual festival.

Would you consider this as material for a TV show in any form? I would appreciate hearing from you.

Sincerely

Len Rosen

Len Rosen

The following is a list of suggested topics and sub-divisions. This list is by no means complete. It is meant to serve as an aid to the prospective speaker in choosing a subject from the area which concerns him. The speaker is free to choose any of the proposed topics or select any other subject that he wishes.

(I) AMERICA AS A CIVILIZATION

The United States: A Civilization in Crisis

(II) Political Consciousness in America

(a) American Public Opinion and the Role of the U.S. in World Affairs.
(b) The Development of Democracy in Contemporary America
(c) The Future of Civil Liberties in America
(d) Sources of Power and Political Allignment in Contemporary America
(e) The American Constitutional System in the Light of Contemporary Problems
(f) The Church-State Problematic in Contemporary American Thought

(III) Unsolved Problems and Social Progress in America

(a) The Economic Basis of American Prosperity
(b) The Achievement of Social Justice in America: an Appraisal
(c) 'Socialism', 'Capitalism' and the Problem of Describing America's Economic System
(d) Labor Unionism and Industrial Democracy: The Proper Role of Unions in American Life
(e) America's Minorities: A Survey of Discrimination in America
(f) Industrial Society versus the Human Person: Analysis & Prospects

(IV) Reform in Contemporary American Education

(a) Educational Philosophies in Conflict
(b) Can a Humanistic Liberal Education be Saved?
(c) Contemporary American Education and the Formation of Values
(d) Religious Education in America: Needs and Prospects
(e) An Assessment of Public Education in the Light of America's Needs

(V) The Arts in Contemporary America: Symptoms & Prospects

(a) Screen & Television
  1- Industry versus Art.
  2- Social Impact and Social Responsibility
  3- Impact of Screen and T.V. on youth and/or public of America
(b) Stage: the Situation of Theatre in America
(c) Writing
  1- The American Reading Public and the Writer's Art
  2- The Art of Fiction in Contemporary American Novelists
  3- Poetry and Contemporary Poets in American Life
  4- American Journalism and its Public

(VI) Foreign Affairs and Military Defense
(a) The Effect of Guided Missiles on U.S. Defense
(b) Possibility of World War III and America's Position.

Rosenberg, Anna

June 19, 1959

Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg
444 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Anna:

Our visit with you came as close to being what I was aiming at when we started this series five years ago as any program I have ever done. You will understand what I mean when I say I would have been quite happy to have made that one the last of the series. You were superb, and I am in your debt.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

E.R.
F-1

Anna M. Rosenberg
ASSOCIATES
444 Madison Avenue · New York 22, N.Y. · Plaza 9-4811
Public Relations · Industrial Relations

June 16, 1959

My dear Ed -

A million thanks for your perfectly beautiful flowers and for pulling me through the program on Friday.

You are right; one isn't even nervous when doing a program with you!

Have a wonderful summer.

Affectionately,

Anna

Anna M. Rosenberg

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Rosenberg, Anna

April 23, 1958

Dear Anna:

Many thanks for sending me an advance copy of the report, The Challenge To America: Its Economic and Social Aspects.

I greatly appreciate your thoughtfulness.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg
444 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

mcc

Rosenberg A

February 10, 1958

Dear Anna:

Thanks for your gracious note.

It was a real privilege to work with President Truman and I am glad the end result was satisfactory to you.

The response has been very favorable indeed and you will be amused to know that the President was highly pleased when some of his old critics returned to the fray.

As ever yours,

Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg
444 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

fc

Anna M. Rosenberg
444 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

February 3, 1958

Dear Ed:

Your program with President Truman yesterday was an historic contribution. No book written by President Truman, nor about him, could reflect more clearly his simplicity, his integrity and his philosophy. These qualities were brilliantly evoked through your sympathetic and pointed questions.

It was a great accomplishment, and I am grateful to you.

Sincerely,

Anna.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Rosenberg, Anna

January 31, 1958

Dear Anna:

Thank you very much. I think the project is wonderful but I simply can't undertake it. There just aren't enough hours in the day.

I am sorry.

As ever yours,

Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg
444 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

fc

Anna M. Rosenberg
ASSOCIATES
444 Madison Avenue · New York 22, N. Y. · Plaza 9-4811
Public Relations · Industrial Relations

By Hand

January 31, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

My dear Ed:

It was nice to see you for lunch the other day and I hope we do it soon again.

I don't know if, in your very busy life, you noticed last Fall the chrysanthemums and flags on Park Avenue and the floral boxes with chrysanthemums and flags and lights on Fifth Avenue, and the flood-lighting of such buildings as the Library and Washington Arch and the Metropolitan Museum at night.

This display was the culmination of two years of effort in getting the City to realize that New York could be made much more beautiful, both for the people who live here and for visitors to our city.

Last year, Mary Lasker planted tulips on Park Avenue, at her own expense, to show that it could be done. Then last Fall, we got money from the Board of Estimates to plant flowers for the Fall, Spring, and Summer seasons. We called the project "Salute to Seasons." This Spring, to give people pleasure, Park Avenue, Fifth Avenue, Bryant Park, the front of the Library, and the front of the Metropolitan Museum, among other places, will be decorated with daffodils and tulips. Also, some of our beautiful buildings will again be floodlit. Many stores and hotels who cooperated last year in doing plantings and exhibitions on their own, will do it again this year.

We are most anxious to have as many people in New York interested and excited about this as possible, and to make sure that it continues. Mayor Wagner is Honorary Chairman, and I am co-chairman with Dick Patterson, of "Salute to Seasons." We have chairmen for special committees, such as Bernard Gimbel for Industry and Business, Dorothy Shaver for Department Stores, Colonel Binns for Hotels, James Rorimer of the Metropolitan Museum for Museums, and Gardner Cowles for Magazines. Some of the Vice-chairmen are Mary Lasker, Mrs. Roosevelt, Nelson Rockefeller, Bob Moses, Harry Luce, Louis Hollander, Roger Stevens, and a few other important people.

Would you be an angel and take the Chairmanship of the Radio and Television Committee? It really will not require much time or work from you. It simply means attending one or two meetings and maybe writing letters to a few people in your industry asking them to support this effort when it is announced. Please do it. It will mean a great deal to have your cooperation, and I promise you you won't be bothered too much.

I am sending this letter by messenger and will call you in a day or two, and I hope your answer will be "Yes."

My very best,

Anna

Anna M. Rosenberg

TO Mr. Murrow

FROM Mrs. Crissan Jan. 8

Mrs. Anna Rosenberg would like you and Mrs. Murrow to come to a dinner party at her home Feb. 15th at 8:00 black tie.

Miss McGlincy, Sec. Called.
MU 28463

Sorry can't do it

PE 9481 office

e-mine Rosen but call

Anna M. Rosenberg
444 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

January 6, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

My dear Ed:

I don't know if you received the full text of the Rockefeller report on "International Security: The Military Aspect."

The members of the panel who drew it up are from every walk of life. Although some of us on the overall panel were not in full agreement with every particular of the subpanel's findings, in our anxiety and desire to get the facts to the public, we all subscribed to it.

Subsequent reports will cover other aspects of our international and domestic policies and objectives. I am sure they will interest you and I will send them to you as early as I can.

Last time I saw you at the Gunthers, we had an interesting talk. Do call me and let us have lunch because I am eager to know what has developed on it. Meantime, my very best to you.

Sincerely,

Anna

Enclosure

hold

FROM: Special Studies Project
Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Inc.
22 West 55th Street
New York 20, New York

FOR RELEASE
After 6:00 p.m.
SUNDAY,
January 5, 1958

TELEPHONE: CIrcle 7-3782

The Special Studies Project of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, formed in 1956 to explore the problems and opportunities confronting the United States over the next 10-15 years, has released the first of a series of reports, Nelson A. Rockefeller, chairman of the Project and president of the Fund, announced today (Sunday, January 5).

This report, "International Security: The Military Aspect," will be followed by others later covering the following areas: U.S. international objectives, foreign economic policy, domestic economic and social objectives, education and manpower, the democratic process and the moral framework of national purpose.

In explaining the purpose of the Special Studies Project, Mr. Rockefeller stated:

"This project grew out of our belief that the United States finds itself today in a paradoxical situation: we have succeeded in our domestic development to an extent which would have been considered unrealizable even twenty years ago; internationally, we have emerged as a strong nation in a world in ferment and yet, because of their very magnitude, our achievements and our strength appear in some ways to have outrun our goals. Therefore, we felt that the nation's best thinking should be brought to bear on a reappraisal of our concepts and attitudes to deal with a situation changing more rapidly and in some cases in directions different from what our national experience has led us to expect.

"In an effort to make a contribution to this reappraisal, the Rockefeller Brothers Fund organized the Special Studies Project in June, 1956, to seek to define the problems and opportunities that the United States may face over the next ten to fifteen years, to review our national purposes and objectives in terms of these problems and opportunities, and to develop a framework of concepts and considerations on which policies and decisions to implement our purpose might be based."

Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, director of the Special Studies Project and associate director of the Harvard Center for International Affairs, stated that the work of the Special Studies Project has been carried forward in five stages:

1. The formation of a panel of outstanding Americans charged with placing the challenges of the next decade and a half into the perspective of our national purpose.

2. The commissioning of some hundred experts to do papers outlining the trends in their special fields of competence and the alternative measures for dealing with them. These papers formed the nucleus of subsequent discussion.

3. The formation of seven subpanels, composed of members of the overall panel, authors and specialists. These subpanels were formed to facilitate discussion and at the same time make it possible to receive the benefit of the knowledge and insight of a larger number of persons experienced in the fields under consideration.

4. The submission by each subpanel of a report reflecting its findings and based on the discussion of the papers and the testimony of experts.

5. The preparation of a report by the overall panel assessing and relating the work of the subpanels in terms of a framework of national purpose and overall national objectives.

Each subpanel received about fifteen papers prepared by specialists in the fields of the panel's particular study. These analyses outlined the author's assessment of the problems and opportunities in the different fields, the objectives which the United States should set for itself, and alternative ways of dealing with the challenges of the future. Each paper emphasized the basic concepts that should guide United States policies in the particular area of its concern. The combination of intensive study of especially prepared background material by subpanels and periodic reports to the overall panel, permitted a comprehensive approach to the major problems and opportunities facing the United States over the next decade and a half.

Altogether forty-five meetings of the various panels have been held in or near New York.

The material of the Special Studies Project will be published in book form by Doubleday and Co.

Members of the Project's Overall Panel are:

Nelson A. Rockefeller, chairman of the Panel
Adolf A. Berle, Jr., senior partner, Berle, Berle & Brunner, and former Ambassador to Brazil
Chester Bowles, former Ambassador to India and former Governor of Connecticut
Arthur F. Burns, president, The National Bureau of Economic Research
General Lucius D. Clay, chairman of the board, Continental Can Company, Inc.
John Cowles, president, Minneapolis Star & Tribune and chairman of the board, The DesMoines Register & Tribune
Justin W. Dart, president, Rexall Drug Company
Gordon E. Dean, senior vice president - nuclear energy, General Dynamics Corporation, and former chairman, Atomic Energy Commission
John S. Dickey, president, Dartmouth College
John W. Gardner, president, Carnegie Corporation of New York
Lester B. Granger, executive director, National Urban League, Inc.
Caryl P. Haskins, president, Carnegie Institution of Washington
Theodore M. Hesburgh, president, University of Notre Dame
Margaret A. Hickey, public affairs editor, Ladies' Home Journal
Oveta Culp Hobby, president, The Houston Post
Devereux C. Josephs, chairman of the board, New York Life Insurance Company
Milton Katz, director International Legal Studies, Harvard University Law School
Henry R. Luce, editor-in-chief, Time, Life, Fortune
Thomas B. McCabe, president, Scott Paper Company
General James McCormack, vice president, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Richard P. McKeon, Department of Philosophy, University of Chicago
Lee W. Minton, president, Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States and Canada
Charles H. Percy, president, Bell & Howell Company
Jacob S. Potofsky, general president, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America
Anna M. Rosenberg, public and industrial relations consultant
Dean Rusk, president, The Rockefeller Foundation
David Sarnoff, chairman of the board, Radio Corporation of America
Charles M. Spofford, former Deputy Representative to NATO Edward Teller, professor of physics, University of California, Berkeley, and associate director, University of California Radiation Laboratories

Frazar B. Wilde, president, Connecticut General Life Insurance Company

Robert B. Anderson resigned from the Panel when he was appointed Secretary of the Treasury
James R. Killian, Jr., president, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, resigned from the Panel when he was appointed Special Assistant to the President

Members of the panel dealing with "International Security: The Military Aspect" are:

Frank Altschul, vice president, Council on Foreign Relations
General Frederick L. Anderson, former Deputy U. S. Special Representative in Europe
Karl R. Bendetsen, vice president, operations, The Champion Paper and Fibre Company
Detlev W. Bronk, president, Rockefeller Institute
* Gordon E. Dean, senior vice president - nuclear energy, General Dynamics Corporation, and former chairman, Atomic Energy Commission
James B. Fisk, executive vice president, Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc.
John F. Floberg, served as a member of this panel until his appointment as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission in June 1957
Bradley Gaylord, chairman of the board, The Pennroad Corporation
Roswell L. Gilpatric, partner, Cravath, Swaine & Moore, and former Under Secretary of the Air Force
Townsend W. Hoopes, J. H. Whitney and Company
Ellis A. Johnson, director, Operations Research Office, Johns Hopkins University
Colonel George A. Lincoln, professor, Social Sciences, U.S. Military Academy
* Henry R. Luce, editor-in-chief, Time, Life, Fortune
* General James McCormack, vice president, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, served as chairman of the Panel until October 1957 when illness forced him to withdraw from that position
Frank C. Nash, U. S. Delegation to General Assembly of the U.N. and Presidential consultant on overseas base study, was a member of the Panel until his death on December 11, 1957
Laurance S. Rockefeller, president, Rockefeller Brothers, Inc.
Arthur Smithies, Department of Economics, Harvard University
* Edward Teller, professor of physics, University of California, Berkeley, and associate director, University of California Radiation Laboratories
T. F. Walkowicz, aeronautical engineer
Carroll L. Wilson, president, Metals & Controls Corporation

* Also Overall Panel members

Rosenberry, W

June 10, 1958

Dear Mr. Rosenberry:

Many thanks for your recent letter expressing an interest in the Michael Farmer broadcast.

At this point, I do not have any plans of doing a program on our national air traffic control facilities.

Again, thank you.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Walter S. Rosenberry, III
2298 East Eastman
Englewood, Colorado

mcc

WALTER S. ROSENBERRY III
2298 EAST EASTMAN
ENGLEWOOD, COLORADO

May 3, 1958

a TV pgm idea

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
The Columbia Broadcasting Building
Madison Avenue at 52nd Street
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I want to tell you how very highly my wife and I regarded the radio documentary you did for CBS on the Michael Farmer case two weeks ago.

The recent United Airlines-Air Force collision near Las Vegas once more points up how woefully inadequate are our national air traffic control facilities. Have you and CBS considered the possibility of doing a radio or TV report on that subject? It seems to me it is something which very badly needs the same sort of attention you gave to the basic problems which the Farmer killing points up.

It has seemed to me for some time that your reporting is one of the more encouraging and inspiring aspects of contemporary American life, and I should like to register this expression of my appreciation for the signal services you have rendered the nation at large.

Respectfully,

Walter S Rosenberry III

Walter S. Rosenberry, III

Rosenman
F

June 26, 1959

Judge Samuel I. Rosenman
Rosenman, Goldmark, Colin & Kaye
575 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Sam:

This is my last day in the shop. I enclose a note to our correspondent in Tokyo, whose wife is Japanese. I am sure he will be delighted to make all the necessary arrangements. Hope you have a wonderful time. I shall miss you.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

enc.

Rosenstein, Samuel

LAW OFFICES OF
MILLIKEN, HANDMAKER & ROSENSTEIN
Marion E. Taylor Building
LOUISVILLE 2, KENTUCKY

HERMAN G. HANDMAKER
SAMUEL M. ROSENSTEIN
HOMER A. SOBEL
JOHN S. MILLIKEN, JR.
STUART A. HANDMAKER

October 27, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Vice President
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Upon my return to the hotel Wednesday evening following the delightful affair at the Waldorf of the Joint Defense Appeal, I found a telegram from Governor Frank G. Clement of Tennessee. A copy of the same is enclosed herewith.

May I congratulate you upon the outstanding work that you are doing and upon the better understanding that you are bringing to peoples throughout the world. Your address on Wednesday night was one of the finest I have ever heard and I am so grateful that I was privileged to be present to hear it.

With warm personal regards,

Sincerely,

Samuel M. Rosenstein

Samuel M. Rosenstein

SMR:evr
Enc.

DOMESTIC SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise this message will be sent as a fast telegram
TELEGRAM
DAY LETTER
NIGHT LETTER

$ S E

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

1206 (4-55)

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise the message will be sent at the full rate
FULL RATE
LETTER TELEGRAM
SHORE-SHIP

NO. WDS.-CL. OF SVC.	PD. OR COLL.	CASH NO.	CHARGE TO THE ACCOUNT OF	TIME FILED

Send the following message, subject to the terms on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to

1958 OCT 22 PM 8 18

NASHVILLE, TENN.

SAM ROSENSTEIN
BNAI BRITH DINNER
PARK LANE HOTEL

MEN OF THE CALIBRE OF MR. EDWARD MURROW, WHOM I HAVE MET PERSONALLY, AND MR. GOLDFARB, WHOM I KNOW BY REPUTATION, HAVE DONE MUCH AND WILL DO MORE TO HELP CREATE A BETTER UNDERSTANDING IN OUR GREAT NATION. THESE MEN, DEDICATED TO SUCH A CAUSE, DESERVE OUR WARMEST ADMIRATION AND, AS GOVERNOR OF TENNESSEE, I WANT TO EXTEND TO EACH OF THEM, THROUGH YOU, MY SINCEREST CONGRATULATIONS.

FRANK G. CLEMENT

Ross, C. D.

January 11, 1955

Dear Mr. Ross:

This is merely a note to thank you for your letter of January 4th. My secretary did indeed convey the message to me from the Honorable L.B. Pearson.

I am herewith enclosing the transcript of the YEARS OF CRISIS program as you requested.

Sincerely,

Mr. A.D. Ross
Canadian Consulate General
620 Fifth Avenue
New York 20, New York

fc

INFORMATION OFFICE

620 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 20, N.Y.

~~COLUMBUS 5-3680~~
JUdson 6-2400

Yes

January 4, 1955.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

In confirmation of my telephone conversation with your secretary earlier this morning, the following is the text of the message from the Honourable L. B. Pearson which she will have conveyed to you:

> "Please accept my warm congratulations on yesterday's (January 2) telecast, which was one of the finest and most stimulating discussions I have ever listened to. I would appreciate greatly receiving a copy of the text, if one was made. Best regards and all good wishes for '55. Pearson."

The undersigned will be pleased to transmit to Mr. Pearson the text of the broadcast, if one is available.

Incidentally, should you be contemplating any "live" shows from Canada, please be assured that we, in this office, would welcome the opportunity of assisting in any way possible.

Yours sincerely,

(A. D. Ross)
Consul and Information Officer

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
485 Madison Ave.,
N.Y.C.

Rosenwald
F

Mrs. Robert Rosenwald
350 Central Park West
New York 25, New York

June 15, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Would it be possible for me to have an appointment with you prior to your departure? I recognize that you are extremely busy at this juncture. However, if the issue which I wish to discuss were not of the most vital concern, I would not intrude at this time.

I have associated myself with the National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy in an effort to solve many of their organizational problems and to reach the American people with vital scientific information which has been withheld. Please allow me a few moments of your valued time. I can be reached at AC 2 - 0258.

Thank you for your consideration in this matter.

Sincerely,

Ruth F Rosenwald

Al Rosenthal

U. S. ARMY ENGINEER DIVISION, NORTH CENTRAL CORPS OF ENGINEERS
536 SOUTH CLARK STREET
CHICAGO 5, ILLINOIS

IN REPLY REFER TO: NCDRP

8 January 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your kind note of 18 December 1958 has been received and I appreciate your interest in the motion picture project on navigation to mid-America.

As soon as our project has made further progress I shall indeed be delighted to send you a tentative script. We shall indeed be grateful for any assistance and advice you may subsequently be able to give us.

Sincerely yours,

ALFRED ROSENTHAL
Chief, Technical Liaison Br.

ypc

December 18, 1958

Mr. Alfred Rosenthal
Chief, Technical Liaison Br.
U.S. Army Engineer Division, North Central
Corps of Engineers
536 South Clark Street
Chicago 5, Illinois

Dear Mr. Rosenthal:

Thank you for your letter of December 12 and the enclosed fact sheet. If you will send along a script when you have one ready, I shall be pleased to have a look at it. At this point, it is difficult for me to commit myself to doing this, as I shall be out of the country for some time during the spring.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

U. S. ARMY ENGINEER DIVISION, NORTH CENTRAL CORPS OF ENGINEERS
536 SOUTH CLARK STREET
CHICAGO 5, ILLINOIS

IN REPLY REFER TO: NCDRP

12 December 1958

Will look at the script when its ready.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The North Central Division office of the Corps of Engineers is now engaged in the production of a sound, color motion picture on Great Lakes and inland navigation. As construction agents for the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, this office was charged with the supervision of construction of the U. S. portion of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Coinciding with the forthcoming completion of the St. Lawrence Seaway, we are now producing a documentary film, for general distribution, depicting the efforts now underway to bring world commerce to mid-America and to modernize the entire Great Lakes navigation system to accommodate overseas and inter-lake traffic.

Should you be interested in this general topic, I have taken the liberty of inclosing a brief fact sheet for your review.

As you appreciate in addition to excellent photography, clear, concise and dramatic narration is vital. With this in mind I am taking the liberty of inquiring whether you would possibly be able to narrate the completed film as a public service with appropriate credits. If you could consider this idea favorably, we would of course be pleased to adjust our sound recording schedule to your availability. The film will be a 27-minute feature and would, at the time of the recording session, be in the final editing stage. Therefore, we would not impose upon your time too much. According to our present schedule, which is still very tentative, the recording of the narrative will take place during the spring of the coming year.

NCDRP
(Edw R Murrow)

12 Dec 58

I wish to assure you that your favorable consideration of this request will indeed be greatly appreciated. The film, which will be given national and world-wide distribution, would certainly be greatly enhanced by your narrative. May we hear from you at your convenience?

Sincerely yours,

ALFRED ROSENTHAL
Chief, Technical Liaison Br.

1 Incl:
Fact Sheet

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION
BRINGS WORLD SHIPPING TO MID-AMERICA

United States and Canada join forces building St. Lawrence Seaway and Great Lakes Connecting Channels

Deep in the heart of the North American continent, the 95,000 square miles of inland seas comprising the Great Lakes are about to become crossroads of inter-continental and world shipping.

From the sea - via the Saint Lawrence Seaway - from the Mississippi River system via the Illinois Waterway and the Calumet-Sag Ship Canal to Lake Michigan and via the links of the Great Lakes connecting channels, ocean-going vessels, the Great Lakes fleet and inland barges will meet.

While construction of the Saint Lawrence Seaway, a joint Canadian and U.S.A. undertaking, is in its final phases, U.S. Army Engineers, in cooperation with Canada, are already extending the Seaway's benefits to America's Mid West.

When the job is done, Canada and the United States will have a land-protected navigation route leading over 2,300 miles from the Atlantic Ocean up the St. Lawrence River through the Great Lakes to Duluth, Minnesota. Its use for the transportation of iron ore, steel, grain, petroleum, chemicals, etc. will reduce by 1,000 miles the present open-sea route to the British Isles.

Concentrated around the shoreline of the Great Lakes are factories, railroad terminals, mines, smelters, ports, and population centers which taken together constitute the greatest industrial complex of the western hemisphere.

The International Boundary between Canada and the United States passes through all of the Great Lakes and their connecting channels, except Lake Michigan which is wholly within the U.S. and the St. Lawrence River for a distance of about 112 miles from the head of the river to below Cornwall, Ontario.

BUSY WATERWAYS

The Great Lakes navigation system, stretching 1,162 miles from the St. Lawrence River to Duluth, Minnesota, and 1,061 miles from the St. Lawrence to Chicago, is one of the world's busiest waterways. It carries about 25 percent of the waterborne commerce of the United States, the preponderance of which is bulk freight such as iron ore, grain, coal, stone and petroleum. The 111 billion ton-miles of Great Lakes freight traffic carried in 1956 represents an increase of about 20 percent over the past 15 years.

Total United States traffic on the Great Lakes including all imports and exports averaged about 225,000,000 tons annually for the six-year period from 1951 through 1956. For the calendar year 1956 the total was about 237,000,000 tons. Of this total about 5,300,000 tons passed through the St. Lawrence River. Of this latter total about 574,000 tons was overseas traffic to United States Great Lakes ports.

The Lakes, themselves, generally have ample depths for all classes of navigation. However, the connecting channels between the lakes west of Lake Erie require deepening to accommodate the larger, faster, and more economical vessels now being added to the Great Lakes fleet.

This work has been initiated by the U.S. Army, Corps of Engineers. When complete, the deepened channels will also accommodate all ocean-going vessels entering the lakes via the 27-foot St. Lawrence Seaway and the Welland Canal and thus extend the seaway from Lake Erie to the heart of Mid-America.

THE SAINT LAWRENCE SEAWAY

First, what is the St. Lawrence Seaway? The St. Lawrence Seaway is a project to provide a 27-foot ship channel between Lake Erie and Montreal. From Montreal to the ocean Canada has already provided a ship channel with a controlling depth of 35 feet. There is a fall of about 225 feet in the 183-mile reach of the St. Lawrence River between Lake Ontario and Montreal. Most of this fall is in the 115-mile reach between Montreal and Chimney Point, about 68 miles below Lake Ontario. Canada has an existing navigation system in this 115-mile reach of the river with a series of canals and locks bypassing the rapids in the river. These canals have a controlling depth of 14 feet with controlling lock dimensions of 44 feet by 250 feet with 14-foot depth over the sills. The 68-mile reach of river from Chimney Point to Lake Ontario is wide and deep and only minor improvements consisting of removal of rock shoals have been required in the past to provide a deep draft channel of about 25-foot depth.

The Seaway Project now nearing completion consists of 7 deep-draft locks in the St. Lawrence River 800 feet by 80 feet with 30-feet depths over the sills, and canals and channels between Montreal and Lake Ontario with controlling depths of 27 feet. Five of the locks are being built by Canada and two by the United States. The latter were completed in July of this year. The Canadian Section representing 71% of the undertaking will be completed during the coming year.

The United States portion of the work is being accomplished by the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation with the Corps of Engineers, U.S. Army, as their agent to design and construct these facilities.

Traffic between Lake Ontario and Lake Erie is through the Canadian Welland Canal which has locks of the same dimensions as the new seaway locks. The Seaway construction in this canal comprises only deepening the canal from its former depth of 25 feet to 27 feet.

The Seaway is scheduled to be open for deep-draft navigation in the spring of 1959. This will permit vessels loaded to take full advantage of the 27-foot seaway depths to enter the two lower Great Lakes, Ontario and Erie, at that time.

GREAT LAKES CONNECTING CHANNELS

However, the Seaway is by far not the only undertaking serving the Great Lakes region. To bring world shipping beyond Lake Erie into America's heartland, and to accommodate the larger and faster Great Lakes vessels, Great Lakes navigation is dependent upon the system of channels connecting the lakes.

The improvement of the connecting channels by the United States first began over one hundred years ago. Up to the present time improvements were not required to accommodate overseas traffic since the existing connecting channels and harbors were more than adequate for the small, shallow-draft ocean vessels which could pass through the 14-foot St. Lawrence River canal system.

The Great Lakes Connecting Channels include the waterways between Lakes Superior and Huron, Lakes Huron and Michigan, and Lakes Huron and Erie. The St. Marys River is the connecting channel between Lake Superior and Lake Huron. The Straits of Mackinac and approaches thereto comprise the connecting channel between Lake Huron and Lake Michigan. The St. Clair River, Lake St. Clair and the Detroit River, with the approaches in Lake Huron to the head of the St. Clair River and in Lake Erie to the mouth of the Detroit River, comprise the connecting channel between Lake Huron and Lake Erie.

Although the lakes are deep, the connecting rivers had shallow reaches in their original state and over the years it was necessary to dredge the river channels to provide adequate depths to accommodate deep-draft lake vessels. In addition, the St. Marys Falls in the St. Marys River at Sault Ste. Marie were impassable and locks were required to overcome the drop at the Falls to permit vessels to pass between Lakes Superior and Huron.

At the present time controlling depths of 25 feet in downbound channels and 21 feet in upbound channels, when the ruling lake level is at low water datum, are available between Lake Superior and the lower lakes. The deeper depths were provided in the downbound channels to accommodate deep-draft loaded ore carriers. The downbound and upbound channels are separated in two places, along one reach in the lower St. Marys River and along one reach in the lower Detroit

River. In the St. Marys River downbound and upbound traffic are separated for about 15 miles in the Neebish Channels. The West Neebish Channel which carries downbound traffic has a controlling depth of about 25 feet with a minimum width of 300 feet. The Middle Neebish Channel for upbound traffic has a controlling depth of 21 feet with a minimum width of 500 feet. In the lower Detroit River downbound and upbound traffic are separated for about 7 miles. In this reach the Amherstburg Channel with a controlling depth of 21 feet carries upbound traffic, while downbound traffic passes through the 25-foot depth Livingstone Channel.

In addition to the channel improvements in the Connecting Channels, four locks and two approach canals are provided in the St. Marys River at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan. One of these locks is equal in size to the St. Lawrence Seaway locks and can accommodate any vessel which can pass through the Seaway. In addition the U.S. Congress has authorized construction of a new modern Poe Lock with a depth over the lower sill of 32 feet to replace the existing Poe Lock at Sault Ste. Marie. This additional large deep-draft lock is required to accommodate the large volume of deep-draft Great Lakes traffic which cannot pass through the two older locks with depths over their sills of only 23 feet.

DEEPER CHANNELS NEEDED

Experience on the Great Lakes during the past 50 years has clearly demonstrated that ship owners have always taken full advantage of improvements in the Connecting Channels and harbors. Today there are many vessels in the Great Lakes fleet of such characteristics that they can load only to reduced drafts except during the relatively short periods when the levels of the lakes are at extreme high stages.

Recognizing the inadequacy of the present Connecting Channels for the newer deep-draft vessels and with the advent of the St. Lawrence Seaway which would provide a 27-foot depth channel westward only as far as Lake Erie, the United States Congress, upon study and recommendation of the U.S. Army, Corps of Engineers, authorized deepening the Connecting Channels between Lake Erie and the upper three lakes to provide channels with a minimum controlling depth of 27 feet. The improvement was found to be fully justified in the interests of Great Lakes bulk cargo traffic alone although it was recognized that the deepened channels would provide commensurate depths with those provided in the Seaway.

WORK STARTED 1957

The Connecting Channels project, estimated at $141,000,000 was initiated in May, 1957. It is primarily a large-scale underwater excavation job, embracing the removal of about 44,000,000 c. y. of earth and rock. It requires the mobilization and deployment of one of the largest and most varied fleets of dredging equipment ever assembled, and exceeds by far, any previous undertaking of this kind during the 133-year experience of the U.S. Army, Corps of Engineers on the Great Lakes.

The work has been scheduled over a 5-year period, subject to appropriations of construction funds and to the availability of dredging equipment for both project purposes and other essential dredging on the Great Lakes.

The project requires an array of equipment including dipper dredges, large hydraulic dredges and a sea-going hopper dredge. Each dipper dredge to be attended by one or two large tugs, a derrickboat, one or two launches and from 2 to 4 large dump scows. In channels with rock bottoms, dredging must be preceded by submarine drilling and blasting operations involving the use of special drillboats. The working force necessary to man and supervise the dredge fleet will require from 800 to 1000 men.

The dredging job is complicated by the constant stream of lake vessels -- one every 15 to 20 minutes day and night during the height of the navigation season -- that pass through the Connecting Channels during construction. This traffic is stopped or slowed down only when navigation is hazardous because of fog, storm or accident. For example, during a navigation season, 30,000 vessels pass through Detroit River channels. Because of this heavy traffic which cannot be stopped, the dredging work must be done in half-channel widths with normal vessel traffic proceeding at reduced speeds in work areas. Work is carried on continuously except for the winter months when ice conditions require layup of floating plant.

At the present time six construction contracts totalling $48,000,000 are under way.

With 25-foot depths already available in downbound channels, it is expected that similar depth will be available for through traffic in both directions by 1960. The date when 27-foot dimensions will be available has not been definitely established, but it is believed that such depths should be available by 1962.

CALUMET-SAG CHANNEL

Concurrently with the Connecting Channels project, the U.S. Army, Corps of Engineers is also improving Chicago's Calumet-Sag channel to provide an adequate and modern connection between the Mississippi River and Lake Michigan via the Illinois Waterway, a 327-mile long barge canal linking the Great Lakes with the barge system of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. U.S. Army Engineers are widening the "Cal-Sag" from 60 feet to 225 feet with a 9-foot depth.

Built initially as a sanitation and drainage canal for the city of Chicago, the 60-foot wide Cal-Sag Channel is presently a one-way barge canal for tows of one or two barges. Only small towboats with retractable pilot houses can negotiate the many railroad and highway bridges having restrictive vertical and horizontal clearances.

In spite of the difficulties, commerce through the Cal-Sag Channel has multiplied during the past 10 years from about 1 3/4 million tons to over 5½ million tons annually. It is conservatively estimated that this traffic will reach 12 million tons within 5 years after completion of the improvement program and that, ultimately, this flow of traffic will reach 18 million tons per year.

Completion of the $200,000,000 Cal-Sag project is scheduled for 1962 to coincide with completion of the Great Lakes Connecting Channels Project.

FURTHER STUDIES UNDERWAY

The need for improvements at harbors on the Great Lakes to accommodate the large, deep-draft vessels which will transit the deeper channels has also been recognized. The United States Congress has directed the U.S. Army, Corps of Engineers to make a study to determine the advisability of further improvements of harbors on the Great Lakes in the interest of present and prospective deep-draft commerce.

In determining the improvements which can be justified at Great Lakes harbors three major elements are considered: traffic analysis, engineering studies and economic analysis.

Two friendly neighbors are hard at work to bring the world's fleet to Mid-America. When the job is complete, the Great Lakes navigation system and its links with the Atlantic Ocean and the Mississippi River will provide a vast, inter-connected waterway system, reaching from Montreal to Mexico (via the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway), from Pittsburgh to Sioux City and from Duluth to the ports of world.

Rotella
Paul

PAUL PETER ROTELLA
224 WEST 71ST STREET
NEW YORK 23, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I know Mrs. Murrow and Casey have conveyed Mr. Hubball's expression of gratitude to you for giving us the opportunity of viewing the Marian Anderson film, "Lady from Philadelphia". Somewhat belatedly I should like to add my personal thank you.

It was not only for Miss Anderson's musical artistry that I wanted the boys to see this film, but to particularly absorb and evaluate the import of the message Miss Anderson carried to the people of the Far East. Indeed, we are are indebted to you for bringing us further along the path of understanding by such means as this powerful and meaningful document.

Thank you very much.

Sincerely,

Paul Rotella

Paul Rotella

March 31, 1958

Roth, Andrew Winton

November 20, 1958

Mrs. Andrew Winton Roth
"Mountain Edge
R.F.D.1
Croton-on-Hudson, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. Roth:

Mr. Murrow has asked me to thank you for your recent note. I am enclosing your clipping, as requested.

Yours sincerely,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

Forgive my haste....am dead sure this'll interest you!...The clamor from the States to get such newspapers for their schools is swamping me. (None of such papers are purchasbale in USA) Every day another State joins in!

All that is needed is for one of the innumerable Foundations, Societies, Assn's, to compile a list of suitable English-language foreign newspapers, the costs of importing 'em; to mimeo that list --- then send it to each of the States interested. Some of the schools have tried U.N., some have tried World Affairs Center -- to no avail. Even New York's Public Library accorded me not even courtesy of answer.

However the dogged persistence, the undaunted eagerness of our School authorities to get this plan implemented is truly heartening. If you can lend a helping hand in any way, not only I but our School systems will be deeply grateful.

Seems the utter simplicity of the plan stuns the big Societies; they are all geared to the complex and psychologically unable to cope with anything which is simple. (Perhaps that's our deepest drawback in Internat'l Relations!)

I beg you return the clipping. Please!

Sincerely,

Dixie Roth

Mrs. Andrew Winton Roth
"Mountain Edge"
R. F. D. 1
Croton-on-Hudson, New York

Can you please tell this to whichever foreign correspondents you think it'd interest.

Mike Rotunno

f

METRO NEWS PHOTOS CO. 5700 SOUTH CICERO AVENUE CHICAGO 38, ILLINOIS

PORTSMOUTH 7-0590

Dear Ed.:

Enclosed are the clippings you asked for regarding my daughters writing.

It was nice seeing you and I hope you'll be in Chicago soon.

Regards

Mike Rotunno

OFFICES: MIDWAY AIRPORT—O'HARE FIELD

INOIS

In Our Opinion

Charity Is Winner

When Berwyn and Cicero junior and senior All-Stars meet Wednesday night in the LIFE Newspapers' 12th annual inter-city basketball games at the Cicero Stadium, 19th st. and Laramie ave., all proceeds will go to Seguin School which is maintained by the Mentally Handicapped Children's Aid.

Cooperating with the LIFE Newspapers in the promotion of the basketball classic will be the Clyde Park District board and the Berwyn Recreation Commission. The junior All-Star game will begin at 7 o'clock and the senior All-Star game will follow, pitting the best hardwood court stars from each community against the other. A nominal 30-cent admission charge will be made.

While the list of those contributing their time and promotional efforts is so large so that space will not permit acknowledgement here, the list of ultimate beneficiaries, the mentally handicapped children, is even larger.

Not quite 10 years has gone by since the organization of the Mentally Retarded Children's Aid, a group of dedicated parents and friends of the educable and trainable mentally handicapped children. What has been accomplished in the intervening years is one of the brightest entries in the recorded history of the community. Many area organizations have contributed generously.

In the formative years there was no provision for aid from state sources. Realization that the problem of the mentally handicapped was an educational function as much as that of all children resulted in a change in the law to permit state aid participation — principally because of the highly favorable experience with Seguin School, which is a state pilot project.

Under great financial strain, Seguin School has been maintained and even expanded at a cost made poossible only because of contributions made by all those connected with the building project. It has been a tremendous tribute to the self-sacrificing spirit of ours and other communtities.

Forty young men in this community will take the floor next Wednesday night to give their best in two basketball games which you will enjoy as a spectator. But charity, the support of Seguin School, will be the winner. For 30 cents, you may be "buying" a child's future. Maybe you'll want to help by buying five or ten tickets, which are available at any LIFE office, the Clyde Park District and Berwyn Recreation Commission offices, or from some of the players. We hope we'll see you and your friends at the game.

Worth Studying

An idea advanced by James Mejda, Stickney village president, that the CTA provide bus service along Harlem ave. connecting the stub ends of two existing routes —Cermak rd. and Archer ave.-55th st.—seems to have struck a responsive chord among residents of the nine affected municipalities and their business organizations.

There is equally good reason that the CTA management would be receptive to the proposal which could provide an excellent test of need for extended public transit facilities before any multi-million dollar expansion plan would be undertaken.

Under present operating plans, the CTA since the abandonment and removal of the trackage west of the 54th ave., terminal, has been running a feeder bus line to Harlem ave. along Cermak rd., generating considerable traffic for the Douglas Park elevated branch.

Similarly, the CTA has been operating bus service from the Loop along Archer ave.—55th st. to its turnaround terminal between Nottingham and Neva aves., a block east of Harlem ave.

Mejda has proposed that either a shuttle bus be run from the Archer-Harlem terminal northward to make a connection with the Cermak rd. feeder line extension of the Douglas Park "L," or that the bus feeder line be extended southward so that no passenger transfer would be necessary at the Cermak-Harlem intersection.

The Stickney village president has been concerned because the Blue-bird line, which he reported charges 45 cents for the ride to the Loop, passes along the Stickney village boundary for only two blocks—41st to 39th st.—and has been the subject of complaints by several villages who have charged that Bluebird buses are antiquated and service irregular. Mejda said little relief has been afforded by Illinois Commerce Commission rulings.

In the case of the other affected public transportation line, Chicago and West Towns, Mejda, in raising the issue at last Tuesday night's board meeting, said that it was necessary to pay two fares with inadequate transfer arrangements in order to reach Loop destinations from Stickney.

Communities which would be served by the proposed CTA connecting bus route would be Chicago, Summit, Forest View, Stickney, Lyons, Berwyn, Riverside, North Riverside and Cicero. All have indicated an interest in attending a conference to be called to discuss the plan, Mejda has indicated.

So also would be the Cicero Manufacturers Association, the Cermak Road Business Association and the Cermak Plaza Merchants Association. The manufacturing group is concerned because any reduction in private automobile travel by industrial workers would ease the parking space needs of plants which are finding the problem of increasing importance.

The Cermak Road Business Association and the Cermak Plaza group also have an interest in such a development because the existing West Towns' north-south route along Harlem ave., as is the case with other routes of that line, have long been regarded as feeders into the Oak Park Shopping center.

An extension of the present CTA feeder line south on Harlem ave. to a connection with the Archer-55th area CTA turn-around could provide an uninterrupted ride to those using the Douglas Park elevated from the 54th ave. terminal. Its time table could be adjusted to meet Burlington commuter schedules, a phase of operations West Towns at one time conceded it was not doing.

Certainly, the idea merits a sound study of all the probables, not only from the standpoints of the communities and organizations but also from that of the CTA. If found to have the promise that it does at first hand, the bus route down Harlem ave. and return should not be too hard to "sell" to the CTA.

Letters

Says LIFE Editorial Not Basically Sound

As a newspaper, it is your responsibility to convey to your readers by news items or editorial views, an unbiased and fair report. However, your editorial on Fund Drives in your issue of March 2, 1958, was the result of very little research and discussion on this matter.

I, in no way, wish to discredit the fine work and accomplishments which result from Community Chest and United Fund drives. They were originated and serve their purpose to a certain degree. The polio, heart and cancer organizations would gladly wish to be included with all the Community Chest and United Fund drives, but it woud be impossible for them to secure sufficient funds for their prime expenditure which is research.

The Salk vaccine, antibiotics, steps to the control of tuberculosis, rheumatic fever, heart disease, cancer and other advances would not have been accomplished from the funds received through the Community Chest or United Fund drives.

The success, to date, has been as a result of the funds secured by individual drives of these agencies. The Heart Fund and American Cancer Society require over $52 million this year to make progress against mankind's No. 1 and No. 2 killers, which to this date have no definite cure. Research alone will require over $20 million this year.

Some people might ask why appropriations are not made through Washington to finance this research. At the end of World War II, approximately $1 million was available for cancer research. Currently, the government is making available approximately $38 million for cancer research, and this is still not enough for the necessary projects.

Washington has told us already that they wish to decrease appropriations and subsidies to state, local and even school projects. They feel that the burden of these improvements should be borne locally. If Washington is required to continue or increase its appropriations and also finance the research for all of these organizations, it can only result in a higher tax rate for everyone. We will be compelled to pay for something which is now on a voluntary basis.

I feel that, as a newspaper, you have not been liberal in taking this view where the improvement of the public health is an issue. The individual should have the right to support any agency which he desires. This thought was set forth by President Eisenhower in June, 1956, when he said, "True voluntary giving is based on the personal desire of an individual to make a private donation to a specific agency for a purpose with which he is familiar and which he wants to support."

There is nothing more important than a contribution to save and prolong human life. Does anyone have the right to discourage that manner of contribution?

Cicero Federal Savings and Loan Association
B. R. RAKOSNIK, Treasurer
1957 and 1958 Cicero chairman of Heart Fund drives, and 1958 Cicero chairman of Cancer Fund drive.

Rep. Dolezal Hits 'Danger' of Chicago Political Machine

Citing the example of the Metropolitan Area Commission with its "under-current of a super-government and a police force dominated by Chicago," State Representative George E. Dolezal, Berwyn, told a meeting of Berwyn Young Republicans Wednesday at the city's GOP headquarters, 2619 Ridgeland ave., that "there are more ways than one by which the city of Chicago can gobble up the suburbs without direct annexation."

Dolezal attacked all proposals and programs to do away with suburban autonomy in the talk in which he said Chicago politicians "badly need fresh money to pay the salaries of the political payrollers who push door bells for the Democratic machine."

"They woul love to get their hands on the tax money paid by our suburban home owners who have taken pride in their neighborhoods and preserved their valuations," Dolezal said in urging a turnout on election day. Dolezal is running for reelection in the Third District, which includes Cicero, Berwyn, Stickney and Forest View.

24TH YEAR

Gardeners To Observe Anniversary

The Midwest Horticultural Society will observe its 24th anniversary at 8 p.m. Friday in the Garfield Park Recreation Building, 100 N. Central Park blvd., Chicago.

Area members are Mrs. Charles Baker, 1240 S. 58th ct.; Mrs. Elmer Bliss, 2708 S. 60th ct.; Mrs. David Schneider, 3412 S. 61st ave.; Albert Dinse, 1916 S. 50th ct.; Frank L. Basta, 3614 Home ave.; C. Y. James, 6842 W. 30th pl., Michale Peck, 3630 Highland ave., and Rudolph Sherpan, 3631 Highland ave.

The main speaker of the evening will be E. C. Freed, whose address will be entitled, "Reminiscence."

Additional information may be obtained by contacting W. Heiser, 2825 S. Keeler ave., Chicago, BI. 7-2334.

Put Your Business Into the LIFE, and We Will Put Life into Your Business!

Ciceronian Completes Army Ordnance Course

Pvt. George J. Havelka, 19, son of Mrs. Irene C. Havelka, 2435 S. 59th ave, has completed the eight week welder-blacksmith course at the Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.

Havelka entered the Army in May, 1957, and completed basic training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. He attended Morton High School and was employed by Speedway Manufacturing Co. in civilian life.

PLANE TALK

By JUDY ROTUNNO

JUDY AND THE PRINCESS—Princess Ileana of Rumania is interviewed by Judy Rotunno, LIFE Newspaper columnist, in the TWA office at Midway Airport. Now on a lecture tour, the princess is a great-granddaughter of Queen Victoria of England. Judy's column, Plane Talk, is a weekly feature of the LIFE. (Metro News Photo)

Everyone's singing these days. The latest is Ronnie Burns, son of George and Gracie. Ronnie set out on a personal appearance tour to plug his latest record but hindered by a serious sinus condition, he found it necessary to return to the West Coast. Meanwhile he will continue to appear on his parents' TV program in addition to helping George produce the series.

Mrs. William Stratton, looking mighty attractive in a bright, new spring bonnet, departed with her husband for Omaha, where he delivered a keynote address at a Republican meeting.

The next day they returned to Midway and, instead of going to Springfield as they expected, they were called to Washington to attend an emergency meeting of the Governors Executive Committee concerning the unemployment situation.

On their return from Washington the Strattons drove to the Loop to confer with Vice-President Nixon and following that meeting they hoped to return home. That's what I call a busy week!

* * *

A CUTE little six-year-old boy, Jonathan, was having more fun traveling with his famous daddy, Burgess Meredith. The actor, en route to Phoenix via American Airlines ,had just completed filming a movie in the Orient titled "Man on the Run." Burgess was one of two Americans in the film; the rest of the cast is Oriental.

On the same flight with the Meredith's were Lou Boudreau, former major league manager, and Jack Quinlan, radio announcer. They will broadcast the Chicago Cubs' games over WGN as well as interview major sports figures.

Charlie Farrell, owner of the Racket Club in Palm Springs, found Chicago rather cold compared to the climate he's used to. He arrived in town to introduce Vice President Nixon at a reunion; seems that they both went to the same school, though at different times. Farrell's wife is Virginia Valli, a former Chicago girl and movie star.

* * *

BRANIFF International Airways transported a pair of tigers from the Brookfield Zoo to the Dallas Zoo.

Though we could barely see them through the crate, they were described as twins, one male and one female, by their attendant. Although they are only one year old, I'm pretty happy they stayed in the crate!

Pretty Erin O'Brien turned the tables on photographer Ed Liphardt, 1324 Grove ave., by taking his picture. Erin is trying to become a photo expert by the time she leaves for Spain and practices whenever she finds the opportunity. Needless to say, her subject was quite surprised!

I can only cross my fingers and hope that my 16-year-old sister, Mimi, a junior at Morton High, won't be offended by the following statement:

The Little Easter Seal Girl, Mary Lynne Dunnuck, has been traveling in and out of Midway these past few weeks. The last time we saw her she told us all about her last TV appearance and stated they had given her a beagle on the program. Naturally, she was delighted because every child loves a dog. What do you think she named it? Mimi.

* * *

I'M AFRAID the weather was not as nice as anticipated for the arrival of Vice President Nixon. The snow-clouded weather delayed his arrivel by an hour and a half.

Meanwhile the usual crowd of newspaper people had gathered in the office of the National Guard Hangar. Cracking jokes, standing around making predictions about the weather, and ribbing each other about their respective newspapers helped to make the time pass quickly.

After an hour or so of waiting, the crowd became jittery and the only thing they wanted was to hurry up and get the show on the road, as most of theme were missing their deadlines.

Finally word came that the plane was over Chicago Heights, making the waiting time a matter of minutes.

* * *

A MAD SCRAMBLE followed with the setting up of newsreel equipment, double-checking on the cameras and making sure the limousines were placed in exactly the righ position.

After the engines cut off, the door opened and out stepped the handsome, young Mr. Nixon.

Flashbulbs popped simultaneously, brief questions were asked as he stood still for pictures, a short interview for TV, followed by a few friendly words from him.

Secret Service men ushered him into a waiting limo so they could hurry to his downtown hotel where he was to prepare for the evening's dinner and speech.

As soon as he departed, the field was completely cleared and looked bare in comparison to what it had been.

There were no reminders that the vice president of the United States had arrived at Midway Airport only a short while earlier.

CALL MATT BROS. FOR

PHONE OLYMPIC 2-9500

HEATING
FURNACES - BOILERS - CONVERSIONS
COMPLETE STOCK OF:
PARTS—CONTROLS—TRANSFORMERS—OIL PUMPS—MOTORS
DAY & NIGHT SERVICE
Call GUnderson 4-0605
BERWYN WESTERN
PLUMBING — HEATING — AIR CONDITIONING
KITCHEN & BATHROOM REMODELING
7002 W. CERMAK RD. BERWYN

IT'S SMART—IT'S THRIFTY TO PATRONIZE THE ADVERTISERS IN THIS SHOPPING GUIDE

PIZZO'S PIZZA AND SHRIMP HOUSE
PIZZA
• Bar B Q Ribs • Mustaccioli
• Spaghetti • Chicken in Box
• Ravioli • F.F. Shrimp
3248 S. HARLEM AVE.
RI. 7-5884 — PHONES — RI. 7-9793
4 Delivery Trucks for Prompt Service

COMPLETE TOOL RENTALS
• Cement Mixers
• Rototilers
• Saws
• Sanders
• Wall Washers
• Rug Shampooers
• Floor Polishers
• Wallpaper Steamers
• Gardening Needs
POWER TOOL REPAIRS
TOOL RENTALS AND SALES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK!
Rentals - Sales - Service
6407 34th St. — Berwyn — PI. 9-1067

HERE'S BIG NEWS FOR BOAT OWNERS
Stop Leakage, Repainting and Damage . . .
Let us give your boat a lifetime coat with fibreglass Evercoat. Solves your boat problems permanently! Free estimate.
THE BOAT SHOP
3101 S. Ridgeland Avenue (Rear) Berwyn
Phone: Pioneer 9-3280

Furniture
Finest selection of nationally advertised furniture for every room.
FREE DELIVERY
ANDERSON'S FURNITURE CO.
GU. 4-3291
6831-39 Stanley Ave. . . . Terms
Since 1913 Opp. C.B.&Q. Sta.

DO YOUR OWN TILE WORK
SAVE ½ THE COST!
FREE LOAN OF TOOLS AND INSTRUCTIONS
Expert Installation If Desired
West Suburban Floor
6409 W. 34th St. ST. 8-6294
On 34th St. Near Ridgeland

Buy Direct & Save
All Types of aluminum combination windows, doors and awnings, roll-up awnings, fiberglass awnings, jalousie windows and doors.
Call for Free Estimate
10 3 Track Windows and 1 Door $229 installed
A. & J. WINDOW & AWNING CO.
TO. 3-7295

DO IT YOURSELF RENTAL EQUIPMENT
• Rug Shampoo Machines
• Floor Buffers
• Floor Sanders & Edgers
• Floor Scrubbers
• Hand Sanders
• Wallpaper Removing Machines
FIGATNER-SCOTT CO.
6217 W. Cermak GU. 4-2800
We Deliver Anywhere

All Makes Appliance REPAIR SERVICE
VACUUM CLEANERS, ETC.
Electric Shaver Service
ALL MAKES
HICKS HDW. & PAINTS
6805 Stanley GU. 4-0132

PONTIAC . . . JEEP
VAUXHALL
• PARTS and SERVICE!
• Body and Fender Work!
CHARLES J.
BERANEK MOTORS
3249 GROVE AVE.
BERWYN
ST. 8-5700 • BI.2-1988

Enjoy Berwyn Dairy's
Fresh Milk
Specializing In HOME DELIVERY
Phone ST. 8-3791
BERWYN DAIRY CO.
6412 W. 27th St.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
• Complete Banking Service!
Mon., Tues., Fri. 9 to 3
Wed. and Sat. 9 to noon
Thurs. 9 to 8 p.m.
COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK
6804 Windsor GU. 4-0800

SEWERS CLEANED NO DIGGING!
Our Service Free If We Fail To Open Any Blocked Sewer
CATCH BASINS CLEANED—REPAIRED—CONSTRUCTED
Better Sewer Service
FREE ESTIMATE
Phone OLympic 2-3500

ST. 8-1042 BI. 2-2190
BEST SERVICE
PACKING
STORAGE
MOVING
Kott Storage & Van Company
6645 STANLEY AVE.

LAWN & GARDEN SUPPLIES
• Fertilizers
• Grass Seed
• Insecticides
• Garden Tools
• Spreaders
• Feed — Dog Food
• Baby Chicks
• Farm Supplies
Free Delivery!
A & A FEED STORE
3833 HARLEM AVE. ST 8-3611

GUARANTEED
Watch Repair
• Prompt service • Expert work
• Genuine material • Free estimate
• Satisfaction Guaranteed
Mancinelli Jewelers
EST. 1896
Diamonds - Watches - Jewelry
7185 W. Cermak PI. 9-2064
In Cermak Plaza—Harlem Ave. side

REALTY SERVICE
BAAR REALTY CO.
6335 CERMAK
BERWYN
STanley 8-8750
Lillian M. Baar

Complete Line of PET Supplies
Give a Pet for Easter!
LIVE PETS!
TROPICAL FISH • CANARIES
PARAKEETS • PUPPIES, etc.
BERWYN PET SUPPLY
2829 S. Harlem — PI. 9-0660

EVERY THING in HARDWARE
5937 CERMAK

NOW PAYING 2% INTEREST ON ALL SAVINGS ACCOUNTS
Interest paid on every dollar on deposit from the first dollar.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK of CICERO
Member Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.
6000 W. Cermak Rd.
OLympic 6-3000-1-2
Open Monday Evenings Til 8 P.M.
SOUND! SAFE! SECURE SAVINGS

SEASONS CHANGE...
and so do tax laws; family and financial situations. You'll be wise to review your Will with your lawyer, to be sure it's up-to-date — soon! For trust service, come in and see us.
Lawndale National Bank
26th & Christiana BIshop 7-6800
JOSEPH KOVARIK, Trust Officer
The Only BANK In Lawndale

In Our Opinion

'Right-to-Know'

Strengthening the "right-to-know" bill enacted at the last session of the Illinois General Assembly, as proposed by a downstate legislator, might provide definitive direction to public bodies in the transaction of public business but its effectiveness may still be thwarted.

There has been a growing feeling in official circles from the local to the national level that public business is the concern of only the elected and appointed representatives of the people. On the local level, decisions frequently are made in committee sessions with only formalizing of them taking place at open meetings. The same is true on the national level plus marking reports with "secret" or other labels to prevent public knowledge, even though such designations have nothing to do with national defense.

Where official bodies are dominated by a single political party or a single clique, private caucuses often are held to thwart the intention of the law and no amount of legislating will change that picture.

While we are in sympathy with any law which will open up meetings of official bodies in committees or otherwise and make available reports on all public business, we still believe that the best solution is to elect those persons who look upon official business as public business and act accordingly.

Fighting Civil War?

With the disturbing international situation following our sending of an occupation force into Lebanon still fresh in our minds, we were more than idly interested in an office visit of a former Cicero youth who had just completed his hitch and was returning to his present home in the East.

We have more than a casual interest in the young man and followed his career after college graduation with one of the nation's largest industrial firms where his mathematical background has made him outstanding in the advanced studies of guided and inter-planetary missiles.

Assigned in his Texas-stationed company in air conditioned barracks were 95 per cent college graduates, representing some of the highest scientific education afforded by our universities. Yet, these talents were being wasted because the Army refused to avail itself of the opportunity to put their brains to work.

Instead, after basic training, they were given limited studies and usual camp assignments, leaving most of their time free. These "soldiers" were discouraged with the "wasted" months when they might have been contributing something to the national defense.

Last winter the LIFE ran a series of articles about our educational system in the wake of Russia's putting the first satellite into orbit. But the scientific ascendancy of the Communists in the space field apparently hasn't yet permeated into the military, which is still intrigued with classic maneuvers of past wars.

If we are to fight a nuclear war, there seems to be little need to waste the talents of our scientific personnel, such as represented by the former Ciceronian and countless others like him, in policing parade grounds. We aren't going to fight a Civil War.

Retrospect

Two weeks have passed since the Cicero running of the West Suburban Soap Box Derby with upwards of 15,000 people lining the sloping course of the Laramie ave. bridge. We might be tempted to be enthusiastic to the point of exuberance because of the recognized success of the promotion—the only one by a newspaper in Illinois and one of two in the entire state.

LIFE Newspapers, as well as the co-sponsors, Bergl Chevrolet and the Cicero Rotary Club, will be eternally grateful to the hundreds of volunteers without whose services it would have been impossible to present the Derby. Particular recognition should go to Cicero town officials, the police department, the police reserves, street, electrical and fire departments who left no stone unturned to make the affair a success.

While only one could win, there were many fine racers over which hours of time and loving care were expended. But none went empty-handed. The boys, accompanied by one and sometimes both parents, visited the LIFE offices in Cicero to claim their prizes—as fine a group of youngsters as there is in the world. They are better off for the experience, not only from the standpoint of awards but also from the life-long character building which comes from doing things yourself.

Like most boys who revere and respect their elders, Edward Northway, the 11-year-old winner, proudly described how he built the champion Soap Box Derby car and won the race when he was invited to appear at the Western Springs village board meeting and found the village fathers with a lot of "small boy" in them as they followed his description.

It is just the first of many experiences that Edward is destined to enjoy before and after his trip to the All-American Soap Box Derby in Akron, Ohio, on Sunday, August 17. The hours of planning, preparation and work plus the few seconds he was crouched behind the wheel in his bid for glory will be indelibly etched on his memory, just as it has been on the other 52 drivers on that day.

What has been the net result of it all from the viewpoint of the LIFE communities? Rather than express our opinion, which we admit would be biased, we refer you to the special report of Stanley A. Bergstrom, zone sales promotion manager for the Chevrolet Motor Division of General Motors, national sponsor of the All-American.

Mr. Bergstrom, who said that it was the first special report he had ever submitted on a local Derby, wrote his superiors a glowing letter of praise for the enthusiastic spirit and size of the crowd, the willingness and hard work of the scores of volunteers, and described it as the most outstanding in his experience, rivalling the All-American.

This is indeed high praise for the community in which the Derby was held and the suburban visitors who helped swell the crowd. High praise, indeed, when it is remembered that some communities have 15 to 18 years experience in presenting similar shows which the Chevrolet executive attended.

Support Grows For Dunes Bill

Douglas Announces Recent Enlistees

Senator Paul H. Douglas has announced that support for his bill to establish the Indiana Dunes National Monument is coming from persons and organizations all over the nation.

The bill, if passed, would block current attempts to industrialize the last remaining three and a half miles of duneland on the tip of Lake Michigan, near Gary.

Both the plan for industrialization and Douglas' bill are being considered by Senator Joseph O'Mahoney's Senate sub-committee on Public Lands.

* * *

DOUGLAS lists author, historian and poet Carl Sandburg; botanist, historian and author Donald Culross Peattie and naturalist Edwin Way Teale among his recent enlistees. All have written letters of support to Douglas or to the Chicago press.

In addition, Douglas says he has the support of several conservation groups, among them the Izaak Walton League of America and the Council of Conservationists. Petitions containing some 100,000 signatures also have been sent to Douglas who has turned them over to the Public Land sub-committee.

In releasing the names of his supporters, the Illinois Democrat said, I hope the support shown by these outstanding individuals and groups will be added encouragement for those who are working so valiantly for this cause."

He is urging all interested parties to get behind the save-the-dunes movement by writing letters to their congressmen and signing petitions. New petitions, ready for circulation, may be obtained from Mrs. J. H. Buell, 111 Ogden Dunes, Gary, Ind., chairman of the Save the Dunes Council, he said.

Read and Use LIFE Want Ads Regularly.

LETTERS

OFFICIAL THANKS

Berwyn Golden Jubilee Aid By All Recognized

Please accept our sincere thanks for the efficient and generous coverage given Berwyn's Golden Jubilee celebration. The numerous events were brought to the attention of the public in interesting and exciting fashion and assured the success of the Jubilee.

We are also deeply grateful to the many civic-minded individuals and groups who gave unselfishly of their time and effort to make Berwyn's fiftieth anniversary an event long to be remembered in our community.

With renewed spirit and determination, we now look forward to continued improvement and progress in our community in the years to come.

Sincerely yours,
Berwyn Golden Jubilee Committee,
MAYOR WILLIAM J. KRIZ,
Honorary Chairman,
GEORGE M. SLUKA,
Co-ordinator

* * *

Derby Sales Aid Handicapped

In behalf of the officers and members of the Morton Orthopedic Parents and Teachers Organization, I wish to thank you and the Soap Box Derby Committee for the opportunity to raise funds for our handicapped children by serving the refreshments for this event, which was held July 13.

A. G. REZNICEK
Chairman of the Refreshment Committee

Board Members Amend District Retirement Policy

An amendment to the manual of operating policies of the Cicero grade schools' district, which extends slightly the retirement date for non-certificated district employees, was approved Thursday by the board of education.

Previously, the manual provided that non-certificated employees (janitors, office and maintenance employees), would retire when they reached their 65th birthdays.

The new change in the manual sets retirement at the end of the fiscal year on June 30, following their 65th birthdays.

CSA Editor Wins Writing Award

Jerry F. Chmelicek, 39, of 2138 S. 61st ct., editor and publicity director of the Czechoslovak Society of America, has been awarded the Lone Indian Eagle Feather Award for the entry of an essay, "Without Obstacles, No Victory Is Sweet," in recent competition.

Chmelicek, born in Vienna, Austria, in 1918, is the holder of the Lightner Silver Trophy, awarded to him by the United Amateur Press Association in 1939.

RELIEF!
VARICOSE VEINS
SEE YOUR PHYSICIAN
Relief Can Be Obtained Thru the Regular Wear of Elastic Stockiings. Proper Fitting and Selection.
MORAVA DRUG STORE
5800 CERMAK RD.
OLYMPIC 2-1004
Prescriptions
Trusses Vitamins

HOME IMPROVEMENT LOANS
Examine Your Home For Needed Repairs
In a "fix" about funds? Get our low-cost bank loan planned to your needs!
Don't delay needed home repairs or remodeling because you lack the necessary cash. Many features around a home that need to be fixed today grow continually worse until they have to be replaced. Naturally that will cost a great deal more. Besides, you can be enjoying a well-cared-for, convenient home while you pay.
5% F.H.A. TITLE 1
BUYING A NEW HOME?
See us about arranging, financing. Our experienced real estate department will gladly assist you.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF CICERO
Member Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.
6000 W. Cermak Rd. OLympic 6-3000-1-2
OPEN MONDAY EVENINGS TIL 8 P.M.

A star-studded week filled with popular names having to do with most every walk of life provides a never-ending series of excitement at Chicago's Midway Airport.

Each day a quick telephone call, a short, written message, or a fast word or two might bring news that some airline is the carrier of an important personage winding his way to or through this mid-western city.

Many of these people are in show business or in the entertainment field, others are important names in curent or past news reports, however still others are average people with one exception—that they have an unusual or interesting story to relate to the rest of the world.

* * *

FOR INSTANCE, many Catholic priests are seen walking up and down the corridors at Midway every day, either arriving, departing, greeting or bidding farewell to a friend. This week, however, a great deal of attention was drawn towards the arrival of The Rev. Cyril Wagner, O.F.M. as he arrived on American Airlines.

The reason for all the interest stemmed upon the fact that on June 15, Father Wagner was released from a Chinese Communist prison after five years.

After a quick 24 hours in Chicago visiting his superiors at the Sacred Heart Province of the Order of the Franciscan Missionary Union, 1434 W. 51st, he continued on to his home in Pittsburgh.

A classical pianist who has received quite a little publicity during the past few months Van Cliburn departed on Northwest Airlines after making a few very succesful appearances in our town.

Holding true to the saying that he's always late, Van would still be sitting in the coffee shop talking to friends, had it not been for the airline employees making sure that he boarded the flight on time.

* * *

ANOTHER pianist, who is also wel known as an orchestra leader and TV personality, Skitch Henderson, spent a few minutes in the United Air Line lobby between planes. Skitch, who had just given a concert in Denver was returning to New York and his TV work.

A famous beauty queen, known not only for her beauty and title, but also for her talent and poise, Marilyn Van Derbur, the current Miss America arrived on Continental Air Lines. Marilyn is here through the courtesy of the Philco Corporation to make an appearance at the Music Convention.

This time it's a famous merchant, James Cash Penney who paused briefly in the Ozark Air Line lobby before continuing to Dubuque, Iowa where he will dedicate a remodeled store.

The 82-year-old gentleman has over 1,700 stores throughout the country which bear his name.

* * *

A STAGE and screen actor, Melvyn Douglas, planing in one late evening, will be in Chicago to star in the Edgewater Beach Playhouse production of "Sweet and Sour."

In the law enforcement field we have Sheriff Joseph Lohman departing on Ozark Air Lines for Missouri where he intends to make a speech. The sheriff was sorry that he missed greeting Miss Van Derbur for he once went to school with her father!

Again in the entertainment world, Georgie Jessel stepped off a TWA plane wearing his trademark, a straw hat. Jessel, in town to help celebrate the Idlewild Country Club's 50th Anniversary, has made quite a few appearances on "The Jack Paar Show."

If you'd like a sample from the sports world, there are the Chicago Cubs who do their traveling by air, leaving this week to play some out-of-town games.

A celebrated husband and wife dance team, Marge and Gower Champion who are also claiming fame for their acting abilities enjoyed a few hours between planes at Midway. They are headed for New York to make some personal appearances.

* * *

IN THE FIELD of politics we find a regular visitor to Midway, since he travels back and forth making speeches before various organizations and clubs; and he is Senator Estes Kefauver, who considers traveling by plane quite a relaxation.

Last but not least is another very talented representative from the entertainment field, Esther Williams, arriving one early morning on TWA only to go out again ten minutes later on NWA. Esther is headed for Minneapolis where she will participate in the Aqua Centennial Festival.

A giant-sized air mail stamp has been circulating around the airport to serve as a reminder that the postal rates will be going up as of August 1. The new stamp which shows the image of an airplane will now be seven cents!

FOR COMPLETE WEATHER FORCAST
CALL THE OLYMPIC SAVINGS
Weather Number
GUnderson 4-6980

Board Awards Repair Contract

Authorize Tabulation Of Bids on Supplies

A $24,847 contract for renovation work at Lincoln School was awarded to Kelso Construction Co. of Chicago by the board of education of the Cicero grade schools' district at a meeting Thursday.

The firm presented the lower of two bids. A third bidder was disqualified because of lack of a bid bond.

The board also awarded a $2,264 contract for electrical work at Lincoln School to Glen Grove Electric Co. of Morton Grove, Ill., the lowest of six bidders.

Board members authorized the business manager, Frank Zelip, to tabulate bids received for various supplies, and to award contracts to the lowest bidders consistent with quality and delivery of merchandise.

The items to be tabulated include bids for art, paper and supplies, with seven bids received from a total of 15 firms who were asked to bid; general education supplies, with 10 bidders of 17 firms solicited; paper supplies, 11 firms bidding of 16 solicited; physical education supplies, 5 bids received from 10 firms solicited, and kitchen utensils, with three firms bidding of three solicited for bids.

The board awarded contracts for janitorial and maintenance supplies totaling $5,611.

Read and Use LIFE Want Ads Regularly.

GET AN
A.O.Smith
Permaglas
GLASS-LINED AUTOMATIC gas WATER HEATER
30 GAL. SIZE
$79.95
10 YR. GUARANTEE
HENRY SWADE
PLUMBING & HEATING
6721 W. Cermak Rd.
Pioneer 9-1410 – 9-1411

4½% to 5%
MORTGAGES
We Prefer and Always Have Preferred
4½% and 5% Mortgages
SOUNDNESS IS FIRST — Yield IS SECONDARY
AMPLE FUNDS AVAILABLE
All Savings Accounts Insured Up to $10,000.00 by F.S.L.I.C.
State Savings
5405 W. 25th St.
CICERO
Phone: OL. 2-1201

SHOPPING GUIDE
This Shopping Guide is read each week by more than 27,000 subscribers, plus their families. Since the amount of space in the guide is limited, we urge our advertisers to phone now and make reservations for space in this popular, low cost shopping guide.

Don't Cook Tonight
CALL
CHICKEN DELIGHT
CHICKEN – RIBS – SHRIMP – FISH – PIZZA
Pioneer 9-2424
FREE DELIVERIES
6821 W. Cermak Rd.

ST. 8-1042 BI. 2-2190
BEST SERVICE
PACKING
STORAGE
MOVING
Kott Storage & Van Company
6645 STANLEY AVE.

FREE ESTIMATES ON GAS
and oil heating plants parts & service
all makes
OPEN MON. & THURS. EVE.
STACHNIK'S
AUTOMATIC HEATING
2821 S. Harlem PI. 9-2229

DO YOUR OWN
TILE WORK
SAVE ½ THE COST!
FREE LOAN OF TOOLS AND INSTRUCTIONS
Expert Installation If Desired
West Suburban Floor
6409 W. 34th St. ST. 8-6294
On 34th St. Near Ridgeland

All Makes Appliance REPAIR SERVICE
VACUUM CLEANERS, ETC.
Electric Shaver Service
ALL MAKES
HICKS HDW. & PAINTS
6805 Stanley GU. 4-0132

COMPLETE TOOL RENTALS
• Cement Mixers
• Rototilers
• Saws
• Sanders
• Wall Washers
• Rug Shampooers
• Floor Polishers
• Wallpaper Steamers
• Gardening Needs
POWER TOOL REPAIRS
FRAMAR SALES & SERVICE
TOOLS IN TOP QUALITY
TOOL RENTALS AND SALES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK!
Rentals Sales Service
6407 34th St. — Berwyn — PI 9-1067

PONTIAC . . . JEEP
VAUXHALL
• PARTS and SERVICE!
• Body and Fender Work!
CHARLES J.
BERANEK
MOTORS
3249 GROVE AVE.
BERWYN
ST. 8-5700 • BI.2-1988

Enjoy Berwyn Dairy's
Fresh Milk
Specializing In HOME DELIVERY
Phone ST. 8-3791
BERWYN DAIRY CO.
6412 W. 27th St.

DO IT YOURSELF
RENTAL EQUIPMENT
• Rug Shampoo Machines
• Floor Buffers
• Floor Sanders & Edgers
• Floor Scrubbers
• Hand Sanders
• Wallpaper Removing Machines
FIGATNER-SCOTT CO.
6217 W. Cermak GU. 4-2800
We Deliver Anywhere

GUARANTEED
Watch Repair
• Prompt service • Expert work
• Genuine material • Free estimate
• Satisfaction Guaranteed
Mancinelli Jewelers
EST. 1896
Diamonds Watches Jewelry
7185 W. Cermak PI. 9-2064
In Cermak Plaza—Harlem Ave. side

REALTY SERVICE
BAAR REALTY CO.
6335 CERMAK
BERWYN
STanley 8-8750
Lillian M. Baar

YOUR DINETTE CHAIRS Made Like New
In Dacron Plastic at a fraction of New Chair Cost.
AS LOW AS $3.75 Ea.
FREE! Pickup and delivery when you have your chairs recovered at.
Avenue Dinette Sales
5806 W. Cermak TO. 3-7576

SEWERS CLEANED NO DIGGING!
Our Service Free If We Fail To Open Any Blocked Sewer
CATCH BASINS CLEANED—REPAIRED—CONSTRUCTED
Better Sewer Service
FREE ESTIMATE
Phone OLympic 2-3500

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT
• Complete Banking Service!
Mon., Tues., Fri. 9 to 3
Wed. and Sat. 9 to noon
Thurs. 9 to 8 p.m.
COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK
6804 Windsor GU. 4-0800

EVERY THING in HARD-WARE
5937 CERMAK
HARDWARE

GENERAL REMODELING
Attic, Basement Flats, Porches, Cabinet Kitchens, Bathrooms, Brick, Cement, Carpentry work, Garage Brick or Frame.
MODERN HOMES BUILT ON EASY PAYMENTS
CALIFORNIA CONSTRUCTION CO.
Call STanley 8-0073

In Our Opinion

Other Districts Should Investigate

Charles Janata, president of the Cicero Grade School District board of education, has announced that he will investigate the possibility of recovering for the district any other interest which might have been earned on tax monies withheld by the Cook County treasurer's office to satisfy any tax objections to district levies.

At this past week's meeting of the grade school board, a report from the School Township 39 treasurer showed the district being credited with $967 earned on withheld tax objection monies. Janata said at times there has been as much as $500,000 in taxes involved in objections.

While it is a little late, since this is the first reported interest being credited from this source, we think Janata's point is well taken not only from the standpoint of Cicero's schools but also because similar situations probably can be found in every grade school district.

The question seems to be whether this money, held on tax objections, has been allowed to lie dormant for periods of months to years. If the tax objection funds are merely being held, it is one thing. If those monies earned on tax objection funds have been retained by the county treasurer's office in the past, it is something else. If such interest is paid to the school township treasurer and commingled with other monies, the people should know.

Just what is being done is of as much interest to other taxing bodies as it is to the school districts. There probably isn't a township in the state in which tax objections are not filed. Many companies file these demurrers as a matter of course. To them, it is standard procedure. Some of the larger companies retain tax lawyers, who scan budgets and note amounts appropriated for specific purposes in excess of legal maximums.

The latter is used as basis for compromising taxes with a taxing body which doesn't particularly care to have its needed funds tied up for months or years. On any tax objections, the county treasurer generally withholds a minimum of 30 per cent of the amount protested. In some cases the amount withheld is much higher.

A few years ago the Cicero school district was being pinched for funds and a committee of women PTA members called on a number of industrialists who had filed tax objections and obtained the release of some $150,000 to $200,000 needed to tide the district over.

On a lesser scale a few years ago, Congressman Harold Collier, then Berwyn Township supervisor, began an investigation into withheld monies and found that the county treasurer was withholding far more money than was necessary. He obtained release of monies without which the township might have had to issue tax anticipation warrants.

Janata's position is that tax objection monies sequestered by whatever agency should be earning interest on short term government loans, such as treasury notes. If held for as little as three months, $500,000 would earn $5,000 for the district, to whom such money legally belongs or at least that portion of it eventually released.

It could mean, if Janata's idea about the subject can be verified, that all taxing districts may have valid legal claims which could mean thousands of dollars to our community. If experience is any gauge, however, we expect that those who should demand an accounting will do nothing and it will cost the taxpayers thousands of dollars on interest which rightfully could be applied to reduce taxes. We admire Janata's initiative.

Cases of Unjust Criticism

After every major fire or police emergency, and often after even minor emergencies, there have been a number of self-appointed critics who castigate the firemen and policemen for failing to reach the scene in a minimum of time.

These critics' comments are picked up and parroted by others until they become accepted as "facts" by the unknowing and unthinking. We feel that most of these criticisms are unfair, granting that in widely-spaced intervals there may be some justice to the complaints.

Many motorists fail to give the right-of-way to emergency vehicles. Fire Chief Kafka in Berwyn has stated that equipment has to come almost to a halt at Cermak rd. and Oak Park ave. if traffic lights are red against the firemen.

Similar situations could be pointed out in Cicero. The law requires traffic to pull to the curb, if possible, or halt entirely on the approach of emergency equipment. But there are those who continue to drive on slowly, completely ignoring sirens, flashing lights or other evidence that emergency vehicles want the right-of-way.

At fires or in police emergencies, the curious clutter up the scenes delaying and impeding firemen and policemen in carrying out their duties. These self-appointed experts often are the ones to complain. Even though a cordon was thrown around a four-block area at the big Ogden ave. fire on Wednesday, scores made their way on foot to the scene.

Capt. Rooney of the police department and his men had difficulty in keeping adults as well as children away from dangerous areas. One such area was a 500-gallon butane gas tank which could have wreaked untold destruction if it had exploded.

Cicero firefighters, aided by Berwyn and Chicago firemen, did an excellent job in containing a fire which could have been fanned into a major conflagration by winds. The fire was controlled in a little more than an hour, which must set some sort of a record for a blaze of $500,000 proportions.

We didn't notice any of the amateurs offering to rush into the smoke-choked building with the roof collapsing to get at the seat of the blaze, while fearing a momentary explosion. The amateur critics, the same kind who impede emergency vehicles on the streets, are hardly in the class of John Raleigh, former Cicero fire marshal, who heaped high praise on the firemen for the Wednesday fire-fighting job.

State Socialism and the Taxpayers

Governor Stratton is to be commended for the veto of a bill which would have permitted privately owned public transportation companies to be exempt from gas taxes and to obtain state license plates at a reduced rate —a situation which would place them on the same basis as the CTA.

We haven't seen a copy of the veto message on the bill which was put forward by those who would help the West Towns Bus Company primarily in placing the latter in the same competitive position as the CTA. The idea of help is fine, but the whole theory of subsidies is wrong.

Ald. Cox, chairman of the Berwyn city council transportation committee, has been delving into some of the comparative costs between the two largest bus transportation operations and has come up with some interesting figures.

West Towns contends that it would save $60,000 a year if allowed the same gas tax exemption enjoyed by the CTA. The latter's subsidy amounts to $1,750,000. The CTA pays a $2 state license fee for its buses. West Towns and other privately owned transportation companies now are fighting a battle in the courts, contending they are entitled to the same privilege. If West Towns loses that fight, it will cost the company $30,000 for 1958 and a similar amount for 1959, or a total of $60,000 more for the two years, and then about the same amount each year thereafter.

The CTA pays no vehicle license fees to the city of Chicago. The West Towns company pays about $1,500 a year for such stickers to Oak Park. The CTA presently owns 2,708 motor coaches and 575 trolley buses. The CTA pays $149,936 in utility taxes assessed by the city of Chicago for use of power on its trolley buses, subway cars and other electrical current. It is absolved from paying state utility taxes, which would normally cost $112,000.

Because it is a municipal corporation, the CTA is exempt from real estate taxes. West Towns has been paying about $100,000 a year for the rental of the space for a truck terminal at Harlem ave. and Cermak rd., and now is completing a deal with Oak Park to shut off part of a little-used street and rent space for bus storage from the village. The saving will be $75,000 to $80,000 a year, West Towns President O'Brien estimates.

Now, let's recapitulate! The CTA, which wanted a direct tax on all real estate in Cook County, is being subsidized by the entire state because it is being exempt from gas taxes and most of the fees for vehicle licenses. For the latter a comparable fee for private operation would be about $300 a year on the average.

Consider these two taxes CTA is escaping! Peoria and East St. Louis, just as much as Berwyn, Cicero, Stickney and Forest View, has a stake in these two taxes. The state, in its highway building program, is entitled to a certain percentage of fuel taxes. It gets all the state license plate fees. These monies should be expended on roads.

There is no reason for a municipal corporation, in competition with a private utility, to be exempt from taxation to give it favored treatment. There is no reason why other municipalities, not being served by the CTA, should have to contribute to its support to the tune of some $2,500,000 or more annually.

CTA's answer to this is that whenever there has been a subsidy granted to a private corporation, the amount of the subsidy is turned over to the stockholders. We don't know that this is true. West Towns earnings first go to the bondholders, not the stockholders, if there is a profit. This has nothing to do with the basic issue.

Rather than trying to pass bills for subsidies to privately-owned transportation systems (and why aren't the Burlington, Illinois Central and others hauling commuters entitled to the same treatment), laws should be passed to force the CTA to operate on the same basis as the privately owned companies. All the law to grant subsidies would do would be to further state socialism. We trust Gov. Stratton pointed that out in his veto message.

Toll Highway Gypping Barred

Against the Law To Evade Use Fee

Evasion of tolls on the Illinois Toll Highway became a misdemeanor last week, punishable by a fine of $5 to $100 for a first offense, in a law signed by Gov. Stratton.

Known as House Bill 591, by Rep. W. C. Harris, the law amended the Illinois Toll Highway act by making a misdemeanor not only the use of the highway paying toll, but also an attempt to use a counterfeit ticket or coupon.

A second law, House Bill 592 by the same author, increases the penalty for a second violation within one year to $25 to $200 fine, and for a third violation to $100 to $300.

* * *

GOV. STRATTON vetoed, however, Senate Bill 686 by Sen. Arrington and others, amending the same law to require competitive bidding in the purchase of supplies and procurement of services. His veto message said:

"This bill provides a purchasing procedure for the Toll Highway Commission similar to that of the Illinois Purchasing Act. The present act gives adequate protection to the public interest. The commission does not expend money derived from taxes and is thus different from the agencies which are subject to the Purchasing Act."

He signed House Bill 1166, by Rep. Lloyd Harris, providing that except as provided under the Toll Highway act, no commercial establishment for serving motorists shall be located within the right-of-way of publicly owned or leased land, except that telephone service may be provided within fully-controlled access highways where necessary for the safety and welfare of motorists.

F.V. Tax Allotment

Forest View's board of trustees Tuesday evening received a report from the Illinois Department of Highways that the village's motor fuel tax allotment for the period ending July 24 is $509.21.

PLANE TALK

By JUDY ROTUNNO

State's Attorney Benjamin Adamowski driving to Midway Airport to have lunch in the famous restaurant overlooking the field. Also flying into Midway from Springfield to attend what looked like a prearranged luncheon engagement with the attorney was the Governor of Illinois William G. Stratton.

On the day prior to this, the Governor had just learned of Govenor Quinn's success in Hawaii and had taken time before boarding a plane bound for Springfield to wire him a few words of congratulations!!

* * *

CHICAGO TELEVISION star, Lee Phillip, who's noted for her famous bonnets, sported a new "powder puff" creation as she boarded a plane that will take her to Paris. Lee is on a fashion tour and intends to model the hat in France.

Organizer, coordinator and general ringleader of the Chicago Tribune-sponsored Music Festival proudly boasting the guest star list of this year's show before departing for Minneapolis. According to Phil Maxwell two of the biggest drawing cards will be none other than Edd Byrnes of "Sunset Strip" and Cliff Arquette, alias Charlie Weaver.

Quipster Groucho Marx leaving Chicago via a passenger jet from O'Hare Field after winding up a record-breaking engagement in "Time for Elizabeth," at the Edgewater Beach Playhouse. As soon as Groucho is gone, Dorothy Malone will move in as the star.

* * *

MAYOR RICHARD J. DALEY heading for Washington, D.C. one day and returning the next. The mayor sure doesn't waste time and if you don't believe that you ought to see him walk through an airline lobby!

The Chicago American radio and television editor Janet Kern getting away from it all for a while as she planned a short weekend trip to Atlantic City. That's pretty hard to do, especially if there's a television set in the near vicinity.

* * *

THE AIRLINE agents received an unexpected pleasure aside from their routine duties as they watched Anna Marie Kolb, this year's Miss International Contact Lens, pose for pictures in an airline lobby. This young German movie actress will officially receive her title during coronation ceremonies this week in Chicago.

Speaking of beauty queens, Miss Hawaii is expected to enter Chicago next week. This young lady will be a contestant in the "Miss America" pageant held annually in Atlantic City.

Actor Duncan Renaldo entertaining some of his Windy City friends at the Club El Bianco during a short stopover in Chicago. The Cisco Kid is en route to Detroit, Minneapolis, and will then tour many of the Southern cities. He doesn't expect to return home (Malibu, Calif.) until the latter part of October. His horse "Diablo" also keeps up the rapid pace by following him all around the country.

F.V. Regular Payroll Approved by Trustees

The regular Forest View payroll for $3,949.94, covering the period from July 16 to July 31, was approved Tuesday evening by the village board at its regular meeting.

The payroll read by Clerk Robert Jensik, listed $386.60 for withholding tax and $59.99 for the village's Police Pension Fund. The net amount of the payroll was $3,503.35.

Late Taxes Pinch Board

N. Berwyn Cuts Building Payment

Still feeling the pinch of late tax payment, the north Berwyn grade schools' district board Wednesday debated how to meet $33,000 of building bills with just $22,000 in the building fund.

The board anticipates $320,000 in tax monies will be received this month. Of this amount about $45,000 is earmarked for the building fund.

* * *

BUT in the meantime the board decided to pay $10,000 of the requested $24,000 on improvements in progress at Havlicek School. It will pay $8,930 first installment on univents being installed at Custer and Havlicek schools.

Joseph Krob, board president, explained that terms of the contract do not require any payment until the job is completed.

The contractors involved are Frank F. Nejdl and Son, North Riverside, and Hans Jensen Company, Chicago.

Nejdl is installing windows ($25,438), coating floors ($2,320) and replacing a staircase ($12,470) at Havlicek, 1431 Elmwood ave. Jansen is installing univents at Havlicek School and Custer School, 1435 Oak Park ave. Total univent cost will be $17,692.

Back from Conference

Recently returned from the Knox College campus at Galesburg, Ill., is Charlotte Broz, 1829 Euclid ave., who has been attending an Illinois Bell Telephone Company development conference. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Broz of the Berwyn address.

Serves as Escort

Kenneth L. Fisher, 3261 Austin blvd., serving at the U.S. Coast Guard life boat station at Kenosha, Wis., was assigned as one of the members of the Coast Guard escort for Queen Elizabeth during her recent visit to Chicago.

FINANCE YOUR CAR . . .
at our LOW BANK RATE!

• Complete Banking Service •
Mon., Tues., Fri. 9 to 3
Wed. and Sat. 9 to noon
Thurs. 9 to 8 p.m.

COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK
6804 Windsor GU 4-0800

"NOTHING HAPPENS WITHOUT A CAUSE"
*(Author's Name Below)

A great many people depend on our pharmacy for their medicines and health-aids. We enjoy their confidence and try our best to merit their continuous approval.

The practice of pharmacy is more personal than the usual business. Everything we sell is either for your better health or comfort. Sometimes a life may depend upon the medicines pharmacists dispense. That is why everyone of us makes certain that we each do everything possible to give the very best pharmacy service. Have you visited our pharmacy lately? We believe our effort to please may cause you to become one of our regular patrons and would welcome you.

•

YOUR PHYSICIAN CAN PHONE
STanley 8-2687
OR
GUnderson 4-0678
WHEN YOU NEED A MEDICINE

•

Pick up your prescription if shopping near us, or let us deliver promptly without extra charge. A great many people entrust us with the responsibility of filling their prescriptions. May we compound yours?

•

PROSCH PHARMACIES
3243 Oak Park Ave.
6801 Stanley Ave.
PRESCRIPTIONS CHEMISTS

*Quotation by Leucippus (about 450 B.C.)
Copyright 1959 (2W4)

THOSE WHO LOOK AHEAD GET THE BEST OF EVERYTHING

May we tell you about the NEW

MASARYK MEMORIAL MAUSOLEUM

NOW UNDER CONSTRUCTION

Modern Above Ground Burial at Low Cost and Reasonable Terms

Here's what you've always wanted –

Entombment in a clean, dry crypt above ground in the natural setting of beautiful Memorial Park—Section 27. Even families of modest means can avail themselves of the advantages of crypt entombment. Our "Advance in Need" plan is designed to meet YOUR budget.
You may select—single crypts—couch crypts—double depth crypts—or side by side companion crypts. They are constructed of steel reinforced concrete, faced with pink Georgia marble and designed to endure forever. Columbarian niches in a setting of dignity are also provided as a permanent respository for the urn of cremated remains.

Bohemian National Cemetery
5255 NORTH PULASKI ROAD CHICAGO 30

For further information call at our office send us a card – or telephone . . .

Chicago Phone
KEystone 9-8442

Local Phone
STanley 8-8442

Rovin, A R.

December 3, 1959

Dear Lieutenant Rovin:

Thank you for your letter of November 3rd, which was received here in Mr. Murrow's absence.

I regret that it will not be possible for Mr. Murrow to reply to your letter, since he is on a year's leave of absence and is traveling abroad.

Very sincerely yours,

Gabrielle Wachsner
Secretary

Lt. Alyn Rovin USN
Staff, Comcardiv 4
FPO, New York, N. Y.

Staff, Comcardiv 4
FPO New York, N.Y.
November 3, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

For many years I have been an avid listener and reader of yours and a follower of your career. It is in the light of your objective analyses and liberal ideas that I am writing to you for advice.

At present I am an officer in the United States Navy. My obligated service is over in June 1960 and I am in the process of making long run plans for the future. Fortunately, or perhaps unfortunately, my interests are numerous and often follow widely separated paths.

I am a graduate electrical engineer and have done graduate work in industrial management. However, I did no practical work in these fields prior to my entry into the service. For the past several years I have been keenly interested in international affairs. Much of my spare time has been devoted to reading and discussing topics in this area.

This interest, combined with an ability to absorb foreign languages and a desire to travel, has caused me to consider international politics or journalism as a career. I have had no formal journalistic experience except on the high school newspaper level. I realize that working one's way up from a cub reporter on a local newspaper, especially with no formal journalism education, is a drawn out and often boring and frustrating experience.

I am considering an approach to the field from a scholarly or critical point of view. If I decide to go on in this direction I plan to study international law and foreign relations at a law or graduate liberal arts school.

My question to you is, is such an approach sound? Where does one go after he graduates with such an education?

I realize your volume of correspondence is high. However, I sincerely feel that you are one of the people best qualified to answer my questions. I hope I am not imposing on you too much. Thank you for any comments you may have.

Very truly yours,
Alyn Rovin
Alyn Rovin, Lt(jg) USN

Rubin, Laura G.

National Committee for Resettlement of Foreign Physicians, Inc.

FOUNDED 1939

31 Union Square West, New York 3, N. Y. ALgonquin 5-2176

ROBERT BOGGS, M.D.
Chairman

ALEX. M. BURGESS, M.D.
Vice-Chairman

IRVING GRAEF, M.D.
Vice-Chairman

WINSLOW CARLTON
DEAN A. CLARK, M.D.
JOHN V. CONNORTON, PH.D.
MRS. MYRON S. FALK, JR.
IAGO GALDSTON, M.D.
BEN HERZBERG
WILLIAM N. HUBBARD, JR., M.D.
J. DONALD KINGSLEY
LAWRENCE S. KUBIE, M.D.
ASA L. LINCOLN, M.D.
NORMAN B. NELSON, M.D.
REINHOLD NIEBUHR, D.D.
JOSEPH HALLE SCHAFFNER
FRANCIS S. SMYTH, M.D.
HERBERT B. WILCOX, JR., M.D.

MRS. LAURA G. RUBIN
Executive Secretary

Advisory Board
GEORGE N. AAGAARD, M.D.
DONALD G. ANDERSON, M.D.
JOHN Z. BOWERS, M.D.
JOSEPH A. CAPPS, M.D.
LOWELL T. COGGESHALL, M.D.
R. L. COIGNY, M.D.
HOWARD R. CRAIG, M.D.
EDWIN L. CROSBY, M.D.
I. DAVIDSOHN, M.D.
CHARLES A. DOAN, M.D.
WILLIAM DOCK, M.D.
IRVING EHRENFELD, M.D.
THOMAS FINDLEY, M.D.
JACOB FINE, M.D.
HARRY GOLDBLATT, M.D.
HARRY S. N. GREENE, M.D.
GEORGE C. HAM, M.D.
BERNARD KAUFMAN, M.D.
LOUIS LEITER, M.D.
BASIL C. MAC LEAN, M.D.
FRANKLIN C. MC LEAN, M.D.
ROBERT A. MOORE, M.D.
JOHN H. MULHOLLAND, M.D.
HARROLD A. MURRAY, M.D.
JEAN R. OLIVER, M.D.
EDWARDS A. PARK, M.D.
GEORGE PINESS, M.D.
ALBERT S. SABIN, M.D.
OTTO SAPHIR, M.D.
DAVID SEEGAL, M.D.
JOSEPH STOKES, JR., M.D.
HOWARD C. TAYLOR, JR., M.D.
HERMAN G. WEISKOTTEN, M.D.
EDWARD WEISS, M.D.
M. C. WINTERNITZ, M.D.
M. M. WINTROBE, M.D.
STEWART WOLF, M.D.
RICHARD H. YOUNG, M.D.
LOUIS ZETZEL, M.D.

February 18, 1959

F

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

Dear Mr. Murrow:

At the Tenth Annual Conference of the Institute of International Education in Washington, I introduced myself as the Executive Secretary of this Committee, telling you that the Committee was helping not only Egyptian physicians, but all non-Moslems, flee from Arab persecution. You said you might be interested in this material, and I am therefore sending you a short summary on the Committee's history and activity, a few thumbnail sketches of Egyptians already safe in this country, and statistics.

All of the escapees from Egypt must sign a statement that they are leaving voluntarily and will never return. They are limited in the amount of money they can take out of the country, but must sign waivers regarding anything they have left behind.

Until recently, Egyptian medical schools were staffed by English teachers and instruction was in the English language. Prior to receiving their medical diplomas, the graduates, however, had to pass an examination in the Arabic language. The schools were on a par with the best in England. The Egyptian graduates who have come to this country are unusually fine people, cultured, well-trained, and dedicated to their profession. The hospitals where we have placed them all consider them an asset to this country.

Dr. Robert Boggs, the former Dean of the New York University Post-Graduate Medical School, who is our Chairman, tells us that he knows you, and would be delighted to discuss the enclosed material with you, should you so desire.

Sincerely,

Laura G. Rubin

(Mrs.) Laura G. Rubin
Executive Secretary

National Committee for Resettlement of Foreign Physicians, Inc.
31 Union Square, West; New York 3, N.Y.

History

The history of the Committee is a direct reflection of the political upheavals of the world since 1933. Nazism, Facism and Communism have been the causes of the immigration of foreign physicians to the United States. The Committee was formally organized in 1939, though its work had been conducted on a voluntary basis by American physicians prior to that time. Until World War II, most of the immigrants were victims of Nazism, most of them German and Austrian. The Committee, though always non-sectarian, was supported by the United Jewish Appeal under its present name, as a department of the refugee agencies.

The Committee has striven constantly to maintain the high standards of medical practice in the United States and has demanded additional medical training for every physician whose background was considered substandard. These few individuals whose backgrounds were so deficient as to make attainment of American standards impossible, were encouraged to leave the field of medicine by the Advisory Board of the Committee, composed of prominent American medical educators. During its existence, more than 16,000 physicians have been aided to qualify for practice in the United States. Almost every state has physicians in practice helped by this Committee. Many are in prominent teaching and research posts in university centers; many are in practice in remote areas. Every specialty is represented. Many have gone into the Armed Forces. Almost all have become part of the American scene.

Services Given by the Committee to Foreign-Trained Physicians

Physicians Overseas - Prospective Immigrants

1. Individual interpretation of probable United States training requirements for licensure, based on schools and years of graduation; in some cases, this discourages U.S. immigration. Interpretation includes complications due to missing credentials; need for English; the fact that some degrees (Lekarz and Arzt) may not be acceptable.
2. Finding hospital appointments, after evaluation of English and medical credentials, for priority immigration.

Physicians Overseas - Prospective Exchange Students

Interpretive letters to inquiries, most of which end in the abandonement of the plan. A limited number of outstanding teachers are brought to the United States by the Committee for training in specific fields.

Physicians in the United States - Immigrants

1. Orientation concerning American medicine on the basis of the physician's individual training and need.
2. Help with securing substitute documents where these are missing; placement in approved training hospital appointments or staff positions, depending on the individual requirements.
3. Referral to examining and state boards, with information on changing rules and regulations as they affect the individual physician.
4. Referral to social agency, where there are social problems, and all placements in hospitals made on the basis of family planning.

(Most foreign doctors are young men and women from so-called "unapproved" schools and require three to four years of guidance).

Physicians in the United States - Exchange Students

Limited service given to a very limited number.

Exchange Students - Continued
Exchange students who register after entering the country and ask for additional service are occasionally referred to hospital appointments. Those who have received their United States training are encouraged to return home.

Future Immigration Picture
EGYPT: The attached statistical report shows the Egyptian situation. It is anticipated that there will be further immigration of physicians from this country, especially from the Christian group, who are only now feeling persecution intensely.

LIBYA: This country has just started persecution of Non-Moslems. To date, six physicians, Italian-trained, are appealing to us for immigration aid. Three families have already entered the United States.

Poland: With legal immigration possible, especially of Jews, the Committee is getting an increasing number of appeals for immigration help. Catholic physicians, too, want to get out of Poland, but must leave that country before the Catholic immigration agency can assist them.

SOUTH AMERICA, AUSTRALIA, CENTRAL AMERICA: Refugees were resettled from Displaced Persons Camps to these lands. Many found it impossible to achieve licensure, or even to work in medicine. Requests for U.S. immigration continue to come tothis Committee.

LEBANON, TURKEY, IRAN, IRAQ, MOROCCO, TUNISIA, ALGERIA: The situation as far as Non-Moslems are concerned, is volatile, and physicians are handled as referred to us by the sectarian agencies.

RUMANIA: Jews in this country are being encouraged to immigrate. However, a good number are going to Israel. Older physicians find life in Israel untenable since those over 55 are practically forced to retire. Establishment of a private practice is only possible to monied people. This group will request U.S. immigration aid. Many physicians, even those in the younger group, want to rejoin their only surviving relatives in the United States, encouraged by U.S. immigration laws. In the last six months, we have brought in two Rumanian physicians, members of the Orthodox church, who had been sent to France to attend conferences and deflected to the west. Both are in interneships, though one is a renowned pathologist.

YUGOSLAVIA AND CZECHOSLOVAKIA: The usual means of escape from these countries is through vacation tours, and deflection while in free countries. Three Yugoslav and two Czech physicians have recently come to the United States, after escaping to Greece and Italy in this way. A Yugoslav exchange student, newly arrived in the U.S., hopes to get U.S. political asylum. All of these are Christians.

EAST GERMANY: Physicians from the Eastern Zone are coming into Berlin, and some already have immigrated to the United States.

TAIWAN AND HONG KONG: Most of these physicians are refugees from the mainland of China and are Protestant, with an occasional Roman Catholic. Several have recently arrived, and others have applied for immigration aid.

GREECE, ITALY AND THE NETHERLANDS: These are considered overpopulated areas under the now expired Displaced Persons Act and eligible for immigration. There is a steady flow from these countries.

Future Immigration Picture (Continued)

HUNGARY: While there are still unsettled refugees from the 1956 Revolution in Austria and Switzerland, legal immigration is now possible under some conditions from Hungary, based on First Preference visas and reunion with close relatives.

REGULAR IMMIGRANTS: These are the physicians who come to the United States on regular quota, not because of persecution, but because of economic pressures and the desire to escape socialized medicine. While no immigration aid is given them by the Committee, advice as to states open to them, appropriate documentation, and the possibilities and obstacles for adjustment in the United States, is available. Once they are in the United States, they are guided toward American licensure. Many seek interpretation of their chances in the United States and with frank, individualized interpretation, some reject immigration.

REPATRIATES: These physicians, few in number, are native Americans who were taken abroad by parents at an early age, and have all the problems of foreign graduates except lack of citizenship. A few are also American citizens by derivation. In the last few years, these categories included physicians from China, Portugal, Hungary and Italy.

==

UNITED STATES HOSPITAL NEEDS

There is a shortage of internes and residents in both city and voluntary hospitals. 12,000 such positions are open with only 7,500 American medical graduates available each year. There is also a great need for staff physicians in mental, state and small general hospitals. These vacancies are filled by foreign physicians.

Thumbnail Sketches

1. Dr. A., 45, married, 2 children, Jewish.

Dr. A. received his medical degree from the French University at Beyrouth, Lebanon, 1937. He is a specialist in Otolaryngology, with a specialty diploma from Paris, 1948. He acted as a surgeon in this field in Egypt from 1947 to 1957. His English is excellent, and he is a well trained surgeon. He had to flee Egypt and came to the United States on priority (First Preference Visa) with his family through an approved rotating interneship arranged for him in New Jersey. He is now in an approved residency in Otolargyngolgy in this country, and both hospitals have considered him an asset. His plan is to specialize in Otolargyngology in a small city. The American Board of Otolaryngology is crediting part of his training abroad.

2. Dr. B., 29, single, Roman Catholic.

Dr. B. is a graduate of an Egyptian University, 1955 and practiced in his native country from 1955 to 1957. Prior to immigration, he worked for a U.S. research unit in Egypt. He came to the United States on First Preference Visa to an interneship in Massachusetts, and after completion, secured a residency in medicine at a Boston hospital connected with Harvard University. His training as a physician is so good that it was with very little difficulty that he was able to get this fine placement. Dr. B., too, will be an asset to American medicine.

3. Dr. C. born 28 years ago, single, Jewish.

He is a graduate of an Egyptian University, 1955. (It is interesting to note that the Christian and Jewish physicians are all friends and help each other, not only in immigrating, but in interesting our Committee in them. They consider themselves brothers). Dr. C. came to the United States on First Preference Visa to Miriam Hospital, Providence, Rhode Island, which is a fine hospital of good training under the direction of Dr. Alex. M.Burgess, Vice-Chairman of the Committee, and President Emeritus of the American Board of Internal Medicine. Dr.C., like all the Egyptian doctors, has given outstanding performance. After completing the interneship, Dr. C. started training in surgery in a Rhode Island Hospital and will then go to one in Washington, D.C. for further surgical training.

4. Dr. D., 35, single, Jewish.

Dr. D. is a graduate of an Egyptian University, 1955. He immigrated to the United States in December, 1957 on First Preference Visa. He was a specialist in Internal Medicine abroad, and he, too, went to Miriam Hospital, Providence, for an approved interneship. He has proven his worth and will move on to a residency in medicine at a Boston hospital in July, 1959. It is interesting that Dr. D. sent us a check for $25, half of his first salary, with a letter stating that "according to the Jewish religion, the first earnings must go for good deeds, and it is a real pleasure to send you this check."

5. Three Egyptian Medical Students, Roman Catholic.

These three students have applied to us since they do not even dare to stay to finish their studies in Egypt and have asked the advice of our Committee. Through the Catholic immigration agency's overseas office, we have suggested that if possible, the one who is almost through with his studies, complete them in Egypt. Since the others speak French and English, we suggested that they complete their studies, if possible, in French or Swiss schools, if they cannot go to English schools. All of these students had hoped to register at American schools with advanced standing but had to be informed that this is not possible. They will immigrate when they have their degrees.

National Committee for Resettlement of Foreign Physicians, Inc.

Egyptian Physicians - January 8, 1959

In the United States

41 - Total
34 - Immigrants
7 - Exchange Students
2 plan to return to Egypt after training (Both are Roman Catholic)
5 wish to change status to immigrant because they fear to return and/or cannot do so

41 - Religion
34 - Jewish
4 - Roman Catholic
2 - Protestant
1 - Coptic Christian

41 - Present Activity
11 - Approved interneships
10 First position, secured for immigration priority
1 Previously served residency " "
18 - Approved residencies, having completed interneships secured for priority
9 - Hospital staff positions
1 - Hospitalized for suspected tuberculosis, immediately after arrival, doctor destined to interneship
2 - Unknown, training completed December 31, 1958

41 - Licensure
1 - Licensed California (while on exchange program, prior to immigration)
1 - " Illinois
1 - Passed Basic Science examination, Rhode Island
7 - Exchange students, not eligible for licensure application now
2 - Eligible for Massachusetts licensure examination
2 - Overage, not applying for licensure examinations
27 - Applying for licensure examinations in Rhode Island, New York, Massachusetts, Illinois, Maryland, Virginia

41 - Age Groups
24 - Under 35
8 - 36-45
7 - 46-55
2 - 56-65

41 - Schools of Graduation
29 - Cairo and Alexandria
3 - Paris
2 - French University of Beyrouth, Lebanon
1 - Liege
1 - Vienna
1 - Padua
1 - Geneva
1 - Brussels
1 - Lyons
1 - Edinburgh

Egyptian Physicians in the United States (Continued)

30 - Physicians brought to the United States by the Committee
25 - Approved interneships
4 - Staff positions
1 - Approved residency

41 - States of Employment as of January 8, 1959
9 - New York
8 - Massachusetts
6 - New Jersey
3 - Rhode Island
3 - Illinois
2 - Ohio
1 - Pennsylvania
1 - Michigan
1 - Maryland
1 - Virginia
1 - Kentucky
1 - Hospitalized in Illinois
4 - Unknown

5 - Passed Educational Council for Foreign Medical Graduates Screening Examination taken September, 1958; next examination given February, 1959.

Egyptian Physicians Overseas Registered as of January 8, 1959
18 - Total
15 - Egypt
2 - France
1 - England
1 - Australia

18 - Plans
9 - First Preference Petition approved, awaiting immigration visas
1 - Taking screening examination before Committee will aid in immigration (England)
3 - Plans in abeyance at Doctors' request
1 - Pending immigration to United Kingdom
1 - Immigration visa available; plans pending
1 - Immigrating under Section 15 (Nonquota visas for refugees)
2 - Committee awaiting replies to letters sent through International Red Cross

Recapitulations

41	Physicians in the United States
18	" overseas
5	" "	not included in this report because of plans to resettle elsewhere
64

Rubinstein, Gigi

April 21, 1958

Dear Mrs. Rubinstein:

I have your letter of April 9th.

I regret very much to have to tell you that I am unable to grant you the interview you request due to my very busy schedule of radio and television. I'm sure you understand.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Gigi Rubinstein
71 Glendale Place
Port Chester, New York

mcc

Gigi Rubinstein-Finer

71 Glendale Place, Port Chester, New York

see ERM

My dear Mr Murrow:

Enclosed circular and clipping will show you who I am. I wish to ask you for a personal audience at your office one afternoon in the near future.

I am deeply interested in children and their future, the future of the whole world. I have been trying to get"engagements" in local schools, for practically no remuneration, to introduce easy classics to the children, to sing Folksongs for them in many languages (I speak five) to arouse some curiosity about other peeples, other lands. It is so far quite impossible. If you have not been on television, you are not interesting enough for the youngsters. If you have not been all around the shools , TV is not interested.

Would you please be so gracious and talk with me. Maybe there is a solution. I am not money-con cious, not interested in personal glory, but some publicity is needed for my work, because I am con vinced much more should be done for CHILDREN than is the case now.

With much admiration for your work,

cordially,

Gigi Finer

April the ninth 1958

KTIA Installation Fete To Present Musical Artists

Gigi Rubinstein Finer, mezzo-soprano who enjoyed a successful career on the Finnish stage both as a dramatic actress and singer, will highlight the entertainment program of the Kneses Tifereth Israel Auxiliary installation fete to be staged Wednesday evening at 8:30 at the Synagogue, King Street, Port Chester.

Mrs. Finer, of Glendale Place, Port Chester, in private life is Mrs. Maney Finer, mother of four children, Vanessa, Stewart, Douglas and Audrey.

A graduate of the School of Dramatic Art of the Finnish National Theater, she has appeared in the works of Shakespeare, Maugham, Eugene O'Neill and others, including a number of musicals. She has been cited by European critics who have called her voice "an instrument completely mastered — a thing of silver and velvet and of unusually beautiful timbre."

Mrs. Finer hopes to embark on another career in the field of music possibly in the Fall, stating that "the children are all here and growing and I have to sing again."

Sharing the bill with her will be Mrs. Maria Antos, Hungarian pianist who is on the faculty of the College of New Rochelle Music Department. Mrs. Antos has appeared in numerous concerts in Europe. She has offered her talents to many civic meetings and benefits. She resides at 227 Columbus Avenue, Port Chester, with her husband, Kalman Antos, musician member of the faculty of Manhattanville College of the Sacred Heart, and her daughter, Maria.

GIGI RUBINSTEIN FINER

Gigi

Mezzo Soprano
Operetta Star

Specialty:

Scandinavian music with some beautiful songs of SIBELIUS

"Madame Gigi Rubinstein—is new to America, and what a gloriously rewarding discovery," writes Mr. Kajava, in "NEW YORK'S UUTISET." Her voice is enchanting, rich and warm, full of expression. Her dramatic talent is remarkable. Her program reveals a taste both refined and discriminating. An altogether delightful recital."

Mr. Ehrstrom, music critic for "HUFVUDSTADSBLADET," Helsinki, Finland, wrote: Madame Rubinstein as 'Victoria' completely captivated the audience. Winning in appearance, her dramatic talents and fine sense of humor combine in a lovely voice of unusual timbre, which she uses most effectively and which has made of her a star, virtually overnight."

"Dear Gigi, your voice is like velvet, your face like sunshine, thank you for singing—you are a program-chairman's dream come true!"

Miriam Wein, Jewish Center Sisterhood, Port Chester, N. Y.

Accompanist: Hungarian pianovirtuoso Madame Maria Antos.

REPERTOIRE: Gigi Rubinstein-Finer sings, classic recitals, Finnish and Swedish compositions, Folksongs from many lands in native languages, children's programs, operatic arias, Israeli songs.

SIBELIUS, RANGSTROEM, MERIKANTO, TSCHAIKOVSKY, BRAHMS, ENGEL, ETC.

Contact:

JEWISH LECTURE BUREAU
145 EAST 32nd STREET
New York 16, N. Y.
LExington 2-4949

Rudd, Irving

F

October 31, 1958

Dear Irv:

I ain't ever been to Yonkers but, if we can find our way, Johnny, Jesse and I will join you on the evening of Wednesday, November 12. We all expect to retire, either from broadcasting or from racing, the next day.

As ever yours,

KRM:skh

Mr. Irving Rudd
Promotion Department
Yonkers Raceway
Yonkers, N.Y.

YONKERS RACEWAY, INC.

YONKERS, N. Y. YONKERS 8-4200

PROMOTION DEPARTMENT

October 28, 1958

Dear Ed:

Johnny Aaron suggested I write you. It's been a long time since I've had the pleasure of entertaining you, so why not come to Yonkers Raceway some night soon and bring Jesse and John with you?

The food is great, the atmosphere in our fabulous new dining room lush (in fact Jesse and John can lush it up all they want to) the horses race right in your lap - and who knows? - you are liable to hit a big daily double!

So make it soon, please. We close November 29.

Sincerely,

Irving Rudd

Irving Rudd

Ruff, Carl

March 11, 1959

Mr. Carl Ruff
Carl Ruff Associates
15 West 46th Street
New York 36, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Ruff:

I write to thank you for your courtesy in sending me the questionnaire completed by Vernon Martin.

Sincerely yours,

KRM:skh

CARL RUFF ASSOCIATES

PUBLIC RELATIONS

15 WEST 46th STREET, NEW YORK 36 • JUdson 2-3570

March 9, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Studying the returned questionnaires in the citizenship contest run by the food chain companies of the country, I noted that your name was listed by one of the winners in answering this question: "How do you keep informed on local, state and national affairs?"

I thought you might like to know this, and then was struck with the thought that you might be interested in making some comment about this effort to spur men to greater citizenship in their communities.

Everyone talks about patriotism but how many of us do anything about it?

Vernon E. Martin's record - and he is representative of the other eight winners - speaks eloquently and, it seems to me, holds up a mirror for the rest of us. The reflection should make all of us feel guilty.

On Monday March 16th Vernon Martin and the eight other winners receive an award from Supreme Court Justice Tom C. Clark at a banquet in their honor. The attached release contains considerable information. I'm also enclosing a copy of Martin's questionnaire. I would be glad to show you his entire presentation and those of the other winners if you are interested.

Most cordially,

Carl Ruff

CARL RUFF

CR:el
Enc.

Food Industry News

12 CD GJKLMO

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FOOD CHAINS
1025 CONNECTICUT AVENUE, N. W. WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

EXecutive 3-7822

HOLD FOR RELEASE TO A.M. PAPERS OF MONDAY, MARCH 2

Contact: Rainey
EX 3-7822

Washington, D.C. -- Nine supermarket managers were named winners today in a unique nation-wide contest designed to encourage active participation in community affairs.

The winners -- the fourth group to be honored under an annual program sponsored by the National Association of Food Chains -- will receive their awards from Justice Tom C. Clark of the Supreme Court of the United States at a banquet in their honor on March 16.

The nine supermarket managers were picked from a group of more than 350 winners in the local phase of the two-part program.

They were chosen by a special Jury of Award composed of Bob Cox, National President of the Junior Chamber of Commerce of the United States; Dr. John A. Hannah, President of Michigan State University; and Preston J. Moore, National Commander of the American Legion.

The winners, their companies and home towns are:

William M. Brown, Market Basket, Covina, Calif.; James A. Cooper, Von's Grocery Co., Los Angeles, Calif.; James W. Cowan, The Kroger Co., Washington, Mo.; Mel Krohn, Benner Tea Co., Monmouth, Ill.; Vernon E. Martin, Safeway Stores, Inc., Anadarko, Okla.;

Also: John G. Pappas, National Tea Co., Columbia Heights, Minn.; Hubert Perreault, Red Owl Stores, Inc., Munising, Mich.; Kenneth L. Willingham, Alpha Beta Food Markets, Inc., La Puente, Calif., and Herb Zandler, Food Fair Stores, Inc., Bridgeton, N. J.

The winners and their wives will be sent by their companies to Washington for a three day tour -- March 15, 16 and 17. Besides the banquet in their honor, they will meet their Senators and Congressmen and visit places of historical interest in and around Washington.

(MORE)

As a token of their award, each winning manager will receive a bronze medallion engraved with his name and the words "for outstanding achievement in promoting better community relationships."

The judges choose the national award winners from presentations prepared by their nominating companies. Each food chain company participating in the Program may nominate one of its local award winners for a national award.

Winners of local awards are selected each year on the basis of answers to a questionnaire prepared specifically for the Program by Teachers College of Columbia University which has been studying the problems of citizenship under a grant from the Carnegie Foundation. The questionnaire is aimed at testing citizenship at the local level -- which both the industry and the University consider vital to sound state and national government. Approximately 10,000 of these questionnaires are completed each year by candidates for awards.

The managers are queried on such things as membership in community governmental bodies, activity in behalf of local welfare campaigns, civic club and church membership and participation, and regularity in voting.

The answers to these questions are scored with a special rating sheet also prepared by Teachers College. Each company may choose up to 10 percent of its high-scoring competing managers to receive a local award -- a hand-lettered certificate bearing the winner's name.

NAFC President John A. Logan, in announcing the names of the winning managers, said, "The entire food chain industry is justly proud of these men. In these days when too many Americans take their citizenship (so much) for granted, these outstanding good citizens have given much of their time and effort to try to improve the communities of which they are a part. In a sense, the basis of good citizenship is giving more than one is asked. These good citizens have given much more."

The National Association of Food Chains is an industry association of the nation's leading food chain companies -- both large and small -- operating 12,000 supermarkets and food stores all over the United States and in many foreign countries.

###

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FOOD CHAINS

1958

GOOD CITIZENSHIP AWARD PROGRAM

Questionnaire

Name Vernon E. Martin

Company Safeway Stores

Store No. 45 Address 110 West Central

City & State Anadarko, Oklahoma

Home Address 408 West Louisiana

City & State Anadarko, Oklahoma

Score

To be filled in by person scoring questionnaire

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FOOD CHAINS

GOOD CITIZENSHIP QUESTIONNAIRE

Answers to all questions should cover activities of the past year only.

1. List community groups, organizations or clubs (for example, service club, P.T.A., fraternal organization, veterans organization, patriotic group) of which you are a member. Indicate specific committee or other responsibilities in group, and time spent in past year.

Masonic Lodge, Scottish Rite Club
Quarterback Club
Reclamation
Kiwanis Club, member Board, chairman vocational Guidance for Division 17 of Kiwanis

2. List business or professional organizations (for example retail trade group, Chamber of Commerce, etc.) of which you are a member. Indicate specific committee or other responsibilities in group, and time spent in past year.

Chamber of Commerce, President and member of board determining policies and directing work of committees
Time spent-see Item 17.

3. List community activities of members of your family, and time spent.

Kathy:	Jack:	Mrs.:
Rainbow Girls	Boy Scouts	S/S
S.S. Music	Science Club, S S	Eastern St
MYF Camp Fire Girls	"A" Club, B. Training Union	Music Club
Red Cross Life Saving	National Honor Society	Hobby Club
American Legion Citzenship Award	Red Cross Life Saving
National Honor Society

4. Have you devoted some of your time in past year (beyond attendance at regular services) to religious activities in the community? Describe specific activities and time spent.

Helped Assembly of God and Penecostal Holiness Churches in developement of summer camp sites.
Helped with Church attendance program in Kiwanis

5. Have you devoted any time to a committee or group working for the youth of your community? (4H Clubs, Boy Scouts, etc.) YES x NO ____
If so, describe specific activites and indicate time spent.

4H Clubs, FFA Clubs, Distributive Education.
Boy Scouts, talked to assemblies of each of these groups.

6. List elections in which you have voted the past year (including local or state primaries, local or state elections, national elections, and special elections, i.e. school bond issues, etc.).

All elections
State Primaries
All local and State elections
School Board Election

7. Have you or any member of your immediate family done anything in the past year to encourage others to vote? YES x NO ____ Describe how:

All family have worked in "get out the vote" program for elections.
(1) Gave employees time off with pay to go vote (2) Children passed out "Have you voted today pamplets". (3) Daughter campaigned for Oklahoma Governor Elect. (4) Wife works on Election Board.

8. List the meetings of your local city council, school board, or similar governmental bodies, that you attended this past year.

Attended policy making meetings of both City Council and School Board.
Attended County Commissioners meeting determing road building. program for county.

9. Are you acquainted with the program of the schools in the community where you live? YES x NO ____ . Describe how you became acquainted:

Attended meetings of School Board
Work with FFA and Distributive program in school.

10. Can you list the major issues currently before the local governing body for the community where your store is located? YES x NO ____ . List one or more:

Street improvement in City
Water development program
City and Water district

11. List the names of the principal government officials in your community (for example, Major John Doe), as well as names of your representatives in the state and national legislature and Senate.

Senator Don Baldwin, Pres. pro tem State senate
Rep. Bob Goodfellow
U.S. Congressman Toby Morris
Senator Robert S. Kerr
Senator Mike Monroney
County Sheriff Ray Larison
County Judge Dewey Hodges
County Att'y. Frank Limerick
City Mayor, Kay Clark

12. During the past year, have you talked with or written a letter of information, approval, or protest to your representative in federal or state government? YES x NO ____ . Give the names and titles of representatives whom you contacted:

Written to Pres. Eisenhower
Senator Robert S. Kerr
Senator Mike Monroney
Gov. Raymond Gary
Rep. Carl Albert, Tom Steed
John Jarman, Toby Morris
Page Belcher, Ed Edmondson

13. During the past year have you made any statement (orally or by letter) to a non-governmental group or organization, local, state, or national, giving information or expressing approval or disapproval of a policy or action? YES x NO ____ . Name the groups or organizations:

Kiwanis Club
Scottish Rite of Freemasonry
Indian City Inc
American Indian Exposition

14. Have you or any member of your family within the past year worked in any local welfare campaigns (such as Red Cross, Community Chest, or March of Dimes)? YES x NO ____ . Tell how you assisted:

Planning Programs
Distribution of welfare
Planning of fund raising campaigns

15. Did you make any personal monetary contributions during the last calendar year to any welfare organization? YES x NO ____. List the organizations:

Red Cross	March of Dimes
Salvation Army	Christian Center
Cancer Fund	T.B. Christmas Seals
Camp Fire Girls	Boy Scout Council

16. How do you keep informed on local, state, national and world affairs? List source of information, give name of radio or TV programs, publications, columnists, etc.

U.S. News and World Report	TV News, WKY
Anadarko Daily News	Edward R. Murrow
Readers Digest	Financial World
	Changing Times
	Consumers Union

17. Indicate below types of community problems on which you actively worked with other people during the past year.

Traffic	x	Education	x	Delinquency	x
Parking	x	Sanitation & Health	x	Police or Fire Protection	x
Zoning	x	Welfare	x	Recreation	x
Housing	x

Describe the type of work which you did, with an estimate of time spent, as well as results accomplished by the group with which you worked:

As president of Chamber of Commerce and Director, Past President and Board Member of Kiwanis.

Resulting in an active program of work for Kiwanis, water supply for Anadarko and surrounding community, and completed road building program for community, completed building for city schools, most of my free time the last year.

18. After considering your answers to these questions describe fully what you consider to be the most important personal contribution you made to your community this past year.

Work with the boys and girls of the community:

1. Vocational Guidance, Chairman for Dist. 10 Kiwanis Club.
2. Have taught Distributive Education students for high school when teacher was absent.
3. Three D.E. students now in store
4. Coach 4H Club Meat Judging Team.
5. Local and County F.F.A. Stock Shows.
6. Have been Boy Scout Master.
7. Advisory Council of DeMolay.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FOOD CHAINS
BETTER LIVING at LOWER COST PRODUCER FOOD CHAIN CONSUMER ★ COOPERATION ★
The American Way

The National Association of Food Chains
1025 Connecticut Ave., N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

TO Hugh A. Rundell

FROM Edward R. Murrow's office

Regarding your attached letter, we never received the certificate and return envelope.

Rundell, Hugh A.

May 29, 1958

Dear Professor Rundell:

Thank you for your cordial letter. As you requested, I am returning the certificate duly signed.

I heard of the success of the Awards Banquet and am sorry that I could not be there to enjoy it with all of you.

Sincerely yours,

Professor Hugh A. Rundell
Radio Station KWSC
Pullman, Washington

mcc
enc.

RADIO STATION
KWSC
OWNED AND OPERATED BY
THE STATE COLLEGE OF WASHINGTON
PULLMAN, WASHINGTON

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

The award given each year in your name here at the State College of Washington has been changed in form to some extent this year. As you see, there is a blank for your signature on the enclosed certificate. We have never done this before, and did so this year without consulting you in advance. I hope the idea meets with your approval, and that you will be good enough to sign the certificate on the blank line near the NCRG key and send it back to me. A return envelope is also enclosed.

Our awards banquet this year was quite an affair, run in conjunction with the annual Spring meeting of the Washington State Association of Broadcasters, and with Dr. Stanton as the featured speaker. Dr. Stanton also, as you know, presented the Edward R. Murrow Award to Ben Cook.

Your signature will make the award much more meaningful to Ben and significant to all those to whom he may wish to display it in later years.

Sincerely,

Hugh A. Rundell

Hugh A. Rundell
Asst. Prof. Speech

May 19, 1958

Dear Professor Rundell:

Today we received your second letter to us along with the certificate and return envelope, however, we do not have your original letter to us. We sent that back to you about a week ago explaining that we hadn't either the envelope or certificate.

We are sorry for the confusion, but would you be so kind and send us a copy of your original letter explaining the matter. We will keep the certificate and envelope.

Sincerely,

MARY CECCHINI

RADIO STATION

KWSC

Hold

PULLMAN, WASHINGTON

OWNED AND OPERATED BY
THE STATE COLLEGE OF WASHINGTON

5000 WATTS - 1250 KC

15 May 58

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I recently sent you a copy of a certificate for your signature, enclosed in a registered envelope with a stamped return envelope and a letter explaining the matter. Today I have received the letter with a note attached saying the certificate and the return envelope were never received. Actually the certificate and the return envelope were in the same package.

At any rate, I have another copy, and am sending it through. It won't be the certificate Mr. Stanton presented to Ben Cook, but Ben will never know the difference.

Many thanks for your attention to the matter.

Sincerely,

Hugh A. Rundell
Asst. Prof. Speech

HR/br

Ck to See if

THE EDWARD R. MURROW AWARD

Presented March 29, 1958, by the National Collegiate Radio - Television Guild to in recognition of his outstanding contribution to Radio and Television at the State College of Washington.

BEN BURTON COOK

John Gilleland
President, NCRTG

Director of Information, WSC

if's letter on it

CRTG

, WSC

RADIO STATION
KWSC
OWNED AND OPERATED BY
THE STATE COLLEGE OF WASHINGTON
PULLMAN, WASHINGTON

15 May 58

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I recently sent you a copy of a certificate for your signature, enclosed in a registered envelope with a stamped return envelope and a letter explaining the matter. Today I have received the letter with a note attached saying the certificate and the return envelope were never received. Actually the certificate and the return envelope were in the same package.

At any rate, I have another copy, and am sending it through. It won't be the certificate Mr. Stanton presented to Ben Cook, but Ben will never know the difference.

Many thanks for your attention to the matter.

Sincerely,

Hugh A. Rundell
Asst. Prof. Speech

HR/br

EDWARD R. MURROW
485 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

May 19, 1958

Dear Professor Rundell:

Today we received your second letter to us along with the certificate and return envelope, however, we do not have your original letter to us. We sent that back to you about a week ago explaining that we hadn't either the envelope or certificate.

We are sorry for the confusion, but would you be so kind and send us a copy of your original letter explaining the matter. We will keep the certificate and envelope.

Sincerely,

Mary Cecchini

MARY CECCHINI

Rundle, J. B.

February 25, 1958

Dear Mr. Rundle:

Please forgive the delay in answering your cordial letter of January 31. I was out of the city for a couple of weeks.

I am greatly tempted by your very kind invitation to spend a week salmon fishing in the Canadian North Woods next June. Unhappily, as before, my schedule makes it impossible for me to get away at that time. I am extremely sorry about this because I know what a very pleasant trip it would be.

Thank you again for asking me.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. J. B. Rundle
401 Broadway
New York 13, New York

mcc

J. B. RUNDLE

January 31, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Morrow
385 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Morrow,

So enthusiastic was your response to our invitation last year to spend a week as our guest salmon fishing in the Canadian North Woods that I would like to extend a similar invitation to you for this June - specifically the week of June 15th to the 21st.

A copy of my last year's letter to you is enclosed, which I am sure will re-enlighten you on the nature of our invitation. If you could come between the dates suggested, I believe we could again offer you the facilities of one of our client's planes to fly you from New York to within twenty-five miles of our camp.

I know you will realize that arranging for the visits of some twenty guests covering a period of five weeks, so that each party will represent a highly congenial group, is not an easy task; so an early indication of whether you might or might not like to join us this year would be very much appreciated.

Sincerely,

Jack B. Rundle

J. B. Rundle

JBR/gs

Enclosure

Rundle, JB

J. B. RUNDLE

April 23, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow,

It was nice to learn from your letter of April 18th of your apparent deep interest in the north woods. We shall miss, of course, not having you at the Turnip Patch with us this spring. However, I am sure there will be other years when we will have an opportunity to invite you again, at which time I hope it will be possible for you to come.

Sincerely,

Jack Rundle

J. B. Rundle

JBR/gs

Rundle, Jack

April 18, 1957

Dear Mr. Rundle:

I hope you will forgive the delay in answering your gracious letter of March 27th. My first disposition was to send you a wire of acceptance immediately before you had an opportunity to change your mind. The fact of the matter is that I have been trying to juggle my schedule in order to accept.

I have been out of town for the past few weeks, and unhappily I have no alternative but to decline what is one of the most tempting invitations I have ever received. There is no way I can adjust my commitments in June to join you. I am deeply disappointed and grateful to you for the invitation.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Jack B. Rundle
J. B. Rundle, Inc.
401 Broadway
New York 13, New York

rh

J. B. Rundle
INCORPORATED
ADVERTISING
401 Broadway New York 13, N.Y.
Telephone Digby 9-1730

March 27, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Morrow
385 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Morrow:

You have given me so much personal enjoyment over the years through your many and varied broadcasts, that I would like to provide some small measure of enjoyment for you in return if you will accept.

We happen to maintain a salmon fishing camp in Canada, primarily for the purpose of entertaining some of our clients. During the second week of June this year - June 9th to the 15th - one of our best fishing periods, we have an opening for two additional guests, and I would like to invite you and perhaps some friend who would be particularly congenial to you, to join me during that period in the North Woods.

Ours is an entirely private camp located on the North West branch of the Miramichi River in New Brunswick. We not only control about one and one third miles of this branch of the river which includes two fine salmon pools, but have about seven miles of open water above our camp, and ten miles below which we are privileged to run in canoes and fish.

While our camp is located three miles in the woods from our nearest neighbor, your experience there, I believe you would describe as roughing it in comfort.

As our present plans stand, I believe we could arrange to have you flown to within thirty miles of our location in a new twin engine Beachcraft plane, which is owned by one of our clients, and which will be coming up at this time to bring back some of their executives. The plane is a cabin type, and carries two extremely competent pilots. Your return to the city could be accomplished by an overnight train ride to Montreal, and a commercial plane from there to New York.

Our only other guests in camp at this particular time will probably be two prominent American surgeons who frequently fish with us - Dr. Edward Spaeth, Senior Chief of the Wills Eye Hospital in Philadelphia, and Dr. Bill Watson, Chief of the thorax division of the Memorial Hospital here in New York. Both are extremely fine gentlemen and great sportsmen. With such companionship I am sure you will be able to completely isolate yourself from business and your other every day activities.

We have been fortunate in being able to license exclusively for two days of this particular week one of New Brunswick governments own pools. This will greatly supplement our own facilities, and should insure our catching a reasonable number of salmon.

I would be very pleased to show you some amateur movies of our fishing up there if you would like to see them.

Sincerely,

Jack Rundle

J. B. Rundle

JBR:gs

Rundquist, George E.

April 7, 1958

Dear Mr. Rundquist:

I have your letter of March 25th.

It was nice of you to send me the text of Mr. Dilliard's address at your March 1st Annual Luncheon.

I appreciate your taking the time and trouble to write me about it.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. George E. Rundquist
New York Civil Liberties Union
170 Fifth Avenue
New York, New York

mac

NEW YORK CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

Affiliated with the American Civil Liberties Union

170 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 10, N. Y.
ORegon 5-5990

George E. Rundquist
Executive Director
Josephine Scheiber
Administrative Secretary

BOARD OF DIRECTORS
Charles A. Siepmann
Chairman
Victor S. Gettner
Vice-chairman
Robert M. Stein
Treasurer
Nanette Dembitz
Emanuel Redfield
Stephen C. Vladeck
Counsel
Sheldon Ackley
George Backer
Charles Ballon
Helen L. Buttenwieser
John A. Davis
John Henry Faulk
Osmond K. Fraenkel
Harold K. Guinzburg
Helen M. Harris
Louis Harris
James M. Hutchinson
Marie Jahoda
John Paul Jones
Florence M. Kelley
Mrs. Joseph P. Lash
Loula D. Lasker
Robert B. McKay
Joseph Monserrat
Newbold Morris
Albert J. Penner
Carl Rachlin
R. Lawrence Siegel
Robert C. Weaver
Jack B. Weinstein

NATIONAL OFFICERS
Board of Directors
Ernest Angell
Chairman
Ralph S. Brown, Jr.
Elmer Rice
Norman Thomas
Vice-chairmen
B. W. Huebsch
Treasurer
Katrina McCormick Barnes
Secretary
Edward J. Ennis
Osmond K. Fraenkel
Barent Ten Eyck
General Counsel
Patrick Murphy Malin
Executive Director

National Committee
E. B. MacNaughton
Chairman
Pearl S. Buck
Albert Sprague Coolidge
J. Frank Dobie
Lloyd K. Garrison
Frank P. Graham
Palmer Hoyt
Karl Menninger
Loren Miller
Morris H. Rubin
Lillian E. Smith
Vice-chairmen

Roger N. Baldwin
Adviser, International Work

March 25, 1958.

Tom, etc

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

You may have noted in the press that Irving Dilliard of the ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH was selected as the recipient of the 1958 Florina Lasker Civil Liberties Award which is administered by the New York Civil Liberties Union. We thought you would be interested in reading the text of Mr. Dilliard's address to our March 1 Annual Luncheon (and his reference to you on page 5).

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

George E. Rundquist

George E. Rundquist
Executive Director

enclosure

THE FLORINA LASKER CIVIL LIBERTIES AWARD

This Award of $1,000 was made possible by the trustees of the Florina Lasker Estate, from funds set up under the terms of her will for social, civic, scientific and educational purposes. It is given to the "individual, organization or group who, by word or action, has displayed consistent and outstanding courage and integrity in the defense of civil liberties, whether in the performance of duty or above and beyond the requirements of duty, and by so doing has made a significant and constructive contribution to civil liberties."

The recipient is selected by a national committee and the Award is presented at the Luncheon and Conference of the New York Civil Liberties Union.

The NYCLU is particularly proud that its Annual Luncheon and Conference has been chosen as the occasion for the presentation of the Awards. Miss Lasker was the first Chairman of the New York Civil Liberties Committee (predecessor of the NYCLU) from 1932 until her death in 1949, and also served as a member of the Board of Directors of the American Civil Liberties Union during that period. She was a selfless and devoted fighter for civil liberties and for the many other causes in which she was interested.

The first Award, in 1957, was presented to Roger N. Baldwin, founder of the ACLU and its Executive Director from 1920 to 1950.

Address By

IRVING DILLIARD
Editorial Writer, St. Louis Post-Dispatch
Recipient of the Second Florina Lasker Civil Liberties Award

Before The
New York Civil Liberties Union
(Annual Luncheon and Conference)
Hotel Roosevelt
New York City
March 1, 1958

"SOME DEBTS WE OWE"

Mr. Chairman and All Other Friends of the American
Bill of Rights:

From the time when I first was invited to be here today I have wondered what I might fittingly say. I am still uncertain about it. For if it is personally pleasant to be in my position on this occasion, it is for me also personally disturbing. I am grateful for the generous testimonial, but I am asking myself what it is that others think they know about me that I do not know about myself.

There was no question whatever as to the complete appropriateness of the first Florina Lasker Civil Liberties Award to last year's recipient. In all our vast country, no one else in more than 170,000,000 people was so deserving as Roger Baldwin. Throughout the 40 years since World War I, no one else has worked so hard, so persistently, so soundly and so effectively for the preservation of the constitutional rights of us all.

Because this pre-eminent qualification of Roger Baldwin comes under the heading of self-evident truths, you can understand, I am sure, my reservation about a ceremony which has me accepting the second Florina Lasker Award from his hands after a presentation in his words. It is, I assure you, an experience in which any momentary tendency toward individual gratification is quickly overcome with more sobering thoughts.

In saying this, I intend no criticism of the deliberations of the panel of distinguished judges. Certainly I do not criticize the thoughtful act through which Florina Lasker's name becomes associated with recognition each year of the defense of civil liberties whose benefits we all enjoy.

These freedoms of religion, speech and the press, of assembly and petition, and the related guaranties of habeas corpus and fair trial, are the most precious part of our heritage. Indeed they are the very heart and center of it. Take them away and we would be left with an empty shell, a governmental structure hollow on the inside.

Yet not a day passes that too many times in too many places in this free land of ours are these fundamental rights of every individual either ignored or put under attack. Sometimes the assault is deliberate and in the open. Frequently it is under cover. Many times it is not at all understood by those who press the attack in the mistaken belief that they are engaged in some worthy undertaking when the harm they do is greater by far than the good they hope to achieve.

In view of all the counter pressures to our civil liberties and the efforts at repression and suppression, we cannot do too much to encourage and develop stout libertarians to uphold, to apply and to enforce the freedoms which that wise group of early statesmen farseeingly wrote into our charter of government. We need these devotees of liberty in the schools and colleges and universities, in the pulpit, in business and industry, in the professions, including particularly the law, and we need them -- how we need them! -- in the press.

And so I am thankful for this opportunity that I have as one citizen among many to come here from out in the Mississippi Valley to meet with the New York and American Civil Liberties Unions on this impressive occasion. I consider that I stand here not so much to receive this most generous award as to answer to a muster call of guards from the outposts along the frontier.

The debts I owe to others for inspiration, guidance, encouragement and help are so numerous and so extensive that I can hardly do better, this occasion being what it is, than to declare a few of these obligations. My debt to Roger Baldwin I have already, although inadequately, acknowledged. I am indebted also to the brave men and women who joined him in his pioneering work in the early 1920s when I was in high school in Southern Illinois.

I am in debt to members of the bar who know that there is more to being a lawyer than handling suits and trying cases and drawing up wills and contracts. I refer to lawyers like Grenville Clark and Charles P. Curtis of New England; Ernest Angell, Morris Ernst, Lloyd K. Garrison, Leo Pfeffer, Osmond K. Fraenkel and Whitney North Seymour of New York; Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati; John Lord O'Brian, Thurman Arnold, Francis Biddle and Paul Porter of Washington; Walter T. Fisher, Laird Bell and Stephen A. Mitchell of Chicago; John Raeburn Green, Arthur J. Freund and Victor B. Harris of St. Louis; Ross L. Malone of New Mexico; and others across the country to A. L. Wirin at Los Angeles.

When I think of such members of the bar I think of their counterparts in the churches. For I am indebted to John Haynes Holmes, James Chamberlain Baker and Harry Emerson Fosdick; to William Scarlett, Charles Clayton Morrison and Reinhold Niebuhr; to John Paul Jones and G. Bromley Oxnam; to Frederick May Eliot, whose death only a few days ago is a loss to us all. As with the lawyers, I name only a few of the stalwarts of the pulpit. There are many more in a wide range of denominations.

I think, too, of the colleges and universities because my campus and classroom debts are limitless. From Erwin N. Griswold on the Atlantic Coast to Alexander Meiklejohn on the Pacific I list representatives of a veritable army to whom I am obligated. Here in the East are Robert K. Carr, Henry Steele Commager, Archibald MacLeish, Max Lerner, Howard Mumford Jones, Thomas I. Emerson, David Haber, Vern Countryman, Robert S. Lynd, Mark Van Doren, Robert MacIver, Allan Nevins, Corliss Lamont, Alvin Johnson, Horace M. Kallen, Frank P. Graham and Julian Boyd. In the Middle West, I am in debt to university men like John A. Lapp, Ralph F. Fuchs, Edward J. Sparling, George W. Goble, Clarence A. Berndahl, Curtis McDougall, Malcolm P. Sharp, C. Herman Pritchett, David Fellman, Howard K. Beale, Stuart A. Queen, Thomas H. Eliot and Benjamin E. Youngdahl. And there are many others in these sections and in the South, the West and the Far West, as for example J. Frank Dobie of Texas and John W. Caughey of California.

The dedicated group at Cornell University deserves a special tribute. Where the late Carl Becker daily breathed the spirit of the Declaration of Independence into young minds, a farseeing project known as "the Cornell Studies in Civil Liberty" has taken form under the direction of Robert E. Cushman and Milton R. Konvitz and the imprint of the Cornell University Press. Anyone who does not know about the 15 book-length studies now published in this series, through the assistance of the Rockefeller Foundation, has a rewarding discovery to make.

I wish I could feel that our editors and publishers as a whole were doing as well to protect and apply our heritage of freedom as are the teachers and scholars in our universities. There is a current concern in the newspaper offices over the extent to which secrecy has become the rule in the handling of the people's business in Washington, at the state capitals, the city halls and school boards.

But the press could not ignore this spreading curtain of official concealment without forfeiting its responsibility to guard freedom of the press. Too many times news columns and editorial pages both have looked the other way when rights of an individual citizen have been ruthlessly trampled by some officer of government more suited to a dictatorship than to the democracy of Jefferson and Madison, of Lincoln and Wilson and Roosevelt, of John Peter Altgeld and Brand Whitlock and George W. Norris.

Although the number seems to me to be dwindling, there are many editors and editorial writers who care whether the Bill of Rights is lived up to in everyday life. We are all indebted to them -- to such alert keepers of the watchtowers as Alan Barth of the Washington Post, John B. Oakes of the New York Times, James A. Wechsler of the New York Post, William T. Evjue of the Madison Capital Times, Barry Bingham of the Louisville Courier-Journal, Lindsay Hoben of the Milwaukee

Journal, Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution, Harry Ashmore of the Arkansas Gazette, Palmer Hoyt of the Denver Post, Walter P. Jones of the Sacramento Bee, and the Gitts of the Gazette and Daily in York, Pennsylvania. There are others but these are outstanding. I include columnists like Thomas Stokes, Marquis Childs and Murray Kempton. Gardner Cowles with a magazine that comes out twice a month does much more for civil liberties than many an editor whose newspaper comes out every day.

We are in debt to a small company of cartoonists -- to Fitzpatrick and Herblock, to Burck and Partymiller and not too many more who portray the great tests in civil liberties cases in stirring, commanding pictures worth many words. The lamps of free journalism set burning by Pulitzer and Greeley and Bowles, by Scripps and Villard and McClatchy, still light the way for young journalists. And if we are indebted, as we assuredly are, to those who care among newspaper writers, so are we in debt to the Murrows and Morgans and Sevareids of broadcasting and telecasting.

The world of business and industry has its leaders who care -- businessmen of whom Paul Hoffman and Ernest B. MacNaughton are representative. One of the letters I will remember longest, which came to me after the announcement of this award, was from Milford Bohm, president of a small business. He wrote that he had been a member of the American Civil Liberties Union for many years. His letter made me realize how much it can mean to a business man to be a partner in the work of protecting the rights of all Americans.

If I have made it appear that I see our indebtedness solely in terms of the courage and industry and perseverance of the male of the species, let me correct that now. We are all in debt to such women as Dorothy Dunbar Bromley and Pearl Buck, to Dorothy Kenyon and Sarah Gibson Blanding, to Catherine Drinker Bowen and Millicent McIntosh -- to select only a half dozen.

I mentioned a moment ago some of the Presidents to whom we owe so much -- Jefferson, Madison and other architects of our free way of life. We do not often think of U.S. Grant as one who contributed -- other than as a military commander who helped preserve the Union by force of arms -- to this heritage. Yet Grant made one of the most significant addresses on civil liberty in the history of the presidency. It contained a passage with special relevance for our own times and we make no mistake in acknowledging our indebtedness to the man who spoke it. Addressing the 1875 convention of the Army of the Tennessee in Des Moines, President Grant said:

> Encourage free schools and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither the state nor the nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the church and the state forever separate. . .

These straightforward, unequivocal words of Grant would bear repeating today on a national television hookup by Grant's successor soldier President. For they come to grips unhesitatingly with a problem already serious, with many ramifications -- a problem that will grow worse unless we grasp it as firmly and frankly and honestly as Grant did.

Indeed Grant cared so strongly about this issue that rather than rest on the comprehensive prohibition of tax support for religion to be found in the First Amendment and carried over into the Fourteenth Amendment, he urged that there be written into the Constitution a specific prohibition against the use of public funds for any sectarian education. It is amazing that the gruff soldier, short on the usual qualifications for statesmanship, should have looked so perceptively more than three-quarters of a century ahead to foresee one of the rising problems of our own day.

But if the present occupant of the White House himself has touched civil liberties chiefly as a preserver of law and order, as at Little Rock, he has profoundly affected the state of our freedoms through his appointments to the Supreme Court. Although we can be sure that President Eisenhower had no intention of moving the Supreme Court so far from the generally negative record shaped by the Truman Supreme Court appointments, the results of the Eisenhower nominations have been phenomenal. Whatever else we may think of the present Administration in Washington, we all may be deeply grateful for this.

What President Eisenhower has done for the Supreme Court needs to be seen in contrast with what his predecessor did. For paradoxically, Harry S. Truman, who himself believes intensely in equal rights and fair dealings for all, placed on the Supreme Court four Justices with relatively less interest in civil liberties issues than the Justices later appointed by President Eisenhower.

This is one of the most ironical contrasts in United States history. And yet we may well wonder whether either of the Presidents who are parties to it realizes the strange part he has played in creating these wide swings in the civil liberties record of the Supreme Court.

A brief account of the chief justiceship over the last quarter century will serve to illustrate. President Roosevelt elevated Harlan F. Stone to succeed Charles Evans Hughes in 1941. Chief Justice Hughes had compiled an outstanding record in free press, free speech and other civil liberties cases. Chief Justice Stone was, if anything, even more devoted to the rights of the individual citizen.

When Chief Justice Stone died in 1946, President Truman named Fred M. Vinson. Chief Justice Vinson made a virtual practice of deciding against the citizen in civil liberties cases in which the Supreme Court divided. From this standpoint, the record of Harry Truman's Chief Justice was the worst in history. With the close of the Vinson tenure in 1953 and the appointment by President Eisenhower of Gov. Earl Warren of California, a most gratifying change came over the outlook of the chief justiceship. The difference between the present Supreme Court and its predecessor bench of the Truman era is the difference between night and day.

The first change was that the Warren Supreme Court began to hear many civil liberties cases that the Vinson Court would not even accept for argument. As long as those unshakeable libertarians Justices Murphy and Rutledge were on the high bench, their votes joined with those of stanch Justices Black and Douglas were sufficient to require the Supreme Court to hear civil liberties cases which this phalanx of four felt were entitled to Supreme Court review.

But after death took Justices Murphy and Rutledge and President Truman replaced them with Justices Clark and Minton, many urgent civil liberties cases were refused review because only Justices Black and Douglas voted to hear them. This situation lasted to the end of the Vinson era. Between failure to hear many civil liberties tests and deciding against civil liberties litigants who did manage to get their cases heard, the Supreme Court, as reconstituted by the Truman appointments, wrote a bleak record for the Bill of Rights.

This was strikingly changed after the Eisenhower appointments, Justices Harlan, Brennan and Whittaker, in addition to Chief Justice Warren. For now only two of the four Eisenhower appointees need to join Justices Black and Douglas to require the Supreme Court to hear civil liberties cases of kinds so frequently rejected in the Vinson years. The record indicates that there is now a new phalanx of four to see that the civil liberties litigant has his chance of being heard. These would be Chief Justice Warren and Justices Black, Douglas and Brennan, with others joining them from time to time.

I am sure you join me in gratitude for the two decades of service of Justice Black, for the 18 years of Justice Douglas and for the many ringing blows of these steadfast jurists in free speech and related First Amendment cases. Whether in the majority or in dissent, they have been unmoved by the changing winds that have turned the weather vane first one way and then another.

We all are deeply in debt to the late Justice Jackson for his series of brilliant as well as strong opinions in the religious freedom cases. "This freedom," as he wrote in the New Jersey pupils' bus fare case, "was first in the Bill of Rights because it was first in the forefathers' minds; it was set forth in absolute terms, and its strength is its rigidity. It was intended not only to keep the states' hands out of religion, but to keep religion's hands off the state, and, above all, to keep bitter religious controversy out of public life by denying to every denomination any advantage from getting control of public policy or the public purse."

As I have indicated, I regard this matter of such importance that I might better have spent my time here reading to you extracts from Justice Jackson's opinions on freedom of religion. They are worthy of reprinting in a paperback available at every corner drug store.

It is not for me to anticipate the subject of the panel that is to follow, but I learned just 30 years ago the wisdom and power of Supreme Court dissents which, losing in the instant case, appeals to the future. I learned this in the clarion calls of Justices Holmes and Brandeis in the wiretapping case of Olmstead vs. U. S. I am still thankful that the veteran of Bull Run and Falls Bluff and Antietam spoke these words:

> It is desirable that criminals should be detected, and to that end all available evidence should be used. It is also desirable that the Government should not itself foster and pay for other crimes, when they are the means by which the evidence is to be obtained. If it pays its officers for having got evidence by crime, I do not see why it may not as well pay them for getting it the same way, and I can attach no importance to protestations of disapproval if it knowingly accepts and pays and announces that in future it will pay for the fruits. We have to choose, and for my part I think it less evil that some criminals should escape than that the Government should play an ignoble part.

And how can any one of us not be indebted to Justice Brandeis for his lesson in public morals in the same wiretapping case? He said:

> Decency, security and liberty alike demand that government officials shall be subjected to the same rules of conduct that are commands to the citizen. In a government of laws, existence of the government will be imperilled if it fails to observe the law scrupulously. Our Government is the potent, the omnipresent teacher. For good or for ill, it teaches the whole people by its example. Crime is contagious. If the Government becomes a lawbreaker, it breeds contempt for law; it invites every man to become a law unto himself; it invites anarchy. To declare that in the administration of the criminal law the end justifies the means --to declare that Government may commit crimes in order to secure the conviction of a private criminal--would bring terrible retribution. Against that pernicious doctrine this Court should resolutely set its face.

But let us return to the present Supreme Court, and as we do so remind ourselves that it can split by the hairline margin of 5 to 4 just as predecessor courts have done. For there are times when we are in debt to the Justice who narrowly tips the scales. Just such a one-judge majority came in the recently decided case of Willie B. Moore vs. Michigan. Twenty years ago Willie Moore was a 17-year-old Negro youth of limited education and mental capacity. He did not have the benefit of legal counsel at the time of his plea of guilty and sentence on a murder charge. Notwithstanding the clear requirement of the Sixth Amendment that the criminally accused "shall have the assistance of counsel for his defense," Willie Moore was sent to solitary confinement at hard labor for life. Twelve years later he learned for the first time that he had trial rights that should have been applied at the time of his arrest and incarceration. He then filed a delayed motion for a new trial.

Justices Burton, Frankfurter, Clark and Harlan held that Willie Moore, at the age of 17 and under pressure, intelligently and understandingly had waived his right to counsel. Justice Brennan, joined by Chief Justice Warren and Justices Black and Douglas, took the opposite view. They said that the threats of bodily harm at the hands of a possible mob, as raised by the sheriff to Willie Moore while the youth was held in jail caused the accused to fear injury if not death. These circumstances, so they believed, made it impossible for Willie Moore to waive his right to counsel intelligently and understandingly.

With these four Justices on one side and four others on the opposite side, the newest Supreme Court member, with less than a year of service, Justice Whittaker, in effect decided the issue. He joined two Eisenhower appointees, Warren and Brennan, and two Roosevelt appointees, Black and Douglas, to bring the decision down narrowly 5 to 4 on the side of Willie Moore.

In my opinion, we are much indebted for this crucial vote by the first Supreme Court Justice ever nominated from the State of Missouri. For had Justice Whittaker not voted with Chief Justice Warren and Justices Black, Douglas and Brennan, the present Supreme Court would have written a decision against the application of this basic Bill of Rights guarantee -- the provision of counsel for those criminally accused.

Had that been the decision, it could not have been reconciled with the late Justice Sutherland's landmark ruling in the case of Powell vs. Alabama. That was, as you will remember, the decision more than a quarter century ago that caused a new trial for the Scottsboro defendants on the grounds that fair trial rights had not been protected adequately. As Justice Sutherland summarized the issue, if it be true that men of intelligence and education need the assistance of counsel when charged with crime, "how much more is it of the ignorant and the illiterate or those of feeble intellect."

It is impossible now even to suggest the areas of our indebtedness to the Supreme Court to say nothing of our debts to individual Judges. There is the sheaf of truly statesmanly decisions of the closing weeks of the last term -- Watkins, Jencks, Yates, Sweezy, Service and others. There is of course the monumental public school desegregation decision of Chief Justice Warren's first term -- a decision which can be, if we apply it wisely and effectively, more powerful in the eyes of the world "than all the bombs."

Were I to draw up merely an extensive list I would want to note how much it meant when Justice Reed read the majority opinion in the Texas case of Lonnie Smith vs. Allwright in 1944. For that decision frankly re-examined earlier constitutional decisions on voting rights and came to the conclusion that "the right to vote in a primary, without discrimination by the state, like the right to vote in a general election, is a right secured by the Constitution.

Justice Frankfurter's moving dissent in the still inexplicable exclusion case of German war bride, Ellen Knauff; Justice Clark's historic opinion for a unanimous court in the New York "Miracle" censorship test -- which brought motion pictures under the free speech protection of the First Amendment -- to these and many other opinions I, as one citizen, feel personally indebted. They are, I believe, debts we all owe.

Now please allow me to place just one more obligation in the record of this occasion. For it we move to the spirited scene of the Senate where today serve many friends of civil liberties -- Javits of New York, Case of New Jersey, Douglas of Illinois, Humphrey of Minnesota, Cooper of Kentucky, Neuberger and Morse of Oregon, Smith of Maine, Kefauver of Tennessee, Proxmire of Wisconsin, to name only a few. And were we to look in on earlier sessions we could find such stalwarts as Lehman of New York, Costigan of Colorado, Cutting of New Mexico, the LaFollettes, father and son, and many others.

A Senator to whom we all are obligated just now for a little noticed public service is Thomas C. Hennings Jr., one of the most vigilant members of the Senate Judiciary Committee. It is the kind of work that Missouri's senior Senator so often does without benefit of large headlines or notice on the radio and television news reports.

What Senator Hennings did was to cause the Senate Judiciary Committee to return Senate bill 2646 to subcommittee for public hearings. This sounds procedural and it is. But it happens that Senate 2646 is the Jenner bill to cripple the Supreme Court and it was also procedural in the last session when the subcommittee, headed by Senator Eastland of Mississippi, recommended it unanimously for passage after a one-day hearing at which no opponent of the Jenner bill was heard.

What would the Jenner bill do? It would have Congress vindictively retaliate against the Supreme Court for some eight civil liberties decisions, including Watkins, Sweezy, Service, Nelson, Slochower, Schware and Cole. It would do so by barring the Supreme Court from appellate jurisdiction in five important fields, such as congressional investigations and government employment in loyalty investigations. It would block the Supreme Court out in cases involving teachers and lawyers caught in the same net.

A bill so revolutionary in character deserves searching scrutiny. Thanks to Senator Hennings' vigilance in returning it to the subcommittee, the Jenner proposals are now getting just that kind of attention. You know about the adverse judgment of the American Civil Liberties Union. And since the bill went back to the subcommittee, the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association has resolved against it. Attorney General Rogers has declared the opposition of the Department of Justice. The Chicago Daily Tribune, which so often has supported Senator Jenner's reactionary views, has declared against his wild court bill and soundly pointed out what a quagmire of confusion it would leave the law in if each Federal Court of Appeals ruled as it wished without a Supreme Court to decide among the conflicting positions on review. But before Senator Hennings took his stand for full public hearings, the Jenner bill was advancing too rapidly for safety.

The proponents of the Jenner bill and the many other pending attacks on the Supreme Court would have the American people believe that our high bench today is packed with irresponsible jurists of one reckless mind. Actually the nine jurists who make up our Supreme Court now are probably more representative than the members of any previous Supreme Court bench. Appointed over a period of more than 20 years, the present Justices owe their commissions to three Presidents -- four to Republican President Eisenhower, three to Democratic President Roosevelt and two to Democratic President Truman. Today the Supreme Court is more nearly balanced in terms of previous party affiliation than for many years. Four come from a previously Democratic party affiliation and four come from a previously Republican affiliation. One says he has never had a party affiliation. And it is worth noticing that one of those previously Democratic was appointed by a Republican President and one of those previously Republican was appointed by a Democratic President. I emphasize the word "previous" because we can expect Supreme Court appointees to cease being political partisans once they become Judges of our highest court.

A check shows that geographically the Supreme Court is more widely representative of the entire nation than at any time in its history, for the nine members come from nine states widely spread over the Union. Note how they encompass the nation -- Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Missouri, Alabama, Texas, California and the State of Washington. By sections this means that three are from the East, two from the Middle West, two from the South and two from the West, including one from the Far Northwest. The backgrounds also are widely representative. The Chief Justice is a former Governor and Attorney General of a great state. Two Justices are former Federal Court of Appeals Judges. One is a former State Supreme Court Judge. Two are former Senators. One is a former Attorney General of the United States. Two are former law professors -- one from Harvard, the other from Yale, both of whom have had legal practice and governmental experience at high levels.

The notion that such a group of men, so variously experienced and assembled, would be either deliberately opposed to or unthinkingly blind to the security of the American people is ridiculous on its face. Yet there are those among us, including the sponsors of the Jenner bill, who are trying to use that notion to erect spite walls around our highest tribunal.

The Supreme Court is not sacrosanct. The Justices who comprise it are not above criticism. They need public attention, interest and vigilance because their work in our federal system is just as important as the work of the President and of members of Congress. Time after time the Supreme Court has been the final protector of a basic civil liberty for some rank-and-file citizen. It is true that liberty must live in the hearts of the people and that if it dies there no courts can save it. But great judges on great courts can be a means to rally the cause of liberty and to keep it vigorous and vital in the nation.

And so we all owe a debt of gratitude to Senator Hennings for putting the spotlight of publicity on a bill whose enactment would vengefully destroy one of the Supreme Court's highest values.

There are other debts I would list were my time not at an end. Let me say finally that after this happy experience of meeting with you today, I shall go back to my outpost on the frontier deeply inspirited and freshly heartened. Our cause is right. Although there will be defeats along the way, we cannot fail.

#

Runyon M. R.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY, INC.

521 WEST 57th STREET, NEW YORK 19, N. Y. · PLAZA 7-2700

MEFFORD R. RUNYON
EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT

January 2, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

Thanks for sending me the script of your Christmas Eve broadcast. It was most moving and when Dave Schoenbrun came up with his suggestion of a cure for cancer I was just about overwhelmed. We are going to use this, effectively I hope, in a number of different ways.

I also enjoyed the Overseas Press Club luncheon as well as the Sunday afternoon crises broadcast. It is hard to keep so many developments and alarums in perspective.

Janet and I are taking a rather long holiday, starting on the tenth, in the form of a leisurely cruise and going as far away as Australia. We will be gone for nearly three months and on our return perhaps we will have a clearer concept of some things than we do now.

Hope you, Janet, and Casey have a most satisfactory year all through 1958.

Sincerely yours,

M. R. Runyon

Runkle, Prof. Scott F.

November 7, 1931

Dear Mr. Runkle:

Thank you for your letter of November 4th.

Since I no longer dispose of time on the network on which to treat the subject you suggest, I suggest that I cannot be of any help to you in your project. I am, therefore, passing your letter along to Mr. Sig Nicholson, Vice President in charge of News and Public Affairs.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Scott F. Runkle
227 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

mcs

send originals to Mr Nicholson

SORTHEIMER, RUNKLE & ASSOCIATES, INC.
527 Madison Avenue New York N.Y.
PLAZA 9-4211

November 4, 1952

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

John Crosby recently quoted you as saying [illegible] Radio and Television News Directors [illegible] is saying Hollywood were to run out of Indians, the programs [illegible] would be mangled beyond all recognition. [illegible] engagers soul with a small budget might [illegible] documentary telling what, in fact, we have done and are still doing -- to the Indians in this country.

Our firm, which represents the largest [illegible] American Indians, would appreciate having your advice and possible assistance in bringing this [illegible] mentary. You are already familiar with us. I [illegible] our work for Puerto Rico. The Indians are a new [illegible] us, whom we have offered to assist [illegible] we feel that they deserve and need far more [illegible] they get. Yet we do not propose that a program [illegible] need of compassion alone -- the Indians are a fascinating as well as a deserving subject.

May I have the pleasure of calling on you to [illegible] thoughts on this subject?

Most sincerely,

Scott F. Runkle

SFR/m

Rusk, Howard

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY-BELLEVUE MEDICAL CENTER
OF NEW YORK UNIVERSITY
DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICAL MEDICINE AND REHABILITATION

INSTITUTE OF PHYSICAL MEDICINE AND REHABILITATION
400 EAST 34TH STREET
NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

MURRAY HILL 6-1842

July 15, 1959

My dear Ed:

I just wanted to let you know what a great success our Scarsdale Fourth of July turned out to be. I believe we have truly set a pattern that can be followed in the entire country.

Your generous contribution to the auction added not only materially but to the spirit of the day. I am attaching my column from last Sunday's New York Times which describes in detail the happenings.

Again, my gratitude.

Faithfully yours,

Howard A. Rusk, M.D.
Director

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS - TV, 485 Madison Ave.
New York, New York

Reprinted from The New York Times, Sunday, July 5, 1959.

A New Kind of Fourth

Scarsdale's Celebration Goes to Help Struggling Koreans Retain Freedom

By HOWARD A. RUSK, M.D.

Special to The New York Times.

SCARSDALE, N. Y., July 4—There was a new kind of Fourth of July celebration in Scarsdale There were no conventional rockets or Roman candles, for Scarsdale was celebrating under the slogan, "Independence — Everybody's declaring it—Scarsdale is sharing it!" This year the town saluted our stalwart ally in the Pacific—Korea—in the continuing fight against Communist aggression.

Scarsdale for years has had a traditional Fourth of July celebration, but when the rockets and sparklers burned out, it was forgotten. This year, the entire community joined hands to demonstrate what a village can do for a country. The American Legion catered the food; the Boy and Girl Scouts took on scores of special projects; the school children organized a work day—washing cars, cutting lawns, baking cakes, etc.

The "Bundles for Britain" women reorganized and made hundreds of oriental housecoats that were sold almost before the booth opened. Thirty pictures painted by struggling Korean artists were eagerly bought by the community's art lovers who also had the privilege of visiting a special exhibit of art treasures from Korea.

The Garden Club members arranged a special flower show with arrangements in oriental style. A number of television personalities assisted at an auction, one of the high lights of the afternoon program in which distinguished citizens from all over the United States sent some personal possession to be auctioned for the benefit of Korea.

Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor sent the four-star swagger stick he carried in combat in Korea; Helen Hayes, an autographed scarf; Dr. Milton Eisenhower, a carved teakwood elephant; former President Hoover, Adlai Stevenson, Helen Keller, Lowell Thomas and many other authors sent autographed copies of their books, and scores of others sent gifts that in Scarsdale homes will be permanent reminders of this day.

Flags Side by Side

The celebration culminated in the always dramatic and moving retreat of the colors. A Korean flag handmade by the Girl Scouts waved side by side with the American flag. The Air Force Band played; a special choral group sang both national anthems; Korean students in native costumes danced and sang the folklore of their country. This was followed by an appropriate pageant with both American and Korean Independence Day flavor.

The proceeds of the day, as yet uncounted but unquestionably substantial, will go to the American Korean Foundation, a nonprofit, nonpolitical organization organized in 1952 to help the Koreans to help themselves. In the past seven years, the foundation has given more than $12,000,000 in money and goods in kind to Korea varying from buses, used locomotives, drugs, books and farm implements, to a boatload of farm animals for the hundreds of Korean 4-H clubs organized by the foundation.

The accomplishments have been little short of phenomenal in the field of health, education and welfare. More than 150 physicians have been brought to the United States for specialized training and are now the backbone of medical education and service in Korea.

A special program for education and control of tuberculosis, including a Korean Christmas Seal organization, has been established in Korea, for tuberculosis is their No. 1 health problem with more than 10 per cent of the population infected. Substantial sums have gone also into a program for education and treatment in Hansen's Disease (leprosy) for there are estimated to be more than 100,000 cases throughout the country. A national rehabilitation center has been established in Tongnae where disabled veterans are fitted with modern artificial limbs and braces and are trained to go back to the rice paddies and work again. The medical rehabilitation program has recently been expanded to include crippled children.

Makes Own Vaccines

Korea now makes all of its own vaccines, including smallpox, typhoid, diphtheria and tetanus, in a national laboratory manned by four young scientists trained in public health laboratories and pharmaceutical plants in the United States. Nursing schools have been established, orphanages rebuilt and staffed for modern service, most of them supplementing programs already established by American G. I.'s who have given more generously out of their own pockets to help these courageous people than any army in history.

Our forces in Korea have rebuilt schools, hospitals, orphanages, and sent millions of dollars in clothing and supplies. Korean orphans adopted by various military groups are even allowed to order personal articles from American mail-order catalogues, which they call "dream books."

This year's celebration in Scarsdale will mean many things to our Korean allies. Translated into fireworks, as well as dollars—in Korea $1 (or one giant sparkler) feeds and shelters an orphan for a day; $5 (or three large Roman candles) pays for a semester in primary school; $16 (or a jumbo skyrocket) provides a month's medical service for 120 disabled children; $50 (or ten minutes of assorted pyrotechnics), a sewing machine for a war widow, and $200 (or one fifteen-minute firework spectacular), a year's training for a student nurse.

Scarsdale has demonstrated the true spirit of President Eisenhower's People-to-People Program and has dramatically shown what a village can do for a country. In addition, the community had the most fun of any Fourth of July in its history.

If Scarsdale can do this, any United States village can. The ingredients are dedication, imagination and hard work. It is to be hoped that other communities will follow the same pattern not only for a loyal and courageous ally like Korea, but also for Poland, Hungary, the refugees in Hong Kong, Lebanon, Israel, Tibet or any place in the world where men are struggling for dignity, freedom and independence. The pattern has been established. The dividends in brotherhood and understanding are incalculable.

Russell, W.L.

WILLARD L. RUSSELL
ATTORNEY AT LAW
ADAMS PETROLEUM CENTER
HOUSTON 25, TEXAS

June 3, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am sending you a review copy of my book "Invincible Forces," which is to be published by Foundation Publishers on June 1, 1959. This is my second book on the RPC philosophy, a conflux of religion, psychology and common sense - three potent forces, invincible forces when rightly used.

My earlier book on this subject, "Peace and Power Within," was quite successful and I feel that much good has resulted from it. About 30,000 copies are in print. The first two editions were published by Foundation Publishers, an affiliate of the Russell Foundation, a non-profit, charitable and educational trust created by my wife and myself to help promote basic religion and true democracy and the methods and principles of victorious living set forth in both of the books. The third edition was published by Prentice-Hall, Inc.

The first edition of "Invincible Forces" is being published by Foundation Publishers primarily to facilitate certain special uses of the book, especially in the churches and the colleges. Subsequent editions, as in the case of the earlier book, will then probably be contracted to a commercial publisher.

The principles presented in "Invincible Forces" have been tested and proven in my own life and in the lives of many others, and the proof is convincing. Through these principles I have been able, despite physical handicaps, to achieve what I have in law, ranching and business and in the still more important business of living. I know what the principles have done for me and I know they can do as much, and more, for others. That is my main reason for writing the book.

For some years I have been writing and lecturing in colleges and elsewhere to help people make the most of their lives. But during the past few years, as I have stated in the book, I have added to my work a new and potent emphasis. It won't do much good to tell people how to make the most of their lives unless they can keep their lives - and keep them free. For if we can't keep our lives free, they won't be worth keeping at all. We must develop at once a strong, virile central program of anti-communism and human betterment. And the individual must help to build that program. This is another vital subject that is treated in a timely and provocative manner in "Invincible Forces."

Sincerely yours,

Willard Russell

WLR/ca

Rush, Dr Howard

May 20, 1959

Dear Howard:

Thank you for your letter of May 7th.

I will gladly contribute something to the Independence Day auction in Scarsdale. I am mailing a couple of record albums to the address you gave.

Sincerely yours,

Dr. Howard Rush
Post Office Box 336
Scarsdale, New York

mcc

Sent 2 albums 6/23/59
M.C.

The New York Times
Times Square

May 7, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS-TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Re: Your sharing in America's most purposeful July 4th, 1959 celebration

Dear Ed:

I'm writing to ask you for a contribution. Not money - but something that no one else but you can give.

To start at the beginning, this year our town of Scarsdale has decided to inject the true spirit of Independence Day into our local celebration.

As our slogan expresses it:

"Independence...Everyone's declaring it...Scarsdale's sharing it!"

We're sharing our independence with a country that's in danger of losing it - Korea, courageous, war-torn little nation, struggling to maintain a beachhead for the Free World, at the doorstep of Red China.

One of the day's main events will be an auction. We're inviting distinguished citizen's to donate personal items that may mean little to them, but because of their reputations, will mean much to the general public, and will bring a substantial sum to the cause of Independence.

Won't you dig up something the public thinks of when it thinks of you - a book, a pipe, a garment, a citation, a tool of your "trade"? If it's initialed, or autographed, that would be wonderful. Anyway, just send it to us, with a note that will make it authentic, and treasured. The donors' names will be widely publicized in advance, and each item will be individually auctioned.

If you're near Scarsdale on the Fourth, do drop in on us and see our Korean pageant, our play: "The Devil and Daniel Webster", our military retreat and band concert, and our many other games and features.

I'm sure it'll do your heart good to watch your many admirers bidding for the right to help Freedom survive - in your name!

Sincerely,

Howard A. Rusk, MD

HAR/fw

P.S. Please Mail to: P.O. Box 336, Scarsdale, N.Y.

Since 1882
Stardrill-Keystone COMPANY

AMERICA'S MOST DEPENDABLE CABLE TOOL & ROTARY DRILLING MACHINERY

MAIN OFFICE: BEAVER FALLS, PENNSYLVANIA • TELEPHONE 69
Tool Plant: Acme Fishing Tool Co. • Parkersburg, W. Va.

HAROLD J. RUTTENBERG
PRESIDENT

April 30, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, New York

Dear Ed Murrow:

I am sending along a copy of a critical analysis I am delivering next week on the current steel-wage negotiations in the event that you might find something of interest in it in connection with your next treatment of these negotiations.

Sincerely,

Harold J. Ruttenberg
President

HJR:ls
Encl.

CABLE ADDRESS
"STARDRILL"

• BRANCH PLANTS—CHANUTE, KAN. • PORTLAND, ORE. • ARLINGTON, N. J. •

PUBLIC RELEASE: May 7, 1959, 9:00 A.M. Pacific Coast Time

A speech on "Leadership In Steel" by Harold J. Ruttenberg, President of the Stardrill-Keystone Company, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and former Vice President of the Portsmouth Steel Corporation and former Research Director of the United Steelworkers of America.

To be delivered at nine o'clock A.M., Pacific Coast Time, on Thursday, May 7, at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, before the annual conference of the Personnel and Industrial Relations Association of Southern California.

ANNUAL WAGE

"Today the steelworkers do not need an increase in wage rates nearly as much as they need steady jobs with 52 regular pay checks a year," Mr. Ruttenberg declared.

"The proposed wage increase for which the steel union leaders are now threatening to strike in no way will remove the steelworkers' heads from the guillotine of unemployment," he said.

"What the steelworkers need more than higher wages is full-time work, and steady pay, the year around."

Mr. Ruttenberg predicted that the annual wage is coming. "The commercial practice of 'buy now and pay later' is one of the irresistible forces that will compel the steel industry leaders to advance an annual wage system," he said.

Ruttenberg criticized David J. McDonald, President of the United Steelworkers of America, for "sidetracking the dynamic concept of the annual wage."

"There is a mutuality of interest between the steel union leaders and the leaders of the steel industry to free the necks of steelworkers from the guillotine of unemployment.

"The economic provisions of collective bargaining contracts have grown like Topsy. The time cannot long be delayed when industry and labor leaders will have to put into rational order the hodgepodge of economic benefits. They are closer to the annual wage than they realize," Mr. Ruttenberg concluded.

WELFARE CAPITALISM

"The labor leaders no longer have an industrial monopoly in the field of people leadership. The leaders of industry are no less interested in people, and they are in the process of shedding their old straitjacket concepts of free enterprise for the developing concepts of welfare capitalism," he observed.

"To earn a sustaining profit industry must operate on ninety percent-plus of capacity, and to accomplish this it must promote the welfare of everybody all of the time. This is the motivating force behind welfare capitalism," Mr. Ruttenberg contended.

INFLATION AND PRODUCTIVITY

He described "irresistible forces at work that are compelling the development of a system of compensation that ties wage rate increases, and all economic benefits, to a comprehensive measurement of actual productivity gains."

Ruttenberg criticized Roger Blough and Joe Block, Board Chairmen respectively of U. S. Steel and Inland Steel, and Dave McDonald for "staging a repeat performance of the debate that they have put on for the public in previous contract renewal years, namely:

"Resolved: Are steel wages the chicken or the egg?"

He said: "The steel industry and steel union will have to quit playing football with wage-price inflation, and create a workable productivity system for resolving their economic differences in the public interest."

"Wage-Rate increases should be tied to a comprehensive measurement of productivity. This will stimulate an increase in the rate of productivity in industry each year, and bring 'creeping inflation' or the chronic wage-price spiral to an end," Ruttenberg claimed.

"The best and fastest way to get a full measurement of productivity is to direct the attention of management and union negotiators in collective bargaining conferences to this basic problem." he said.

"I direct Dave McDonald's attention to this task. And I say to Roger Blough, Joe Block and the other steel company leaders that either you work out voluntarily with the union a productivity system for raising wages, or the Federal Government will do it for you." Ruttenberg said.

Ruttenberg pointed out that "both sides are violently opposed to the entire idea and principle of tying wages to productivity, although each gives lip service to the idea. And each produces statistics to serve its respective partisan position by selecting base periods that produce the desired statistical results on productivity."

"The unions want wage increases whether productivity goes up or not. The industry leaders want to hold wage increases down when productivity goes up too fast or too much." he observed.

Ruttenberg added: "Fortunately, irresistible forces are at work compelling the adoption of the principle of wages and prices being tied to productivity."

ADMINISTERED WAGE INCREASES

"Administered prices in steel rest on a supporting system of administered wage increases," Ruttenberg said.

"Not only are prices in this and other concentrated industries administered upwards in the face of slack demand, as in 1958, but as the Cost of Living Index goes up the steelworkers, and their fellow workers in a dozen other basic industries, automatically are administered a compensating wage increase." he observed.

"Dave McDonald has negotiated his steelworkers way out on the end of a weak limb. They are special privileged people, immune to inflation. Their wages are automatically raised everytime that prices go up. No longer are they suffering underdogs. While Dave McDonald argues that wage increases do not require compensating price increases, the fact is that he cannot stop prices from going up after he gets his members a wage raise. And he does not have to worry. His members' wages go up automatically with rising prices.

Ruttenberg added: "This is a good deal for those who have it, and while it lasts. It represents a very substantial vested interest in the status quo of collective bargaining. But its days are numbered, because it is in violent conflict with the public interest."

He continued: "Roger Blough and Joe Block cannot attack this vested interest of Dave McDonald, because in so doing they expose their own system of administered prices, under which their companies are able to raise their prices to protect them against higher costs.

"The net result is that the public pays. President Eisenhower and Senator Kefauver have each told Blough, Block and McDonald that they cannot expect the public to keep on paying indefinitely." Ruttenberg concluded.

"As the welfare-capitalism leaders retire the free-enterprise leaders of industry, the mantle of leadership in the field of collective bargaining will fall to these newer, bolder, and younger industry leaders.

"Their job, among other things, will be to get the labor leaders to return to the original purpose of the labor movement; namely, to promote the welfare of everybody and not just the select members of bargaining units," he said.

"The theme of my talk is that an understanding of the historic process in development is the "Key To Survival For The Leaders of Labor and Industry."

"Those leaders of labor unions and of corporations who do not comprehend the meaning of the current historical development, it seems clear to me, will be displaced by leaders who do," Ruttenberg ended.

F I N I S

LEADERSHIP IN STEEL

by

Harold J. Ruttenberg

May 7, 1959

The Personnel and Industrial Relations Association of Southern California has invited me to speak on "the importance of developing effective and responsible leadership in business and labor organizations.

1. -- "with emphasis placed upon recognizing the necessity for maintaining our free enterprise system,"

and to emphasize

2. -- "the importance of developing the kind of business and labor leadership that will be able to cope with present and future problems in labor-management relations,"

and to emphasize

3. -- "the vital necessity of instilling solidarity of purpose to overcome internal tensions such as labor strife."

I shall speak about business and labor leadership in general, with special attention to leadership in the basic steel industry today, because it is in steel where both the industry and labor leaders are currently up at bats.

First a word about myself.

For a dozen years from 1934 to 1946, I was in the steelworkers' union.

Since 1946 I successively have been an executive vice-president of a basic steel company, the owner-President of a machinery manufacturing company, and now the manager-President of that same company.

My deep concern with fundamentals compelled me to throw off the yoke of partisanship, and forced me to end my labor career in 1946 after a dozen years of devoted service to the nation's steelworkers.

While I have been on the other side of the fence during the last thirteen years, my uncompromising attention to fundamentals has prevented me from becoming a partisan for management or industry.

The yoke of partisanship is not for me. I cannot return to partisanship for the nation's steelworkers anymore than I can become a partisan for the steel industry.

Philip Murray, the late, great President of the United Steelworkers of America, defined my role when I resigned in June, 1946. He wrote that I work to "build up those fine constructive labor-management relations that ought to prevail in the American industry."

This has been my consistent motivation ever since.

I am vitally interested in the progressive development of both the basic steel industry and the people who make it tick.

These people -- the union leaders and steel management -- are being driven by the same forces toward unified concepts, because they have to make the industry tick for the benefit of everybody, not just themselves.

I am striving to formulate a unitary concept* that reconciles the practical politics of the union and management and of the politics between each of these power centers in steel. This requires the building of a hierarchy of power to which each must submit and within which each must carry out its special responsibilities. The form is a substantially altered collective bargaining contract that solves the problems of unemployment, inflation, and the other chronic causes of tension between labor and management.

* In this effort I am indebted to Lancelot Law Whyte, author of The Next Development In Man, Henry Holt & Company, 1948, and Every Man Looks Forward, ditto, and to Karl Bostrom, Vice President, Bostrom Manufacturing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, who first called my attention to the work of this brilliant British physicist.

My attitude toward the development of perpetually improving labor-management relations in industry, and in basic steel in particular, is not "A Plague On Both Your Houses."

It is: "God Bless Both Your Houses."

Irresistible forces have been at work for the last several decades of time to weld these two contending houses together into a joint house with:

1. A common purpose and objectives, and
2. A Mutually agreeable collective bargaining contract spelling out HOW each member of the Joint House of Labor and Management shall work to achieve the common purpose and to advance their common objectives.

Leadership is the key to the Joint House.

Wherein are the steel labor leaders and the leaders of the steel companies deficient and proficient?

There are two major components of leadership.

One is techniques. The other is content.

David J. McDonald, President of the United Steelworkers of America, has long since mastered the techniques of leadership. He speaks fluently, has an excellent television personality, is gifted with a natural flair for public attention, and has displayed a fairly good sense of timing. While the rating is high in leadership techniques, McDonald and his associate union leaders -- as I shall shortly discuss -- do not rate very high in leadership content. They have done very little new thinking in the last quarter of a century, and they suffer from an allergy to new ideas.

I am finding the steel company leaders much more receptive to newer ideas. They know that a collective bargaining contract that was formulated to meet the problems of the 1930s is inadequate in the 1960s.

The steel union leaders today are really quite a conservative crowd, and have a vital interest in preserving the status quo. But forces are at work -- as I shall attempt to show -- that will make them embrace some new ideas, as abruptly and as substantially as the leaders of the steel industry had to do back in the heyday of Franklin D. Roosevelt in the nineteen thirties.

The leaders of the steel companies do not rate as high as Dave McDonald and his associates on the techniques of leadership, but their rating on the content of leadership is rising above that of steel union leaders.

On the public platform -- in the daily press, over radio, and on the television picture tube -- the leaders of the steel firms are outclassed by Dave McDonald. He outtalks, outacts, and outperforms Roger Blough, Cliff Hood, Tom Patten, Ave Adams, and Joe Block, the leaders of U. S. Steel, Republic Steel, Jones and Laughlin, and Inland Steel who have been taking turns at engaging Dave McDonald in public debate.

It is not my purpose to lecture these Board Chairmen and Presidents of the key steel companies on the techniques of leadership. I have only one comment. It is encouraging to see them occasionally leave their paneled, private offices to appear on the public rostrum. Practice makes perfect, so that the more often that they publicly unveil themselves the more effective they will become.

It is unfortunate that so many of their public appearances come after Billion Dollar newspaper ads by Dave McDonald and invitations from United States Senators. Leadership is a 365-day-a-year job, and not a part-time task to be engaged in when collective bargaining contracts are being renegotiated and U. S. Senators are holding public hearings.

I consider myself a leader in thought and ideas, and I work at it day in and day out. In 1955 I advanced a practical program for an annual wage system of pay, and in 1958 I spelled out a program for tying wages to productivity. Both ideas have received widespread attention, and together provide the basis for modernizing collective bargaining contracts to meet the vastly changed conditions of the 1960s and the decades ahead.

Progress in the field of labor-management relations is dependent upon raising the content of leadership in both unions and industry.

Let us first analyze the forces at work that are welding together the houses of steel labor and steel management.

The purpose and objectives of the United Steelworkers of America and of United States Steel are in the process of merging together.

What is the basic purpose of Dave McDonald and the Steelworkers' Union? It is to promote the welfare of the union members and their families; to enrich the dignity of their labor; to increase their leisure time and enlarge their capacities to enjoy their lives as well as their work; and to help them achieve freedom from want and freedom from fear.

This basic purpose of the union was a radical program when it was conceived by the pioneer labor leaders over a hundred years ago. And it was a dynamic program a quarter of a century ago when Roosevelt and Congress gave the labor unions the necessary political and legal support to begin to impose it upon industry.

But during the past twenty-five years there has been a two-pronged development of the greatest significance affecting this program.

The union leaders have abandoned, sidetracked or neglected essential features of their original basic purpose.

At the same time, the leaders of industry have begun to incorporate the original basic purpose of the union into management's integrated social philosophy.

While Dave McDonald has been trimming down his union's original basic purpose as, for example, sidetracking the dynamic concept of the annual wage, the steel industry has been developing an integrated social philosophy for management that is embracing the concept of promoting the welfare of its employees and all of the essential features inherent in this concept.

This historic trend, as I see it, cannot be stopped. As management is perfecting its integrated social philosophy, the unions are standing still and backsliding on their program. This means that the initiative in labor-management relations is shifting from the labor leaders to the leaders of industry. In steel, management will be advancing the new ideas while Dave McDonald and his associates will be engaging in rearguard strikes to defend the status quo in which they have such a vested interest today.

The next development in collective bargaining will be management forcing upon the labor leaders the original basic union program from which the labor leaders have been retreating.

So much for the general statement of my case.

Let us proceed with two specific, emotionally-charged, current problems of collective bargaining that contain evidence in support of the thesis that the houses of labor and management are being welded together.

The first is chronic and recurrent unemployment. The second is inflation. I shall discuss each one within the framework of the historic development that I have described as being in process.

UNEMPLOYMENT

It will come as a shock and a surprise for Roger Blough of U. S. Steel, Joe Block of Inland Steel and the other steel industry leaders to learn that they will be advancing a program for the adoption of an annual wage. And Dave McDonald and his associates will be embarrassed to hear that they will be conducting a strike against the annual wage. But so be it. 1959 is not the year, but the year is not far away.

And the annual wage,- a system providing 52 regular, steady paychecks a year - will win out, because real, effective, consumer purchasing power can be raised faster and higher by providing assured incomes the year around, than by merely raising wage rates.

Today the steelworkers do not need an increase in wage rates nearly as much as they need steady jobs with 52 regular paychecks a year on which they can count, week in and week out.

Dave McDonald sold the steelworkers into ten to twenty additional years of fear of unemployment when he abandoned the dynamic concept of the Annual Wage, and accepted in its place the S.U.B. program -- supplemental private payments to public unemployment benefits -- which is merely another five-cent fringe increase.

The hollowness of the S.U.B. program has been painfully revealed during the 1957-58 Decession. And the inadequacy of the S.U.B.idea is exposed further by the unemployed steelworkers left in the wake of the current steel recovery.

The proposed wage increase for which the steel union leaders are now threatening to strike in no way will remove the steelworkers' heads from the guillotine of unemployment.

No matter how large a wage increase Dave McDonald wins in 1959 the sharp edges will not be dulled from "layoff" notices or "cut backs to three and four day week" announcements.

What the steelworkers need more than higher wages is full-time work and steady pay the year around.

A full years work for the average steelworker in 1959 -- on present wage rates -- adds up to an annual gross income of $7,608.64. And he does not have to work 52 forty-hour weeks to gross such annual earnings. He gets paid an average of $3.658 an hour for 2,080 hours, when he is employed a full year, but only has to work 1,944 hours, or less than 49 forty-hour weeks to earn $146.32 gross for 52 weeks a year. He averages two weeks paid vacation and seven paid holidays a year. These and other fringe benefits add up to $690.56 a year, or nine percent of gross annual income when fully employed.

The steelworkers themselves would settle for this annual income today. They need, and want, freedom from the fear of unemployment.

At the same time the leaders of the steel industry, and all other industries, are under a growing pressure to abolish chronic unemployment for three basic reasons:

1. -- The big steel using industries, like auto, housing and appliances, are compelled to sell a large portion of their finished products on time; for regular weekly or monthly installments, payable week in and month out, the whole year long. This commercial practice of "buy now and pay later" is one of the irresistible forces that will compel the steel industry leaders to advance an annual wage system.
2. -- The free enterprise system leaders have to solve the problem of chronic unemployment to enable them to sell their system to the uncommitted peoples of the world who are shopping for an economic system under which they can enjoy freedom from want and freedom from fear.
3. -- For the United States of America to win the economic war against the Soviets, its free enterprise leaders have to eliminate the waste of unemployment and partially utilized or idle industrial capacity, because the Soviets use all of their productive capacity all of the time.

There is a mutuality of interest between the steel union leaders and the leaders of the steel industry to free the necks of the steelworkers from the guillotine of unemployment. I have described all too briefly some of the irresistible economic and political forces that are at work welding Dave McDonald and Roger Blough into leaders of a joint house to promote the development of a system of annual pay for steelworkers.

I want to mention one more of these irresistible forces. It is welfare capitalism, because old engine Charley Wilson was right when he said, "For years I thought what was good for our country was good for General Motors, and vice versa."

The leaders of the steel industry and of the other segments of free enterprise have long since been unable to earn profits by exploiting workers. The only way that they can earn a sustaining profit is by operating their mines, mills and factories at ninety percent-plus of capacity, and to accomplish this they have to promote the welfare of everybody all of the time. This is the motivating force that is forging the integrated social philosophy of management, and is behind welfare capitalism.

The labor leaders no longer have an industrial monopoly in the field of people leadership. The leaders of industry are no less interested in people, and they are in the process of shedding their old straitjacket concepts of free enterprise for the developing concepts of welfare capitalism.

My generation is now beginning to take over the reins of leadership. During the next ten to twenty years the newer and younger leaders of industry increasingly will be preaching and practicing the following basic purpose for welfare capitalism:

> To promote the welfare of everybody; to enrich the dignity of man; to increase the leisure time of everybody and to enlarge human capacities to drink up and contribute to the developing American culture; to assist everybody to achieve and enjoy freedom from poverty of the body, the soul, and the mind; and to have freedom from fear.

The labor and industry leaders are closer to the annual wage than they realize. The economic provisions of collective bargaining contracts have grown like Topsy. The time cannot long be delayed when industry and labor leaders will have to put into rational order the hodgepodge of economic benefits contained in these collective bargaining agreements.

Over three years ago ("Pay By The Year," Harper's Magazine, December 1955) I proposed that all of economic provisions of the steel wage contract be rolled into one ball of wax, and out of them a Pay By The Year program be fashioned that, at the end of five years, would guarantee all employees with one or more years of seniority fifty-two full forty-hour weekly pay checks each year.

In 1962, or 1965 at the latest, steel management will have to advance a pay-by-the-year proposal that will tie all of the dollars-and-cents provisions of its wage contract together. This will require the union leaders to accept greater responsibilities which they -- like all defenders of a status quo -- can be expected to resist with a prolonged strike, because they have a vested interest in trying to perpetuate the obsolete, irrational hodgepodge of collective bargaining economic clauses that have been negotiated during the last quarter of a century.

But, with arms swinging, legs kicking, and voices shouting, Dave McDonald and his associates will be pulled into the nineteen sixties, just like Tom Girdlar, Ernie Wier, and Sewell Avery were pulled into the 1930s and 1940s by irresistible forces that are always at work bringing changes into a world resenting change, but a world unable to resist constantly, developing changes.

INFLATION

McDonald and Blough-Block and associates are currently staging a repear performance of the debate that they have put on for the public in previous contract renewal years, namely:

Resolved: Are steel wages the chicken or the egg?

Both the union and industry leaders in the steel industry have failed to develop a mutually acceptable formula for equitably distributing the proceeds of production between workers, owners, and consumers. But irresistible forces are at work that are compelling the development of a system of compensation that ties wage rate increases, and all economic benefits, to a comprehensive measurement of actual productivity gains.

McDonald found this out a few months ago when Senator Kefauver, A Democratic friend of labor, publicly told him that his union should confine its wage demands to the rise in productivity.

Blough-Block and associates learned this same hard truth a few weeks ago when President Eisenhower, a Republican friend of industry, publicly told the steel companies to settle with the union "in such a way that the price is not compelled to go up."

In 1959 McDonald and Blough-Block and associates again can squeeze by without coming to grips with the problem that both the President and Senator Kefauver have pointed up. But when the union is once more in a strong bargaining position, as it is likely to be in 1962, the steel industry and steel union will have to quit playing football with wage-price inflation, and create a workable productivity system for resolving their economic differences in the public interest.

Let us now look at the historical development of wage rate increases under collective bargaining in steel.

Administered prices in steel rest on a supporting system of administered wage increases.

Not only are prices in this and other concentrated industries administered upwards in the face of slack demand, as in 1958, but as the Consumer's Price Index, popularly miscalled the Cost of Living Index, goes up the steelworkers, and their fellow workers in a dozen other basic industries, automatically are administered a compensating wage increase.

Since 1956 steel wages have risen over sixty cents an hour. Seventeen cents, or 27% of this increase, resulted from the automatic cost-of-living wage increase clause. Steel first adopted this system of administered wage increases in 1956, but auto and other "administered-price" industries have had it for several years.

Last year auto extended it for three more years. This system of administered wage increases, which works even in the midst of widespread unemployment, is up for a three-year renewal at mid-year in steel.

The steel industry will agree to renew the automatic C of L increase clause, because it has become an integral part of its parallel system of administered prices. Steel's ability to raise prices even when demand is declining is an administered price system in which the steelworkers union has a vested interest. Because if the steel firms could not up their prices regardless of the level of demand, the steel union could not up wages no matter what the level of demand may be for workers.

The Achilles' heel in the union's program had been the fact that money wage increases secured for their members were depreciated, if not negated, by rising prices. After several rounds of such money wage increases and price rises in the Forties and Fifties, especially when union members had to strike for long periods, the wives and then the members themselves began to complain about the wooden nickels and tin dimes that their leaders were getting them.

So the union leaders decided to protect their members' money wage increases against the debilitating effects of higher prices and a constant increase in the cost of living by providing automatic cost-of-living increases in the bargaining contract.

Union members in the basic industries now enjoy the special privilege of having their wages insulated against the erosion of higher living costs. While every other American continues to be exposed to the ravages of rising prices, union members are now able to sustain their real income. Any price rises that follow their money wage increases no longer come out of their pockets. Their labor leaders have put the silver back in their wooden nickels and tin dimes.

Each time wage increases not justified by productivity are followed by price rises the unions are robbing and plundering those Americans who live on fixed incomes. By pursuing an unchanging collective bargaining program through rapidly changing decades, the labor unions have converted a socially and economically constructive program of collective bargaining into a razor-sharp instrument for robbing the retired, aged, widows and orphans, schoolteachers, scientists, and all the millions of other Americans who do not enjoy the privilege of automatic protection against increases in their cost of living.

On the other hand, the steel firms for years have insulated themselves against the debilitating effects of higher labor costs by raising factory prices -- irrespective of the demand -- and making them stick, i.e. through administered prices.

Let me hasten to emphasize that the mere elimination of the automatic cost-of-living wage increase clause is not the solution. There is no justice in denying union members insulation against rising prices, while their employers can insulate themselves against higher labor costs by arbitrarily increasing factory prices.

I do not believe that the companies and unions in the basic industries can for long sustain their positions of insulation against the debilitating effects of higher prices and increased wage costs, while the rest of the 175 million Americans are exposed to the ravaging effects of spiraling wages and prices.

Administered steel price increases, together with automatic C of L wage increases and enforced wage rate increases during depressed employment periods, are two sides of the same coin.

The whole coin should be recast.

Sumner H. Slichter, the Lamont University Professor at Harvard, believes that we have no choice except to live with this coin that he calls "creeping inflation." (The New York Times Magazine, March 8, 1959). I am not so pessimistic, since I helped in the casting of the coin and therefore believe that it can be recast.

Dr. Slichter stoically accepts the status quo. He says, "... slow inflation must be expected to continue more or less indefinitely (because of) ... the strong tendency for labor costs to rise faster than output per man-hour."

And he concludes his case by arguing that the only way wages "could be prevented from outrunning output per man-hour" is "if the bargaining power of unions were weakened and the bargaining power of employers strengthened by the maintenance of a fairly high rate of unemployment."

Dr. Slichter rejects this alternative, because "fostering unemployment in order to keep wages from outrunning productivity ... would mean retarding the growth of the economy."

He concludes that "the community must decide which it prefers ... maximum growth (or) ... stable prices."

I agree that our first objective is maximum growth. I reject the defeatist philosophy that "the conflict between maximum growth and stable prices is real." In fact, maximum growth can only be achieved by maximizing productivity.

When I was the Research Director of the Steelworkers' Union, and during the thirteen years since, I have proposed that the economic coin of collective bargaining be recast into a new mold.

Wage-rate increases should be tied to a comprehensive measurement of productivity. This will stimulate an increase in the rate of productivity in industry each year, and bring "creeping inflation" or the chronic wage-price spiral to an end.

I have been urging the leaders of industry to propose the following program to their employees and their unions, which I first detailed last year at a meeting of the National Industrial Conference Board (January 17, 1958) in New York.

PREAMBLE

We are continually interested in raising the real income of our employees, no less than you and your unions are interested in raising your real plane of living. We can only do this in the future by joining hands to increase productivity.

We are unable to increase productivity fast enough through automation alone. We are compelled to pass on as higher prices that portion of increased wage costs that cannot be absorbed through higher productivity. You are insulated against these compulsory price increases because your wages are increased automatically as the cost of living goes up. This places both of us in an untenable position with the other 175 million Americans. We, therefore, propose:

PROPOSAL

1. To pay higher wages for more production.

2. To allocate the maximum capital that our resources permit for the purchase and installation of equipment to increase production.

3. To provide the best management that we can develop to manage equipment, materials, and human physical and mental efforts to increase production.

4. To organize practical means through which all employees will be able to cooperate with management to increase production in such a way as to release the full inherent creativeness of every human being who is a member of our managerial and operating organizations.

5. To enlarge existing, and create new, training schools for the dual purpose of operating and maintaining new equipment at maximum production, and retraining for new positions those managerial and operating employees whose old positions have been replaced by new equipment or methods.

6. To negotiate with you, through your unions, a practical measurement of increased production so that we can pay productivity wage increases semiannually to the extent that production has been increased. This measurement of production shall give the proper weight to the components of increased production, namely:

   The physical and mental performance of employees.

   The investment of capital.

   The contributions of management through improved methods and practices and other managerial skills.

   The contributions of employees resulting from their cooperation with management to increase production.

   The effect of the volume of production or the percentage of capacity operations.

   The product mix.

   The effect of new materials and the quality of raw materials.

   The effect of increases or decreases in the amount and price of purchased goods and services.

7. To pay one-half of the semiannual productivity wage increases in direct wages and to place the other half in a separate fund to increase fringe benefits as shall be negotiated annually with your unions.

This proposal has the following objectives:

The objective for you (the employees) is to increase your real purchasing power, and to enable you to increase your earnings by increasing production.

The objective for us (the management) is to absorb wage increases through increased production, and to stabilize and/or lower the factory prices of our products.

The objective for our customers is to enable them to enjoy a portion of the benefits of increased production through higher quality and/or lower prices, as well as new products.

The objective for our stockholders is first to assure the rate of return that they now receive on their investment, and also to enable them in the future to enjoy a portion of the benefits of increased production through higher dividends.

The objective for all is to assure the equitable distribution of the proceeds of increased production to employees, management, customers and stockholders.

Your unions are misleading you and the public by the use of an outmoded measurement of productivity. Output per man-hour does not measure all of the components of productivity. Productivity reflects much more than just the performance of employees. Your unions should not claim all the benefits of increased productivity, as these benefits should also be distributed equitably to the stockholders who supply the capital, the managers who provide management, and the customers who support our business.

One of the biggest brakes on increased productivity in many departments of far too many mines, mills and plants is the pegging of production. And this practice is condoned, if not encouraged, by too many union representatives in far too many places. We recognize that management policies and actions are a factor in employees' pegging output at arbitrary levels. This is obviously among the first problems that will have to receive our joint attention under this proposal.

We shall approach the negotiation of the proposal with an open mind, and in a fair spirit of cooperation. But the one fundamental on which we must not compromise is that money wage increases shall be tied to increased production.

In the administration of this fundamental, we propose to give every employee the fullest opportunity to contribute toward higher productivity, so that he can earn more money by producing more goods.

We no longer accept the principle of increasing unionized employees' real incomes at the expense of the other 175 million Americans, who are not covered by collective bargaining. In this regard, we call your attention to the fact that today more Americans are living on salaries than on wages, and this trend toward more people on salaries is growing every year.

The heart of my proposal for a new program for collective bargaining is the measurement of the components of increased production. Man-hour output figures, which do not measure all of the components of productivity, are not enough. In my opinion, the best and fastest way to get a full measurement of productivity is to direct the attention of management and union negotiators in collective bargaining conferences to this basic problem.

I direct Dave McDonald's attention to this task. And I say to Roger Blough, Joe Block and the other steel company leaders that either you work out voluntarily with the union a productivity system for raising wages, or the Federal Government will do it for you.

The shocking fact is that a comprehensive measurement of productivity -- the effectiveness from year to year of the entire organization of a business -- exists, but neither side is prepared to use it. This is the annual profit and loss statement and the corporate balance sheet.

Collective bargaining negotiators will not use the corporate financial statement for two reasons. First, the union leaders and their members lack confidence in it because it is a unilateral document prepared solely by management.

But the second reason is more vital, since the leaders of industry are also opposed to using the corporate financial statement in the collective bargaining of wages.

Here is a comprehensive measurement of productivity that takes into account all factors of labor, management, raw material costs, capital investment, etc., but which both the union and industry leaders reject.

Why?

Both sides are violently opposed to the entire idea and principle of tying wages to productivity, although each gives lip service to the idea. And each produces statistics to serve its respective partisan position by selecting base periods that produce the desired statistical results on productivity.

The industry leaders argue that profits -- or ability to pay higher wages -- are irrelevant, except when a company does not have the necessary profits to pay higher wages. Then profits and ability to pay are relevant, because the company cannot afford to raise wages.

On the other side, the union leaders argue the very opposite. They claim that profits or ability to pay are irrelevant when a company lacks the ability to raise wages. The union leaders only claim that profits are relevant when they are high enough to pay higher wages.

Neither side is willing to have wages fluctuate with profits. And productivity and profits are measurements of the same thing, namely: the total effectiveness of the given business.

We therefore have two difficulties in adopting a productivity wage system into collective bargaining contracts. One is the technical problem of constructing a mutually acceptable comprehensive measurement of productivity. The other is the opposition to the principle and idea of productivity being the controlling factor in determining wage changes.

The unions want wage increases whether productivity goes up or not. The industry leaders want to hold wage increases down when productivity goes up too fast or too much.

Fortunatsly, irresistible forces are at work compelling the adoption of the principle of wages and prices being tied to productivity.

The union and industry leaders will voluntarily adopt this principle in collective bargaining, and work it out in practical terms. Or they will do it by Government and/or Congressional edict. But do it they will, and the time is not far distant.

Dave McDonald has negotiated his steelworkers way out on the end of a weak limb. They are special privileged people, immune to inflation. Their wages are automatically raised every time that prices go up. No longer are they suffering underdogs. While Dave McDonald argues that wage increases do not require compensating price increases, the fact is that he cannot stop prices from going up after he gets his members a wage raise. And he does not have to worry. His members' wages go up automatically with rising prices.

This is a good deal for those who have it, and while it lasts. It represents a very substantial vested interest in the status quo of collective bargaining. But its days are numbered, because it is in violent conflict with the public interest.

Roger Blough and Joe Block cannot attack this vested interest of Dave McDonald, because in so doing they expose their own system of administered prices, under which their companies are able to raise their prices to protect them against higher costs.

The net result is that the public pays. President Eisenhower and Senator Kefauver have each told Blough, Block and McDonald that they cannot expect the public to keep on paying indefinitely.

Both the union and industry leaders have argued back that the Government should keep hands off. Dave McDonald has been less polite, and told the Senator to "keep his nose out of my business."

In this intemperate display, McDonald has put his union in the position of saying, "The public be damned."

It is unbecoming a twentieth century labor leader to be mimicking the nineteenth century robber baron who first said, "The Public Be Damned."

On the other hand Roger Blough, U. S. Steel's Board Chairman, has called upon his fellow industry leaders and upon the union to "search for a better way now" to resolve the two basic problems of collecting bargaining. These are:

1. How to determine the equitable distribution of increased production to workers, stockholders, and consumers? and
2. How to pay workers their fair share so as to maximize their family security and their effective purchasing power?

The historic development that I have described as being in process contains the answer to these twin problems, namely:

1. A system of remuneration based upon the establishment of a comprehensive measurement of productivity, which will determine both the level of wages and prices.
2. An annual wage system of compensation that assures workers 52 steady, weekly pay checks a year.

As the welfare-capitalism leaders retire the free-enterprise leaders of industry, the mantle of leadership in the field of collective bargaining will fall to these newer, bolder, and younger industry leaders.

Their job, among other things, will be to get the labor leaders to return to the original basic purpose of the labor movement; namely, to promote the welfare of everybody and not just the select members of bargaining units.

History is on the side of these newer leaders of welfare capitalism, because their success will be dependent upon practicing the following operating principle:

To operate at a sustaining profit industry has to promote the welfare of everybody.

As the labor leaders are led to return to their original basic purpose, the two contending houses of industry and labor will be welded into a joint house under a leadership with a common purpose, and dedicated to the same fundamental objectives.

This is the historic process at work in American industry, and I have tried to summarize some of the irresistible forces behind this development into the future.

The theme of your conference is, "Leadership --- Key To Survival."

The theme of my talk is that an understanding of the historic process in development is the "Key To Survival For The Leaders of Labor and Industry."

Those leaders of labor unions and of corporations who do not comprehend the meaning of the current historical development, it seems clear to me, will be displaced by leaders who do.

F I N I S

Ruttenberg, Stanley

May 12, 1959

Mr. Stanley H. Ruttenberg
Director, Department of Research
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
815 Sixteenth Street N.W.
Washington 6, D.C.

Dear Mr. Ruttenberg:

Thank you for your gracious letter of May 6. I was, as you assumed, working from The New York Times, in an effort to give wider circulation to the findings of the American Assembly. I should of course have worked from the original document. Thank you for your kind comments and for putting me straight.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

(dictated by Mr. Murrow and signed in his absence in Washington)

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
WM. C. BIRTHRIGHT
DAVID DUBINSKY
EMIL RIEVE
MAURICE A. HUTCHESON
L. S. BUCKMASTER
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JAMES B. CAREY
CHARLES J. MacGOWAN
WM. L. McFETRIDGE
A. J. HAYES
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
O. A. KNIGHT
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
HARRY C. BATES
WM. C. DOHERTY
DAVID J. McDONALD
JOSEPH CURRAN
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
KARL F. FELLER
L. M. RAFTERY

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

GEORGE MEANY
WALTER P. REUTHER
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JAMES B. CAREY
HARRY C. BATES
DAVID J. McDONALD
DAVID DUBINSKY
WM. F. SCHNITZLER

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D.C. NATIONAL 8-3870

May 6, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

As one of the participants in the American Assembly sessions at Arden House last weekend, I want to say that I thought you did a top flight job on Monday, May 4, in summarizing the results of the conference. A fairer, more impartical and more thorough job could not have been done.

I only regret that you did not have available, at the time you did your summary, the half dozen or so paragraphs which precede the thirteen point policy recommendations.

The New York Times printed only the thirteen points. The paragraphs preceding these points indicate: "There was consensus that the rate of growth in the American economy should be increased, even if this interferes with the full attainment of other economic goals. This would mean a 4 or 5 percent rate instead of the more recent low rates."

I point out these two statements because they certainly underlie the first policy point in which you indicate that the Assembly did not specifically point out the proposed rate of growth. This is true; they did not do so in the policy recommendations, but they did in the preceding paragraphs.

Aside from this, let me congratulate you on doing such an excellent summary in a few short minutes.

Sincerely,

Stanley H. Ruttenberg
Director, Department of Research

oeiu #2 afl-cio

Ruwitch, Lee

February 10, 1959

Dear Lee:

Many thanks for sending me a copy of Bart Toppan's letter to Mike Horton telling of the amount of promotion done by WTVJ on THE LOST CLASS OF '59.

I think you did a magnificent job. Many thanks.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Lee Ruwitch
WTVJ
Post Office Box 2770
Miami 31, Florida

mcc

WTVJ

From the Desk of
LEE RUWITCH

1/22

Ed Murrow
CBS-TV

Here is how we promoted "Lost Class of '54".

Regards,
Lee Ruwitch

WTVJ CHANNEL 4 Ruwitch, Lee

P. O. BOX 2770 ◆ 316 N. MIAMI AVE.
MIAMI 31, FLORIDA

FRanklin 4-6262

January 22nd of
WTVJ's TENTH YEAR
1949 - 1959

COPY

Mr. Mike Horton
Director of Press Information
CBS News
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mike:

Enclosed are tear sheets from the Miami Herald and the Miami News on the "Lost Class of '59". I feel that we got excellent coverage on this.

As I told you on the phone, WTVJ made an extensive mailing of a telegram calling attention to this program. This is the list as it was finally evolved.

All Churches and Synagogues	325
Principals of Dade County Schools	163
Dade County Social Studies and Civics Teachers	309
Dade County School Board	35
Dade County Citizens Committee for Better Schools	63
American Legion, Amvets & VFW Posts	63
Mayors	18
American Jewish Committee List	600
WTVJ Local Sponsor & Agency List	487
Miscellaneous	550

We invited several persons over to see the closed circuit preview last Thursday. Among those in attendance were Mayor High of Miami and Dr. Joseph Hall, Superintendent of Schools. I do know that Mayor High had an announcement of this program circulated to all city employees and that Dr. Hall had an announcement made of this program throughout the entire Dade County School system. In addition, the Dade County PTA put on a telephone campaign of their members informing them of the program.

All in all, regardless of ratings, I do feel that those persons in South Florida who will have a hand in shaping the destiny of our school system in the years ahead, were quite adequately informed of this special program and from having seen the preview, I feel sure that the program, in turn, will help them in

WTVJ CHANNEL 4

P. O. BOX 2770 ◆ 316 N. MIAMI AVE.
MIAMI 31, FLORIDA

FRanklin 4-6262

making their decisions as to what course South Florida will take with regard to its schools in the future.

All best wishes.

Cordially,

Bart Toppan,
Promotion Manager

BT:agj

COPY

DOMESTIC SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise this message will be sent as a full rate telegram
FULL RATE TELEGRAM
DAY LETTER
NIGHT LETTER

$

S

E

WESTERN UNION

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

1206 10-51

NO. WDS.-CL. OF SVC.	PD. OR COLL.	CASH NO.	CHARGE TO THE ACCOUNT OF

Send the following message, subject to the terms on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to

WE INVITE YOUR ATTENTION TO A VERY IMPORTANT TELEVISION
WHICH WILL BE SEEN OVER WTVJ, CHANNEL 4 FROM 8 TO 9 P.M
WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21.

THE PROGRAM "THE LOST CLASS OF '59" WILL FEATURE EDWARD AND IS LARGELY AN EXAMINATION OF NORFOLK, VIRGINIA SHOW
RESULTS OF THE INTEGREGATION CONTROVERSY. INTERVIEWS W
AND LEADING CITIZENS WILL BE SEEN TO SHOW CLEARLY THE E
CLOSED SCHOOLS AND GOV. J. LINDSAY ALMOND, JR. OF VIRGI
ALSO BE INTERVIEWED BY MR. MURROW.

WE ARE PARTICULARLY PLEASED THAT CBS HAS SCHEDULED THIS
THE 8 TO 9 EVENING PERIOD ON WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21 AS T AFFORD THE GREAT MAJORITY OF VIEWERS AN OPPORTUNITY TO MOST TOPICAL PROGRAM.

SIGNED: LEE RUWITCH
EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER
WTVJ, CHANNEL 4, MIAMI

1

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise the message will be sent at the full rate
FULL RATE
LETTER TELEGRAM
SHIP RADIOGRAM

	TIME FILED

ION PROGRAM
P.M. ON

ARD R.MURROW
HOWING THE
S WITH STUDENTS
E EFFECT OF RGINIA WILL

HIS PROGRAM IN S THIS HOUR WILL TO VIEW THIS

Ruwitch, Lee

February 4, 1959

Dear Lee:

Many thanks for your nice letter of January 29th.

I am delighted to have your evaluation of the "Lost Class of '59." Judging by the over-all response, we feel that the amount of effort that went into the show was well spent.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Lee Ruwitch
WTVJ Inc.
316 North Miami Avenue
Miami, Florida

mcc

WTVJ INC. 316 NORTH MIAMI AVENUE MIAMI, FLORIDA

CHANNEL 4 MIAMI

FRANKLIN 4-6262

FLORIDA'S FIRST TELEVISION STATION

January 29th of
WTVJ'S TENTH YEAR
1949 - 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

We recently received a report from CBS on the number of CBS stations, and their locations, which carried your very fine program, "The Lost Class of '59". I personally was disappointed that all of the Southern States did not elect to program this most important show.

At WTVJ, the decision to carry this program was made within five minutes after it was first offered via TWX. This meant the pre-emption of a commercially important feature movie, which we normally run in that time period, but we felt so strongly that it was our civic responsibility to carry this program that there was really no decision to make.

At the closed circuit preview we were fortunate in having in attendance Mayor High of Miami and Dr. Joseph Hall, Superintendent of Schools for Dade County, in addition to 25 other civic leaders. The station sent out 3,000 pieces of direct mail to South Florida's opinion-makers to gain word-of-mouth advertising for the show.

The letters we have received indicate that the "Lost Class of '59" has caused many of our residents to take a long, hard look at the alternatives. The program may well mean the difference between open and closed schools in South Florida.

Again, this was a very excellent program; one that we at WTVJ were proud to have on our schedule.

Sincerely,

Lee Ruwitch

Lee Ruwitch,
Executive Vice President and General Mgr.

LR:agj

CBS

Ryan, Wm. H.

February 9, 1959

Mr. William H. Ryan
Contact
The Tides Book Company Inc.
749 Bridgeway
Sausalito, California

Dear Mr. Ryan:

In reply to your letter of January 9, I should prefer not to do anything on the history of SEE IT NOW. Thank you very much for writing as you did.

Sincerely yours,

A JOURNAL OF NEW WRITING, ART, AND IDEAS
WILLIAM H. RYAN | PUBLISHER □ XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX

CONTACT

Dear Ed: I have my interest ME NEITHER F.F.

January 9, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS Television
485 Madison Ave.
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Attached is a copy of CONTACT I. I hope you will find it of interest.

Being a former CBS-TV promotion man, I was very disheartened to hear of the cancellation of "See it Now". That news, plus your speech that THE REPORTER published last November suggested the subject of this letter.

We would very much like to do a comprehensive piece on the history of "See it Now". Such great moments were achieved with this series and format that it seems tragic that they be shelved without ceremony or possibly lost forever. It might be too, that a recitation of the series' greatness by an independant publication such as ours might serve to further the ideas expressed in your speech.

Such a piece would be treated as a fully illustrated, major feature and with the critical attention that CONTACT is receiving, I believe you and your associates would find it well worth while.

Our first print order was 10,000. Considered terribly optimistic by "the experts". This run is now almost sold out. I hope that by June, the issue I'd like to see such a feature in, our circulation should be in the 20,000 area.

May I hear from you regarding the possibilities of such an article. I think it would be tremendously effective for both your cause and ours.

With best personal regards,

William H. Ryan

William H. Ryan

WHR:jd

c/o THE TIDES BOOK COMPANY, INC., 749 BRIDGEWAY, SAUSALITO, CALIFORNIA, PHONE EDGEWATER 2-1188

Sausalito, California
July 1958

A JOURNAL OF NEW WRITING, ART, AND IDEAS
WILLIAM H. RYAN | PUBLISHER ☐ ~~THOMAS C. PATTON | EDITOR~~

CONTACT

PROSPECTUS

Hypothesis

There exists today a substantial and growing population of literate, curious adults whose needs are not being met by the mass circulation magazines. Neither are they served by esoteric or overly-precious "little magazines".

CONTACT will appeal to the kind of culture-hungry persons who have enthusiastically welcomed--and supported--FM radio. There will be a parallel: CONTACT's contents will be tasteful, pertinent and rewarding. Controversy and humor, cosmic proposition and satiric wit--all will have a place in CONTACT.

Conclusion

Primarily a review for those who do not read reviews, CONTACT's identity will come from clarity and tone. The tone will derive from high standards of writing and exposition. There will be no conventional limits on subject. The editors are prepared to give full range to ideas that may be alien to their own individual or collective thinking.

Published approximately quarterly, CONTACT will contain fiction, social and political comment, plays, poetry, original art and photography, criticism--in fact, anything of a truly dynamic nature that can be sewn between heavy 6 x 9 cover stock. We seek, foremost, unequivocal, basic social and political comment and analysis , handled with imagination (and, where appropriate, with wit) and obviously invested with honest, personal conviction.

Examples of articles already on hand: "How to be Sane Though Negro" by S. I. Hayakawa; "Zen--Can East Meet West?" by Alan Watts; "~~Anarchism at Mid-Century" by Kenneth Rexroth~~; and "Epic Theatre" by Mordecai Gorelik.

Such outstanding writers as Charles Beaumont, Ray Bradbury, Evan Connell, Robert Kirsch, Calvin Kentfield and William Saroyan will also be represented.

(CONTACT encourages new writers to submit manuscripts. However, little or no editorial comment will be offered by the editors, except toward acceptance.

c/o THE TIDES BOOK COMPANY, INC., 749 BRIDGEWAY, SAUSALITO, CALIFORNIA, PHONE EDGEWATER 2-1188

In the field of graphics, we will present a portfolio of 10 to 12 sketches and drawings by David Stone Martin with an introduction by the artist. . We are seeking a photo essay on "Henry Miller in Big Sur" by Georgia Longini. (Photography should be directed toward possible cover use or such photo essays where the subject is of first importance.)

We are encouraged to believe that CONTACT, as a lively, intelligent platform for contemporary ideas, will be a commercial as well as an artistic success. As Max Lerner told the American Librarians Convention in San Francisco this month, "There is a boom in the sales of thoughtful or 'egghead' literature".

Specifications

Size - Six inches by nine inches, two-color cover (design is currently being worked on by top commercial artists in both northern and southern California), 140 to 160 pages printed letterpress in South San Francisco. CONTACT will have the feel and appearance of a fine quality paperbound book. It is directed more to the bookshelf than the coffee table.

Distribution - CONTACT will take advantage of a revolutionary development in the publishing business--that of distributing through the "quality" (Anchor, Vintage, etc.) paperbound book wholesalers. Our major wholesaler alone has warehouses, serving nearly 10,000 bookstore outlets, in New York, San Francisco, and St. Louis.

Promotion - Because of the spirited nature of its contents, we feel CONTACT will receive unusually enthusiastic word-of-mouth promotion. To support and spur this essential promotion, we will use the advertising columns of such key media as the Saturday Review and The Nation, and submit each issue to book reviewers throughout the country. These efforts will be supplemented by the publisher's personal tour of universities, bookstores, etc. Tour will be coincidental with the first issue in the fall of 1958.

Staff - Publisher:	William H. Ryan Calvin Kentfield
Editors:	William H. Ryan, ~~Thomas C. Patton,~~ George C. Dorsey, Herbert W. Beckman
Contributing Editors:	Walter Van Tilburg Clark, R. H. Beloff
Art Directors:	Edwin Lee, Barney Wan
Contributing Art Director:	Robert Guidi

Saavedra, David

A Week In New York

A WITTY, INFORMATIVE, AND DESCRIPTIVE BOOK
PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED

DAVID SAAVEDRA
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
SACRAMENTO 2-3650

P. O. BOX 182, MURRAY HILL STATION
NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

July 2, 1958

no interest
just file

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Co.
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Knowing your interest in current problems, I thought that you might consider the presentation on the screen of the tangled web of inter-American relations. Dr. Eisenhower will visit Central America by the middle of this month, so this is news.

The expose duly documented runs to 17 typewritten pages, double space, and under your skilfull treatment will be a scoop. It contains elements that could be dramatized easily because they are the essence of tragedy, the plight of people who live in bondage. The oppressors are mediaeval characters, dynastic dictators who are kept in power by the grace of a mighty power.

In the context of power politics the southern nations are merely geographical designations. But as suppliers of strategic materials to this country in war time, their role is tremendous. For this reason, the item dealing with the delivery of strategic materials is bound to have great repercussions and to force policy-makers to re-examine the system of alliances between a democracy and totalitarian regimes to forestall the danger.

Needless to say that I shall be delighted to cooperate in the preparation of graphic material- blown up maps, statistics, etc. to make the presentation more attractive.

Sincerely yours, D Saavedra

(David Saavedra)

Highlights: Alliances between U. S. and Latin American dictatorships- Threat to strategic materi ls in war time- Rise of dynastic dictatorships under U. S. periphere- Resemblances between hereditary Prime Ministers in Nepal and hereditary satraps in Nicaragua and Santo Domingo- U. S. ambassador cheerleader of the Venezuelan Gestapo- Dulles praises the fine policy system of Caracas- U. S. senior partner of the largest collection of dictatorships in the world-

BACKGROUND

David Saavedra, editor and publisher of "A WEEK IN NEW YORK", founder and leader of the "ABC Plan" to fight illiteracy in the world, and author of The Three Big Brothers (Jacob, Cagliostro, and Rasputin), psychology; Argentine Wool in Central Europe, economics; Sunday Meditations, philosophy; Geography of the thought, philosophy; The Golden Book, immigration and sociology; Bananas Gold and Silver, immigration and sociology; Trails to El Salvador, travel; Go South Young Man, political economy and sociology; A project for fighting illiteracy in the world (pamphlet). In preparation: Philosophy of History and Foreign Trade for the Millions.

EXCERPTS

"David Saavedra, a Latin American philosopher and political economist, one of the world's most traveled men, who has seen more lands, more mountains, more seas, and more rivers than Ulysses ever saw".

Honorable U. L. Burdick, Congressional Record, Washington, D.C.

* * *

"The author of this book is David Saavedra, economist, sociologist, philosopher, and linguist, who has made the world his home for the last 25 years". Dept. of the Interior, U. S. Travel Bureau, Washington, D.C.

DAVID SAAVEDRA
P. O. Box 182
Murray Hill Station
New York 16, N. Y.

Sachar, Dr. A. L.
Brandeis

August 25, 1959

Dear Dr. Sachar:

Many thanks for sending me the pictures taken at the Commencement festivities. They are a very nice memento of a pleasant occasion, and I am glad to have them.

Cordially yours,

Dr. A. L. Sachar, President
Brandeis University
Waltham 54, Massachusetts

gw

BRANDEIS UNIVERSITY
WALTHAM 54, MASSACHUSETTS

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

July 27, 1959

Dear Ed:

You gave us one of the most stimulating planning sessions which we have had in the life of our young University. The ideas just poured out, but they were all part of a consistent pattern and we, therefore, came away from the conference with a concept which I think is original, viable and compatible with the objectives of our school.

After a discussion with my staff, I concluded that it might be better to postpone the next strategy session until the early fall. It would be too much of a rush to try to do this before you left for Europe and we probably would not be able to get the men, who would be valuable for our purposes, at such short notice. We shall, therefore, clear with your secretary towards the end of August in the hope that a good date can be worked out when you return.

One of the best things that has happened to us is the development of your warm interest in the program. After our session, I no longer fear that we may fall victim to doctrinaire discussions involving "ballets of bloodless categories."

With every good wish,

Cordially yours,

A. L. Sachar

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

ALS:hf

Sachar

BRANDEIS UNIVERSITY
WALTHAM 54, MASSACHUSETTS

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

July 9, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am delighted by your willingness to meet with me and some faculty members to discuss our projected advanced program in the Communications Arts. You will be back on the 20th. How about dinner at the Harmonie Club on Wednesday, July 22. We could get together about 6:30 and not make it too long an evening although there is much to cover! We'll call your secretary to try to confirm the date.

Cordially yours,

ALSachar

A. L. Sachar

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

als/sb

OK confirmed

AL Sachar

f

June 26, 1959

Dr. A.L. Sachar
Brandeis University
Waltham 54, Mass.

Dear Dr. Sachar:

I am ending my commitments here tonight, and will be out of the city until the third week in July (starting 20th). It is possible that we might be able to meet here during that week, if convenient to you. Perhaps you could suggest a time.

Sincerely yours,

(signed in Mr. Murrow's absence)

BRANDEIS UNIVERSITY
WALTHAM 54, MASSACHUSETTS

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

June 23, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I shall not scold you for returning the expense check. We shall use it to augment our scholarship resources and you must know how deeply we appreciate your consideration.

I wonder if two or three members of my staff and I may impose upon you a little later in the summer, if you are to be in this country, for a conference on a program which we wish to develop at Brandeis for an Institute in the Communications Arts. We feel that this young University may be able to make an original contribution in this important field, linking the practitioner with the academician and integrating the skills in the Communications Arts with the insights which come from the major Social Sciences. We have had a two-day conference on the campus with a number of resource people who come from outstanding American universities and a few concepts have begun to jell. We want very much to talk them over with you. You have such a broad knowledge of the field that you can be most helpful, if we may intrude upon your time. Just tell me what time and date are most convenient and we shall, of course, work ourselves into your schedule in New York.

With every good wish,

Cordially yours,

A. L. Sachar

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

als/sb

Saerchinger
Cesar

CESAR SAERCHINGER
45 ROCKEFELLER PLAZA
NEW YORK 20, N.Y.

9 May 1958

Dear Ed,

It was good to hear from you, busy as you are, and I deeply appreciate your felicitations - deserved or otherwise. Once in a great while one comes near to achieving something which makes life worth while.

I have watched your triumphant progress across the TV screen and both Marion and I have been delighted by your sensational scoops and imaginative reporting of crucial events.

With all good wishes and warmest greetings to you and Janet.

Ever yours,

Cesar

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Saerchinger, C.

April 28, 1958

Dear Cesar:

This is a belated note to say two things: First, I am aware of the aid provided by you, or rather by your organization, for Mr. Van Cliburn, and secondly to tell you that I read your book on Schnabel with unmixed joy and satisfaction.

I started to leaf through it just because an old friend had written it, and found myself reading on page after page. It is one of the few things I have read in months that I didn't have to read, and I was richly rewarded. As you know, I am a musical moron, but that fact did not diminish my pleasure the least bit.

I congratulate you and I am in your debt.

As ever yours,

Mr. Cesar Saerchinger
113 West 57 Street
New York, New York

fc

INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION
INCORPORATED

1 EAST 67TH STREET AT FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 21, N. Y. • LEHIGH 5-3400 • CABLE ADDRESS "INTERED"
Regional Offices: Washington, Chicago, Denver, Houston and San Francisco

April 21, 1958

Since so many inquiries have been received about the role of the Institute of International Education in the sponsorship of Mr. Van Cliburn and Miss Joyce Flissler as contestants in the recent International Tchaikovsky Piano and Violin Competition held in Moscow during March and April, a short statement of the sequence of events may be of interest .

In the fall of 1957 the International Tchaikovsky Competition Committee circulated to many schools of music in this country a brochure describing the event, together with entry blanks for those interested. In December, Dean Mark Schubart of the Juilliard School of Music indicated to the IIE that he thought the United States should be represented. It was agreed that the Institute would cooperate, and IIE formed a selection committee of five members to consider candidates. This committee consisted of:

Mr. David B. Wodlinger, IIE (chairman and coordinator)
Mr. Edwin Hughes, New York City (pianist and teacher)
Dean Mark Schubart, Juilliard School of Music
Dr. Carleton Sprague Smith, Curator of Music, New York Public Library
Mr. Isaac Stern (violinist)

A number of artists -- all of whom had to be between the ages of 18 and 30 -- were suggested and their qualifications were considered and evaluated by the Committee. Mr. Van Cliburn, pianist, of Kilgore, Texas, and Miss Joyce Fliessler, violinist, of New York City were invited to go to Moscow.

Inasmuch as the Soviet Government undertook to pay only the maintenance and return travel of contestants, the question of funds for travel to Moscow had to be resolved. The Institute approached Mr. Cesar Saerchinger, administrator of the Martha Baird Rockefeller Aid to Music Program and the committee of this organization agreed to provide $1,000 for each contestant to cover travel and incidental expenses to Moscow. Later, the committee added another $1,000 to take care of the expenses of Miss Flissler's accompanist, Miss Harriet Wingreen. Early in March the contestants left for Moscow. As is know, Mr. Cliburn placed first and Miss Flissler seventh.

In connection with this International Tchaikovsky contest, it should be noted that the contestant who placed ninth in the piano competition was Mr. Daniel Pollack of Los Angeles, California, one of those recommended by the Institute for a Fulbright award to Austria, where he is spending the academic year 1957 - 58 studying piano at the Vienna Academy of Music.

Sagall, S.

March 19, 1958

Dear Mr. Sagall:

Thank you for your letter of March 12th and for sending me the brochure describing the International Television University.

I appreciate your thoughtfulness in bringing this to my attention.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. S. Sagall
Teleglobe
Pay-TV System, Inc.
15 East 48th Street
New York, New York

mcc

TELEGLOBE
PAY-TV SYSTEM, INC.

15 EAST 48 STREET, NEW YORK 17
ELdorado 5-0010

K.O.

March 12, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I don't know whether you are for or against Pay-TV.

I feel, however, that I should bring to your attention the concept of the International Television University as a means of bridging the gap in education between this country and Soviet Russia.

I am enclosing herewith a brochure describing the International Television University, as well as some other pertinent literature.

Your views on the subject would be of inestimable value to me.

Yours sincerely,

S. Sagall

SS:rg/enc.

S. Sagall

January 21, 1958

Statement of Solomon Sagall, President of Teleglobe Pay-TV System, Inc. before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on the subject of Subscription Television.

My name is Solomon Sagall and I reside at 124 West 79th Street, New York, New York. I am President and Founder of Teleglobe Pay-TV System, Inc. whose address is 15 East 48th Street, New York 17, New York.

Teleglobe Pay-TV System, Inc. has recently submitted to the Federal Communications Commission an entirely new system for subscription television.

BRIEF TECHNICAL EXPLANATION OF THE TELEGLOBE PAY-TV SYSTEM

A basic feature of the Teleglobe system is that it does not take away the actual TV viewing channels from the public. Simply put, the Teleglobe system involves nothing more than the separation, at the television station, of the video signals from the audio signals. The regular video signals are broadcast over the air, in accordance with existing FCC engineering standards - free of any distortion, scrambling or degrading. The viewer in the home continues to see on his TV screen normal TV pictures free - as hitherto. The aural signals are not broadcast, they are diverted and sent uncoded from the TV station over telephone type wirelines via central switchboards to the individual Pay-TV subscribers in their homes. The wirelines in the subscriber's home are connected to the Teleglobe speaker, which is entirely independent of the TV receiver. A flick of the switch in the Teleglobe speaker connects the subscriber automatically to the sound of the desired channel. Subscribers pay for the provision of the audio portion of the program only.

The Teleglobe system differs from other proposed methods of toll-TV in that:-

The Teleglobe system requires no modification of the transmitter or of the TV receiving sets.

The Teleglobe system requires no coding or decoding devices.

No extraneous gadgets are attached to the TV receivers; there is no tampering with or adjustment of the TV receiver.

The Teleglobe system does not add to the service problems of the TV receiver owner, nor does it increase servicing cost of the TV receiver.

The Teleglobe system does not encroach in any way upon the function and the position of the independent servicemen.

The Teleglobe system is equally applicable to black and white, as well as to color TV receivers.

The Teleglobe method of collection is simplicity itself. Central box-offices of the Teleglobe Pay-TV subscription network will handle billings by mail - either on a flat monthly fee, or on a "per program" basis. The subscriber to the Teleglobe system is not burdened with problems of seeking decoding cards, mailing them, or searching for coins.

To summarize, Teleglobe claims to be the only system conceived and designed for the economics of the American market. The techniques underlying the Teleglobe system have been fully evaluated. Discussions with the Telephone Companies have confirmed the thorough practicability of the system. The Teleglobe system is thus available for immediate introduction on the American market.

TELEGLOBE REQUESTS THE COMMITTEE TO SUPPORT THE FCC AUTHORIZATION OF A TRIAL PERIOD FOR PAY-TV

Teleglobe Pay-TV System, Inc. joins the other proponents of Pay-TV, who have already submitted statements to the Committee, in giving full support to the decision of the Federal Communications Commission to authorize Pay-TV trials under the safeguards and regulations promulgated in the Ground Rules recently announced by the FCC. Teleglobe would like to submit but one basic observation: The question is no longer "Pay-TV or NO Pay-TV." The question is - is Pay-TV going to be transmitted over the air, or is it going to be transmitted over a coaxial cable network?

It is our opinion that the demand for Pay-TV is not something artificially created, something which is being foisted upon the American public.

The whole conception of Pay-TV is a natural result of dissatisfaction on the part of the American public, with the substandard, low-level, anemic programs that they have been offered for so many years. Some of the purveyors of TV entertainment have been treating the American public as immature children, dumping on the airwaves third-rate material, being only concerned with filling airtime.

Television has largely become a kind of a soporific, a mild narcotic having the effect of preventing the majority of the viewers from exercising their thinking faculties. Television, instead of being the most dynamic, most stimulating force towards creating interest in higher quality entertainment and culture, has had largely an opposite effect.

It is as a result of this situation that the demand for a competitive form of television, such as Pay-TV can provide, has arisen. This is a natural phenomenon. The demand for Pay-TV is bound to develop and grow in strength. Block Pay-TV over the air, and within a few years the country will be covered with a vast cable network.

We submit to the Committee that it is far wiser to let Pay-TV develop over the air, under the regulatory authority of the FCC, with its years of experience in public broadcasting services, than to aid and abet by negative action the growth of a cable Pay-TV network, which - at least in its early stages - would not be subject to Federal authority and regulation, unless additional Federal legislation is promulgated to meet the new situation. In short, it is our view that competition of Pay-TV to so-called free TV is bound to come. Such competition is healthy - and in the public interest. Blocking the FCC at this stage will only lead to a change in the mechanics, in the means of transmission of Pay-TV programs, but will not result in the suppression of Pay-TV.

Teleglobe Pay-TV System, Inc., accordingly, requests the Committee to give its wholehearted support to the decision of the FCC to authorize Pay-TV trials and thus to permit the customary free play of competitive forces, which is traditional in the American economy. Let the American public decide during the forthcoming three-year test period, whether it is willing and ready to pay for the special programs. Since the tests are limited to Grade A areas where there are at least four TV stations, plenty of "free" programs will be available to compete with "Pay-TV" for public favor.

A NEW CONCEPT OF EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION

Convinced as we are that competition from "Pay-TV" will have a beneficial impact on the entire structure of TV programming - we take even a stronger view with regard to the part that "Pay-TV" can and should play in the education of the younger generation of Americans.

The American public recently received a terrific jolt when it learned that the Soviet Union was far ahead of the United States in scientific and technical education, as well as in the general level of education of the younger generation. This was the conclusion reached by the U.S. Office of Education in the recently published report on "Education in the U.S.S.R."

> "This is for the American people the most critical problem of all" - said the President of the United States a few days later in his speech in Oklahoma City on "Future Security."

There is an appalling shortage of classrooms, school plants, laboratory facilities and teaching personnel in the United States. The New York Times on Sunday, November 17, 1957, stated that "the teacher shortage now is 135,000, the classroom shortage 159,000" and that both deficits would mount sharply by 1965.

Billions are required to alleviate this situation. But money alone - even if appropriated by Congress - cannot provide the required facilities quickly enough. It will take years to build new classrooms, it will take years to train new teachers.

There is fortunately at the disposal of this nation - an immediate, most powerful weapon in the battle for supremacy of brainpower. This is - electronic teaching on a self-supporting basis, by means of Pay-TV.

Acutely conscious of the seriousness of the educational situation, as described above, and of the duty of every citizen to try to make a contribution to the solution of this problem, the Teleglobe Company has evolved a comprehensive plan for the creation of a new institution, namely, the International Television University. The detailed plan is being submitted to the Committee herewith.

The International Television University plan may be briefly summarized as follows:

a. The International Television University (later referred to as ITU) proposes by means of electronic teaching facilities of television to turn every home into a potential classroom. ITU will provide continuous TV instruction, uninterrupted by entertainment material or commercials.

b. ITU will provide courses to High School graduates for the purpose of getting college degrees. The degree would be conferred by existing institutions of higher learning, accredited universities and colleges.

c. The academic program would be drawn up by leading educators and would aim at a very high level of teaching. ITU would enroll top-level teaching personnel, indeed, the best brains of this country, specialists in each sphere, for its TV instruction courses.

d. ITU would cooperate with the existing colleges, which would supervise the TV students' homework and provide laboratory facilities in subjects, such as the sciences, where laboratory work has to supplement TV tuition.

Teleglobe has an interesting additional feature: A student can be actually graded instantaneously. An instructor giving a test shows or asks a question. The student then selects his answer and pushes a button on the Teleglobe speaker and the electronic impulse is registered for a final determination.

e. It has been stated that 47% of the High School graduates, with an I.Q. of 120 or better, fail to go on to college. It is quite possible that the need to earn a living during daytime may be a contributing factor. It is, therefore, proposed under the ITU plan to make available TV instruction for college degrees during evening hours as well as daytime hours.

f. Tuition fees in colleges have been continuously on the increase and as a result, college education may be prohibitive for many a High School graduate. A relatively low monthly tuition fee, to include supervision of homework, laboratory facilities of existing colleges, textbooks, etc. would be charged by means of Pay-TV. Such Pay-TV tuition fee would amount to but a fraction of the tuition fees chargeable by the established colleges and would be well within the economic means of families in the lower income brackets.

g. Colleges participating in this program would get income from ITU.

h. ITU would institute a system of scholarships for students of merit, as well as facilitate their post-graduate studies.

i. The ITU plan has been conceived and worked out by the Teleglobe Company. While we consider the Teleglobe Pay-TV system as the simplest, most economic and most immediate method for the realization of the ITU project, ITU will cooperate with any competitive method of Pay-TV, or with any existing closed-circuit and community TV system, and will make available, on most reasonable terms, the ITU program facilities to any TV station in the country.

It is Pay-TV that makes feasible and practicable the Teleglobe-ITU project. It is Pay-TV that will permit the project to become gradually self-supporting and financed by the students themselves. This bold new concept which will make practicable college education for possibly hundreds of thousands of students, can be put in operation - by means of Pay-TV without asking Congress for even a single additional penny in appropriations for education.

The sponsors of the Teleglobe-ITU project propose to petition the FCC to remove any restrictions from the use of Pay-TV, by whatever system, by any TV station, anywhere in the country, provided the station in question will be used exclusively for the teaching and instruction, as outlined, in the ITU plan.

The FCC has allocated 1300 commercial UHF channels, of which only 90 are in use. The ITU plan makes possible to turn - in the very near future - the majority of the present dark UHF channels into beacons of enlightenment.

The ITU plan will add, in the course of months instead of years, hundreds of thousands, possibly millions, of classrooms, and will make possible the full utilization, to the maximum advantage, of the teaching personnel available right now.

The sponsors of the ITU Pay-TV tuition plan are firmly convinced that the successful realization of this plan will prove to be a major contribution towards bridging the gap in education between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. - The ITU Pay-TV plan is in the national interest, as well as in the interest of the entire free world.

We feel that the decisive part that Pay-TV can thus play in the field of education, as outlined above, creates an important new dimension in the entire Pay-TV picture, and, accordingly, we express our hope that the Committee will give its wholehearted approval to the decision of the FCC to remove at last the shackles from Pay-TV.

INTERNATIONAL TELEVISION UNIVERSITY

Copyright 1958
by
Solomon Sagall

From: S. Sagall
Teleglobe Pay-TV System, Inc.
15 East 48th Street
New York 17, N. Y.

November, 1957

INTERNATIONAL TELEVISION UNIVERSITY

Danger of Soviet Union's Lead in Education

The Soviet Union is far ahead of the United States in scientific and technical education, as well as in the general level of education of the younger generation --- this was the conclusion reached by the U. S. Office of Education in the recently published report on "Education in the U.S.S.R."

"This is for the American people the most critical problem of all" - said the President of the United States a few days later in his speech in Oklahoma City on "Future Security".

The United States Lagging Behind

There is an appalling shortage of classrooms, school plants, laboratory facilities and teaching personnel in the U. S. An article in the New York Times, Sunday, November 17, 1957, states:

> "The country has now approximately 39,000,000 elementary and secondary school pupils; by 1965 it will have 47,000,000. The teacher shortage now is 135,000, the classroom shortage 159,000. Both deficits would mount sharply by 1965.
>
> "The Soviets' well trained teachers are in ample supply and the pupil-teacher ratio went down from 33 in 1927 to 17 last year. Our average is around 27.
>
> "College enrollments in this country total this year 3,450,000 and will rise to 5,199,000 by 1965. 47% of the High School graduates with an I.Q. of 120 or better, do not go on to college".

INTERNATIONAL TELEVISION UNIVERSITY

A gigantic task is thus facing the nation - if it is to meet successfully the Russian educational challenge.

TV - Powerful Educational Medium

There is at our disposal, fortunately - an immediate, most powerful weapon, in this forthcoming battle for supremacy of brain power - namely electronic teaching by means of television.

Some efforts to utilize the audio-visual facilities of television have been and are being made on an increasing scale. Educational television has already proved its effectiveness, but the sporadic efforts have so far been directed mostly towards the popularization of some scientific and educational subjects for presentation to large masses of viewers. Occasionally, television has been used to supplement teaching in existing classrooms.

What is required now is a national, far more fundamental approach to the problem, of how best to utilize television - a teaching tool of unsurpassed - and as yet untapped - potentialities, at the service of vast masses of students of college age.

OBJECTS OF INTERNATIONAL TELEVISION UNIVERSITY

Every Home a Classroom

The International Television University, proposes to make use - in this electronic age - of the electronic teaching facilities of television, by turning every home into a potential classroom.

Home Study Via TV

1. It is the object of ITU to provide to the students in the home, continuous educational programs during day and evening hours, uninterrupted by general television entertainment material, by commercials, etc.

Preparation for College Degrees by ITU

2. ITU proposes to make arrangements with existing institutions of higher learning, such as recognized universities, colleges and so on, in various areas and centers of the country. The courses provided by ITU would be recognized by the colleges for scholastic credits; arrangements would be made with the colleges for periodic oral and written examinations, under supervision of the college authorities, of students of the ITU; ITU would be fully recognized by colleges for purposes of preparing students for college degrees.

World's Best Teachers Provided by ITU

3. Many of the smaller colleges, for financial reasons, are unable to have top-level teaching personnel. ITU on the other hand, would be in a position to enroll the best brains of this country, specialists in each sphere, to teach by means of television, diverse subjects; ITU would be in a position also to enroll as teachers, the best brains available outside the U. S. Kinescopes or video tape recordings would be made of such lectures and would be readily available for repeat use.

All College Subjects Can be Taught by TV

4. "The implications of the President's speech, as well as of the Office of Education's recent book "Education in the U.S.S.R." are clearly to the effect that all of our schools must put more emphasis on the teaching of foreign languages, science, world geography, mathematics, other cultures and humanities. It is also crystal clear that we must stress increasingly the principles and meaning of democracy", - this was a statement made by Mr. Lawrence G. Derthick, Commissioner of the U. S. Office of Education.

Practically every above mentioned subject lends itself, or could be easily adapted to teaching by television. Tens of thousands of pupils have been successfully trained by correspondence schools all over the world. Most certainly, audio-visual instruction by television - where the pupil does "see" and "hear" the teachers - would be vastly superior

Close Cooperation with Colleges

5. ITU would work in each area very closely with the available laboratory facilities of existing colleges - and would televise practical experiments from such laboratories. When thought desirable, ITU student-subscribers might be given an opportunity to participate directly in such laboratory experiments.

ITU Supervises Homework. Link between ITU Teachers and Students

6. In addition to the audio-visual instruction provided on the television screens in the homes, ITU will help the students with written advice, and in preparation, supervision and checking of their homework. ITU will establish for that purpose regional advisory institutes which will form a practical link between ITU teachers and students. Wherever practical, ITU will endeavor to make arrangements with the individual colleges to participate in such advisory institutes.

Oral question periods by students present in the television lecture-studio, will follow the lectures and will help to elucidate and enliven the subjects, presented on the screen, for the much larger student audience in the homes. Selected student-subscribers will be invited to the TV studios for this purpose. With the same object in view, some educational telecasts will emanate from the classrooms of colleges, associated with ITU, in the carrying out of the program.

UHF Channels to be Used

7. Prime time over VHF stations is very costly and, therefore, continuous use of time on VHF for educational purposes would be prohibitive. ITU will accordingly, use UHF stations, existing, or to be established, in various parts of the country.

Reasonable Pay-TV Tuition Charges

8. A system of Pay-TV, based on the economic possibilities and average pay capacity of the student-subscribers will be used by ITU. The Teleglobe Pay-TV System appears to be the simplest method for charging student-subscribers to ITU courses, a relatively low monthly tuition fee, which would include supervision and checking of homework, etc.

Students Able to Earn Living in Daytime

9. Courses and lectures will be provided from early morning hours, until late at night. It is assumed that the majority of the students will prefer to do their TV studies during evening hours, and have the opportunity of earning a living during the daytime.

ITU to Provide a High Standard Curriculum

10. The academic program should be of a very high level indeed, and a faculty and advisory board, consisting of nationally prominent, top-level educators will be created. This board will be responsible for drawing up, in conjunction with leading universities and colleges, the programs of studies and will be responsible for continuous supervision and improvement of same, with the view to maintaining a high standard of teaching.

TV Teaching Techniques - Stimulating

11. TV teaching calls for adaptation of existing and, in some cases, the development of new teaching techniques. Intensive audio-visual instruction by means of educational TV, presented in a stimulating manner, should result in greater progress by the students, in terms of scholastic attainments. This may lead to the reduction of the number of years normally required to get a college degree.

ITU to Augment Income of Colleges

12. Colleges providing active help in the realization of this program would get an agreed income from ITU.

Scholarships for Students

13. ITU would institute a system of scholarships for students of merit. The scholarships would result in a refunding to the students, of their tuition fees. ITU would further endeavor to facilitate for deserving students, post-graduate studies and specialization, in colleges in this country and abroad.

Provision of UHF Converters and/or Sets

14. The student-subscriber to ITU may be provided with a UHF converter, the cost of which might be included in the general monthly subscriber fee.

In some cases, it may even be necessary to provide the student with an independent television set, to receive UHF, so that the student could do his studies without interfering with the reception of general television programs f rom VHF stations, by other members of the family. Where the purchase of such a UHF set may prove an added financial burden on the student, ITU will endeavor to provide the set on a rental basis, the rental to be added to the monthly subscriber fee.

NOTE: In smaller apartments, it might be possible to arrange for the students to have earphones connected to the Teleglobe audio-wire, carrying the sound of the educational UHF station and thus permitting other members of the family to continue watching regular pro grams on their set, even in the same room.

Gradual Build-up

15. ITU will start operations with one UHF station in a major area of population, such as New York, Chicago, or Philadelphia, etc., and add on other UHF stations gradually.

ITU will Petition FCC.

16. ITU will petition the FCC to permit forthwith the use of Pay-TV with UHF stations, exclusively for educational purposes, and to exempt such educational TV broadcasting operations from the "Pay-TV trial" regulations, recently formulated by the FCC.

NOTE: Of the 1300 Commercial UHF Channels allocated by the FCC, only 90 are in use. ITU would thus make possible the con structive utilization of UHF Channels.

ITU Will Use Teleglobe System; Will Cooperate with Other Pay-TV Systems

17. ITU proposes to use the Teleglobe Pay-TV System as the simplest and most economical method.

ITU will cooperate, however, in providing, on agreed terms, all its program facilities, as well as above described advisory services to students, for any existing, or to be established UHF or VHF station that would care to join the educational network of ITU, even if such stations would prefer to use a competing Pay-TV system. Similarly, the facilities of ITU will be available to closed-circuit and community systems.

Possible Extension to High Schools

18. ITU proposes to provide, to start with, courses equivalent to those provided in colleges. Facilities, and availability of TV time permitting, ITU will make arrangements to provide some high-school equivalents. In some cases, lectures might be piped in on a closed-circuit network to high-schools and, perhaps, colleges, to supplement their own program of studies. Additional UHF stations may be established, if and when required, to carry alternate courses.

Textbooks

19. ITU would make arrangements directly or indirectly, with publishers of scientific and technical books, to make available to student-subscribers textbooks, in many cases, specially prepared and adapted for use with the ITU television courses. The cost of the textbooks might be included in the monthly subscription-tuition fees.

CONCLUSION

The proposed ITU educational network offers a most practical, constructive approach towards the speedy alleviation of shortages of teaching personnel, of classrooms and of school physical facilities. It will take years to train new teachers. It will take years to build new classrooms; it will take only months to extend the existing facilities to the homes - via ITU.

For every one student now studying in classrooms, - probably a thousand students could "view", "listen" and study - under the ITU plan - comfortably and in uncrowded conditions, in their own homes.

The ITU plan is in effect, nothing less than the addition - practically forthwith - of hundreds of thousands, possibly millions, of classrooms and the full utilization, to the maximum advantage, of the teaching personnel available right now.

ITU will approach the White House in order to enlist its support. ITU will acquaint all members of Congress with its proposed plan and is looking forward to the fullest support from the legislators.

Indeed, it is impossible to conceive of any Senator or Congressman opposing the use of Pay-TV "pro bono publico" - as an instrument which would permit a speedy large-scale extension of educational facilities, to be financed by the students themselves, without imposing a direct burden on the taxpayers.

The sponsors of ITU are firmly convinced that the successful realization of the ITU plan, will prove to be a major contribution towards bridging the gap in education between the U. S. and the U.S.S.R. - The ITU plan is in the national interest, as well as in the interest of the entire free world.

Salisbury, Lord

August 20, 1958

Dear Bobbety:

I fear that I was a very poor agent. It had never occurred to me that Harvard would offer you an honorarium less than adequate to pay travelling expenses for you and Betty. Nevertheless, I am still determined to get you over here. If you can see a period of as much as two or three weeks, preferably in the late autumn or early spring of next year, I can with ease arrange a few lectures which will not commit you to an unduly heavy schedule and will, at the same time, give you an opportunity to talk to audiences that would merit your attention. Please let me know what you think.

The buzzards of Suez are certainly coming home to roost but the sad part of it is that very few people in Washington or in the country seem to recognise them.

As ever yours,

The Right Hon. Marquess of Salisbury
Hatfield House
Hatfield
Herts.

Aug 10th, 1958.

TELEPHONE, HATFIELD {2702. 3136.

HATFIELD HOUSE,
HATFIELD,
HERTS.

My dear Ed,

You were very kind & wrote to me, after your visit to England, that you had written to Mr Bowie and suggested that I should give a lecture at Harvard; and in due course I had an extremely nice letter from him, which Betty and

I discussed controversy for some time. As you may have heard from him, I eventually decided that I could not manage it, at any rate for the present: but I feel that, as you have been so kind, I ought to write and explain the difficulties which brought us reluctantly to this conclusion.

TELEPHONE, HATFIELD {2702. 3136.

HATFIELD HOUSE,
HATFIELD,
HERTS.

The first was, time. What he had in mind was that I should stay some little time in Harvard & both get some public lectures & make contacts in informal discussions. That alas! I could not manage. I am so tied up with a variety of things on here, as I am sure you will understand, that I could not hope to get away for more than a my few days, at any rate in the immediate future. And this brought me up against the second difficulty, which was, purely and simply, money. Harvard nobly offered 500 dollars towards the costs of coming. But that would of course have only gone a my little way towards paying for

TELEPHONE, HATFIELD {2702. 3136.

HATFIELD HOUSE,
HATFIELD,
HERTS.

Betty's and my expenses for a trip across the Atlantic and back, by whatever route; and we felt that we could not afford the extravagance for such a very few days in the States. So I was reluctantly obliged to say no. I did however suggest to him that if, at any time, I was able to manage a longer trip and he still wanted me, we might try and fix something up then. That, so far as I know, is how it has been left. In any case, I am most grateful to you for all the trouble you have taken. I only wish it had been possible.

I thought your television talk with Harold Macmillan was quite excellent. You did him a great

TELEPHONE, HATFIELD {2702. 3136.

HATFIELD HOUSE,
HATFIELD,
HERTS.

Service by it. Since we met, much has happened, most of it, I am afraid, bad. The full extent of the disaster in Iraq is indeed still unknown, since the new Iraqi Govt. have not yet fully divulged their attitude. It may be that motives of self interest may make them try to keep on terms with the West, as the only buyers of their oil. But I can't help feeling that their hearts are with Nasser, and that that will become clear in due course, and probably at the most inconvenient moment. All we can do (I mean G.B. and the United States) is to keep a foothold in the Middle East pending the creation, if that is attainable, of some kind of modus vivendi there. It is a grim situation. I don't like the boundaries of

TELEPHONE, HATFIELD {2702. 3136.

HATFIELD HOUSE,
HATFIELD,
HERTS.

the western world – what we know as free civilisation – being pushed back and back.

Will you please give many messages to Janet from us both.

Yours ever
Bobbety

Salisbury, Marquess

June 3, 1958

Dear Bobbety:

I have talked with Bob Bowie, head of the new Center for International Affairs at Harvard, about the possibility of your coming here to lecture.

He is very much interested in the idea, and we shall be hearing further from him on the subject very shortly.

If you would like to do one or two lectures in addition to the one at Harvard, we will be glad to arrange for this.

As ever yours,

The Rt. Hon. Marquess of Salisbury
Hatfield House
Hatfield
Herts

mcc

WIDENER T
HARVARD UNIVERSITY
CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS

ARTHUR SCHLESINGER, JR. UNIVERSITY 4-9710

May 31, 1958

Dear Ed:

I have discussed the Salisbury matter with Bob Bowie who, as you probably know, is head of the new Center for International Affairs here at Harvard. He is, as am I, most enthusiastic about the prospect of getting Salisbury here; indeed, we would like, if possible, to have him in Cambridge for several days. We are somewhat concerned about the problem of compensation since the Center's budget is limited. If this is an issue, we can supplement his Harvard stay by other local engagements. Bowie tried to call you in New York the other day about this and he will write you about it. In any case, I want to make it clear that we are eager to do what we can to promote the idea.

You might also wish to write to John Dickey at Dartmouth. Salisbury ought to be a natural for his Great Issues course.

Yours ever,

Arthur Schlesinger Jr.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue, N.Y.C.

MR. ROBERT BOWIE
HARVARD UNIVERSITY
CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS

HAVE BEEN UNABLE TO REACH YOU BY PHONE STOP WOULD YOU CALL OUR OFFICE? MR. MURROW WOULD LIKE TO SPEAK WITH YOU.

FLORENCE CRISSAN,
SECRETARY TO MR. MURROW

514-43

TO Mr. Murrow

FROM Mrs. Crissan May 23

A Mr. Robert Bowie called. He is from Harvard and your letter to Mr. Schlesinger has been handed to him. He is interested, and would like to talk further about it. We are to call him on Monday.

Yes!

May 16, 1958

Dear Arthur:

I am just back from a quick trip to London where I spent some time with Lord Salisbury. I think he could be persuaded to come to this country for a couple of weeks in the Autumn if anyone would care to listen to him lecture in the general area of foreign policy. The title might be "Foreign Policy, Theory and Practice."

I imagine you are acquainted with Lord Salisbury. He is in my view, a truly wise man. Do you think anybody would be interested?

As ever yours,

Mr. Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.
Widener T
Harvard University
Cambridge, Massachusetts

fc

Salten David G

F

6

THE SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS

LONG BEACH, NEW YORK

29 December 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow

TV Guide's excerpts from your speech to the radio-television newsmen in Chicago constitute a most constructive attack on complacency in TV. Your statement strengthens my conviction that you, more than any other TV performer, have recognized the enormous potential of the medium and the awesome responsibility the networks must carry in our struggle for survival.

Let us hope that your eloquent and thoughtful plea will not go unheeded. If TV consistently facilitates our escape into a never-never land of fantasy, and keeps us out of contact with the unpleasant and upsetting realities of life, the future of TV, and of our American society itself, is not bright.

Last evening's program, "Years of Crisis", was splendid. Congratulations.

Sincerely yours

David G. Salten

DAVID G. SALTEN
Superintendent of Schools

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
WCBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

sg

Salzmann, Richard
ltpc.

INSTITUTE FOR MEDITERRANEAN AFFAIRS

INCORPORATED

27 East 62nd Street, New York 21, N. Y. • Telephone: TEmpleton 8-1460

January 7, 1959

BOARD OF TRUSTEES

ROGER N. BALDWIN
Chairman, International League for the Rights of Man

PROF. LAWRENCE L. BARRELL
Director, Mitchel College
Long Island University

PETER H. BERGSON
Investment Banker

PROF. ROBERT BIERSTEDT
Chairman, Dept. of Sociology and Anthropology
City College, N. Y.

DR. WERNER J. CAHNMAN
Dept. of Sociology and Anthropology
Hunter College, N. Y.

PROF. BORIS G. DRESSLER
Economics (Retired)

ANGIER B. DUKE
President, International Rescue Committee

PROF. JOSEPH DUNNER
Chairman, Dept. Political Science
Grinnell College, Iowa

PROF. NASROLLAH FATEMI
Dept. of Social Science
Fairleigh Dickinson University

PROF. EPHRAIM FISCHOFF
Director, Hillel Foundation
Yale University

PROF. LOUIS L. GERSON
Dept. of Government and International Relations University of Connecticut

PROF. JEAN GOTTMANN
Institut d'Etudes Politiques, Paris
Institute for Advanced Study
Princeton

PROF. FOWLER HARPER
Law School
Yale University

DR. OSCAR KRAINES
Political Science: Senior Consultant
Executive Dept. N. Y. State

PROF. ABBA P. LERNER
Dept. of Economics
University of California

RAPHAEL MALSIN
Pres., Lane Bryant, Inc.

SAMUEL MERLIN

PROF. ALLAN NEVINS
Dept. of History
Columbia University, N. Y.

RT. REV. JAMES A. PIKE
Bishop Coadjutor
Diocese of California

RICHARD R. SALZMANN

JAY MARC SCHWAMM
Chairman, American Trust Co.

HARRY LOUIS SELDEN
Editor; Consultant

DR. LEON SOLIS-COHEN
Physician; Civic Leader

J. DAVID STERN
Publisher (Retired)

ALEXNDER WILF
Industrialist; Publisher

OFFICERS

PROF. NASROLLAH FATEMI

PROF. FOWLER HARPER

PROF. ABBA LERNER
Vice Chairmen of the Board

RICHARD R. SALZMANN
Executive Vice Chairman

JAY MARC SCHWAMM
Treasurer

SAMUEL MERLIN
Coordinator of Research

•

VICTOR HOUSE
General Counsel

MAX GILMAN
Director of Publications

•

SPONSORING COMMITTEE
(over)

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C B S
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Some months ago I understand that Mr. Morris Ernst wrote to you about the Institute for Mediterranean Affairs, and in particular about the Report of our Panel on the Palestine Refugee Problem, a copy of which we mailed to you.

I am writing now to ask whether you have had an opportunity to look through this material; and also to bring you up to date about the plans of this Institute.

I am, therefore, sending you a memo summarizing the impact the Refugee Report made upon public opinion, as well as the further steps we deem necessary to take in order to see this most explosive problem constructively solved. Apart from that, we are also planning, as you will see from the attached memo, an extensive study of the complexities of the problem of State and Religion in the Middle East. In this sphere, too, there is a great need for bold analysis and study, as well as imaginative possibilities of evolving a new approach and guidelines for constructive modern solutions.

We would be very grateful for an opportunity of meeting with you in the near future to discuss these matters with you personally. I shall call your office for an appointment in the next few days.

Cordially,

Richard R. Salzmann

Richard R. Salzmann
Executive Vice Chairman

SPONSORING COMMITTEE

Prof. Robert J. Alexander
Political Science
Rutgers University

Dr. R. B. Allen
Chancellor
University of California

Prof. Roscoe Baker
History and Social Sciences
University of Maryland

Dr. Gunther Beijen
Sec. Gen. Research Group for European Migration Problems; Editor, Remp
The Hague, Netherlands

Prof. Aaron Bell
Political Science
New School for Social Research

Hon. William S. Bennet

Brig. General Herman Beukema
Social Sciences; Director
Overseas Program
Maryland University

Dr. Bruno Foa
Economist

Prof. Morris Budin
Economics; Statistics
Syracuse University, N. Y.

Prof. James M. Burns
Dept. of Political Science
Williams College, Mass.

Prof. S. C. Cappannari
Dept. of Sociology and Anthropology
Wayne State University

Prof. Edward W. Carter
Political Science
University of Pennsylvania

H. Richard Chew
Analyist, U. S. Government

Prof. Samuel I. Clark
Dept. of Political Science
Western Mich. University

Lester Cohen
Author

Prof. Cortez A. M. Ewing
Political Science

Dr. Samuel DuBois Cook
Head, Dept. of Political Science
Atlanta University, Ga.

Dr. Martha L. Corry
Dept. of Social Studies
State University Teachers College
Oneonta, N. Y.

Prof. Andrew N. Chukshanks
Head, Dept. of Social Sciences
California State Polytechnic College, Calif.

Prof. Vattel E. Daniel
Dean, Graduate Division
Alabama State College

Prof. Gottfried S. Delatour
Dept. of Sociology and Anthropology
Hunter College, N. Y.

Prof. Louis H. Douglas
Political Science
Kansas State College, Kansas

Josiah E. DuBois, Jr.
Attorney

Prof. Kathleen E. Dunlop
Department of Economics
Hollins College, Va.

Dr. Victor C. Ferkiss
Dept. of Political Science
St. Mary's College, Calif.

Prof. Michael J. Flack
Political Science
Vassar College

Waldo Frank
Author

Prof. W. Friedmann
Director, International Legal Research
Columbia University

Prof. Carl J. Friedrich
Political Science
Harvard University

Prof. Lawrence H. Fuchs
Dept. of Political Science
Brandeis University

Prof. James R. Garner
Chairman, Political Science Dept.
Bethany Nazarene College, Okla.

Prof. John H. Gauntlett
Dept. of Political Science
University of North Carolina

Prof. Robert L. Gill
Dept. of History and Government
Morgan State College

Robert A. Goldwin
Director, American Foundation for Political Education
Chicago, Illinois

Prof. Cullen B. Gosnell
Dept. of Political Science
Emory University

Prof. Feliks Gross
Dept. of Sociology
Brooklyn College

Prof. Jay V. Groves
Dept. of Political Science
Potomac State College

Dr. Werner F. Grunbaum
Dept. of Political Science
University of Houston

Prof. Rufus G. Hall, Jr.
Chairman, Dept. of Government
University of Oklahoma

Prof. Herr R. Harper II
Dept. of Political Science
Dickinson College, Pa.

Prof. Carroll Hawkins
Political Science
Michigan State University, Mich.

Prof. Samuel Hendel
Chairman, Government Dept.
City College

Prof. Louise W. Holborn
Dept. of Government
Connecticut College

Nathan G. Horwitt

Victor House

Prof. Asher Isaacs
Head, Dept of Economics
University of Pittsburgh

Prof. John Ise
Dept. of Economics
The University of Kansas

Prof. Eri Jabotinsky
Israel Institute of Technology
Haifa, Israel

George J. Jennings
Dept. of Social Sciences
Bethel College

Prof. Ned V. Joy
Dept. of Political Science
San Diego State College

Prof. Vladas Juodeika
Dept. of Political Science
University of Portland

Prof. Morton A. Kaplan
Political Science
University of Chicago, Ill.

Prof. Charles D. Kenney
International Relations
Michigan State University, Mich.

Prof. Anna E. King
School of Social Work
Fordham University

Dr. J. Donald Kingsley
Administrator, Allied Reparations Fund; Exec. Dir. Welfare & Health Council, N. Y.

Philip Klein
Harcum Junior College

Dr. Aaron Kope

Prof. Allan S. Kussisto
Dept. of Government
University of New Hampshire

Prof. Reginald D. Lang
International Relations
Carleton College,
Northfield, Minn.

Prof. Leonard A. Lecht
Chairman, Economics-Sociology Dept.
Long Island University

Prof. Charles O. Lerche, Jr.
Dept. of Political Science
Emory University

Prof. Daniel Lerner
Social Psychology, International Studies
Massachusetts Institute of Technology

Prof. Eugene Liggitt
Dept. of Sociology
Grove City College

Dr. Lewis L. Lorwin
Research Consultant; Economic Adviser
New School for Social Research

Prof. Simon Marcson
Dept. of Sociology
Rutgers University

Prof. Aaron M. Margalith
Chairman, Political Science Dept.
Yeshiva University, N. Y.

Dr. Alfred G. Meyer
Dept. of Political Science
Michigan State University

Prof. Leonard W. Moss
Dept. of Sociology
Wayne University

Prof. Frank Munk
Dept. Political Science
Reed College, Oregon

Prof. Eric H. Olson
Chairman, Dept. of Political Science
Carthage College, Ill.

Prof. A. Pais
Institute for Advanced Study
Princeton

Dr. Benjamin R. Patn

D. B. Pettingill
Goucher College, Baltimore

Dr. Mojmir Povolny
International Relations;
Director, Int. Student Program
American Friends Service

Prof. S. Grover Rich, Jr.
Dept. of Political Science
University of Utah

Dr. Paul Riebenfeld

Prof. Heinrich A. Rommen
Dept. of Political Science
Georgetown University Graduate School

Prof. Eva Rosenfeld
Dept. of Sociology
New York University

Prof. Walter Sandelius
Dept. of Political Science
University of Kansas
Lawrence, Kansas

Prof. Charles P. Schleicher
Dept. of Political Science
University of Oregon

Prof. Gerhard Schmidt
Dept. of Economics
Fairleigh Dickinson College

Prof. Frederick L. Schuman
Author; Educator

Prof. Paul Seabury
Dept. of Political Science
University of California

Ben Seligman

Dr. Gilbert Shapiro
Dept. of Sociology
Oberlin College

Dr. Irving Shendell

Dr. J. David Singer
Dept. of Political Science
Vassar College

Prof. Phillip L. Sinotkin
Dept. of Political Science
Wellesley College

Prof. Johan Smertenko

Dr. Rhoten A. Smith
Dept. of Political Science
University of Kansas

Prof. Anthony Stampolis
Political Economy
Georgia State College of Businecss Admin.

Dr. Peter G. Stercho
Dept. of Economics
St. Vincent College

Prof. A. L. Strand
President, Oregon State College

Prof. William L. Strauss
Dept. of Political Science
Arizona State College

Dr. Sidney C. Suffrin
Dept. of Economics
Syracuse University

Prof. Edward Taborsky
Dept. of Government
University of Texas

Prof. Manfred C. Vernon
Dept. of Political Science
University of Alabama

Prof. Harold M. Vinacke
Dept. of Political Science
University of Cincinnati

Prof. Douglas Waples
Dept. of Social Science
University of Chicago

Prof. M. Bradford Westerfield
Dept. of Political Science
Yale University

Prof. Vincent H. Whitney
Dept of Sociology
Brown University

Prof. John B. Whitton
Dept. of International Law
Princeton University

Prof. John R. Williams
Dept. of Political Science
West Virginia University

STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL

A - The last United Nations Assembly did not prolong the present Mandate of UNRWA that takes care of the refugees. The expiration date of June 1st, 1960 is still valid. In view of this it is our conviction that if the problem is to be solved constructively and an explosion is to be avoided, the groundwork for a solution must be laid now, keeping in mind the time-table of international realities. Such an evaluation of the situation was confirmed by UN Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold who, during his recent visit to the Middle East, declared before the refugees in the Gaza Strip that this is the year of decision -- the year during which a solution to this thorny problem must be found. The next General Assembly of the United Nations will be faced with the expiration of the UNRWA Mandate and if by that time no solution will have been worked out, events of the most dire consequences may take place.

The refugees may be incited to march unarmed in tens, if not hundreds of thousands over the borders of Israel. In such an event the Israeli government will be faced with the most tragic dilemma, because whatever she may do at that late hour will be tragically negative. To let them cross may prove suicidal. To meet them with a barrage of fire will be no less disastrous. This possibility is not simply a product of our imagination. In scores of newspaper items such an eventuality is reported as contemplated. During the Secretary General's visit to the area, the Arab leaders, including King Hussein of Jordan and King Saud of Saudi Arabia, told Mr. Hammarskjold that a solution to the problem of the refugees must be found if drastic and dangerous events - one form or another of what they call "a holy war"

-- are to be avoided. This is why we feel that the publication by this Institute of our Report on this problem was timely. There are good grounds to believe that since its publication this Report has made a serious impact on public opinion in this country and abroad; to some extent also on the deliberations at the present session of the Ad Hoc Political Committee of the UN Assembly. This in turn has caused a chain reaction, the scope and import of which it is still difficult to assess.

The impact can be discerned in the following events:

1) The publication of this Institute's Report has been received enthusiastically by the American press. Editorials have appeared in dozens of leading American newspapers and publications, including the New York Times, as well as Life Magazine. Favorable comment has also been received from some people abroad, including a number of individuals residing in the Middle East.

2) Over 150 Americans, who represent almost every point of view in connection with this problem, have commented favorably on the recommendations of this Report. Many of them have endorsed the Report.

3) Some prominent United States Senators, including a number of those on the Foreign Relations Committee, have written to the Institute commending us on this Report; they have been making public and private statements urging a solution along the lines suggested in our Report.

4) Our circulation of this document among the 81 delegations to the UN and subsequent conversations with a few of them have sparked what is generally considered the first serious discussion about an integral solution to this thorny, long-standing problem. Mr. George Harrison, the United States representative on the Ad Hoc Committee made a statement which pointed out that with the end of the UNRWA Mandate next year, a final solution to the Refugee Problem must be sought. He added the significant comment that the reason why such a solution had heretofore not been possible was because of the intransigent position of the Arabs, the Israelis, and the refugees themselves. This seems to be the strongest statement by an official representative of the United States government about this problem during the past ten years.

5) The speech of Israeli Ambassador, Abba Eban, was a fundamental departure from the previous persistently followed policy, in the sense that he stated that the Refugee Problem must find its solution as such, and not remain continent on a general settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Mr. Eban also spoke of the necessity of breaking out of the present vicious circle by tackling the Refugee Problem, because this in turn might have an effect upon the political considerations in the Eastern Mediterranean.

6) This statement has made some impression upon certain circles in the Arab world, notably in Jordan, where the majority of the refugees are concentrated. The Jordanian press reprinted Ambassador Eban's speech in full and commented upon it editorially. We do not at this time have the exact text of this editorial, but we understand that while the Jordanians rejected Israel's offer of compensation, they criticized the frozen attitudes of the Arab governments, and called for a fresh approach and constructive action.

These developments are, of course, encouraging; and they prove once more that the international community is in serious need of centers of independent and rational thought. This experience indicates to what extent even a modest effort in outlining a tentative solution to a complex problem can contribute to a change - regardless how slight at the moment - of the course of events into a more favorable and constructive spirit. This is particularly true in connection with the Eastern Mediterranean where almost all other existing American organizations reflect, to one extent or another, a certain bias which tends to hamper effective action. Despite the almost incredible financial problems with which the Institute must deal (our present operating budget is minuscule), we feel that our action represents a most hopeful development on the American scene.

But, on the other hand, one should not exaggerate the impact of such endeavors if they are to remain isolated and are not followed up with further illumination and wider distribution. If such an effort is not sustained, it is liable gradually to lose its effectiveness, and the situation can relapse to its previous deplorable and explosive status. More than that -- if the refugee situation is allowed to revert to the psychological and political conditions which prevail now -- it will deteriorate and may result in an explosion of dire consequences.

Therefore, we feel it is important to sustain this effort of ours with a number of specific kinds of action:

1) This Report should be distributed as widely as possible in the United States;

2) The Report should be translated into Hebrew and Arabic for direct distribution in the area;

3) Massive endorsement for the general recommendations of the suggested solution should be sought from prominent and distinguished Americans in academic, civic, cultural and business fields;

4) A conference of all of those who are interested in the solution of this problem should be held;

5) It is possible also that visits to the area itself for direct discussions with the leaders of the parties involved, including the refugees themselves, would prove helpful and appropriate.

B - Guidelines to United States Policy in the Near East

The Report of the Palestine Refugee Problem is only the first of a series this Institute plans to publish. We are now in the process of preparing a new study of United States Policy in the Near East. This study deals with the following four topics:

I. Definition of Terms

Is there a "Near" or "Middle East"? Delineation of the area and its geographic, political and ethnic subdivisions. Arab nationalism - its essence, its aspirations and its divisions. The prospects of democratic advances in the orbit of Arab nationalism.

II. The Cold War in the Area

Russia's ambitions, status and potentialities. The Arab exploitation of the big power rivalry. The free world and the orbit of Arab nationalism. The prospects of stabilization of the area.

III. Oil in the Area

To what extent is it vital to the free world. The commercial oil companies and foreign policy. The best means of achieving the desired aims.

IV. Israel-Arab Tensions

Initiatives which can create a more propitious climate for a conciliation. The Refugee situation as the key to a solution.

C - State and Religion in the Eastern Mediterranean

The Institute is also planning to organize a Special Panel to cover as wide a range as it is practical of the extremely complex relationships, over-lappings, blends, confusions and distinctions between State and Religion in the Eastern Mediterranean lands.

It is the intention of the Institute to divide the work of the Panel into two sections. One will deal with State and Religion in Israel. It will cover these problems: Israel as a nation and its relationship to world Jewry; Israel as a State and its relationship to the Jewish religion; Israel and the non-Jewish minorities.

The second section of the Panel will deal with the problems of the relationships between Arab nationalism and Islam; and the relationships of the various Arab states to the mosaic of the non-Moslem and non-Arabic minorities in their midst.

Salzmann, Richard R

July 1, 1958

Mr. Richard R. Salzmann
Executive Vice President
Institute for Mediterranean Affairs
27 East 62nd Street
New York 21, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Salzmann:

Thank you for your letter of June 30 and the copy of the Preliminary Report on the Palestine Refugee Problem.

Unfortunately, Mr. Murrow is at present on vacation and will be away until September, so that he will be unable to help you on this occasion.

Very truly yours,

Secretary to Mr. Murrow

skh

INSTITUTE FOR MEDITERRANEAN AFFAIRS

INCORPORATED

27 East 62nd Street, New York 21, N. Y. • Telephone: TEmpleton 8-1460

June 30, 1958

BOARD OF TRUSTEES

J. David Stern
Chairman, Executive Committee

Prof. Nasrollah Fatemi

Prof. Fowler Harper

Prof. Abba Lerner
Vice Chairmen of the Board

Harvey L. Schwamm
Treasurer

Samuel Merlin
Coordinator of Research

MEMBERS OF THE BOARD

Prof. Lawrence L. Barrell
Director, Mitchel College of Long Island University

Peter H. Bergson
Investment Banker

Prof. Robert Bierstedt
Chairman, Department of Sociology and Anthropology City College, N. Y.

Dr. Werner J. Cahnman
Dept. of Sociology and Anthropology Hunter College, N. Y.

Prof. Boris G. Dressler
Economics City College, N. Y.

Prof. Joseph Dunner
Chairman, Political Science Dept. Grinnell College, Iowa

Prof. Nasrollah Fatemi
Social Science Fairleigh Dickinson University

Prof. Ephraim Fischoff
Dept. of Sociology, Yale

Prof. Louis L. Gerson
Department of Government and International Relations University of Connecticut

Prof. Jean Gottmann
Institut d'Etudes Politiques, Paris Institute for Advanced Study Princeton

Prof. Fowler Harper
International Law Yale University

Dr. Oscar Kraines
Political Science; Senior Consultant Executive Dept. N. Y. State

Prof. Abba P. Lerner
Department of Economics John Hopkins University

Marshall MacDuffie
Attorney; Author

Raphael Malsin
Pres., Lane Bryant, Inc.

Prof. Allan Nevins
Department of History Columbia University, N. Y.

Victor Rayner
Advertising

Harvey L. Schwamm
Chairman, American Trust Co.

Harry Louis Selden
Editor; Consultant

Dr. Leon Solis-Cohen
Physician; Civic Leader

J. David Stern
Publisher (Retired)

Alexander Wilf
Industrialist; Publisher

•

Victor House
General Counsel

Max Gilman
Secretary, Executive Committee

SPONSORING COMMITTEE
(over)

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue, New York City

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We are taking the liberty of sending you a draft of a Report of a special Panel of this Institute containing a blue-print for a solution of the Palestine Refugee Problem, with the respectful request to have, if possible, your preliminary comments prior to publication.

It was deliberated and formulated with a sense of urgency, especially in view of the fact that the UNRWA Mandate expires in 1960 - a threatening situation pregnant with crisis and explosion.

As part of the Israeli-Arab conflict, the problem of the refugees became submerged by a series of irrelevant issues and quasi-diversionary, long range goals, discussions of which have bogged down in mutual recrimination and endless complication. The resulting confusion has made the refugee problem appear more formidable than it is in its own right.

As reflected in this Report, the Panel dealt with practically every conceivable aspect of this extremely confused and complex situation and analyzed the multiple factors involved, with a view toward disentangling the refugee problem proper from the skein of irrelevancy, partisan arguments, and long range political and economic considerations.

Stripped of the unnecessarily complicating matters, the central issue that remained to deal with, and which constitutes the heart of the problem is the apparently irreconcilable contradiction between the claim of the right of every Arab refugee to return and the fears that this would result in a fifth column so dangerous that the State of Israel could not permit its existence.

Closer examination of this crucial issue showed that the conflict is not inescapably irreconcilable. The Report is an attempt to reconcile these seemingly contradictory claims within the framework of an integral plan to repatriate and resettle all the refugees - with a trial period of 2 to 3 years, during which 200,000 refugees will be repatriated and resettled and the rest in consecutive stages in the light of the experience of the initial period, to be started as soon as possible.

This integral plan contains safeguards for the free choice for the refugees and fair treatment under law upon their admission into the State of Israel, as well as safeguards for Israel against subversion or other inimical acts on the part of the returnees.

SPONSORING COMMITTEE

PROF. ROBERT J. ALEXANDER
Political Science
Rutgers University

DR. R. B. ALLEN
Chancellor
University of California

PROF. ROSCOE BAKER
History and Social Sciences
University of Maryland

DR. GUNTHER BEIJER
Sec. Gen. Research Group for European Migration Problems; Editor, Remp
The Hague, Netherlands

PROF. AARON BELL
Political Science
New School for Social Research

HON. WILLIAM S. BENNET

BRIG. GENERAL HERMAN BEUKEMA
Social Sciences; Director
Overseas Program
Maryland University

DR. BRUNO FOA
Economist

PROF. MORRIS BUDIN
Economics; Statistics
Syracuse University, N. Y.

PROF. JAMES M. BURNS
Dept. of Political Science
Williams College, Mass.

PROF. S. C. CAPPANNARI
Dept. of Sociology and Anthropology
Wayne State University

PROF. EDWARD W. CARTER
Political Science
University of Pennsylvania

H. RICHARD CHEW
Analyist, U. S. Government

PROF. SAMUEL I. CLARK
Dept. of Political Science
Western Mich. University

LESTER COHEN
Author

PROF. CORTRE A. M. EWING
Political Science

DR. SAMUEL DUBOIS COOK
Head, Dept. of Political Science
Atlanta University, Ga.

DR. MARTHA L. CORRY
Dept. of Social Studies
State University Teachers College
Oneonta, N. Y.

PROF. ANDREW N. CRUIKSHANKS
Head, Dept. of Social Sciences
California State Polytechnic College, Calif.

PROF. VATTEL E. DANIEL
Dean, Graduate Division
Alabama State College

PROF. GOTTFRIED S. DELATOUR
Dept. of Sociology and Anthropology
Hunter College, N. Y.

PROF. LOUIS H. DOUGLAS
Political Science
Kansas State College, Kansas

JOSIAH E. DUBOIS, JR.
Attorney

PROF. KATHLEEN E. DUNLOP
Department of Economics
Hollins College, Va.

DR. VICTOR C. FERKISS
Dept. of Political Science
St. Mary's College, Calif.

PROF. MICHAEL J. FLACK
Political Science
Vassar College

WALDO FRANK
Author

PROF. W. FRIEDMANN
Director, International Legal Research
Columbia University

PROF. CARL J. FRIEDRICH
Political Science
Harvard University

PROF. LAWRENCE H. FUCHS
Dept. of Political Science
Brandeis University

PROF. JAMES R. GARNER
Chairman, Political Science Dept.
Bethany Nazarene College, Okla.

PROF. JOHN H. GAUNTLETT
Dept. of Political Science
University of North Carolina

PROF. ROBERT L. GILL
Dept. of History and Government
Morgan State College

ROBERT A. GOLDWIN
Director, American Foundation for Political Education
Chicago, Illinois

PROF. CULLEN B. GOSNELL
Dept. of Political Science
Emory University

PROF. FELIKS GROSS
Dept. of Sociology
Brooklyn College

PROF. JAY V. GROVES
Dept. of Political Science
Potomac State College

DR. WERNER F. GRUNBAUM
Dept. of Political Science
University of Houston

PROF. RUFUS G. HALL, JR.
Chairman, Dept. of Government
University of Oklahoma

PROF. HEBER R. HARPER II
Dept. of Political Science
Dickinson College, Pa.

PROF. CARROLL HAWKINS
Political Science
Michigan State University, Mich.

PROF. SAMUEL HENDEL
Chairman, Government Dept.
City College

PROF. LOUISE W. HOLBORN
Dept. of Government
Connecticut College

NATHAN G. HORWITT

VICTOR HOUSE

PROF. ASHER ISAACS
Head, Dept of Economics
University of Pittsburgh

PROF. JOHN ISE
Dept. of Economics
The University of Kansas

PROF. ERI JABOTINSKY
Israel Institute of Technology
Haifa, Israel

GEORGE J. JENNINGS
Dept. of Social Sciences
Bethel College

PROF. NED V. JOY
Dept. of Political Science
San Diego State College

PROF. VLADAS JUODEIKA
Dept. of Political Science
University of Portland

PROF. MORTON A. KAPLAN
Political Science
University of Chicago, Ill.

PROF. CHARLES D. KENNEY
International Relations
Michigan State University, Mich.

PROF. ANNA E. KING
School of Social Work
Fordham University

DR. J. DONALD KINGSLEY
Administrator, Allied Reparations Fund; Exec. Dir. Welfare & Health Council, N. Y.

PHILIP KLEIN
Harcum Junior College

DR. AARON KOPE

PROF. ALLAN S. KUUSISTO
Dept. of Government
University of New Hampshire

PROF. REGINALD D. LANG
International Relations
Carleton College
Northfield, Minn.

PROF. LEONARD A. LECHT
Chairman, Economics-Sociology Dept.
Long Island University

PROF. CHARLES O. LERCHE, JR.
Dept. of Political Science
Emory University

PROF. DANIEL LERNER
Social Psychology, International Studies
Massachusetts Institute of Technology

PROF. EUGENE LIGGITT
Dept. of Sociology
Grove City College

DR. LEWIS L. LORWIN
Research Consultant; Economic Adviser
New School for Social Research

PROF. SIMON MARCSON
Dept. of Sociology
Rutgers University

PROF. AARON M. MARGALITH
Chairman, Political Science Dept.
Yeshiva University, N. Y.

DR. ALFRED G. MEYER
Dept. of Political Science
Michigan State University

PROF. LEONARD W. MOSS
Dept. of Sociology
Wayne University

PROF. FRANK MUNK
Dept. Political Science
Reed College, Oregon

PROF. ERIC H. OLSON
Chairman, Dept. of Political Science
Carthage College, Ill.

PROF. A. PAIS
Institute for Advanced Study
Princeton

DR. BENJAMIN R. PAYN

D. B. PETTINGILL
Goucher College, Baltimore

DR. MOJMIR POVOLNY
International Relations; Director, Int. Student Program
American Friends Service

PROF. S. GROVER RICH, JR.
Dept. of Political Science
University of Utah

DR. PAUL RIEGENFELD

PROF. HEINRICH A. ROMMEN
Dept. of Political Science
Georgetown University Graduate School

PROF. EVA ROSENFELD
Dept. of Sociology
New York University

PROF. WALTER SANDELIUS
Dept. of Political Science
University of Kansas
Lawrence, Kansas

PROF. CHARLES P. SCHLEICHER
Dept. of Political Science
University of Oregon

PROF. GERHARD SCHMIDT
Dept. of Economics
Fairleigh Dickinson College

PROF. FREDERICK L. SCHUMAN
Author; Educator

PROF. PAUL SEABURY
Dept. of Political Science
University of California

BEN SELIGMAN

DR. GILBERT SHAPIRO
Dept. of Sociology
Oberlin College

DR. IRVING SHENDELL

DR. J. DAVID SINGER
Dept. of Political Science
Vassar College

PROF. PHILLIP L. SIROTKIN
Dept. of Political Science
Wellesley College

PROF. JOHAN SMERTENKO

DR. RHOTEN A. SMITH
Dept. of Political Science
University of Kansas

PROF. ANTHONY STAMPOLIS
Political Economy
Georgia State College of Business Admin.

DR. PETER G. STERCHO
Dept. of Economics
St. Vincent College

PROF. A. L. STRAND
President, Oregon State College

PROF. WILLIAM L. STRAUSS
Dept. of Political Science
Arizona State College

DR. SIDNEY C. SUFRIN
Dept. of Economics
Syracuse University

PROF. EDWARD TABORSKY
Dept. of Government
University of Texas

PROF. MANFRED C. VERNON
Dept. of Political Science
University of Alabama

PROF. HAROLD M. VINACKE
Dept. of Political Science
University of Cincinnati

PROF. DOUGLAS WAPLES
Dept. of Social Science
University of Chicago

PROF. M. BRADFORD WESTERFIELD
Dept. of Political Science
Yale University

PROF. VINCENT H. WHITNEY
Dept of Sociology
Brown University

PROF. JOHN B. WHITTON
Dept. of International Law
Princeton University

PROF. JOHN R. WILLIAMS
Dept. of Political Science
West Virginia University

The Report proposes the creation of an international authority to be known as the Repatriation and Resettlement Agency (RRA) to be set up by the United Nations on the pattern of the Mixed Israeli-Arab Armistice Commissions with the explicit Mandate of dealing and solving this problem.

From all kinds of information that reached us both from sources in this country and abroad, it is clear that the Middle East situation will in all probability be taken up in the international conclaves that will take place in the near future - whether it is the Summit or the inner-Nato-power conversations or the U.N. Assembly. The Russians, it seems, will come out with a sweeping demand to reduce Israel to the 1947 frontiers. The pressures will be terrific not only upon Israel, but also upon the governments of the Western powers and mainly upon the United States, who will find themselves in the embarrassing situation of having to make a choice in a rather negative dilemma. The only possibility to divert the discussion into another field, or at least to provide a constructive alternative for such discussions is a positive solution of the Palestine Refugee Problem.

In the hope of having your valuable comments, we thank you in advance for your cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

Richard R. Salzmann

Richard R. Salzmann
Executive Vice Chairman

P.S. This Report is editorially not yet in final shape and we plan to publish it with extensive appendices in book form in the next few weeks. We, therefore, hope you will appreciate the need to treat this document with utmost discretion.

THE PALESTINE REFUGEE PROBLEM

A New Approach And A Plan For A Solution

Preliminary Report of

Panel No. 6 on the Palestine Refugee Problem

to the Board of Trustees

Institute For Mediterranean Affairs, Inc.

27 East 62nd Street

New York 21, N. Y.

MEMBERS OF THE PANEL

Abba P. Lerner Chairman	-	Professor of Political Economy John Hopkins University
Samuel Merlin Rapporteur General	-	Coordinator of Research, Institute For Mediterranean Affairs
Hannah Arendt	-	Political Scientist; Author
Werner J. Cahnman	-	Department of Sociology and Anthropology, Hunter College
Boris G. Dressler	-	Professor of Economics, City College, New York
Angier Biddle Duke	-	President, International Rescue Committee
Joseph Dunner	-	Chairman, Department of Political Science, Grinnell College
Nasrollah Fatemi	-	Former Iranian Delegate to the United Nations; Professor of Social Science, Fairleigh Dickinson University
Jean Gottmann	-	Institut d'Etudes Politiques, Paris Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton
Fowler Harper	-	Professor of International Law, Yale University
Raphael Malsin	-	President, Lane Bryant, Inc.
Don Peretz	-	Author, "Israel and the Palestine Refugees"
Joachim O. Ronall	-	Economist; Orientalist
Harry L. Selden	-	Consultant
John Stoessinger	-	Professor of Political Science, Hunter College

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Foreword

The Main Points

I. Irrelevant Arguments

II. The Facts

III. Specifications For A Solution

IV. The Dimensions Of The Problem

The Crux Of The Problem

Safeguards For Israel

A Trial Period

Safeguards For The Refugees

V. Integration And Separation

VI. The Solution

Appendix

1. A General Description of the Refugee Communities
2. Other Refugee Problems and their Solution
3. The Refugee Problem as a Major Source of Tension
4. The joint Arab-Israeli-United Nations Responsibility for a Solution
5. The Conflicting Arguments and their Appraisal
6. Historic Rights to Palestine: The Conflicting Arguments and their Appraisal
7. A Short History of Population and Governments of Palestine
8. The Numerical Scope of the Refugee Problem
9. Development Plans for the Eastern Mediterranean
10. A Summary of the Armistice Agreements
11. Chronological Table of Political Jurisdiction over Palestine
12. U.N. General Assembly Resolution 194
13. A Summary Discussion of Bi-nationalism in Israel
14. Possible Resettlement Opportunities for Rural Families in the Middle East

Bibliography and References

[redacted]

THE PALESTINE REFUGEE PROBLEM 17 May 1958

There are almost a million people now to be found just outside the borders of the State of Israel, who have been uprooted from their homes, farms and jobs, subsisting mostly on the charity of a temporary UN Agency harassed by insufficient funds, living in idleness, frustration, and bitterness, more than a third of them in refugee camps. They have been there for ten years (except for the children born to them in the meantime) waiting for something to be done that would restore them to a normal productive life, and no overall plan for their rehabilitation is in sight. These are the Palestine Arab refugees. *1)

Since the end of the Second World War many millions have become refugees in other parts of the world, but a majority of them have been rehabilitated. Most of those who were refugees as long as ten years ago have since been re-settled. *2) But the Palestine refugees outside Israel remain refugees, their number even increasing from 726,000 in 1949 to 855,000 in 1951 and 934,000 in 1957. *3)

Great as must be the concern of men of good will for the return of nearly a million people to a life of decency and dignity, there are still other considerations which add to the importance and urgency of solving the problem before the expiration date (1960) of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) that is providing the present minimum of food, shelter

---

*1) A general description of the life, activities, conditions, rations and services of the refugee communities is contained in Appendix No. 1.

*2) A summary of the refugee situation in various parts of the world, of the problems they pose for the international community, and of the implemented solutions to these problems is contained in Appendix No. 2.

*3) United Nations Conciliation Commission For Palestine: Final Report of the U.N. Economic Survey Mission for the Middle East, Part 1, Appendix 1A pp.22,23.

Annual Report of the Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. General Assembly, Official Records: Twelfth Session, Supplement No. 14 (A/3686) New York 1957, Annex A p. 12.

and services for the refugees. *4)

The outstanding failure to deal with these refugees, in spite of much more attention given to them by the UN than to any other group of refugees, even perhaps more than to all the other refugees together, stems from the hostility between the Arab Nations and the State of Israel and their fear and suspicion of each other. *5) At the same time, the increasing frustrations and bitterness from the continuing plight of the refugees works back on the hostilities and fears, aggravating them and increasing the danger of war breaking out once more between Israel and the Arab States. Most of the border incidents, infiltrations and Fedayin raids, as well as Israel's policy of retaliation, have grown out of the refugee situation. *6) The Palestine refugee problem must be solved first if there is to be any change in the psychological climate and any prospect of a genuine stable peace in that part of the world.

Nor is it only the peace of the Middle East that is in danger. The whole world is standing under the shadow of nuclear catastrophe. While the fear of mutual destruction is likely to hold the great powers from starting a war on each other directly, the greater danger is that a world war may be started indirectly--that a conflict in some part of the world where the East and the West are competing for influence, could start a "brush war." Each

---

*4) Even now the Agency is in a rather difficult situation. For the last couple of years it "passed through an unprecedented series of crises,". . .was confronted with an extremely grave financial situation. The latter . . . is a cause for real alarm for everyone interested in the welfare of the Palestine refugees and in the stability of the Near East" (Annual Report Ibid. Introduction p.1). After the expiration of UNRWA'S mandate the situation is liable to deteriorate to uncontrollable proportions and the danger of an explosion should not be discounted.

*5) A summary of the various U.N. Agencies dealing with refugees elsewhere and their respective budgets is contained in Appendix No. 2.

*6) A summary of this fountainhead of trouble and their chain-reaction is contained in Appendix No. 3.

side in turn would then be tempted to save its protege from defeat by providing more effective "tactical" weapons, until the line of no return is found to have been crossed.

All the props for such a tragedy are now ready and waiting in the Middle East. It is not only a concern for a proper life for a million people, or even for peace in the Eastern Mediterranean, that makes it important for the Palestine refugee problem to be solved. A solution to this problem is necessary (among other things, of course) for the security of the whole world.

The primary obligation for working towards a solution lies naturally first of all with the parties most concerned, Israel and the Arab States, and the United Nations. *7) But because of the dangers to the whole world a heavy responsibility for seeing that the problem is solved falls on the greatest democratic power--the United States.

* * * * * *

Irrelevant Arguments

Usually the first step toward solving a problem is to state it clearly -- that is often more than half the battle. In the case of the Palestine refugee problem, however, there is a still more urgent priority. The ground must first be cleared of a number of dramatic, indeed fascinating, topics that have grown out of the passions of the conflict between Israel and the Arab States, as well as between Zionism and Pan-Arabism, which, though related in one degree or another to the refugee situation are quite irrelevant for any constructive approach to the basic objective: the restoration of the refugees to a normal life. Yet these irrelevant, partisan and often passionate topics keep coming into the discussions, serving only to confuse the issue. We must therefore keep away from the following questions:

*7) A summary and appraisal of the arguments for considering the solution of the Palestine Refugee Problem as a joint Israeli-Arab-United Nations responsibility is contained in Appendix No. 4.

1. Who is to blame for the refugees' present plight?

The present problem is the same whether they left their homes because they were driven out by the Israeli armed forces, or because they were cooperating with the invading Arab armies, or because they were afraid of retaliation for atrocities against Jewish settlers, or because they were afraid of Jewish terrorism, or of Arab terrorism, or because they just wanted to get out of the line of fire, or because their husbands or fathers or village elders or political leaders decided for them, or because they were looking for adventure, or because of any other reason, or for no reason. *8)

2. What are the historic rights of the Jewish or of the Arab people to Palestine?

The present problem will not be helped by debating the relative merits of claims by conquest three thousand years ago or one thousand years ago or ten years ago. Nor will it be of any help to consider rights by promises of statesmen or generals, by long settlement, by development of the land, or by the number of Jews or the number of Arabs that lived in Palestine a hundred or five hundred years ago. *9) The charge that the Arabs of Palestine are mainly recent immigrants that came to take advantage of the benefits created by Zionist settlement, and that there were probably fewer Arabs in the whole of Palestine a hundred years ago than there are now in Israel is just as irrelevant as would be the claim that all of the million refugees had lived in Palestine for a thousand years or ten thousand years. *10) The only rights that concern us here are the rights of the refugees to the opportunity of a decent and normal life, and the rights of the Middle East and of the world as a whole to the increase in everybody's security that would follow from the fulfillment of that right.

3. What is the exact meaning of the "Palestinian Nationality" of the Arab refugees?

The present problem will not be brought nearer to solution by debating whether or not an Arab refugee from Israeli Palestine can be considered to be in, or to have returned to, his "Homeland" (as distinct from his home) if he is in some part of Arab Palestine (the parts of Palestine outside Israel). Nor would we be helped by going into the right of Arab Palestine (the great majority of whose population would consist of Arab refugees) to national self-determination. While the claims of the refugees are predominantly based on their being Palestinians, it is not within the frame of reference of this report to suggest how the rights of the refugees to self-determination should be exercised, except for their deciding for themselves as individuals where they prefer to start a new constructive life. Only after the refugee problem has been solved can the answer to these political problems be clarified. It can then be left

---

*8) A documentary presentation of the conflicting arguments and an appraisal of some of them is contained in Appendix No. 5.

*9) A summary of the conflicting arguments as to historic rights and promises and their appraisal is contained in Appendix No. 6.

*10) A short history of the population and governments of Palestine from the earliest times to 1958 is contained in Appendix No. 7.

to all the inhabitants of Arab Palestine, both ex-refugees and others, to decide for themselves whether they wish to confederate in one form or another with Israel (as proposed in the U.N. Palestine Resolution of 1947), or to join one of the Arab Unions, or to become an independent state. In this report we are concerned with the rights of individuals to a decent life rather than with the rights of nations to self-determination.

4. What does absolute justice call for?

A "solution" that led to another war (in the name of absolute justice) would be no solution. To debate the justice of the establishment of Israel would be as futile as to question the legitimacy of the creation of any or all of the Arab states. One does not ask a state for its credentials or birth certificate. Both Israel and the Arab nations are internationally recognized states and members of the United Nations. One cannot pressure a state to liquidate itself voluntarily. A real solution to the refugee problem is only one to which all parties peaceably agree, and all parties will agree only if each would benefit more by accepting it than by rejecting it.

5. How many of the refugees are "genuine" refugees from Israeli Palestine?

The situation would not become less complicated nor would the tensions be eased by limiting the problem only to "genuine" refugees from Israeli Palestine. Among the refugees are many people who come from Arab Palestine. There are many doubtful or borderline cases. There are undoubtedly some who never were Palestine refugees, but who have passed themselves off as such to obtain rations or other benefits. *11) Furthermore, many of the refugees have acquired citizenship in their host countries and have been active in the internal politics of those nations. It has been suggested that this should disqualify them from being considered as genuine homeless or stateless refugees requiring repatriation or resettlement. It is not possible, however, to eliminate such people from the problem. They are there just like the others and they have to be settled in a satisfactory life just like the others. Studies of different categories of refugees will be very useful for a variety of purposes, and in particular to distinguish between different needs, possibilities and claims to repatriation or resettlement; but even if only 600,000 came from Israeli Palestine (as has sometimes been suggested) and even if 400,000 or 500,000 of these acquired Jordanian citizenship, it would still be true that all the "million" refugees have to be dealt with and satisfactorily settled if the problem is to be solved. The exclusion of any category of "refugees" from an overall solution would only exacerbate the situation and perpetuate the tensions and conflicts.

---

*11) A summary of the numerical scope of the refugee situation, its various "categories" of origin and the often contradictory assertions as to the numbers of these "categories" and the total is contained in Appendix No.8.

6. Who is right?

We must be especially on guard against involvement in the innumerable debating points that are embedded in the statements of spokesmen for the refugees, for Israel, for Zionism and for Pan-Arabism. The attitudes of the refugees, of the Israelis, of the Zionists, of the Arabs, and of their governments, and indeed of the international community, are among the essential data of our problems; *12) the arguments used are often not. The danger is that one's natural interest in whether a point made is true, or valid, may induce one to forget the much more important question of whether it is relevant for our particular problem and not merely part of the Israeli-Arab sniping that is going on all the time.

Diversionary Goals.

1. The economic development of the Middle East.

The solution of the Palestine refugee problem must not be made contingent upon the working out, the acceptance, and the implimentations of a plan for dealing with the larger problems of the economic development of the Middle East. The settlement of the Palestine refugees would naturally play an important part in such a regional development, and to the extent that regional development plans are put into operation it would be only reasonable for the settlement of the Palestine refugees to be integrated with the larger enterprise. *13) But the two are quite distinct, and the Palestine refugee problem cannot wait for any regional development plan if that is not to be a working proposition in the very near future. In particular, we must be very careful to see that discouragement over the difficulties in the way of solving the current Palestine refugee problem does not disguise itself as enthusiasm for a future Regional Development Plan.

2. The economic integration of the Middle East.

Beneficial as economic integration would be in raising the standards of living of all the peoples of the region, the refugee problem can not wait for the difficulties in the way of integration to be overcome. Indeed, it is only after the refugee problem is solved that there can be any hope of progress on the lengthy road that might lead from acceptance and toleration through neutrality and suspicion toward possible trading, cooperation, friendship and integration. We must not allow the distant dream to sabotage the immediately urgent task of settling the Palestine refugee problem.

Thus, warned against the distractions, we can turn to look at the problem itself.

* * * * * * *

The Facts

1. About a million refugees will have to be settled in a normal life. There were 934,000 registered in June, 1957 (185,000 families). Many more

---

*12) Some of these documented attitudes are contained in Appendix No. 9.

*13) A survey of some of these development plans, including the "Johnston Plan", is contained in Appendix No. 9.

will be born, will be registered, and will "join" the refugees during the years it must take to carry out solution.

2. Four-fifths of the refugees are inside Palestine.

They are in Arab Palestine, the parts of Palestine that have been under the control of Egypt (the Gaza Strip) and the Kingdom of Jordan (West Jordan) since the armistice that in 1949 ended the fighting which accompanied the establishment of the State of Israel. *14)

Well over half of them (518,000 registered in 1957) are in Jordan where they have become subjects of the Kingdom of Jordan and play an active and sometime a decisive political role in that country which is now federated with Iraq, and almost a quarter of them (221,000 as of 1957) are in the Gaza Strip which recently was granted some kind of political autonomy with equal rights for refugees.

3. The remaining fifth are in Lebanon and Syria.

These have, to some extent, found work and are being economically absorbed though citizenship is denied to them.

4. There are about 200,000 Arabs living in Israel.

These are not now refugees. They consist of the Arabs who stayed in Israeli Palestine in 1948, of some 46,000 who in 1950 were refugees in Israel under the care of UNRWA (the United Nations Relief and Work Agency) just as those in Arab Palestine and in Lebanon and Syria still are, and of some 35,000 ex-refugees who have come into Israel since 1948.

5. In addition to the refugees there are about 500,000 Arabs living in Arab Palestine (about 100,000 in the Gaza Strip and about 400,000 in West Jordan).

6. The population of Israel has risen since the founding of the State of Israel from about 650,000 Jews and about 150,000 Arabs to about 1,800,000

---

*14) A summary of these Armistice Agreements between Israel and her Arab neighbors is contained in Appendix No. 10.

Jews and about 200,000 Arabs.

7. The refugees are reportedly almost unanimous in their desire to "go back home." This may mean one or more of many different things of different degrees of feasibility.

7a. Going back home may mean going back to their homeland or country.

Strictly speaking, four-fifths of the refugees are in their homeland if by that is meant Palestine. And in terms of the claim of Pan-Arabism that most Arabs wish to join together in a United Arab nation, all of them are in such an Arab homeland. Clearly this cannot be what is meant.

7b. It may mean going back "to their own country" i.e. to live in an independent Arab State of Palestine.

This is apparently what the words often mean to outsiders. But there never was an independent Arab State of Palestine. Before the British Mandate, Palestine was politically nothing but the southern part of a sparsely inhabited province of the Turkish Empire known as Syria. *15)

7c. It may mean the expulsion of the Jews and either (i) the establishment of an Independent Arab State of Palestine, or (ii) the partition of the whole of Palestine among the other Arab states, or (iii) the inclusion of Palestine into one or another of the Unions of Arab States.

7d. It may mean nothing more specific than "back to 1947."

This is probably the nearest to what the words mean to many a refugee, and, taken literally, would imply the disappearance of the State of Israel together with more than a million Jews. This is, of course, no more feasible than a return to the conditions of 1900 when there were very few Zionist settlers in Palestine; or to the conditions of 1850 when there were between 100,000 and 200,000 people in the whole of Palestine (including Jordan), or to return to the conditions of King Solomon when, it is said, there were five or six million

---

*15) A chronological table of the successive political jurisdictions over Palestine since Biblical times is contained in Appendix No. 11.

Jews in Palestine.

7e. It may mean going to live in the new State of Israel as peaceful members of an Arab minority in a predominantly Jewish state.

Such a development would be something akin to what Zionist leaders of almost all shades of opinion used to profess as their goal before the establishment of the State of Israel - namely - a State of two ethnic communities, living in peace and in harmony, though politically predominantly Jewish. *18)

This is exactly what is implied by the famous United Nations General Assembly Resolution 194 (iii) when it states that "refugees wishing to return home and live at peace with their neighbors should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for property of those choosing not to return..." *16) The Director General of UNRWA, Mr. Labouisse, in his latest report to the UN Assembly refers to this Resolution as follows: "The great mass of the refugees continue to believe that a great injustice has been done to them and to express a desire to return to their homeland..." *17) meaning, presumably, their homes rather than their homeland. Surely compensation for the loss of homes should not be limited to those choosing not to return to their homeland.

7f. It may mean each refugee individually returning to his old home and to his old farm or job.

Where the property is still in the possession of the custodian of abandoned property and is vacant, it is possible for it to be restored to the owner. In many cases the property has been destroyed and all that is possible is for the refugee to be compensated either in cash or by the provision of other homes, farms, or jobs, generally only in other villages or towns (for the *16) Official Records of the Third Session of the General Assembly, Part 1 p.21. The full text of this Resolution ("Palestine-Progress Report of the United Nations Mediator") is reproduced in Appendix No. 12.

---

*17) Annual Report, 12th Session, Supplement No. 14 (A/3686) old ones have often been destroyed, too). In most cases the property has been changed, rebuilt, developed, and occupied, either by Jewish immigrants or by other Arabs who have been settled there. The displacement of the new occupants would not only involve endless litigation but would create a new set of refugees. And in most cases the conditions for the refugee and his family taking up the old life no longer exist.

*18) A summary of these professions and intentions and their appraisal is contained in Appendix No. 15.

7g. It may mean settling down to their old kind of life in the old kind of surroundings in some other Arab town or village if it is not possible to do this in the old place.

8. Israel is reluctant to admit large numbers of the refugees.

She argues that a considerable return of the refugees would prove disastrous to her economy; she expresses the wish to remain a predominantly Jewish state; and she is afraid of the refugees forming a Fifth Column which would be a serious threat to the existence of the State, surrounded as it is by hostile neighbors.

9. The refugees demand full compensation for property left by them in Israel.

10. Very few of the refugees have been made self-supporting under the rehabilitation plan of UNRWA, or have been able to emigrate.

Something over 7,200 were made self-supporting by an individual grant program operating in Jordan and Syria for over two years. From June 1956 to June 1957, 1122 Arab refugees (less than 1/8 of 1%) were helped to migrate to the United States and elsewhere.

The various economic development projects worked out for the Middle East were not designed as solutions to the Arab refugee problem as such. Although they could have alleviated the problem, they have all been rejected on political grounds or for a variety of other reasons.

11. The Israeli government has released the greater part of the frozen accounts of Arab refugees in the banks of Israeli Palestine. This involved about L4,000,000 in about 6,000 such blocked accounts and had practically no influence on the general situation of the refugees or on the relations between Israel and the Arab states.

12. It is estimated that the cost of settling an average Arab family (of 5½ persons), apart from the land, is something under $2500. and that for every two families settled on the land another family can make a living by providing needed services, at a comparable cost of housing and equipment. *19)

13. Full compensation for property left in Israel would not suffice to settle more than a small fraction of the refugees.

It has been estimated that only 6.4% of the Palestine refugee families owned more than £2,000 ($5,600), that only 40% owned more than £100 ($280), and that only 15% of the families owned more than the $2,500 or so that it takes to settle an average Arab family of 5½ persons on the land. *20)

14. Among the immigrants in Israel are about 150,000 Jews from Iraq and Egypt who had to abandon property there. These people similarly demand full compensation for property left by them in Arab countries.

These seem to be the essential relevant facts. The next thing is to enumerate the basic conditions that must be met if the problem is to be solved.

* * * * * * *

---

*19) Estimated possibilities of settlement of agricultural families in the various parts of the Middle East at a cost of less than $2,500. per family are contained in Appendix No. 16.

*20) See Appendix No. 17.

Specifications for a Solution

1. The solution must provide for an acceptable home and farm or other means of livelihood for every family of refugees including those who cannot show that they were actually residents of Israeli-Palestine in 1948 as well as those who accepted Jordanian (or other) citizenship since 1948.

2. The solution must be acceptable to the Arab refugees in acknowledging the justice of their claim (whatever be their rights under "International Law") to determine for themselves whether to give up or to preserve their birthright in the Israeli part of Palestine. They must be offered a genuine choice between (1) repatriation to Israel, or (2) resettlement in Arab Palestine, or (3) resettlement in one of at least two other Arab countries, with the same minimum conditions of livelihood provided in each case. They may, in addition, have other opportunities of emigration; and in this case, too, they should be assisted on the same scale as other refugees. Every refugee, however, must be given a genuine free choice at least between the first three alternatives.

3. It must provide for full compensation to every Arab refugee for the value of property left by him in Israel. The same right of compensation must be accorded to Jewish immigrants from Arab countries whose property was conficated.

4. The solution must be acceptable to Israel in the sense that it would not undermine her very existence, and must therefore provide for clear cut safeguards as to the peaceful intent of the refugees returning to Israel.

5. It must not appear to any nation to threaten its existence or its borders. It must therefore provide for some safeguards for the security of the frontiers of the Arab countries and of Israel against each other, and it must not impose any impossible economic burden on any country or generate any extreme political or military danger. *21) The repatriation and resettlement of hundreds of thousands of people cannot be implemented in the face of fire or frontier incidents, infiltrations, retaliatory raids and blockade. It does not make sense that Israeli ships bringing building material or agricultural instruments for the resettlement of the Arab refugees should be subject to blockade at the Suez Canal. *22)

*21) See Appendix No. 15.

6. The solution cannot be developed or carried out independently by one of the parties concerned or by a number of unconnected agencies. Restitution, compensation, repatriation, and resettlement must be in the hands of an International Authority so that all the parties will feel that they are being fairly treated.

7. The governments of the various Middle Eastern countries must make available such unused land as is suitable for settlement, and they must all cooperate in carrying out the task of resettlement and rehabilitation.

8. All these conditions must be provided at the same time as part of a unified plan or package. Abstract declarations, token gestures, or partial palliatives will not do. Even unilateral concessions (which can only be partial) such as Israel's readmission of 35,000 refugees or her release of L4,000,000 in blocked accounts, have no significant effect in relieving the tensions. The problem will yield only to an overall integrated attack on it from all sides at once. This does not mean that there cannot be discussion and modification of the plan, but unless all the conditions are provided together each will wait for the others to be provided first. The conditions form an indivisible set and it would be futile to provide for some of them without providing for all of them.

The Dimensions of the Problem

An unimpassioned examination of the facts of the situation and the

---

*22) The United Nations Security Council Resolution S/2322 Sept. 1, 1951.

conditions to be met shows that the problem is not as overwhelming or as intractable as has been suggested by both Arab and Israeli spokesmen.

The total cost of settlement of all the Arab refugees who are not able to pay the full cost themselves out of their compensation would come to less than $400 million. This is an outside figure and would pay for the settlement of 160,000 families who need assistance (out of the 185,000 Arab refugee families) at $2,500 per family. UNRWA estimates the cost of settlement of a family at $2,310. *23) and was able to set up over 7000 families in self-supporting activities at a cost of only $320 per family. This $400 million completely leaves out of account the contribution that could be provided by those refugees who would obtain less than enough compensation to pay for the full cost of their settlement, but enough to be able to pay part of it. It also makes no allowance for refugees who would be able to migrate elsewhere or who have found, or will have found, a satisfactory livelihood by themselves and will therefore cease to be refugees when they are faced with the settlement options. A closer study could very well show this amount to be very far off on the safe side. The settlement of the "million refugees would have to take between five and ten years, so that the annual cost would be between $40 million and $80 million.

Among possible sources of money to pay for this are:

1. The Israel Government Budget ($644 million in 1958)
2. The Oil Revenues of the Arab League Nations ($435 million in 1957)
3. Israel and the Arab armament expenditures (about $500 million in 1958)
4. U.S. funds for Economic Development and Assistance ($2,000 million in 1958) (?)

In addition to the costs of settlement there would be the costs of compensation. These would naturally fall on the government of Israel in the case of the refugees from Israeli Palestine and on the governments of Iraq and Egypt for Jews who left those countries since 1948 and were unable to take their property with them. In all these cases international loans might be available to these governments if needed to make the compensation possible.

---

*23) See Appendix 18.

* * * * * * *

The Crux of the Problem

Much more serious than the magnitude of the cost is an apparently irreconcilable conflict between the right of Arab refugees to "go back home" and Israel's refusal to readmit any large number of refugees. Her arguments are that such an influx would a) upset her economy, b) distort the Jewish character of the state and c) introduce a Fifth Column that would undermine or sabotage her existence as an independent nation.

One could hope to overcome the argument of the Israelis that the country is unable to absorb so many Arab refugees by reminding them that they are planning to absorb still larger number of Jews. One could hope to overcome their reluctance to have the country cease to be so predominantly Jewish by pointing out that until the flight of the Arabs in 1948 the Zionist leaders had always planned to live together with the Arabs in some sort of bi-national state. But one could never hope that pursuasion alone could overcome the fear of the Israelis that a very large influx of Arab refugees would be a danger to Israel's security - the fear that many of the refugees would return not to live as peaceful citizens but to subvert from within, and to join hostile forces from without, for the destruction of Israel. This possibility is not a purely imaginary one and could appear to Israel as a danger to her existence greater than she can be expected to run.

While one must not ignore these fears, one can point to a number of safe-guards which are inherent in the situation and to others which can be incorporated in the solution of the Arab Refugee Problem. These safeguards make it possible to protect both the rights of the refugees and the security of Israel.

Safeguards for Israel

1. Not all the refugees come from the Israeli part of Palestine, and those who were never there cannot claim to "go back."

2. The danger of an unacceptably large influx of returnees to Israel is at this stage only a theoretical one. A census of the preferences and plans of the refugees may show that it is quite unreal.

3. In very few cases will it be possible for an Arab refugee to go back to live in his old home in his old village and work his old farm or return to his old job. In hardly any cases will it be possible for him to go back completely to the old way of life in the new country that is Israel. He can get full compensation for his property and he can be given what help is necessary to set himself up on a farm or otherwise so as to be able to earn a satisfactory living. If this is accepted there remains the question where such alternative settlement should be.

If the refugee wishes simply to live in "Palestine," which is the country he was in before the upheaval of 1948, this wish is fulfilled just as much if he is settled in Arab Palestine as if he is settled in Israel. If, as would seem to be more plausible, the refugee, next to returning to his old home, really wishes to live the same kind of life as before in the same kind of surroundings, he is much more likely to find this in Arab Palestine, or in even other Arab countries, than in Israel.

4. If the refugees are made fully aware of the nature of the decision they are making, if they have genuine opportunities of equally satisfactory economic conditions of settlement in Arab Palestine or in other Arab countries, and if they do not risk losing any of their rights to compensation for property left in Israel no matter where they settle, then it may be expected that in most cases they will choose to live in an Arab country rather than in a "Zionist" country. Some of the refugees will have personal or family reasons for returning to Israel. Some of the refugees may prefer the kind of life that is possible in Israel. But the great majority may be expected to opt for settlement either in their own Arab Palestine or in another Arab country or union of Arab countries, where they can live in their own way the kind of life they want to live.

5. Even though many Arabs living in Israel are better off economically than their counterparts else-where in the Middle East, there is reason to believe that in most cases the Arab refugees will prefer to be settled in Arab countries rather than in Israel, not only because they will find there a more familiar and more congenial environment, but because, given the same absolute level of economic conditions they will be relatively better off in comparison with their neighbors in the Arab countries.

6. Almost 200,000 of the refugees are in Syria and Lebanon where they have largely been integrated into the economies of their host countries. It is improbable that many of these will want to be dislocated again.

7. The federation of Iraq with Jordan and the establishment of the Union of Syria with Egypt have increased the opportunities for the rehabilitation of the refugees outside Israel, with the improved prospects for the economic development of these Arab countries.

8. More than half of the refugees have acquired Jordanian citizenship, and among these some have reached high positions in the Jordanian government hierarchy. Many of these refugees will be reluctant to give up such positions and possibilities by immigrating into Israel.

9. The Palestine refugees are people like other people, and therefore will probably act according to individual self interest when confronted not with the abstract question of whether they "want to go back home" but with a practical and genuine free choice of where and how to rebuild their lives and to resume their normal and productive occupations and professions. This is further attested to by the fact that there has been no serious trouble with the 200,000 Arab inhabitants of Israel, in spite of continual incitement against Israel on the Arab radio stations, and in spite of security regulations and other limitations on their rights and privileges that must appear to the Arabs as discriminatory, and which would have to be eliminated in the overall solution.

10. The refugees who would choose to return to Israel would tend to be just those who would fit into the kind of society that is being built there, who will find in it a greater fulfillment of their life, and who therefore would not be filled with animosity to Israel.

11. There would be the requirement of indications of peaceful intent on the part of returnees.

12. Since all the countries involved would have to undertake to cooperate with the International Authority in charge of the operation, at least to the extent of providing land for the settlement projects and implementing the Armistice Agreements not to engage in hostile actions, the resulting alleviation of tensions would greatly diminish any "Fifth Column" dangers that still remained.

A Trial Period

13. Yet another inherent safeguard is the duration of the return. It would have to take between five and ten years for all the refugees to be settled, and this would give time for precautions to be taken if a dangerous situation should seem to be developing.

14. This safeguard can be strengthened by formalizing it in a planned trial period. The trial period should consist of the first two or three years of the operation, during which 200,000 refugees will be repatriated and resettled. During the trial period it will become clear what proportion of the refugees will want to settle in each of the different settlement areas, and whether the returnees to Israel develop into a peril for Israel's security.

If there should be serious trouble, Israel will naturally be entitled to exercise her sovereign rights in protecting herself in whatever manner she sees fit. If, however, there should be no serious trouble, the plan could continue smoothly until it is completed.

For all these reasons and with all these safeguards it is possible to combine the right of Israel to security with the right of every refugee to return.

This is not to say that with all these safeguards, Israel does not run any risk at all to her security or economy. But by doing nothing Israel runs still greater risks.

Safeguards for the Refugees

The refugees also subject themselves to risks in going back to Israel where they would constitute a minority and would therefore inevitably be subject to the decisions of the majority. They, too, are therefore in need of safeguards.

Against these risks the government of Israel would have to guarantee the following rights of returnees.

1. All returnees who have acquired no other citizenship should be granted full citizenship in Israel immediately on their return, without any social, ethnic or religious discrimination.

2. All returnees who have acquired other citizenship, shall be granted such full citizenship on the completion of their naturalization period, which should not be unreasonably long (e.g., not more than, say, three years from their immigration and declaration of intent to become Israeli citizens).

3. Such rights of equal citizenship should include the following:

(a) The right to move and settle and exercise any profession or business in any part of Israel and to own property.

(b) The right of full membership in the trade unions, the manufacturers associations, the cooperative movements, and the professional associations.

(c) The right to separate cultural, religious, educational and linguistic activities and development.

(d) The right to equal enjoyment of the benefits from the general development and the services provided by the country to any other groups of citizens.

(e) The right of emigration.

* * * * * * *

Internationalism, Integration and Separation

If this analysis is correct, complete freedom to return would still leave Palestine divided into Israel (or Jewish Palestine) and Arab Palestine. While this is in conflict with the ideals of many internationalists, including leading Zionists who wanted Palestine to develop into a bi-national State, it is not at all in conflict with the way it has been found possible to deal with such problems in the world at large in modern times.

In modern democratic societies, perhaps because of the increase in mobility and the greater degree of contact that people have with each other, people living in the same area are more and more treated in the same way. Integration is the key word, in the sense of equality of rights for all in the community. On the one hand this ideal is perfectly compatible with the protection, or even the encouragement, of cultural diversity, while on the other hand it is very closely related to the ideal of the ultimate unity of all nations in an integrated international community. Integration and internationalism are indeed only two aspects of the central ideal of modern democratic society - the ideal of the brotherhood of all men.

However, in many and important cases there are fundamental conflicts; and if the protagonists cannot come to agreement this can lead to complete breakdown--to violence, to massacres and to civil war. In such cases, as in the Biblical case of Abram and Lot, one must resort to a second-best solution--to Separation. "And Abram said to Lot . . . let there be no strife. Pray separate . . . if you take to the left hand, I will go to the right . . ." This is the only way to find peace if integration is impossible.

This is what has happened with refugees in all parts of the world. Where populations were displaced by temporary disturbances, as by floods or warfare, it is often most feasible for the displaced persons to go back when the disturbance has disappeared. But where the refugee problem is a result of a conflict between different elements in the population, on national, cultural, religious, linguistic or any other grounds, the successful solutions have in general been by resettlement in other parts, where the causes of the original trouble were absent or less severe, rather than by repatriation. The solution has been a separation of the populations that could not live in peace together.

The same trend is clear in Palestine. The original 1947 UN partition plan for Palestine into Jewish and Arab sectors was also an attempt to escape from the difficulties of integration between Jews and Arabs--of equality with friendship--by resorting to the inferior alternative of separation.

This can be seen in the complicated jigsaw pattern of the 1947 partition proposal which was necessary if it was to fit the existing settlements of Jews and Arabs at that time. Whether or not this partition would have worked if it had been accepted peacefully by everybody in 1947, (which is another fascinating topic that we must keep away from) it clearly does not perform this function of division for the present configuration of Jewish and Arab settlement in Palestine. Any validity it may have had when proposed in 1947 has passed away with the disappearance of the population distribution on which it was built. The backing of the 1947 partition plan by the United Nations has given it a kind of sanctity in the eyes of many. Nevertheless the recent proposals to adopt it at the present time when it could only create new displacements and injustices, especially if accompanied by a demand for the immediate return of all the Arab refugees, must be considered as aiming at the destruction of Israel, rather than at the solution of the problem of the Arab refugees.

The present division of Palestine into Israel and Arab Palestine is only another separation, simpler than the 1947 partition proposal and more appropriate to the present distribution of population (though still far from ideal), which may make it possible for the two elements to live in peace, even as Lot and Abram did, by not coming too closely into contact with each other.

The finer ideal is for all men to live together in peace. That is the ideal of International Integration. But where men are not able to live together in peace, then it is better to have a Separation in which each group can practice peaceful and harmonious living among more compatible members until they are ready for a higher integration. This resort to the second-best solution of separation is all the more satisfactory where it can come about voluntarily, as was possible in the case of Abram and Lot and as is now possible in the case of the Palestine arab refugees.

THE SOLUTION

1. A special United Nations Commission or Repatriation and Resettlement Authority (RRA) should be established, responsible to the United Nations

Assembly and charged with the task of solving the Palestine Refugee Problem by the repatriation and resettlement of the Palestine Arab refugees, and with the supervision of the payment of compensation for property left in Israeli Palestine by Arab refugees and in Arab countries by Jewish emigrants.

2. The RRA should be set up on the pattern of the Mixed Armistice Commissions with equal Arab and Israeli representation, under the Chairmanship of an independent representative of the United Nations Assembly.

3. Provisions should be made for the Arab refugees to present their views, claims and desires either through their several existing organizations, or by a Unified Committee organized to represent all the refugees. Similar provisions should be made for the Jewish emigrants from Arab countries, who now live in Israel and who have claims for property left in Arab countries.

4. Every Arab refugee who can show to the satisfaction of the RRA, that he had an established residence in Israeli Palestine in 1948 should be given the option of being settled (with his immediate family) and provided with satisfactory housing and a farm, or other means of livelihood,

(a) in Palestine (i.e. with no preference as between Israel and Arab Palestine),

(b) in Israel,

(c) in Arab Palestine, or

(d) in another Arab country.

5. Other Arab refugees should be given the options (c) and (d) with a choice of at least three different places of settlement, with the same standards of housing and farm or other means of livelihood.

6. All Palestine Arab refugees and all Jews who left Arab states since 1948 should be paid full compensation for all property left behind. This compensation should be completely independent of where they should decide to settle.

7. On determining in which of the alternatives he opts for settlement, each refugee who opts for being settled in Israel and who is not a citizen of another State should pledge allegiance to the State of Israel and should undertake to abide by its laws and to live at peace with his neighbors and fellow citizens.

8. If he is a citizen of another state, he should nevertheless be admitted for settlement in Israel on:

(a) declaring it his intention to live at peace with his neighbors,

(b) renouncing his other citizenship (as long as the State of which he is a citizen is not at peace with Israel), and

(c) applying for citizenship in Israel.

9. Any Arab State should be entitled to apply procedures similar to those of #7 and #8 for refugees who opt to be settled within its borders.

10. The schedule of repatriation and resettlement should be decided by the RRA.

11. Israel and the Arab countries should undertake to cooperate faithfully with the RRA in its tasks at least to the extent of:

(a) providing land and finances for the RRA.

(b) faithfully carrying out the letter and the spirit the Armistice Agreements of 1949 which stipulate that "No aggressive action by the armed forces--land, sea or air--of either party shall be undertaken, planned or threatened against the people or the armed forces of the other; . . . the right of each party to security and freedom from fear of attack by the armed forces of the other shall be respected."

12. The RRA should undertake a detailed study and census to determine:

a) which refugees were established residents of Israeli Palestine in 1948 and who consequently have the right of resettlement in Israel.

b) which refugees had property in Israeli Palestine, which Jews who left

Iraq and Egypt had property there, how much each had, and to what extent (if at all) he has already received compensation.

c) what are the technical and economic possibilities of agricultural and other settlement of Arab refugees in Israel and in the Arab countries. (This should be done rapidly in the first place on the basis of various studies that have already been made--the Johnston Plan for the Jordan River Valley development *24), the UNRWA rehabilitation and development plans, etc. The RRA could then start on the other activities rapidly if possible concentrating first on the "neediest" cases among the refugees, while more careful and more detailed studies were still continuing.)

13. The RRA should set up repatriation and resettlement projects in as many of these places as are feasible so as to give the refugees as wide a choice as possible.

14. The RRA should conduct intensive educational and informational drives to bring home to the refugees the nature of the different options that will be open to them. In particular, it should undertake to educate the refugees on what forms of "going home" are feasible and are involved in the different options and should protect them against all coercion in the expression of such options. It should continue this educational activity throughout the period of settlement, making use of contacts between those refugees who will have been settled in the different ways and those who would still be in the camps or on the ration rolls of the UNRWA as refugees. In connection with this it should conduct periodic surveys of the attitudes of the refugees as between the different options in the light of the educational activities and the reports they will be getting from settlers in the different areas.

15. The RRA should plan the settlements on a flexible basis, adjusting the development of each as far as possible in accordance with the preferences of the refugees between them as these preferences are affected by continuing

---

*24) See Appendix No. 9.

information about the conditions in the settlements as made available to the refugees by the RRA, by reports from settlers to their refugee friends, by visits to settlements, and in any other ways.

16. The RRA should plan the repatriation and resettlement in several phases. The first phase should take not more than three years from the setting up of the RRA and should be considered as a Trial Period during which 200,000 refugees would be settled.

17. While refugees may register for priority of settlement in particular places, they should have the right to change their registrations at intervals and by procedures to be laid down by the RRA.

18. Refugees obtaining compensation through the RRA should be permitted to withdraw half of the compensation, up to, say $1000 per family immediately on the clearance of the compensation, but should be required to leave the balance in the hands of the RRA, which should apply $2,500 toward the cost of settlement of the family and out of any remainder should pay to UNRWA the per capita cost of maintenance of the family from that date on. Any balance still remaining should be paid to the refugee on his (and his family's ceasing to be a refugee under the care of UNRWA, either by resettlement or in any other way.

19. The RRA should be charged with raising the funds, from the Israel and Arab governments as well as from other sources, to undertake the compensation, repatriation, and resettlement activities.

20. Israel should show the genuineness of her concern for the Arab refugees by pledging a part of her income--whether from foreign aid or from domestic sources--toward the financing of the RRA.

21. The Arab nations should show the genuineness of their concern for the rehabilitation of their fellow Arabs into a decent and productive life by contributing a percentage to the RRA of the Middle East Oil royalties and transit fees as well as a small percentage of their national budgets (taking into account the saving, both to Israel and to the Arab states, from the diminution in armament expenditures that would be made possible by the alleviation of tensions through the work of the RRA).

22. The U.S. and other members of the UN should be prepared to contribute substantially toward the cost of the solution of the Arab refugee problem. Even if the U.S. alone were to pay the cost of the whole project, it would be a very cheap price even if considered only from the point of view of the contribution it would make to the alleviation of tensions in the Middle East and the consequent reduction in the danger of world war.

23. All of these proposals should be considered only as inseparable parts of an integral solution of the total problem. The integral solution is of course subject to discussion and modification, but the different parts cannot stand by themselves. They are all contingent on the adoption of the plan as a whole.

* * * * * * *

With these twenty-three points the conditions would be met and the problem solved. The refugees would be restored to meaningful, productive lives. They would have their property or its fair value restored to them. Each would be able to "go back home" to the highest degree that the objective facts allow. All the states in the region would enjoy greater security and easier consciences. And the danger of war would have been substantially reduced, both for the Middle East and for the whole world.

Only one question remains: Is the solution practical? Is there any chance of it being carried into effect?

Previous discussions of the problem have suffered grievously from complication and from confusion by the "fascinating topics" we have tried to keep out. Because of these the difficulties were greatly exaggerated, and those that attempted to deal with the problem were unduly discouraged. It became almost axiomatic to declare that the problem was too delicate to touch, or too hot to handle, or too closely involved in the cold war, that the economic magnitudes were too vast to be contemplated or that the hostility of the conflicting parties too unbounded to permit of any compromise. But we have seen that the magnitudes shrink into the realm of the manageable as soon as one dares to try to measure their vastness. In spite of official intransigence there are groups in Israel, both Jewish and Arab, who are genuinely seeking a feasible solution; and in the Arab states, where official pressures are much greater and non-conformist expression is almost impossible, there are many people who look at the situation soberly and who in private reveal a less passionate attitude and a hope for a constructive solution. Among the refugees themselves, in spite of belligerent declarations, political pressures, intimidation by agitators and the securities and services of the refugee camp and the rations, thousands have shed their refugee status to find a productive life outside of Israel. World public opinion is effective, too. It persuaded Israel to withdraw its armies from Sinai, and it induced Egypt to accept the UN Emergency Force.

Hatred is not eternal. A solution conceived in Justice can dissolve hostility and create a new climate for eventual cooperation, perhaps ultimately to lead to the supersession of Separation by Integration. But what is needed now is a dispelling of the discouragement and intimidation born of an almost traditional exaggeration both of the vastness of the problem and of the immovability of the resistances to any solution. Whichever party involved in this situation would take the initiative in bringing about the establishment of a Repatriation and Resettlement Administration on the lines suggested, could break the log jam that is holding up the resolution of the Arab Refugee Problem and would thereby perform an act of unusually effective service for humanity, for security, and for peace.

Samuel, Howard D.

THE SIDNEY HILLMAN FOUNDATION

INC.

15 UNION SQUARE WEST, NEW YORK 3, N. Y. · PHONE ALGONQUIN 5-7800

November 13, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am enclosing the circular announcing the opening of the Sidney Hillman Foundation awards for 1958.

I hope you will keep your eyes and ears open for possible submissions; we would welcome your suggestions.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

Howard D. Samuel

Howard D. Samuel
Executive Director

TO PERPETUATE THE IDEALS FOR WHICH HE LIVED AND DIED

(Please Post)

The Sidney Hillman Foundation, Inc.

15 Union Square, New York 3, N. Y.

Prize Awards — 1958

The Sidney Hillman Foundation will award prizes of $500 each for outstanding contributions dealing with themes relating to the ideals which Sidney Hillman held throughout his life, and which he expressed in the words reproduced at the right.

Such themes would include the protection of individual civil liberties, improved race relations, a strengthened labor movement, the advancement of social welfare and economic security, greater world understanding, and related problems.

Contributions may be in the fields of daily or periodical journalism, fiction, non-fiction, radio and television, drama and motion pictures.

All written contributions must have been published in 1958.

Radio-television, drama and film contributions must have been produced under professional auspices in 1958.

"We want a better America, an America that will give its citizens, first of all, a higher and higher standard of living so that no child will cry for food in the midst of plenty. We want to have an America where the inventions of science will be at the disposal of every American family, not merely for the few who can afford them. An America that will have no sense of insecurity and which will make it possible for all groups, regardless of race, creed or color to live in friendship, to be real neighbors; an America that will carry its great mission of helping other countries to help themselves."

SIDNEY HILLMAN, 1946

AWARD WINNERS — 1957

WILMA DYKEMAN and JAMES STOKELY for their book, Neither Black Nor White.

HARRY S. ASHMORE for his editorials on school integration in the Arkansas Gazette.

A. M. SECREST for his editorials on civil rights and civil liberties in the Cheraw (S.C.) Chronicle.

GIORGIO DE SANTILLANA for his article, "Galileo and J. Robert Oppenheimer," in The Reporter.

THEODORE AYERS for his interview with Khrushchev on "Face the Nation," CBS-TV.

GEORGE A. VICAS for the debates between American and Soviet scientists and educators on "Radio Beat," CBS-Radio.

RULES:

1. DEADLINE: Submissions for a 1958 Sidney Hillman Prize Award must be received by the Sidney Hillman Foundation, Inc., 15 Union Square, New York 3, N. Y., not later than FEBRUARY 1, 1959.
2. MATERIAL MAY BE SUBMITTED BY the author, his publication or publisher, or by anyone connected with it.
3. ONLY WORK APPEARING IN 1958 IS ELIGIBLE FOR CONSIDERATION.
4. THERE ARE NO APPLICATION FORMS. Only a brief accompanying letter is necessary.
5. FINAL SCRIPTS must be submitted in connection with radio, television, drama and film awards. Films and records should not be submitted.
6. NEWSPAPER AND MAGAZINE submissions should, if possible, be submitted loose, not mounted.
7. UNPUBLISHED MANUSCRIPTS of any kind are not eligible for consideration and should not be submitted.
8. THE FOUNDATION will acknowledge all submissions, and will endeavor to return submissions if requested, but the Foundation cannot be held responsible for the return of any submissions.
9. A PANEL OF JUDGES will make the Awards and its decisions will be final.

L F. SANDERS • 24 LEWIS HILL ROAD • HARTSDALE, N. Y.
TELEPHONE: WHITE PLAINS 9-2972

DECEMBER 24, 1958

MR. EDGAR R. MURROW

580 PARK AVENUE

NEW YORK, N.Y.

DEAR MR. MURROW:

I AM SOMEWHAT HESITATING IN ASKING YOUR TIME FOR READING THE ADDRESS ON " AMERICA AND THE FOREIGN CORRESPONDENT IN THE USA" I MADE AT HAMILTON COLLEGE SOME MONTHS AGO. THE INTEREST YOU SHOWED DURING OUR SHORT MEETING AT THE INTERNATIONAL PRESS BALL LAST FRIDAY EVENING, ENCOURAGES ME HOWEVER TO SEND YOU A COPY OF IT WITH THIS LETTER.

ALTHOUGH I MAY NOT HAVE EXPRESSED MYSELF AS FREELY AS I WOULD HAVE DONE IN MY OWN LANGUAGE, I HOPE THAT I MADE CLEAR WHAT HAS BEEN ON MY MIND ALREADY FOR A LONG TIME: THAT SOMETHING HAS TO BE DONE WITH REGARD TO THE LACK OF UNDERSTANDING OF THE SIGNIFICANCE OF A FOREIGN PRESSCORPS AS REPRESENTED BY THE FOREIGN PRESS ASSOCIATION.

I WOULD LOVE LEARNING YOUR OPINION ON SOME OF MY THOUGHTS AND I AM LOOKING FORWARD TO HAVING THE OPPORTUNITY FOR A LONGER TALK AT YOUR CONVENIENCE. I AM LEAVING NOW ON A SHORT VACATION IN KEY WEST, BUT I WILL BE BACK ON JANUARY 10.

WISHING YOU AND MRS. MURROW A VERY HAPPY NEW YEAR,

SINCERELY YOURS,

Paul F. Sanders

PAUL F. SANDERS

S. CORRESPONDENT "HET PAROOL" • AMSTERDAM (HOLLAND)

AMERICA AND THE FOREIGN CORRESPONDENT IN THE USA

PAUL F. SANDERS - HAMILTON COLLEGE

June 7, 1958

Dr. McEwen, Mr. Minn ch. of the Board of Trustees, Dr. Pritchard pres. Pres. of Alumni, Alumni mend of the faculty, members of the graduating class.

I have often listened with the greatest interest to the TV-program "YOU ~~WERE~~ ARE THERE", an hourlong reproduction of an historical event as seen through the eyes of the modern newspaperman. The events being part of American history, the reporters on this show, interviewing its principal characters, are of course supposed to be American newsmen. In fact they are members of the staff of CBS, well known to all listeners.

Looking at this show I could not help thinking what kind of questions I would put to any of your famous Presidents, Chiefs-Justice, Senators, Generals, Inventors of the past, if I had to interview him as a foreign correspondent. Would I be able to ask him, in the context of the show, any reasonable question as logical and understandable to the millions of listeners as those put forward by any CBS-reporter?

The answer must be negative.

All of you to whom these events are part of your history, would be able to project yourselves in the period as if you actually took part in the occurrence. I, for my part, could merely look at it from a distance, as an outsider. Surely, I could feel involved, as I can feel involved in a Shakespearean play. But my emotional reactions would never be the same as yours. I would spoil the show, because I could see the event only as a play, the principal characters only as actors. What is reality to you, would be fiction to me. I could not pretend to having been there, and for that matter, neither would any of my fellow foreign correspondents.

Why is that so? Why is it that American and Foreign journalists who would have felt almost strangers say 50 years ago, now sit side-by-side at press conferences at the White House, The State Department, The United Nations, seeing eye to eye to the same problems although their approach may differ, working closely together as citizens of one world?

Well, I find some of the answers in my own experience. When I was about 17, one of the boys in my class at the gymnasium in Amsterdam, the son of one of the notable residents of the town, got into some difficulties. I don't remember exactly of what kind, but he had to be expelled from school. There was some scandal involved and to evade publicity his parents decided to send him to the USA. That was quite a natural thing to do in these days. When a family of some standing and means happened to have a son who was regarded to be a good-for-nothing, he was sent over the ocean, to America. Nobody knew him here, nobody cared and the boy could try to make his way in the land of opportunities.

I can assure you that America in these days for us youngsters was not in the first place the homeland of Washington or Lincoln, but of skyscrapers, a couple of fabulous multi-millionaires, of gangsters and other kind of failures, with only a few exceptionally remarkable personalities like Edison, Helen Keller, The Wright Brothers, Edgar Allan Poe, Walt Whitman and a few others. To immigrate of your own free will to the USA seemed to us to be the last resort for a man.

In the beginning of this century one of our ministers in Washington, coming back to Holland for a vacation, was asked for his advice by somebody who thought about immegrating to the USA. The Minister was very much against it and when the other said to him that he had heard that so many immigrants had done well in America, he answered: "Done well? That is all old womens talk. If they had done well, they would have returned to their homeland...."

With this philosophy about America, no European newspaper considered sending a representative to this part of the world.

According to all available records, the very first regular foreign correspondent to cover the American scene was a British gentleman, named William Howard Russell. He had covered the Crimean War for the London Times and was sent over as its correspondent to this country to observe the war between the states. He filed his stories by ordinary mail whenever a steamship left from this coast.

About forty years later another British newspaperman arrived in Washington, this time for the London Daily Telegraph. When he made his formal introductary visit to the White House, with top hat and in striped pants, President Theodore Roosevelt reportedly greeted him with the words: "It sure is high time you fellows begin to discover America..."

Yet, Europe still did not seem to think so. In the early days of this century only few journalists from overseas came to this part of the world. The stories they sent home were mainly of a general nature, more often relating to the way their nationals lived in this country than to broader aspects of the American way of life. They seldom cabled any news unless it concerned the stock exchange or shipping business. Don't forget that in that period Europe still was the great investor in the USA, just the opposite from the situation to-day. So, the most wanted information did not concern American politics but business life in this country. Some of these early journalists acted at the same time as agents for their newspapers in trying to sell advertising-space in their respective papers to American concerns interested in the European market.

With the first world war the picture started to change. On the initiative of the White House more or less regular meetings were organized between the accredited press representatives of the allied countries and the press officer of President Wilson, in order to inform them about the American war efforts. Grouped together by the common interests of the allies, these newspapermen decided to form a foreign press association along the line of similar organizations in the European capitals. It had at its start exactly eleven members: eight from Great Britain, two from France, one from Italy. The founders were Frank Dilnot of the London Daily Express and Percy S. Bullen of the London Daily Telegraph. It had to be decided, head or tail, which of them would have the honor of being the first President of the infant association. Dilnot won. Bullen undertook the office of General Secretary-Treasurer, an office that, as he told us many years later, was at first a highly nominal one, the seat of the Secretariat being his breast pocket where he used to store the association's file...

Percy Bullen died last year, almost 91 years old, only a couple of months after he had written us how much pride he took in the growth of the organization he had helped to build.

Between the twenties and thirties the group of foreign journalists grew slowly. Most of the foreign newspapers relied for their information about the USA almost entirely on the wire-services, and printed those stories about the big national events, from earthquakes or hurricanes, muck-raking, labor troubles, racial conflicts, gangsterdom or depression to Presidential elections, industrial or technological developments, individual achievements and - not to be forgotten - Hollywood.

The period of the New Deal brought again a change in the situation. People in Europe became aware that something was happening here that could not be covered by bringing it merely as straight news. Interpretation was needed and more correspondents were sent over to get a first hand picture of what was going on in the new world.

Still, although the foreign press association had grown in stature enough to have its 25th anniversary in 1943 celebrated by a big dinner in the Waldorf-Astoria with Secretary Frank Knox as its main speaker, the great influx of foreign correspondents came only after the second world war and the establishment of the United Nations. In its fourtieth year of existence the membership of the FPA now nears 300, representing fifty countries from all continents. More than half of them are active full-time correspondents who file their stories by airmail, cable and radio. The others who are working part-time are filing almost exclusively by airmail.

Through them an average of between 700,000 and one million words flow daily across the seas. The big bulk of it comes out of New York City where, in the home town of the United Nations and the largest business and financial as well as cultural center of the country, most correspondents and foreign news agencies have made their home. Only some of the largest foreign newspapers and agencies have offices also in Washington, DC and at the West Coast.

How this astounding average of daily words exactly splits up is difficult to tell. From a survey among the members of the FPA which however has no scientific value at all, it could be concluded that about 10 pct of the totals deal with the United Nations, 3o pct with American National affairs - both domestic and foreign politics - and the rest with business, finance, technology, science, arts, literature, social life, fashions, sports and, in general, with what makes America tick; how it lives, works, relaxes, thinks, travels, strives.

There you have why we would not dare to compete with our American colleagues in a program like "YOU ARE THERE". There you have in a nutshell in what respect the situation has changed; we now are here because journalism at last had to discover America, after it developed its politics from a hands-off attitude to a hands-in one and had become the creditor of the world instead of its debtor. We are here because the world at large is not longer satisfied to get the straight news from your wire-services. It wants information about the country that took the lead on D-Day, that forced the United Nations through, that initiated the Marshall-Plan, the Fullbright-Act, the Point-Four-Program, the Atom-for-Peace-Idea; the country that invented nylon, and the Salk-vaccine; the country of the Sears-Roebuck-Catalogue, the country also of MacCarthy, the Walter-McCarren-Act or Little Rock.

The Jeep.

The Peoples of the world have developed a growing curiosity about America, its possibilities, its paradoxes. They want to know what kind of man the American is, what is driving him, how he became a leader in international affairs, how the people educate their children, what a skilled worker or a school teacher can do with his income, what Americans think of the East-West-Struggle, and what have you.

Do we know the answers? And how thoroughly do we fulfill our responsible task?

You can be sure that we try hard to give the answers our readers are waiting for; that our only desire is to do our job the best we can. We know from experience that general understanding in its true sense can be arrived at only when those who inform the public, have come to know the people about whom they write. But to interpret the actions and reactions of the people you write about, it is of the utmost importance to get to know them in their own environment. It is not possible to learn what a typical American community stands for without having seen it, having lived in it for some time, having spoken to the people who make up such a community.

But how can we come to such a result?

It is an unfortunate fact that most of the foreign correspondents rarely move beyond the New York-Washington DC-Axis. They come from soft currency countries and are being sent over here with great financial effort and often sacrifice on the part of their publishers who are not able to furnish them with expense-accounts of any significance. Many of the highest paid executives of our newspapers earn less than the foreign correspondent needs for his bare necessities in this country where the cost of living is the highest of the entire world. On top of that come the expenses for cables which rates are so high - much higher indeed than elsewhere - that many of us are restricted to airmail-coverage. For these reasons the large majority of the foreign newspapers are represented only by one man who has to cover the USA as a whole, almost a continent mind you! Not being able to travel around, he depends a great deal for his information on what he reads in the American papers. But nowhere in New York is there any one center where he can sit down and read local papers from all over the country. There is only one place, at Times Square, where he can buy them. If he has the time to go there every day, which ones should he buy and how many?

Certainly, the big-town nespapers like the N.Y. Times or the Washington-Post have their regional reporters who write regularly fairly full reports from all over the country. But do they give us the atmosphere of the country? The feel of the mood of the grass-roots? Can reading them give us what we need for a personal interpretation of what people outside the mass-cities think? Can it give us as fair an understanding of the problem of the grass roots as would be desirable?

The answer is no, because there is no substitute for human contact.

The result of this unfortunate situation is that our newspapers abroad still depend a great deal on the news coverage from the American wire agencies. They do the best they can and that means that they generally do an excellent job. But for a newspaper-reader in India or Egypt, in West Germany or Sweden it is not at all the same thing to be informed by an American wire service as by his own correspondent. You not only have to know the people you write about, but as well those you write for. The wire services don't send different stories about the same subject to the various countries. They send their cables to the world at large. But the world does not react as one man.

Perhaps I can illustrate this. One of the West-European correspondents was on home leave just at the beginning of the incidents in Little Rock. He encountered strong anti-American feelings among his fellow countrymen. Most of them were informed merely by the factual reports of AP and UP and it was quite obvious that almost nobody realized how much the South felt hurt by what they considered an encroachment by the Federal Government of their State Rights. Most of the people my friend met did not even realize that there are still strong feelings of sovereignty among the various states. Living in smaller countries, unities already for many centuries, they almost have forgotten that America is a Federation of States. So, when my friend was asked to speak about the Little Rock situation over the radio, he started to remind his listeners of the fact that America is a Federation in which the States have many individual laws and rights. He then asked them to think for a moment that a United Europe was already in existence and that on the initiative of one of the Northern States a law would be proposed to forbid the bullfights. Do you think, he asked his listeners, that Spain would accept such a law without protest? Wouldn't you rather expect Spain to threaten with Revolution or even a Separatistic Movement? And wouldn't many coolheaded member of Parliament try to convince his colleagues that some transition-time would be preferable?

AP or UP would never have thought of such an approach. My friend however knew about whom and to whom he was speaking.

The balance of a true and honest image of the USA has to be found in the stories sent out by the representatives of the newspapers of the 50 countries who have correspondents here.

In my opinion the USA has not yet found the way to facilitate us in giving this image as fully and objectively as we want to do. It has not yet fully understood the tremendous importance of the work of the foreign correspondents, the impact of the fact that the stories they are filing day-by-day, by cable, airmail or shortwave, will influence world opinion at least as much as what the United States Information Service is doing.

We have in this country all the freedom a democracy has to offer to the press. We can write about whatever we want and whatever we wish to write. And that is more freedom than some correspondents have in their own country. What couldn't be made of this opportunity if we had the means to inform ourselves thoroughly about the American people as a whole!

The Government spends big amounts of money to organize trips around the USA by groups of newspapermen from abroad who are invited to stay here for a couple of months and are shown around on a heavy schedule. I don't underestimate the value of having as many people as possible come to the USA and see for themselves. But seeing and knowing are two different things. These people go home with many impressions, more often than not overwhelmed by what they experienced. They have seen more of the country than most of the correspondents who are stationed in New York or Washington with the task of interpreting the USA, a task specially useful, indeed indespensable in a country where the meaning and purpose of many acts of the Government are so often distorted by ill chosen and too early spoken words. Would it not be much more valuable to have them travelling around from time to time? Almost everywhere overseas the foreign correspondents get special rates on all public means of transportation, except here where the costs of transportation are higher than anywhere in the world. What a difference in possibilities for instance between an American correspondent in India and his Indian colleague over here! Not only does the American there get all kinds of facilities, but if he wants to go from one end of the country to the other, he has the means to charter his own plane and to gather the news first hand where ever he wants.

There is more to this lack of facilities here than most people are aware of. Our readers want no less to be informed - and that on a regular basis about what is going on here in the cultural field than about political, economic or social affairs. They are eager to get reports about the newest Broadway Plays and they expect their correspondents to be able to give as full a picture of the cultural life in the USA as American correspondents are able to give from the capitals of Europe. There, any foreign correspondent by showing his credentials gets free entry to all theaters, concert-halls, opera-houses. During the eleven years I have been working in New York I have not succeeded in getting admission to a first performance on Broadway, nor to any performance, as a correspondent. I have not been able to see My Fair Lady.

Now, producers and theatre-owners abroad are no less business minded than those in this country. But they know how sensative the reactions of world opinion are and the high value placed on their cultural achievements. Here, in getting no to my request, even when asking for a paid admission for one of the first performances, the producer showed a total indifference for any report in my paper. And all of my colleagues can tell you of the same experience, with the exception sometimes of the British journalists, and that not because of any cultural consideration, by no means, but mainly because a favorable story in a London newspaper may lead to an easier business-agreement with a producer over there.

I understand quite well that in this land of free enterprise many people would fear any Governmental control on this level. I wanted only to illustrate my point that, I think, is important enough for somebody to give serious thought to finding some solution.

Speaking of facilities, I could tell you of other remarkable differences in the way the foreign correspondent is treated here and abroad, although in this respect some progress may be acknowledged during recent years. Most of my colleagues come here on a special visitors visa that has to be extended every year. The extention costs 10 dollars and everytime the same paperwork is required for filling out the application-forms. Before I came to the USA I visited the American Embassy in the Hague, asking for introductions and information where to go to become accredited without delay at the State Department, The United Nations etc.

I got all the help I wanted and felt sure that nothing would interfere with my work. After having been here for a couple of years and having filed for a new extention of stay, I all of a sudden got a cable from the Immigration-Office, informing me that my extention had been refused and that I had to leave these shores within a few days. No reason was given, nothing. Can you imagine what that means for a correspondent? Did I have to inform my boss in Amsterdam that I was thrown out of the country on grounds that were completely unknown to me? Fortunately I had made some friends in the State Department. I called them to tell what had happened and they were no less flabbergasted than I was myself. They told me not to worry. They would handle this thing for me. In fact within two days, the longest 48 hours of my life, I got another cable from the Immigration-people telling me that my extention had been granted and asking me to forget about the first cable. I never got any official word what had caused their first decisiion. The only thing my friends could tell me was that some error had been made, that there had been a case of mistaken identity in taking up the wrong file. I have never had any difficulty thereafter. But you can imagine that such an experience, although it never made me to identify the negligence of some individual in the office of the Department of Immigration with America as a whole, can't give anyone the feeling of security he needs in doing his work. For it shows a state of mind with respect to the foreign journalist corps that needs adjustment to the facts. The facts being that the USA accomodates a foreign Press-Corps that has among its members some of the elite of the working Press of the World, whose names are often household-words in their home-country. Their work is of no less importance than that of the foreign Diplomats, often perhaps of greater importance, because of the daily influence they have on world-opinion with regard to their host country.

If it is true, and I think it is, that there is no greater safeguard for freedom of information than diversity of opinion, it is no less true that everything possible should be done to facilitate this diversity. In this critical age of ours nothing is of greater importance than to develop a sympathetic understanding among peoples. The more comfortably the foreign correspondent can work, the more he can see and learn in the country he has to interpret, the nearer he may come to this goal.

Society's requirement of the press in our days is greater in variety, quantity and quality than that of any previous period. This has greatly increased the responsibilities both of the journalist and of the country where he works: of the journalist towards his host country and his readers at home; of the host country with respect to the possibilities it offers the foreign correspondent to fulfill his task.

I can speak in the name of the vast majority of the foreign Press-Corps in the USA in stating that they are deeply aware of their responsibilities. With the growth of anti-American feelings throughout the world during the last 4 or 5 years - mostly more anti-American politics than anti-Americans as individuals - it would be easy indeed to write stories which could delight the superficial reader at home and strengthen the popularity of the correspondent; ironical, satyrical stories, poking fun at gangsterism, delinquency, segregation-items, Bossim and what have you.

Such stories however are very rare exceptions indeed. What almost all of us are looking for is the news behind the news and, in interpreting this, giving a true picture of what is going on in the minds and hearts of the people everywhere in this amazing young, vital, hospitable and idealistic country.

In conclusion let me tell you a story I once read in one of your magazines. It told about a girl in a small town who adored her teacher. The teacher left the town when the girl was only in third grade, but she always remembered her as the dearest and loveliest person she had ever met. The girl grew up, married and moved to another part of the land. After quite a while, when she came back to the place where she was born, her mother, who still lived there, told her that the teacher, now an old lady, had come back to town. She immediately called her and went to visit her with her mother.

That visit gave her the shock of her life.

The teacher was the same dear woman with the same lovely eyes, the same beautiful voice; but her face was mutilated by ugly scars.

Going home the girl asked her mother what had happened, where she got these scars. "What do you mean", the mother asked, "She had them as long as I know her, since her childhood..."

Nations are like people. Some have their scars and it takes us a long time to see them. When we do so it may give us a momentary shock. But we easily overcome it, realizing why we did not see it before.

For most of us, foreign correspondents living in this country, there are moments of such shocks followed however by moments of realization why we felt shocked. It is a deep and satisfying experience, I can assure you.

I want to assure you at the same time of my deep gratitude for the honor this illustrous college is going to bestow upon me. I feel it as a recognition of the work of the Foreign Press-Corps as a whole and I am convinced that it will encourage my colleagues as much as myself to follow the highest traditions of our wonderful profession.

Sanderson, Raymond

July 31, 1959

Mr. Raymond Sanderson
First Baptist Church
Clinton, Tennessee

Dear Mr. Sanderson:

As Mr. Murrow is away, having already begun his year's sabbatical leave, I am answering your letter of July 9 on his behalf. I read him your letter over the telephone and he asked me to thank you for your courtesy in writing to tell him of the progress you have made, and to wish you good luck in your endeavours.

Sincerely yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

Dr. Raymond I. Sanderson, Pastor

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

Clinton, Tennessee

July 9, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow and Friendly:

We broke ground, last Sunday, for our new $278,000.00 educational plant. It was a grand occassion and one which we shall long remember.

I am enclosing an order of service, used in the breaking of the ground. I feel that you would want to see it, knowing that you have been quite interested in this for a long time.

We deeply appreciate the contribution made by you and Mr. Friendly to our church. Your generosity and sincere milk of human kindness will ever be appreciated by the Clinton folk.

Our people are moving forward very gracefully and prayerfully in the issues faced. I feel that we are well on our way toward revealing to the world the meaning of brotherhood.

As Pastor, I do solicit your prayers and those of the others as we construct our new building. This building will be dedicated to the teachings of Jesus Christ and His concept of the human being.

May I at this time express my appreciation for your wonderful Person to Person program. I watch this with much interest and pleasure.

Yours for a great future,

Sincerely,

Raymond Sanderson

Raymond Sanderson

RS:im

6

Service At Scene Of Ground Breaking

Pastor Presiding

Welcome of Visitors . . . . . Pastor

Greetings from the City . . . . . Mayor T. L. Seeber

Greetings . . . . . By Mr. C. S. Kincaid, Sr.
Chairman of the Board of Magnet Mills, Inc.

Music Meditation—"Arise O Church of God" . . . . Chancel and Concord Choirs

Responsive Reading . . . . . By Pastor and People

Pastor: Why are we gathered here this morning?

People: To dedicate this ground and ourselves to God for greater service in Christian work.

Pastor: For what reason are we building this educational annex?

People: So that all of God's children in Christ Jesus may assemble themselves together and join in fellowship, Bible study, and worship, praising His Holy Name.

Pastor: Let the word of Christ dwell in you in all riches, teaching one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto the Lord.

People: Let the people praise thee, O God, Let all thy people praise Thee.

Pastor: I will bless the Lord at all times; His praise shall continually be in my mouth.

People: My soul shall make her boast in the Lord; the humble shall make us hear thereof and be glad.

Pastor: In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, we dedicate this ground.

People: Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord God.

Pastor: To the glory of God the Father, to the honor of God the Son, Christ Jesus, to the love of God shed all-round in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, we dedicate this ground.

People: That in this place, springs of peace and joy may arise from fellowship to give the healing of their waters to all mankind, we dedicate this ground.

Pastor: Thou hast been gracious unto us, O Lord. We thank Thee for all Thy benefits.

People: We today, think of Thy loving-kindness extended toward us, O God, in the midst of Thy temple.

People and Pastor: For the promoting of Bible study, the strengthening of the weak, the cheering of the weary, the stirring of the soul, the swelling of the chorus of praise, for help in singing the songs of thy Church, and witnessing to all in our expression of fellowship one with another, we the people of this Church in the presence of Almighty God, surrounded by the great cloud of heavenly witnesses, do of God, and service of man send in the Spirit of Jesus Christ by our deeds today and evermore. Amen.

Breaking of Ground . . . . . By Pastor and Chairman of Deacons

Prayer of Dedication

A GROWING CHURCH—AND ITS DREAM

Vol. 26 July 5, 1959 No. 29

The Friendly Guide

First Baptist Church

Clinton, Tennessee

THE LORD'S DAY

Sunday School ..... 9:30 A.M.
Morning Worship .... 10:40 A.M.
Deacon of the Week—
—Mr. W. C. Seymour
Organ Prelude——Quiet Meditation
Announcements—
Call to Worship ..... Choir
Invocation ..... Choral Amen
*Hymn ..... No. 382
"I Love Thy Kingdom Lord"
Registration of Visitors
Scripture
Morning Prayer
Service of Giving:
*Doxology
Worship in Tithes & Offerings
Anthem ..... Chancel Choir
Message ..... Dr. Sanderson
"This Nation Under God"
*Hymn of Invitation .... No. 240
"Just As I Am"
Benediction ..... Choral Amen
Retirement to Scene of Ground Breaking Organ Postlude
Ground Breaking Services
11:30 A.M.

Financial Report

Budget Offering	$1340.64
Designated
Building Fund	637.75
Family Night	37.00
	$2015.39

Our Register

S.S.	T.U.
562	145

Pastorgraphs

Quote, "Tithing is a compass that keeps your heart on God's course. Where your treasure, there will your heart be also." Matt. 6:21.

Last Sunday was a great day in our church. The crowds were excellent and the fellowship fine. I'm grateful unto our people as they come Sunday after Sunday to support the great and lasting work of our Lord. So many of our folk have been quite complimentary concerning the beauty and performance of the ordinances of the church. We are grateful for these comments and shall ever seek to keep these ordinances meaningful and impressive.

Let's keep up our program of visitation. Due to your visiting and witnessing, we have had additions to our church every Sunday since I have been your pastor. Let's do our best always and seek out the unsaved and unaffiliated for our Lord. We shall be counting on your visiting for the Lord this week.

Sunday is our "big day" in the church. We are breaking ground for our new educational annex. I'm sure that every member of our church will be present for this historical occasion. You will want to get in the picture which will be made of our activities, and placed in the new building when completed. These pictures are historical data for future generations. Don't miss this fine day in the life of your church!

All of our elderly "saints of God" are encouraged to be present for this occasion also. We are erecting a tent on the site of the ground breaking for you. It is our desire to have as many of our elder members present on this day as possible. If you can come and do not have transportation, please call the church office and we will come and get you. We want you present if possible. It is our desire to take a picture of our "silver circle" of friends and use it also for publicity purposes and later place this picture in the new annex.

Now a word about many of our church members. I am constantly amazed to find so many of our folk who never attend their church. May I urge our non-attending members to come to the Lord's house this Sunday. When you fail to attend the church of your choice, you are the loser in many ways. Remember God's word when He said, "The day is coming when everyone of you will give an account unto me. Every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that I am Lord of Lords and King of Kings." Phil. 2:10-11. Let's not divorce ourselves from the only lasting organization which will outlast the shining of the stars, the "Church of our Lord."

I will look for us to be 800 strong in church Sunday morning and a great evening crowd.

Your Pastor.

Teachers and Officers "Don't Let Attendance SAG!"

Do not let your attendance at the next Teachers' and Officers' meeting of Sunday School sag.

This is how our attendance looked on Wednesday, June 24.

Dept.	Enr.	Att.
General Officers	8	5
Nurseries 1-4	18	1
Beginner I	6	0
Beginner II	5	0
Primary I	5	2
Primary II	6	2
Primary III	5	2
Junior I	8	2
Junior II	13	2
Intermediate I	10	1
Intermediate II	13	7
Young People	7	3
Adult I	5	1
Adult II	10	2
Adult III	10	0
Totals	129	30

At the present time on Wednesday evenings, our S. S. Workers are studying the book "Outlines of Bible History." Dr. Sanderson is our teacher and the study begins at 6:50 in the Fellowship Class.

GROUND BREAKING SERVICE .....
THE CHURCH TRAINING .....
EVENING WORSHIP .....

Candlelight Comm

Theme: REMEMBE

Prelude—"Sunset" .....
Call to Worship—"Glory Be To The Chancel C
Hymn 96—"At Calvary" .....
Observance of Baptism
Invocation .....
Announcements
Responsive Meditation (In Unison by
"God hath highly exalted him, is above every name: that at the nan bow, of things in heaven, and thing the earth; and that every tongue sho is Lord, to the glory of God the Fat Hymn 23—"May Jesus Christ Be Prai
Offertory Service
Offertory Sentence
Prayer
Worship in Tithes and Offerings
Dedication—"Bless Thou the Gifts
The Lighting of The Candles
A FRIEND OF THE PUBLIC
MATTHEW 9:9-13, LUKE 19:1-10
"De SHEEPFOLD"
"O LOVE THAT WILT NOT LET ME
The Quart
THE MASTER W
JOHN 5:2-17
"O MASTER WORKMAN OF THE RA
Solo
A MAN OF PI
LUKE 23:39-46
"GETHSEMANE"
JESUS, THE CR
MATTHEW 27:37-42
"I AM THE CROSS OF CHRIST"
"WHEN I SURVEY THE WONDROUS
The Chancel
THE RISEN C
LUKE 24:1-9
"RESURGAM"
"HALLELUJAH FOR THE CROSS" ...
The Chancel
IN REMEMBRANC
THE BREAD
THE CUP
HYMN 366—"Blest Be The Tie" .....
POSTLUDE

W. M. U.

Women's Missionary Union is grateful to have a part in the plans for the new building program. The members pledge their support through prayer, gifts, and Christian Witnessing. The beautiful new building will

E ..... 11:30 A.M.
..... 6:45 P.M.
..... 8:00 P.M.

ommunion Service

EMBERING JESUS
..... E. L. Ashford
The Father" ..... Meineke cel Choir
..... Towner
..... Choral Amen

on by Congregation)
him, and given him a name which e name of Jesus every knee should things in earth, and things under ue should confess that Jesus Christ e Father."
Praised" ..... Barnby

ings
Gifts" ..... Schumann

UBLICANS AND SINNERS
10

T ME GO" ..... Peace
Quartet
ER WORKMAN

E RACE" ..... Burnap
Solo
OF PRAYER

E CRUCIFIED

ROUS CROSS" ..... Mason
ncel Choir
EN CHRIST

SS" ..... McGranahan
ncel Choir
RANCE OF ME

..... Nageli

---

give room for expanded opportunities of growth through deeper devotion and service. Our fullest expression of gratitude is the "shewing forth of His salvation from day to day" to the people of Clinton and then to all the world.

Martha McCombs, President

Today . . . . . .

Ground Breaking Services Sunday, July 5th

For New Educational Building

This can be a day long to be remembered by the members of our Church. Help us make it important by attending and bring your family with you.

Schedule of Activities:

9:30 Sunday School
10:40—Morning Worship
11:30—GROUND BREAKING SERVICES to be held behind Annex I at South Side of Church.

OURS IS TRULY A GREAT TASK that shall require great thought, great loyalty, and great efforts. God always gives men great things to do.

OUR CAUSE IS GREATER for it is none other than our building for the future. With God we build true Greatness.

Every Member Can Do His or Her Part Through Prayer, Giving, and Service.

Attendance Goals:—
800 in Sunday School
250 in Training Union

Every member of these two organizations should be here on this important day. It is a corner stone in the history of our church. Listed below are the goals for your department. Do your part by being present and by bringing your friends with you. Let's "Dig In" and attend the ground breaking services.

Sunday School Goals

Dept.	Enr.	Goal
Gen. Off.	8	6
Adult III	228	170
Adult II	155	85
Adult I	59	50
Young People	46	35
Intermediate II	74	60
Intermediate I	49	40
Junior II	69	55
Junior I	65	50
Primary III	28	25
Primary II	41	35
Primary I	31	28
Beginner II	30	25
Beginner I	32	26
Nursery IV	31	25
Nursery III	25	20
Nursery II	12	20
Nursery I	21	15

Training Union Goals

Dept.	Enr.	Goal
Gen. Off.	5	6
Adult II	20	20
Adult I	36	30
Y. P.	29	20
Intermediate	76	60
Junior II	31	22
Junior I	34	25
Primary	21	18
Beginner	10	8
Nursery	13	10

Vision + Sacrifice = Educational Building

The vision of our Church over the past few years for more educational space will begin to become a reality in the ground breaking service of July 5th. Every organization has been looking forward to this event with great anticipation. To all four of them it is an opportunity to enlarge their activities and memberships for the Cause of Christ. Here they speak.

Sunday School

After many years of planning, working, and praying, it is a great joy to reach the point of Ground breaking for our new educational building.

By the Grace of God, may this only be a stepping stone in the Advancement of our Church. May it be to the Glory of God that our efforts and time have been spent, and may this building be the means by which the stranger within our gates may learn of the goodness of our Christ.

James Gann, Superintendent

The Look Through The Lord's Supper

On the night before His crucifixion, Jesus in the upper room at Jerusalem, with eleven apostles present, instituted the Lord's Supper, crystallizing the gist of the Gospel and symbolizing the redemptive death of the Son of God.

There is the look BACKWARD to the atoning Christ whose body was slain and whose blood was shed for the redemption of the race.

There is the look UPWARD to the reigning Christ who occupies His mediatorial throne.

There is the look INWARD upon the devout soul which would make itself ready to discern the Lord's body.

There is the look OUTWARD to the ordinance publicly in order to show forth the Lord's death.

There is the look ONWARD to the consummation when the returning Lord shall appear in power and great glory.

Training Union

The greatest agency for training in a Baptist Church is the Training Union. Through the Training Union church members are taught the fundamental principles and doctrines given to us by our Lord. It is through the Training Union that one comes to understand the true meaning of church membership.

Our new educational annex will grant us the needed room to enlarge our program of training and to give our people a better opportunity of fulfilling the "Great Commission" of our Lord.

We thank God for this dream becoming a reality in our lives.

Virgil Callaway,
T. U. Director

Trustees

The Trustees are proud to have had a small part in the arranging for the financing of the new educational building. We are proud and humble that the First Baptist Church is, at last, able to see the beginning of this building, dedicated to the ongoing of God's Kingdom.

We the Trustees, dedicate ourselves anew to the upkeep and service of the First Baptist Church, and when the new educational building is complete, to see that it is kept in such a condition that we will be proud of it.

Frank Carmichael, Chairman

THE FRIENDLY GUIDE
Published every Friday by the First Baptist Church, Clinton, Tenn.
Subscription 25c per year
Entered as second class matter at the Post Office at Clinton, Tennessee, on June 6 1941, under act of March 3, 1879.

Musical Notes

Both Chancel and Concord Choirs will sing for the ground breaking services. Concord Choir members to robe and line up in Choir Room immediately following morning service. Chancel Choir to wear the light robes while the Concord wears the maroon ones.

Chancel Choir members to be especially busy today by singing in all three services. There will be a fellowship at the Choir director's home immediately following the July 8 rehearsal.

Early fall Choir Concert will be held on Sunday evening, September 6th.

Choir Rehearsal Schedule:

Chancel Choir — Wed. 8:15
Concord Choir — Wed 4:00

Footsteps Of The Flock

Our deepest sympathy is extended to the family of Mrs. Patricia Hobbs in her recent death.

Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Richard Sheehan who are parents of a new baby boy.

Welcome new member, by baptism:

Eddie Rosenbaum, Woodland Drive.

Zone No. 3, Deacon: Frank Carmichael

Sponsor: Ernest Conner

A SACRED TRUST FROM GOD

The Property You Own,
The Money You Possess,
Even the Life You Live,
All Are Sacred Trusts From God.
He Placed Them In Your Hand
With A Firm Command:
"Thou Shalt Truly Tithe"
(Deut. 14:22)

Opportunities For The Week

Sunday, July 5, 1959
- 11:30—Ground Breaking
- 2:30—T. U. Executive Committee—Assoc. Office

Monday, July 6, 1959
- 4:00—Exec. Committee, Associational Office
- B. W. C. Federation—Andersonville
- 6:30—Boy Scouts
- 7:00—15 & 16 Yr. GA's

Tuesday, July 7, 1959
- 10:00—Circle—3 & 4
- 6:30—B. W. C. No. 2 — Church
- 6:30—Circle No. 5
- 7:30—Cub Scouts
- 7:30—Circle No. 6, 7, & 8
- Y. W. A. Federation — Robertsville

Wednesday, July 8, 1959
- 3:30—Girl Scouts
- 5:00—Concord Choir
- 5:30—11 & 12 Yr. GA's
- 6:00—Supper
- 6:30—13-14 Yr. GA's
- 6:30—9 & 10 Yr. GA's
- 6:30—RA's
- 6:30—Teacher's Meeting.
- 6:30—Sunbeams 4-5, 6-8
- 7:30—Prayer Meeting
- 8:15—Chancel Choir

Training Union 6:45
Evening Worship 8:00

CANDLELIGHT
COMMUNION SERVICE

Organ Prelude — Mrs. Conner
Call to Worship ..... Choir
Praise Hymn ..... No. 96
"At Calvary"
Invocation ..... Choral Amen
Observance of Baptism
Announcements
Responsive Meditation
Hymn ..... No. 23
Offertory Service
"The Lord's Supper"
Postlude

Brotherhood

The Brotherhood of this Church rejoices with the entire membership in our ground breaking ceremonies. Christian teaching of our children must and will continue, God being our helper. We again pledge ourselves in helping see this program to its completion.

Roy Jenkins, President

ESTHER Sandrof
125 Sherman ave.
New York N.Y.

Sandrof, E

Great ED. MURROW DEAR
BE HAPPY 100 more year
WITH all your DEAR

AND NOW TO SEE you ON T.V.
IS Apleasure JOY for ME
you SHOULD LIVE HEALTHY & well
THIS I WISH you & TELL

NOW I collect NOTES from prominent people from HERE AND ABROAD AND your NOTE will be for ME SWEET COMPOTE

very sincerely Esther

Santangelo, Michael

May 25, 1959

Mr. Michael R. Santangelo
Director of Public Relations
Westinghouse Broadcasting Co.
122 East 42nd Street
New York City

Dear Mr. Santangelo:

I write to thank you for your courtesy in sending over the release about Vincent Sheean.

Sincerely yours,

From the desk of
MIKE SANTANGELO

Mr. Murrow—

I thought you might be interested in this announcement knowing that Jimmy Shecan is a personal friend of yours. Also because of its individual significance plus the relationship with todays news of Averell Harriman.

Sincerely—

Mike Santangelo

Westinghouse Broadcasting Company, Incorporated · 122 East 42nd Street, New York 17, N.Y.

MURRAY HILL 7-0808

public relations department

From: Michael R. Santangelo
Director of Public Relations
Westinghouse Broadcasting Co.
122 East 42 St., N.Y.C.
MUrray Hill 7-0808

For immediate release

U.S. STATE DEPARTMENT VALIDATES WBC'S VINCENT SHEEAN FOR TRAVEL IN RED CHINA

New York, May 19, 1959 -- Vincent Sheean, the Westinghouse Broadcasting Company's Special Far Eastern Correspondent, has received permission from the U.S. State Department to set up a WBC news bureau in Peking to report directly from Red China.

Mr. Sheean will make television and radio interviews and documentaries for the Westinghouse Broadcasting Company radio and television stations reporting exclusively to its audience of 40 million.

(more)

Presently Mr. Sheean is in New Delhi, India, making a series of radio and television programs on India and his long time associate and personal friend Prime Minister Nehru.

Mr. Sheean left the United States, Sunday, May 10, for New Delhi. In making the announcement, Donald H. McGannon, President of the Westinghouse Broadcasting Company, stated that, "Mr. Sheean's joining WBC as Special Far Eastern Correspondent is a significant event that will add a new dimension to WBC's overseas news operation. Mr. Sheean's feats of reporting are legendary, one of his most famous being when he risked his life reporting the Riff War in North Africa and interviewing the Riff leader, Abdel Krim, a journalistic event he subsequently described in what is now a classic of political journalism, 'Personal History,' and which inspired the famous American operetta 'Desert Song'."

For years Mr. Sheean has lived in the thick of adventure. Alfred Hitchcock based his film, "Foreign Correspondent" on Mr. Sheean's career and book "Personal History." Mr. Sheean has shown an uncanny ability for being on the spot for many of the modern world-shaking news events.

He was in Vienna when Hitler moved into Austria, in Prague when the Nazis took Czechslovakia, in France during its fall, getting off to Englad just in time to avoid capture by the Germans. He was in London from Dunkirk through all phases of the blitz, and left Wake Island one plane ahead of the attack on Pearl Harbor. In 1945 he covered the San Francisco Conference organizing the United Nations, and in 1948 he was in the garden at Birla House in New Delhi when Gandhi was assassinated.

Mr. Sheean served in the Air Force as an intelligence officer during World War II, at which time he participated with the Allied Forces in the North African and Italian landings. Later in the war as an intelligence officer, he was sent to the Far East where he participated in B-29 operations, flying on the first daylight B-29 military mission for which he was decorated.

(more)

Over the years a friend and acquaintence of scores of Presidents, Prime Ministers, authors, journalists, painters, musicians, actors and opera singers, Mr. Sheean's twenty-one books to date (his publisher is Random House) have covered a variety of topics from political journalism to music and opera. Last year he authored "Orpheus at Eighty," a definitive biography of Verdi, and in November of this year, Random House will publish his latest work, a biography titled "Nehru in Power."

Born in Pana, Illinois and educated at the University of Chicago, Mr. Sheean began his journalistic career on the Chicago Daily News, then on the New York Daily News, and finally on the Chicago Tribune in Paris. After 1925 he was never again regularly employed on a newspaper, prefering free lance correspondent work.

At certain world crises, such as 1927 in China, 1929 in Palestine, and in 1938 in Spain, he returned to newspaper correspondence for brief periods, sending dispatches to the North American Newspaper Alliance mainly. In Spain he also sent dispatches to the New York Herald Tribune.

Throughout his adventurous career, Mr. Sheean has been a prolific magazine writer contributing to all major US magazines, LOOK, the SATURDAY EVENING POST, LIFE, among many, and also serving as a war correspondent for REDBOOK during World War II.

Mr. Sheean was married in Vienna in 1935 to Diana Forbes-Robertson, youngest daughter of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, of the famous family of actors. The Sheeans have two daughters: Ellen and Linda.

(more)

The six WBC radio and five television stations that will carry Mr. Sheean's special reports are: KDKA and KDKA-TV, Pittsburgh; KYW and KYW-TV, Cleveland; WJZ-TV, Baltimore; WBZ-A and WBZ-TV, Boston and Springfield; KPIX, San Francisco; WOWO, Ft. Wayne; WIND, Chicago; and KEX, Portland, Ore.

# #

WBC

M A Partha Sarathy

GEMINI STUDIOS
MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS
MOVIELAND · MADRAS 6 · INDIA

M. A. PARTHA SARATHY
XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX

TELEGRAMS: GEMSTUDIO

Nov. 23, 1959

Miss Gabrielle Wachsner,
Secretary,
Mr.Edward R. Murrow,
485, Madison Avenue,
NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

Dear Miss Wachsner:

Thank you very much for your letter of November 9th. I regret that I did not get my news brought upto date before writing Mr.Murrow, since I did read sometime ago about his travels in Europe and a year of absence from TV.

Your reminding me of the present activity of Mr.Murrow has only further confirmed my own impressions of his unique personality in the field of American entertainment. I am therefore all the more anxious to make contact with him when he is available and, in my own way, contribute to his shows, if possible. I am planning to further develop some ideas that I think will appeal to his way of presentation.

May I therefore thank you again for your letter, and sincerely hope that you will let me know when Mr.Murrow is back from his Tour of Meditation, so that I may have the privilege of continuing this acquaintence.

Sincerely yours,

M.A.Partha Sarathy.

November 9, 1959

Dear Mr. Sarathy:

Thank you for your very cordial letter of October 29th which was received here in Mr. Murrow's absence. As you may know, Mr. Murrow is on a year's leave of absence and at the present time he is traveling in Europe.

I regret to have to tell you that there is no possibility of his undertaking any new commitments during the course of his sabbatical year, since he plans to spend most of this time reading, listening and learning.

I am sorry to have to say no on his behalf.

Sincerely yours,

Gabrielle Wachsner
Secretary

Mr. M. A. Partha Sarathy
Gemini Studios
Madras 6, India

GEMINI STUDIOS
MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS
MOVIELAND · MADRAS 6 · INDIA

M. A. PARTHA SARATHY
[redacted]

TELEGRAMS: GEMSTUDIO

October 29, 1959.

Mr.Edward R. Murrow,
C/o: Columbia Broadcasting System,
485, Madison Avenue,
NEW YORK, U. S. A.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I have not had the pleasure of meeting you though it has been my privilege to have seen some of your distinguished shows on TV in the U.S. Like many others, I consider your approach to audio-visual presentation as something unique.

I do not know how familiar you are with film production in this country. Though we are the second largest producers of motion-pictures in the world, we produce a very special brand of domestic product which is not acceptable abroad more because of the method of presentation than because of the language. However, some of us who have had an opportunity to study trends in entertainment abroad, have been trying to make contributions beyond our country.

I have been lucky enough to be educated in an American College and then trained in motion picture production in your country. After this, I have been producing and directing for a few years at this Studio which is considered the premiere organization in this country. I have made a close study of TV during my several recent visits to Europe and the U.S.A. and it is in this connection I am now writing you.

At the very outset, let me state that there is no TV in India. The reasons are mostly economic and partly the attitude of our Government in not wanting to encourage anything commercial in Radio and TV, which they seem to consider dangerous tools when not in their own hands!- I expect, however, that as in the case of BBC, a little time and experience will correct this illusion.

After considerable thought and research, a group of associates and I have recently planned a Television series which I think will be particularly suitable to your method of presentation. Tentatively, the show has been called "The Hour of Peace, by Edward R. Murrow" or "The Garden of Peace, by Edward R. Murrow".

We plan to put the major portion of each show on film entirely in this country in a manner in which you, Mr.Murrow, can present and participate in it in your well-known style.

The content of the show will be around activities of an institution here which I believe has no parallel in the world. It is a large garden which is dedicated to the cultivation of art and philosophy. It is founded and run by a lady who is an Internationally renowned dancer whose name I shall be glad to reveal when I hear from you of your interest. She has been the foremost Indian classical dancer and has to her credit performances all over the world. In the midst of this peaceful paradise of trees, there are several straw huts. In these huts, the finest array of teachers of Indian classical dance, music, painting and handicrafts are assembled to instruct a band of young people. Most classes are held under trees. An open air theatre is where the great classics in their unadulterated form are rehearsed and performed. The hours are from before sun rise and as dawn breaks, the young students who reside in various little huts learning early the art of self-reliance, begin their lessons. It is a very charming sight to witness their morning prayers which are of all religions, Hindu, Muslim, Budhist and Christian. The emphasis in the teaching is on full freedom of expression and utter humility towards learning.

Any one who has visited this place, has been thrilled by the atmosphere of peace in it. Our shows aim to highlight this, without falling into the trap of becoming too high-brow or "egg-head"! This, in our opinion, is possible. The institution has a very large repertoire of Indian dance-dramas based on great Indian writers and poets like Kalidas. These have been interpretted in universal terms by the teachers and by the head of the institution who, as I said earlier, is one of India's greatest dancers.

I would like very much to hear from you if you feel you would be interested in this proposal. Without the strong backing of a personality like yourself, my colleagues and I do not feel we should go further. However, should it find interest in a person like you, I believe this concept can become as historic as "Person to Person".

I shall look forward to hear from you.

With kind regards,

Sincerely yours,

V.V. Partha Sarathy.

Sas Jaworsky, Alexander

January 27, 1958

Dear Dr. Sas Jaworsky:

I have your letter of January 13th.

I regret very much that I was not able to see you when you called at my office, but I was involved in a number of special shows that kept me away from my desk.

I appreciate your suggestions, and I only wish I had the time to answer you in greater length.

Again, please accept my apologies.

Sincerely yours,

Dr. Alexander Sas Jaworsky
Vermilion Animal Hospital
Post Office Box 561
Abbeville, Louisiana

mcc

VERMILION ANIMAL HOSPITAL
DR. ALEXANDER SAS JAWORSKY

P. O. BOX 561

PHONES 984
1245

ABBEVILLE, LOUISIANA

January 13, 1958

Mr. Ed. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

While staying in New York during my recent appearance on the $64,000 Question, my category being American History, I tried to see you but your secretary said you were too busy to see anyone. My reason for writing to you is to suggest a few things about the American Policy toward my former homeland. I watched with great interest your "Public Confession" with other C B S correspondants last New Year's Eve. And it is my impression that you all still don't know what to do. You are in a blind corner and don't know how to get out. As a student of American History, it is my opinion that since the time of John Quincy Adams the United States has never had a Secretary of State with a clearly planned foreign policy and competently executed. For some unknown reason you correspondants stubbornly, stubbornly, stubbornly refuse to present the issue of the enslaved nations to the public.

There is no danger of war, Mr. Murrow. Neither side will wage a war because it will be the destruction of both. But when Russia, the greatest imperialistic nation in history, trys to use every opportunity to create unrest, spread false propaganda to keep America in a nervous state, when they, through cold war tension, try to destroy our economy, we sleep in peace.

VERMILION ANIMAL HOSPITAL
DR. ALEXANDER SAS JAWORSKY

P. O. BOX 561 PHONES 984 1245

ABBEVILLE, LOUISIANA

Possessing this tremendous trump card, the issue of enslaved nations, we should remind the free world that the present rulers of the Soviet Union are by no means the representatives of the people for whom they speak, that they came to power by force only, that the nations such as Ukrania, Byeo Russia, Grusia and other nations with over 1,000 years of history, culture, tradition, literature, have a right to live free and have a government of their own.choice.

It is not necessary to expend American money or blood to attain this goal. At the present time, securing independance for these enslaved nations by moral support means more to us than the possession of the H-bomb, Atom bomb, and all Sputniks put together. The rest is up to you correspondants, the representatives of the American free press. It is also your responsibility to the future generations and the free world.

With kindest best wishes, I am

Sincerely,

G. Sas J

Dr. Alexander Sas Jaworsky

ASJ:pt

[illegible]

[illegible] etc.

Saunor, P.

December 11, 1959

Dear Mr. Saunor:

Thank you for your letter of November 18th which was received in Mr. Murrow's absence.

As you may know, Mr. Murrow is on a year's leave of absence and will be traveling abroad for most of that time. However, I shall send your letter on to him as soon as I have a new forwarding address.

Very sincerely yours,

Gabrielle Wachsner
Secretary

Mr. Peter Saunor
251 Durnan Street
Rochester 21, New York

251 Durnan St.

Rochester, 21, N.Y.

November 18, 1959

Edward R. Murrow

Columbia Broadcasting System

485 Madison Avenue; New York City

Dear Sir:

May I write to you as a famous NAME in journalism about your program, Small World, of November 15, 1959. The visiting Soviet editor, Mr. Chakovsky, was interviewed on censorship and authors' freedom in the Soviet Union as compared to the United States. The program assumed the existence of freedom in the U.S. May I challenge this.

Since trying to publish a book fifteen months ago, I have failed to get so much as a commentary on it which was not contradicted by other publishers or which did not itself deny the existence of sections of the book. This has been so in spite of my admissions of overstatement, requests for criticism, and payments for criticism.

A newspaper owner recently told me that the United States was ruled by dictatorship, democratic oratory notwithstanding, and that the penalty for disagreement "will be sometimes drastic, sometimes not so bad, but in any case it will be unpleasant." This supposed American oligarchy does not have concentration camps and gas chambers if it doesn't need them and if it can cause dissidents to "fade away" by the gradual removal of their means of existence or by sending them on circular chases.

What is freedom of expression for an American author beyond writing approved material? A Soviet author has freedom to write what he believes so long as he agrees with the communist party. Similarly, Nazi Germany wanted peace so long as it could peacefully have everything it wanted. This is circular reasoning.

In writing a book, I did not engage in or tolerate "crusading" or any variation of soap box oratory. But I have a great curiosity about education, propaganda, and news broadcasting.

Having no claim on your time, I write to you only as an outstanding national focal point of information for Americans. I hope for a reply to my single question as one step in making sense out of the bewilderment which my manuscript promotion has produced.

Enclosed are pertinent references.

Yours truly,

Peter Saunor

(Peter Saunor)

Comments of University Presses

Princeton: "there can be no question about the importance of the material or the interest it holds"

Yale: "You are grappling with an interesting thesis here, and you have some challenging things to say. I am not sure that everyone who reads your manuscript will agree with you in all aspects of your thesis, but I admire you for speaking out so forthrightly."

Syracuse: "fluent and interesting"

Washington: "What you have to say is doubtless true..." "I wish you could interest some good commercial publisher in the project, for you may really have a good book if it could be put together in a palatable way."

Virginia: "The work looks most interesting and thought provoking. I would love to see the work in print."

Minnesota" "Your manuscript seems well organized, and the writing is competent; I hope you will find a publishing outlet that will enable your work to reach its audience."

North Carolina: "there is a good deal of bold thinking and forceful presentation"

Southern Methodist: "We have read your book manuscript.... with much interest. You have here a most provocative idea."

Comments of University Presses (Cont.)

Stanford: "Your manuscript certainly does not lack originality of thought"

Kentucky: "I have read with great interest your manuscript ... I found in the manuscript a number of extremely interesting insights and I am personally pleased at the chance to read it.... Also most interesting and significant is your view of American traditions and institutions. I think that what makes these valuable are your interesting background and point of view."

Western Reserve: "I did indeed find Chapter 6 interesting"

Texas: "it is an interesting and provocative book"

Comments of Literary Agents

Critic for Mrs. Ad Schulberg: "Its theme is brilliant, almost devilish .... But Chapter 6...is..one of the most brilliant, subtle and startling arguments on this subject that I've read"

Mrs. Ad Schulberg: "I enjoyed reading it on my own"

Scott Meredith: "Much of the writing is fine indeed; you do a good job of building your cases and in instances such as your section on Lithuania the combination of solid fact and good writing is quite effective."

Paul R. Reynolds & Son: "not the type of manuscript that we would know how to handle"

John Schaffner: "I do not feel qualified to represent you on this work."

Statements of Commercial Publishers

Bobbs-Merrill: "We have given your manuscript...the very careful consideration we believe it deserves. The work is obviously well written, and the thesis is certainly thought-provoking."

British Book Service (Canada): "Please forgive the delay (four months--P.S.) in reporting...we also held it until this week in order to have an opportunity of discussing it with a visiting editor from Wm. Heinemann Limited of London.

It is an extremely interesting thesis and all of our readers have been very much interested in the subject matter"

Macmillan, Viking, St. Martin's: "all liked the writing and material in general" --(Mrs.) Ad Schulberg

Lippincott: "We have considered it with interest"

Houghton Mifflin: "We have read with interest your manuscript"

Note: The majority of publishers declined to comment in any manner or extent.

Sayers, John E.

JOHN E. SAYERS

BELFAST TELEGRAPH,
BELFAST.

May 18, 1959.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
485, Madison Avenue,
NEW YORK, 22,
New York.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

It was a great pleasure to have your letter of May 11, and to know that you will consider a further broadcast, in which a Northern Ireland speaker will have an opportunity to put the other side of the case sprung upon us by Miss McKenna.

If we can assist you in making arrangements for this we shall be very glad to do so.

I am enclosing a further article by our television writer, and if you are able to give us any information in advance about your plans for an Irish debate, we shall see that they are fully publicised.

Yours sincerely,

John E. Sayers.

JOINT MANAGING EDITOR.

Enc.

"BELFAST TELEGRAPH", BELFAST, Northern Ireland,
Monday, MAY 18, 1959.

By Robert Ray

WE WILL CERTAINLY CONSIDER THIS SUGGESTION, SAYS ED MURROW

Ulster—Eire 'Small World' clash in autumn?

IN fairness to the Columbia Broadcasting system and its reporter, Edward R. Murrow, I have to return this week to that "Small World."

Not that I wish to add a line to the controversy over the things said in the recent programme by Siobhan McKenna.

However, I come back to the point I made a couple of weeks ago that to set the record straight, particularly in the U.S., the need still exists for a full and balanced debate on Ireland and its problems.

I can now tell you that Murrow and his company are inclined to agree.

To my suggestion that a prominent neutral American; Lord Brookeborough for Ulster, and Mr. de Valera for Eire should be given an invitation to engage in television's international three-way conversation, Murrow, writing from Madison Avenue, New York, says:

"'Small World' is off the air in this country until the autumn, but we are already making plans for the next season.

"We will certainly consider the suggestion of doing one with speakers from Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic."

Murrow, it will be recalled, was unable to speak to me about his programme when I got through to him on the telephone.

There were reasons for that, and he has expressed his regret.

In turn, I am happy to be able to withdraw my criticism of his reluctance to talk at that time.

One of the questions I had wished to put to him — "What prompted you to give Miss McKenna her head?"—he now answers freely.

"This," he says, "is my invariable practice; I have recently done so with Prime Minister Macmillan and with Field-Marshal Montgomery.

"I have never followed the practice of deleting material merely because it might offend a segment of the audience or because I personally disagree with it."

Mr. Murrow could scarcely be more frank.

What is of greater importance is the tentative offer he makes to present Ulster's case to an audience of many millions in two continents.

This is an opportunity that should not be missed.

Close up

Viewers, I would say, were pretty evenly divided in their opinion of the first Wednesday edition of the regional feature "Studio Eight."

[illegible] ex-[illegible] minds, confess to being loaded with prejudice, not too much attention need be paid to that.

For the first time I watched the programme actually being made and it would be nearly impossible in such circumstances to have anything other than admiration and a fellow feeling for the people taking part in the operation either as professional broadcasters or guest artists.

A fellow feeling because in some ways television and newspaper production are akin; good TV, after all, is largely topicality, news in animated magazine form.

There is the further link, too, of the relentless battle against the clock.

There are few viewers, I am sure, who appreciate the extent of the rehearsal work involved in producing even one short television programme. Some 20 people were required in the studio for the production of the holiday magazine, and there was little let-up for any of them from 7 p.m. until the show was off the air at 11 o'clock.

This, of course, takes no account of days of preliminary planning and organisation.

My only criticism from close in is, perhaps, too much rehearsal. I have felt this before.

On the other hand the precaution is understandable from the producer's chair; with only one spot a week to fill he can't very well afford to risk things going wrong.

With more time and more programmes, more daring will be possible. Until that day comes it would be hard to blame anyone for playing safe.

Just one last "interior" note; the people who are bringing television alive here have an obvious enthusiasm and sincerity of purpose. They deserve to be successful.

In vision now

Next Wednesday? It will be quite fascinating to watch "Your Questions," a Northern Ireland radio veteran—it has been running for five years—transferred to the screen.

Producer John Boyd tells me he intends to have a 30-strong studio audience to supply the topics.

In the chair will be the director of social studies at Queen's, Desmond Neill, who has a long association with the programme.

The panel will comprise J. C. Beckett, W. B. Gallie, both Queen's professors, and David Kennedy, scientist and historian of St. Malachy's College.

★ ☆ ★ ☆ ★ ☆ ★

Judi Dench, who plays the title role in the TV serial "Hilda Lessways," part two of which will be screened on Friday. Twenty-four-year-old Judi is the daughter of a doctor in [illegible] She has appeared with the O[illegible] Company and returned only r[illegible]y from their tour in Yugoslavia.

Sayers, John E.

May 11, 1959

Mr. John E. Sayers
Belfast Telegraph
P.O. Box 25
Royal Avenue
Belfast
Northern Ireland

Dear Mr. Sayers:

I write to thank you for your gracious letter of May 5 and the enclosed article by Robert Ray. Please tell him I am sorry I was unable to speak with him on the telephone.

Mr. Ray apparently wanted to know what prompted me to give Miss MacKenna her head. Perhaps you would tell him that this is my invariable practice, that I have recently done so with Prime Minister Macmillan and with Field Marshal Montgomery and that I have never followed the practice of deleting material merely because it might offend a segment of the audience or because I personally disagreed with it.

SMALL WORLD is off the air in this country until the autumn, but we are already making plans for the next season and will certainly consider the suggestion of doing one with speakers from Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

(dictated by Mr. Murrow and signed in his absence in Washington)

"BELFAST TELEGRAPH", BELFAST, Monday, May 4, 1959.

TRANS-ATLANTIC LONG-SHOT IS SILENT ON SMALL WORLD

By ROBERT RAY

I AM REMINDED THIS WEEK of the American newspaper headl appeared after a Poet Laureate—Masefield, I believe—had visi country and declined to answer reporters' questions. It ran: "King's refuses to chirp."

The situation, you see, seemed to arise for me at the week-end when I tried to question one who currently rates among the most gifted talkers in the U.S., only to find he had nothing to say.

The silent man? Edward R. Murrow, of "Small World" television fame.

"Columbia's kitten refuses to purr" might be the appropriate headline, though, as you will have noticed, I have resisted it!

I must say, however, that following several unsuccessful attempts to link up with Mr. Murrow at his New York (Plaza) number, I did find it disappointing to be told, when at last he had been brought to the other end of the line, "I'm refuses to take this c

For me it became s big world again and th comfort in knowing th be able to see Ed in a time.

What, you may wo he have added to thoroughly ventilated the Dublin actress plunge into Irish polit

Well, I would hav have learned what pro to give her her head, undoubtedly did.

Record straight

I would also h interested to hear wha Columbia Broadcastin intends to take to put straight in the United

I would have been curious, too, to hear reactions to my sugges prominent neutral Ar his own choosing, Lo borough and Mr. de Va make a fairly controve some; I mention contr quite obviously it is th of the programme.

In making this p would have been abl out that in Northern I do not expect our vie be that expressed in t all we seek is a fair fairness for which, apart, Murrow and hi have a considerable re

To get back to this s he questions Ed. Murrow refuses to answer eadline that visited that ing's canary

, "I'm sorry, he this call."

ame such a great and there was no ing that I would l in a few hours'

y wonder, could l to the now ilated affair of tress and her politics.

l have liked to at prompted him head, which he ght

so have been r what steps the lcasting System o put the record Jnited States.

been more than hear Murrow's uggestion that a al American of g, Lord Brooke- de Valera might ntroversial three- controversy for is the life-blood e.

his proposal I n able to point hern Ireland we r view alone to d in the States; fair deal, that hich, April 25 nd his company ble reputation.

this side of the

Going up! The Marconi aerial mast on the Black Mountain from which U.T.V. commercial programmes will be beamed in six months' time. The new landmark will rise to a height of 750ft., about 250ft. higher than the B.B.C. mast on neighbouring Divis.

Atlantic and the B.B.C., I think it is almost sufficient to say "this was one of their greatest blunders."

I feel that the show should have gone on, but clearly with an accompanying strong London comment before and at the end of the programme.

As for the decision to take off part two, that was rather pointless for the damage had already been done.

One way only

One further aspect of this Small World controversy revolves round a technical point—our existing inability to originate programmes for feeding into the national network.

It is a bit frustrating to know that you can take knocks, but never give them.

That we do have film facilities is not wholly satisfactory as an answer.

What is required is a that when the occasion arises our own people can be brought quickly into the picture.

The Ulster Government would do well to look into this one. If it is a question of expense, then the B.B.C., U.TV., and the G.P.O. could all be invited to help find a way. The Government, indeed, might help, too.

Belfast Telegraph

JOINT MANAGING EDITORS:
THOS. McMULLAN, M.B.E.
JOHN E. SAYERS

P. O. BOX NO. 25
ROYAL AVENUE, BELFAST
NORTHERN IRELAND

TELEPHONE
BELFAST 22411

JES/AL.

May 5, 1959.

Mr. Ed. Murrow,
c/o The Colombia Broadcasting System,
NEW YORK CITY,
New York.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I have pleasure in sending you herewith a copy of an article by our Television writer, which appeared in the "Belfast Telegraph" yesterday, and we would be happy to have your comment on the suggestion that you should arrange another "Small World" with speakers from Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

Yours very truly,

John E. Sayers.

JOINT MANAGING EDITOR.

Enc.

Sayre, Dean Francis B.

March 9, 1959

Dean Francis B. Sayre, Jr.
National Consumers League
1025 Vermont Avenue N.W.
Washington 5, D.C.

Dear Dean Sayre:

In reply to your letter of February 24, I have had to make it a policy not to lend my name to any project in which I am unable to take active participation.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

NATIONAL CONSUMERS LEAGUE

1025 Vermont Avenue, N.W., Washington 5, D. C. • DIstrict 7-3853

Vera M. Waltman
General Secretary

February 24, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C B S
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

There is no doubt that our society is reasonably affluent. Yet even in our relative prosperity, some five million families in this land still live in squalid poverty. I am concerned about these people, and I know you must be too. Indeed, if our country is to continue in economic health, we must see that these stricken families be lifted to the present modern living standard.

One way of doing this is through legislation for minimum wages and maximum hours. Years ago, the National Consumers League sponsored the first laws of this kind (in 1910). Since then, its members have worked, first to secure passage of the Fair Labor Standards Act (1938), and subsequently to advocate extension of its protective coverage in accord with the needs of our growing society. In 1955, a Citizens Committee of the League was formed to serve this purpose.

Just now, new legislation is pending in the Congress to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act so that 8,700,000 more wage earners may be covered and so that all wage earners under the Act may enjoy the protection of a minimum wage increased to $1.25 per hour. If Congress moves in this direction, a great stride will be taken to relieve the distressed families at the bottom of the economic ladder.

The purpose of this letter is to let you know that we are enlarging the Citizens Committee of the Consumers League, hoping thereby to reinforce our constant efforts in behalf of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Will you join me in this? It would mean much to know that you are with us and, by adding your name to the Committee's list, will declare your support of this cause. May I ask you to indicate your wish on the enclosed postcard, which I hope you will not delay in returning to me.

Very truly yours,

Francis B. Sayre, Jr.

Dean Francis B. Sayre, Jr.,
Chairman, Citizens Committee on the Fair Labor Standards Act

John Howland Lathrop, President
Mrs. Richard A. Zwemer, Chairman Board of Directors

Hyman Schroeder, Treasurer
Louise Stitt, Vice-Chairman Board of Directors

Mrs. Louise Q. Blodgett, Recording Secretary
Eleanor Hadley, Vice-Chairman Board of Directors

Vice-Presidents

Elizabeth Brandeis, Madison, Wis.
Mary Dewson, Penobscot, Me.
Mrs. Thomas Fleming, Pasadena, Calif.
Pauline Goldmark, Hartsdale, N. Y.
Alice Hamilton, M.D., Hadlyme, Conn.
John Haynes Holmes, New York, N. Y.
Alice W. Hunt, Providence, R. I.
Archbishop Robert E. Lucey, San Antonio, Tex.
Frances Perkins, New York, N. Y.
Josephine Roche, Washington, D. C.
Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Hyde Park, N. Y.
Bishop William Scarlett, Castine, Me.
Robert Szold, New York, N. Y.

Honorary Vice-Presidents

Mrs. Barbara N. Armstrong, Univ. of California
Sarah Gibson Blanding, Vassar College
J. Douglas Brown, Princeton University
Charles E. Clark, Yale University
Paul H. Douglas, U.S. Senator from Illinois
Walter Gellhorn, Columbia University
Carter Goodrich, Columbia University
Frank P. Graham, United Nations, New York
William Haber, University of Michigan
Broadus Mitchell, Hofstra College
Dean Francis B. Sayre, Jr., Washington, D. C.
Arthur H. Schlesinger, Jr., Harvard Univ.
Sumner H. Slichter, Harvard University
Paul S. Taylor, University of California
Caroline Ware, Howard University
Colston Warne, Amherst College
Vincent H. Whitney, Brown University
Walter F. Wilcox, Cornell University
Edwin E. Witte, University of Wisconsin

Board of Directors

Mrs. Margaret F. Ackroyd
Mrs. R. Gordon Arneson
Mrs. Louise Q. Blodgett
Mrs. W. Russell Bowie
James B. Carey
Jacob Clayman
Benjamin V. Cohen
Mrs. Elizabeth Coleman
Grace L. Coyle
Mrs. Paul T. David
James Deakin
Lulu Diehl
Mary L. Dyckman
John W. Edelman
Mrs. Katherine Ellickson
Mrs. William Carl Fels
Muriel Ferris
Walter Frank
Eleanor M. Hadley
Mrs. Wm. Beasley Harris
Henry B. Herman
Florence M. Kelley
Mrs. Mary Dublin Keyserling
Rosamond Lamb
John Howland Lathrop
Richard A. Lester
Elizabeth S. Magee
Mrs. Emily Sims Marconnier
Walter Mason
Mrs. Abbot L. Mills, Jr.
Mrs. Ralph W. Netherstrom
Mrs. Dudley Owen
Mrs. Oliver A. Peterson
Mrs. Marion C. Reed
Victor Reuther
Ivan C. Rutledge
Theodore Sanders, M.D.
Hyman Schroeder
Paul Sifton
Louise Stitt
Vera M. Waltman
Mrs. Theodore O. Wedel
Ralph Wright
Mrs. Richard A. Zwemer

Council

Arthur J. Altmeyer, Madison, Wisconsin
Mary Anderson, Washington, D. C.
Mrs. Clara M. Beyer, McLean, Virginia
Mrs. Eveline Burns, New York, N. Y.
Stuart Chase, Georgetown, Conn.
William L. Chenery, Menlo Park, Calif.
William H. Davis, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Helen Gahagan Douglas, New York, N. Y.
John A. Fitch, New York, N. Y.
Warden Fuller, Berkeley, Calif.
Mrs. Luther Gulick, New York, N. Y.
Roger Hinds, East Orange, N. J.
Edgar F. Johnston, Detroit, Mich.
Nicholas Kelley, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Herbert Lehman, New York, N. Y.
Katherine F. Lenroot, Hartsdale, N. Y.
Lucy Randolph Mason, Atlanta, Ga.
Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, Grand Rapids, Mich.
Frieda S. Miller, New York, N. Y.
David A. Morse, Geneva, Switzerland
Mrs. C. K. Mueller, Highland Park, Mich.
Mrs. W. A. Newell, Morganton, N. C.
Nathan Straus, New York, N. Y.
Jeanette Studley, Hartford, Conn.
Frances Thompson, Louisville, Ky.
Mary van Kleeck, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Eva Whiting White, Waban, Mass.
Mrs. Katharine Elkus White, Red Bank, N. J.
Mrs. Robert M. Woodbury, Bryn Mawr, Pa.
Mrs. Hubert Wyckoff, Watsonville, Calif.

The National Consumers League is an educational movement founded in May, 1899, to awaken consumers' interest in their responsibility for conditions under which goods are made and distributed, and through investigation, education and legislation, to promote fair labor standards.

AMENDMENTS TO THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

The Fair Labor Standards Act was enacted in 1938 to end "labor conditions detrimental to the maintenance of minimum standards of living necessary for health, efficiency and general well-being..." It was aimed at ending depressing labor conditions which were dangerous not only to the wage earners, but also to the economic health and welfare of the nation, as a whole.

The Fair Labor Standards Act established a minimum wage (now $1.00 an hour), provided for the payment of time and one-half for work of more than 40 hours in a week, and forbade oppressive child labor.

But millions of Americans working for establishments affecting interstate commerce are expressly exempted from the protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act. These are mainly workers who are employed in the nation's lowest paying industries. They are the people who need this protection the very most. The largest groups of these exempted workers are agricultural workers, employees of retail stores, laundry and cleaning store workers, seafood processors, etc.

Another problem of the Fair Labor Standards Act is that the present minimum wage of $1.00 an hour is far too little to permit a minimum standard of living. In fact, it is further from the average wage today, than the minimum wage of 1938 was from the average wage of that year. (Twenty-one years ago the minimum wage was 25 cents an hour and the average wage 63 cents. Today the minimum is $1.00, while the average is $2.19. A difference of 38 cents in 1938 and $1.19 today in manufacturing.)

Legislation has been introduced in Congress to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act and improve this situation. These are S. 1046 by Senators John F. Kennedy, Wayne Morse and others and H. R. 4488 by Representative James Roosevelt. Other bills which will provide the protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act to workers on large corporation farms are now being introduced by a number of Congressmen and Senators.

S. 1046 and H. R. 4488 would:

(1) increase the minimum wage from $1.00 to $1.25 an hour; and,

(2) extend full coverage and protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act to more than 7,500,000 workers now exempted.

The legislation for farm workers will provide several different approaches to a program of bringing a minimum wage and maximum hours to employees of large corporation farms, or of the so-called "factories in the field."

This legislation would bring a basic standard of living to millions of Americans who now suffer under terrible poverty. For example, it is estimated that some 6,000,000 of the more than 8,000,000 workers affected by this legislation today earn less than $1.00 an hour. Some earn as little as 40 and 50 cents an hour!

This legislation would provide a tremendous, non-inflationary boost to our nation's economy. Production of the food, shelter and other necessities of life, which these workers living on sub-sub-standard incomes would buy if their earnings were improved, would provide jobs for unemployed workers and new funds for hard-pressed businessmen.

This legislation will not hurt small business. The bills specifically exempt small business firms from being covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act. For example, only retail stores with sales of over a half million dollars a year and only large farms would be included.

Nor would this legislation cost the federal, state or city governments any money. The budget would in no way be affected.

Nor is this legislation inflationary. The goods which these low income families would buy with their increased income are in oversupply. Further, this new income would create further production.

In short, this legislation which would help America's most needy families to help themselves is necessary for moral and practical reasons.

Dear Dean Sayre:

I will be glad to join with you in the Citizens Committee on the Fair Labor Standards Act and thereby support the amendments to the Act which will help lift millions of poverty-stricken families to modern living standards.

(Signed) _____

THIS SIDE OF CARD IS FOR ADDRESS

The Very Reverend Francis B. Sayre, Jr.
Chairman, Citizens Committee on the Fair Labor Standards Act
National Consumers League
1025 Vermont Avenue, N. W.
Washington 5, D. C.

Scearce, Bob

February 10, 1959

Dear Mr. Scearce:

Many thanks for your kind letter of January 22nd and your nice comments on THE LOST CLASS OF '59.

We have had such excellent response to the program that we all feel the considerable amount of preparation entailed was well worthwhile.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Bob Scearce
WAFB-TV
Baton Rouge, Louisiana

mcc

WAFB TV
CHANNEL 28
BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA

CBS ABC NETWORKS

Thursday, Jan 22

H.

Ed Murrow
CBS News
485 Madison Ave.
New York City

Dear Mr. Murrow:

May I add my congratulations to all the others I know you must be getting on "The Lost Class of '59".

This was the most intelligent handling of a real "hot-potato" I've ever seen.

Every viewpoint had its chance-- there can be no charge of one-sidedness---great documentary.

Sincerely,

Bob Scearce

Bob Scearce
Sports-Special Events
WAFB-TV
Baton Rouge, La.

Schlesinger, Prof. Arthur

May 12, 1959

Professor Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.
Widener T
Harvard University
Cambridge, Mass.

Dear Professor Schlesinger:

As Mr. Murrow is away in Washington, I am sending you the transcript of MONTGOMERY SPEAKS HIS MIND, and will show him your kind letter when he returns at the end of the week.

Sincerely yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

enc.

WIDENER T
HARVARD UNIVERSITY
CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS

ARTHUR SCHLESINGER, JR.

UNIVERSITY 4-9710

May 1, 1959

Dear Ed:

I would be grateful if your office could send me a transcript of the Montgomery show. It was magnificent and I would like to consult the text for historical purposes.

Sincerely yours,

Arthur.

Mr. Edward Murrow
CBS
New York City, N.Y.

TO.....

FROM.....

F

URGENT

telephoned yes.

Scharper, Philip

Sheed and Ward INCORPORATED · PUBLISHERS

840 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 3, N.Y. Telephone: Oregon 4-8807. CABLES: STANZA, NEW YORK

February 20, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow:

You will recall that last December I had asked if you would consider writing an introduction to THE IMAGE INDUSTRIES, by Rev. William F. Lynch, S.J., to be published on April 15, 1959.

After reading the manuscript you felt that you would be unable to write the introduction, for the reasons given in your letter to me under date of December 9, 1958. For your convenience a copy of this letter is enclosed.

Might I now ask a further favor in regard to Father Lynch's book: In advertising the book, we would like to quote your underlined remarks if you would permit us to do so.

I assure you that I hate to make such a request; please permit me to explain why I am doing so. When I learned that you preferred not to write the introduction, I asked John Crosby if he would consider writing one. After reading the manuscript, he decided against doing the introduction, for reasons very similar to your own, although he, too, considered Father Lynch's critique to be important.

You and Mr. Crosby were, frankly, the only people I would care to have write the introduction. Mr. Crosby has indicated that he would like to comment on the book in his column after its publication. I would, therefore, if you approved, like to use your estimate of the book upon its first appearance. This would, I hope, take the curse off it since many people will assume that a book on TV and movies written by a Catholic priest must be either pietistic, censorious or both.

If you have any questions regarding the taste and propriety of Sheed and Ward's advertising, you might consult Rev. Harold Gardiner, S.J., who knows the firm's history and reputation. You might well want an assurance other than mine that your kindness would not be abused if we were permitted to use your name in connection with THE IMAGE INDUSTRIES.

Regardless of your decision in this matter, please know that your thoughtfulness has been appreciated.

And may I express the fervent personal wish that your forthcoming sabbatical will afford you ample opportunities for "rest and contemplation." With equal fervor I hope that your absence will force some of your CBS associates to rueful reflection.

Very truly yours,

Philip Scharper

Philip Scharper
Editor

PS:cvd

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

EDWARD R. MURROW
485 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

December 9, 1958

Mr. Philip Scharper
Sheed and Ward Inc.
840 Broadway
New York 3, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Scharper:

I have read Father Lynch's manuscript with real pleasure and profit. It is first-class. I was particularly impressed with his chapter on phantasy and reality. But I cannot undertake to write the foreword. Please permit me to explain why. I cultivate only a small corner of this vineyard, and Father Lynch has covered, I am sure competently, a vast area such as movies and religion where I am wholly incompetent and uninformed.

I think it is a book which ought to be read by everyone who attempts to create an image by or through any instrument of communication. I am grateful to have had an opportunity to read it.

Sincerely yours,

Ed Murrow

ERM:skh

Scharper, Philip

January 16, 1959

Dear Mr. Scharper:

Thank you for your letter of January 13th.

I hereby give you permission to use the words from my speech to the Radio and Television News Directors Convention which, Reverend William F. Lynch, S. J., has quoted in his book, THE IMAGE INDUSTRIES.

In answer to your question, the speech was delivered in Chicago on October 15, 1958.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Philip Scharper
Sheed and Ward
840 Broadway
New York, New York

mcc

Sheed and Ward INCORPORATED · PUBLISHERS

840 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 3, N.Y. Telephone: Oregon 4-8807. CABLES: STANZA, NEW YORK

January 13, 1959

Dear Mister Murrow,

May I trouble you again concerning our forthcoming book, THE IMAGE INDUSTRIES. In it, the author, Rev. William F. Lynch, S.J., has quoted (approvingly) approximately 103 words from a speech which you delivered to the Radio and Television News Directors Convention in Chicago last year. We should be grateful for your permission to reprint this material, under the usual conditions.

In addition to the above, might I also request the following bit of information. Would you tell us the date on which the speech was given, since the rubrics for footnotes require such annotation.

Very sincerely yours,

Philip Scharper

Philip Scharper

PS/tg

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

SHEED AND WARD, LTD., 33 MAIDEN LANE, LONDON, W.C.2. Cables: Stanza, London

Scharper, Philip

December 9, 1958

Mr. Philip Scharper
Sheed and Ward Inc.
840 Broadway
New York 3, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Scharper:

I have read Father Lynch's manuscript with real pleasure and profit. It is first-class. I was particularly impressed with his chapter on phantasy and reality. But I cannot undertake to write the foreword. Please permit me to explain why. I cultivate only a small corner of this vineyard, and Father Lynch has covered, I am sure competently, a vast area such as movies and religion where I am wholly incompetent and uninformed.

I think it is a book which ought to be read by everyone who attempts to create an image by or through any instrument of communication. I am grateful to have had an opportunity to read it.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

(manuscript sent back by hand)

wpc.

Sheed and Ward INCORPORATED · PUBLISHERS

840 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 3, N.Y. Telephone: Oregon 4-8807. CABLES: STANZA, NEW YORK

November 21, 1958

Dear Mister Murrow,

Thank you very much for your thoughtfulness and generosity in offering to read THE IMAGE INDUSTRIES by Rev. William F. Lynch, S.J.

I fully understand that your willingness to read the manuscript in no way involves a prior commitment to write a foreword.

The manuscript itself is being sent to your office by messenger. I wish to point out that this represents the unedited state of the manuscript; Fr. Lynch's major ideas will not be touched; his style will be - but any changes made would in no way affect your basic reaction to the manuscript.

Regardless of your eventual decision concerning a foreword I do hope that you will find THE IMAGE INDUSTRIES of interest, and I wish to express again deep thanks for your kindness.

Very truly yours,

Philip Scharper
per T.G.

Philip Scharper

PS/tg

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

November 19, 1958

Mr. Philip Scharper
Sheed and Ward Incorporated
840 Broadway
New York 3, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Scharper:

I would be delighted to read THE IMAGE INDUSTRIES, if you will be good enough to let me read it without a prior commitment to write the foreword. I am not sure this is proper protocol, but I would like to read it for my own enlightenment and then decide whether I could properly contribute anything in the way of a foreword.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

Sheed and Ward INCORPORATED · PUBLISHERS

840 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 3, N.Y. Telephone: Oregon 4-8807. CABLES: STANZA, NEW YORK

November 14, 1958

Dear Mister Murrow,

During the discussion at Morris Ernst's the other evening you felt that among the questions to be answered were: "Who decides what people get, and what competence do they have to make this decision?" These questions hit me particularly because we are planning a book in the Spring which asks these same questions and several others.

It is a manuscript tentatively called THE IMAGE INDUSTRIES by Rev. William F. Lynch, S. J. Fr. Lynch has a growing reputation in the field of "little magazines" of criticism and for that reason his doing a critique of TV and movies for a more general audience is significant, since so few ever clamber down from the Olympus of the little magazines.

The book is neither pious nor moralistic, in fact Lynch argues that false piety and moralism have led theologians generally and Catholics particularly to give a left handed blessing to the poor performance of "The Image Industries."

Would you be in a position to even consider writing an introduction to this book? You would find yourself in basic agreement with it; it is a rather brief manuscript to read and an introduction to it could be as short or as long as you cared to make it.

Knowing of the incessant demands upon your time and energy I have been reluctant to write this letter but my conscience, both personal and editorial, would not let me rest until I had. If the possibility of an introduction is in the least attractive or even if you would like merely to see the manuscript, I would be glad to send you a copy immediately.

SHEED AND WARD, LTD., 33 MAIDEN LANE, LONDON, W.C.2. Cables: Stanza, London

In any case, thank you for considering the idea even to the extent of reading thus far, and thank you for your comments of the other evening. Every time I was about to sink for the third time in a sea of Foundationese, you would say something in English.

With every best wish,

Sincerely yours,

Phil Scharper

Philip Scharper
Editor

PS/tg

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS News
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Schechner, Mrs. Jos.

December 15, 1958

Dear Mrs. Schechner:

Thank you for your nice letter telling me about your idea for a television program.

It may perhaps have merit, however, I cannot possibly use it since my PERSON TO PERSON and SMALL WORLD programs consist of conversations and interviews.

I suggest you write a letter to Mr. Irving Gitlin, Director of News and Public Affairs programs for CBS.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Joseph Schechner
6076 Newport Point
Norfolk, Virginia

mcc

Mrs. Joseph Schechner
6076 Newport Point
Norfolk,5,Va.

November 16,1958.

Mr.Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr.Murrow,

Frequently we have viewed with great admiration your powerful TV programs depicting a controversial situation in an apparently unbiased and objective way. Still, after the presentation of the problem in question there was never a doubt in the mind of the viewer as to the morally right side of the issue.

This is the reason why we turn to you with the suggestion of a program dealing with the present educational crisis in Norfolk, a subject important and interesting to all Americans.

We are parents who have been working within our community in every possible way open to us to arouse public opinion as to the dangers of Senator Byrd's "massive resistance" program. We feel, however, that we are fighting a losing battle and that, when the federal courts will declare "massive resistance" illegal, as we anticipate, the Virginia legislature will meet to amend the state constitution to abolish public school education in Virginia altogether. Only an informed and aroused public can prevent this catastrophe.

In the City of Norfolk 10,000 white schoolchildren have not attended school this year, as their schools have not opened at all. There have been feeble attempts by parents at make shift education, which is hopelessly inadequate, beyond the means of many people and cannot be kept up beyond January.

The loss of education and the potential rise of juvenile delinquency are the primary results of the school shutdown. But now Norfolk is beginning to feel the secundary results also and our hope is that if we cannot overcome prejudice by stressing the value of education in a democracy, perhaps we can be effective by revealing the economic consequences of this suicidal policy. Business has slackened, navy families are moving out, navy personnel resent transfer to Norfolk and many children have been sent to schools out of state, thereby disrupting family life. The fear that we will lose our public school teachers to other states is also a very real one.

To publicize these facts is beyond the power of the many citizens who devote all their time to effect reopening of the schools. We are asking you to use your influence to bring to the attention of the country and of the South in particular what the result will be of the destruction of Public Education and of respect for the laws of our land.

At present the climate of fear is such that law-abiding citizens will not speak up, neighbors avoid the subject, the community is divided and hate mongers flood the city with their putrid outpourings. Significantly, integration in the Catholic schools and in the Catholic hospital has been effected quietly and peacefully.

Would you kindly let us know whether you feel that this struggle deserves your attention. If so, we would be glad to furnish leads and information to you or your representatitve here or are willing to come to New York if necessary.

Very sincerely yours,

Hedy Schechner.

Mrs.Joseph Schechner

Naomi Schwartz

Mrs.Kenneth Schwartz

Schechter, A.A.

March 16, 1959

Dear Abe:

I will look into the Churchill matter, but can't hold out much hope. And I will hope for the scotch when I return.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. A. A. Schechter
A. A. Schechter Associates
551 Fifth Avenue
New York 17, New York

ERM:jmi

A. A. SCHECHTER ASSOCIATES
551 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 17, N. Y.
MURRAY HILL 7-1150

10 March 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

Many thanks for your advice on the Churchill matter and if you get a chance to discuss it with him please send me a collect cable or an air mail, whichever is easier. My cable address is SHEKNEWS.

I hope you have a fine trip and I'll have that drink of scotch with you on your return.

Cordially,

A. A. Schechter

aas/jmm

CHICAGO LOS ANGELES LONDON

Schechter, Abe

November 20, 1958

Mr. Abe Schechter
580 Fifth Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Schechter:

Mr. Murrow asked me to send along to you the enclosed copy of a letter which we have received from Mr. Allan Bronfman.

Yours sincerely,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

enc.

ALLAN BRONFMAN
1430 PEEL STREET
MONTREAL, CANADA

November 14, 1958.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N.Y..

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Thank you for your letter of the 10th instant. I quite understood how preoccupied you were and I look forward to another occasion when we can get together.

I was able to get Governor McKeldin of Maryland to come to Toronto on the 24th of this month for the Victory Rally in connection with the Hebrew University - Technion Capital Campaign now underway there.

I look forward to some time in the future when an important occasion would warrant a visit by you to Canada when your time would permit it.

Yours sincerely,

Allan Bronfman

AB:dw

Schechter, Abe

F

November 7, 1958

Dear Abe:

Thanks for your letter of October 31st. This is merely a note to tell you that I have written to Allan Bronfman.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Abe Schechter
580 Fifth Avenue
New York, New York

mcc

A. A. SCHECHTER ASSOCIATES
580 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 36, N. Y.
~~JUdson 6-3430~~

October 31, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

Would you please drop a note to Allan Bronfman, Distiller Corp.-Seagram Ltd., 1430 Peel Street, Montreal, Canada, to explain your scheduling prevented you from participating in Toronto on behalf of Isreal, etc., hope you can do it at another time.

He would like to present this to his committee to show that he really tried.

I have been promised several names on the Exposition situation, and will forward the bios as soon as I get them.

Kindest regards,

Abe

mg

MU 7-1150.

Scheinman, Ronald

149 Beach 137th Street
Belle Harbor 94, New York

February 22,1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
WCBS - 485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Thank you very much for your kind letter of January 30th and for your generous offer to send me a copy of your biography. Needless to say, I was disappointed in not having the opportunity to personally interview you, but realize that you have a very tight schedule between now and July.

I read in the newspaper that you are taking a leave of absence starting in July, and it occurred to me that this circumstance might bring about a change in your relations with the press and thus allow time for a brief interview.

However, if this is not possible, I would very much appreciate your sending me a copy of your biography as well as a photograph suitable for publication. My purpose in requesting the picture is to use it in connection with a feature article which I plan to write for the "Polygon", concerning your career, based on the material in your book.

I await your reply with much interest and again wish to thank you for your courtesy.

Sincerely yours,

Ronald S. Scheinman

Ronald Scheinman
Staff, "Polygon"
Poly Prep Country Day School
Brooklyn, New York.

P.S. Could you possibly autograph the book.

Scheinman, Ronald

January 30, 1959

Dear Mr. Scheinman:

I have your nice letter of January 6th.

It is with deep regret that I tell you it will be impossible for me to accede to your request for an interview. My radio and television schedule leaves me no time at all in which to do interviews. I am sorry, but am sure you understand.

If you would like me to send you a copy of my biography, please do not hesitate to request one.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Ronald Scheinman
149 Beach 137th Street
Belle Harbor 94, New York

mec

3/11/59 - telephoned requesting a bio. We sent.

January 6th,1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
WCBS - 485 Madison Avenue
New York City, New York.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I represent the Polygon, school newspaper of Poly Prep Country Day School in Brooklyn. The 'Gon is one of the finest newspapers of its kind in the country, and has been receiving Medalist Ratings from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association for well over twenty years. The paper has a circulation of over three thousand weekly and reaches families and alumni all over the world.

I have been getting interviews for the paper for some time now, and thought that it would be an interesting and unique experience to interview a man who himself has interviewed so many illustrious people. I well realize how limited your time must be, with two television shows to handle weekly, in addition to numerous other activities. I would like to know, however, if I might impose upon you for a short interview at your convenience. I know the paper will be greatly honored to publish it, and I would consider it no less an honor to have the opportunity of interviewing you.

I would appreciate hearing from you whenever your busy schedule permits time to write and I look forward eagerly to your favorable reply.

Very sincerely yours,

Ronald Scheinman

Ronald Scheinman

149 Beach 137th St.
Belle Harbor 94, N.Y.

P.S. I was wondering if you were open to suggestions for interviews for "Person to Person". If so, might I suggest a man whom I have recently interviewed myself: Rear-Admiral Edmond J. Moran, a most interesting, colorful and important person. You no doubt recognize the name, for he is the president of the Moran Towing and Transportation Company, here in New York. A visitor to our city can hardly miss the tugs with the big "M" on the stack, here in the harbor. His business has taken him to all corners of the earth and his company is responsible for many spectacular sea rescues, among other things. The Admiral himself was in charge of all Allied tugs for the Normandy Invasion and also for the building of the artificial harbors on the Normandy coast, known as "Operation Mulberry". The activities of the Moran family date back to the early days of the Erie Canal and the mule-drawn barges.

I think his would be a most fascinating interview and there would be much to talk about.

If you wish to get in touch with him he can be reached at his office, 17 Battery Place, New York City.

R.S.

Schenck, O. M.

CITIZENS UTILITIES COMPANY

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICES · RIDGEWAY CENTER · STAMFORD, CONNECTICUT

May 19, 1959

ELECTRIC

KINGMAN, ARIZ.
NOGALES, ARIZ.
WALLACE, IDAHO
NEWPORT, VT.

GAS

NOGALES, ARIZ.
LA JUNTA, COLO.
BANGOR, MAINE

TELEPHONE

KINGMAN, ARIZ.
ELK GROVE, CAL.
FERNDALE, CAL.
RIO VISTA, CAL.
SUSANVILLE, CAL.
NEW BETHLEHEM, PA.

WATER

MIAMI, ARIZ.
BOULDER CREEK, CAL.
FERNDALE, CAL.
GUERNEVILLE, CAL.
LOS ALTOS, CAL.
MONTARA, CAL.
NILES, CAL.
NO. SACRAMENTO, CAL.
WALLACE, IDAHO
ROSELLE, ILL.

ICE AND COLD STORAGE

KETCHIKAN, ALASKA
NOGALES, ARIZ.

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We believe that in the current crisis of Treasury financing and the related Federal Reserve Board procedures to contain inflation, you will be particularly interested in reading the enclosed reprint of a section of our Annual Report for 1958, which has just been mailed to shareholders.

We hope you will find noteworthy both the views expressed and the viewpoint behind their expression by our President Richard L. Rosenthal.

Cordially yours,

O. M. Schenck

O. M. Schenck
Assistant Secretary

OMS:jg
enc.

Outlook for 1959

. . . For more than a decade now, [we have] consistently espoused the viewpoint that the principal problem of our society has been and will continue to be an effort to contain, within tolerable limits, the inflation tinder which underlies our general American economy. Within the past twelve months, there has been a general—and perhaps too extensive—recognition of the pervasiveness of this problem, and multiple inquiries into its phenomena. The Executive Office of our Government, Congress, and many other elected officials at Federal, state and municipal levels, are now full participants in admonitions regarding, or studies of, the problem. It is no disrespect to suggest that the total weight of recent adherents to the cause may in and of itself further unbalance a precarious see-saw.

In terms of potential effect of governmental action, clearly only the activities of the Federal Government and agencies have a total consequence. Foremost among the participants are the Executive branch of our Government—including the Treasury Department, with respect not only to the annual Federal Budget, but, also, the financing and refinancing of national debt; the Congress, to the extent that its authorizations for expenditures and establishment of taxation policies and levels affect both the Budget and the economy; and that coordinate branch of Government, the Federal Reserve Board, which, through its policies of credit ease or restraint, affects our National Budget and the total economic environment.

Two years ago, in our Annual Report for 1956, in commenting on the then activities of the Federal Reserve, we stated:

> "Adding to the uncertainty of the situation is a seeming confusion of purposes and contradiction in activities among various segments of the Federal Government. The ascribed purpose of 'tight money' is to control inflation. But tight money means

This is a reprint of a section from the 1958 Annual Report of Citizens Utilities Company. It reflects our concept of corporate management's citizenship obligations in its reporting to shareholders, employees, consumers and Government.

For 13 years, Citizens Utilities Company's Annual Reports have included an extended discussion of the problems and opportunities facing the Nation—reflecting also the writer's view that the national economic environment should have the thinking attention of all elements of our society.

The current comments reprinted here are, we believe, particularly timely. We trust they will have your interested reading.

RICHARD L. ROSENTHAL, President
CITIZENS UTILITIES COMPANY
RIDGEWAY CENTER
STAMFORD, CONNECTICUT

higher-cost money; and higher-cost money can only mean higher prices or lower profits. To the extent that higher prices result as producers of goods and services attempt to recoup the increased costs of 'tight money', obviously, the policy is self-defeating. To the extent that lower earnings result because of an inability of producers to recoup the increased cost of 'tight money', companies are being deprived of the very incentives necessary to build productive capacity to take care of the increasing quantities of goods and services which a growing population will require in the future under conditions of reasonable stability. A fundamental prerequisite to additions to productive capacity is the ability to raise capital on an economic basis. Lower earnings are antithetical to this objective.

"One other aspect of these contradictions between purpose and method warrants comment. A most important factor in the continued inflationary drift is the extraordinarily high level of Government spending. A direct, major consequence of the very monetary restraint which brings about 'tight money' is a sharp increase in the expenditure side of the Federal Government budget. So much of our Federal debt is now 'unfunded'—in the sense that it is represented by short-term bills and notes and other obligations of the Federal Government and its agencies maturing in less than five years—that increases in short-term money rates have a galvanic effect in increasing the 'interest payment' segment of the Federal Government budget. Thus, the 'tight money' policy has, in addition to the other disadvantages pointed out above, actually materially contributed to the increase in the Federal budget—which, in and of itself, is an important contributor to inflationary tendencies."

The observations then vouchsafed continue to be apt. There seems to be an inadequate realization within both the Federal Reserve and other responsible segments of Government that all producers of goods and services seek through prices to recover all of their increases in costs and maintain an unimpaired profit margin. They must—if they are to stay in business! To the extent that the Federal Reserve Board's actions have been "successful" in increasing the cost of borrowed capital—whether in the form of short-term bank loans or long-term mortgage or funded debt—producers have increased their selling prices to offset this increase in their costs. We know of few major business undertakings (if any) which have failed to come to fruition by reason of the increase in cost of borrowed funds which the Federal Reserve Board's policy of credit restraint has tended to encourage. There is no question that these Federal Reserve policies have increased the cost of credit to all enterprise—new projects and old alike! But every business enterprise which has paid more, rather than less, for its borrowed funds has attempted, as expeditiously as possible, to increase its selling prices to offset the added costs.

TREASURY FINANCING—AND ITS COSTS

One particular area in which the policies of the Federal Reserve have been most "successful" is in increasing the difficulty and cost of U.S. Government financing. In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1949, when the average Federal public debt was some 252.5 billion dollars, the Federal Budget expenditure for interest was 5.445 billion dollars. In the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, the projected (and probably underestimated) interest component has soared to 8.096 billion dollars—almost a 50% increase over the 1949 level—although the average debt outstanding for the period is estimated to have increased only 13% above that of the 1949 fiscal year. Thus, the credit policies of the Federal Reserve have caused an increase of close to 40% in the expenditure on interest in the Federal Budget, after adjusting for the change in total aggregate of debt outstanding between the two periods. This more than 2 billion dollar differential in interest (after making the bove adjustment) is a sizable contributor to the deficit or absence of surplus in our ederal financial affairs.

The consequences of increased cost of debt service to the Federal Government ave been the necessity to maintain high corporate and individual tax rates (which ı themselves are costs which are recouped in higher selling prices!); and the ıarked contribution which the increased cost of debt service makes to the total eficit in the Federal Budget. If, as many economists contend—and seemingly quite orrectly—Federal budgetary deficits contribute markedly to inflation potential if they do not cause inflation itself), then the Federal Reserve policies have in ıis area, too, buoyed, rather than tended to arrest, the price elevator.

In all—as in military warfare—the problem seems to be that there is a tendency bring to the present dilemma the methods and techniques gleaned from an earlier onflict. Generally, the governmental agencies—the Federal Reserve Board, the reasury, the Executive Office, and the Congress—are, in effect, fighting this ear's battle with the obsolete weapons and techniques of a previous war. In so oing, they fuel inflationary potential by the deficit in Federal Budgets which the reatly inflated interest component (directly caused by the Federal Reserve policy f "credit restraint") causes; and they add to the increase in price levels by bring-ıg about cost increases—via interest cost and taxes—which translate immediately ıto price increases as producers recoup, through prices, these cost increases.

In the process, there are other serious and damaging consequences. Foremost nong these has been a virtual demoralization of the markets for long-term Treasury bligations and a serious impairment of both Federal credit and the ability of the ederal Government to finance even affirmative projects and necessary debt. A ogent, recent example is provided by the experience of any investor who ook seriously the urgings of responsible Federal officials in the late spring f 1958, and responded affirmatively to the representations that he would both ontribute to a reduction in inflation potential and make a sound investment if he urchased the long-term U.S. Treasury obligations offered for sale last June. Many ıvestors responded to these suggestions—some even too enthusiastically, using orrowed funds to finance their response!—and the June, 1958, long-term U.S. bond nancing was well over-subscribed. Within three months, as a consequence of ıbsequent Federal Reserve Board "restraint" policies, this very same bond issue, ffered in June at 100, had sold as low as 89. The consequence of Federal Reserve oard policies, then, for these investors was that they experienced what virtually onstituted a capital levy of 11% in three months—or at the rate of 44% on an nual basis! Not even the strongest nation in the world can expect its credit to ırvive intact investor experience of this nature. The difficulties of U.S. Treasury nancing since are too well known to require elaboration here.

E-EVALUATION NEEDED

It has been suggested, however, that the dilemma is a sort of vicious circle. The ederal Reserve contends that if investors fear inflation, they will not buy long-rm Treasury bonds. That means that the Treasury must float ever-shorter curities. Because these are virtually the equivalent of cash and because their incipal market is the banking system, they tend to expand the Nation's money pply and make the inflation problem—and psychology—worse. Then, as the ederal Reserve tries to combat this with even more restrictive monetary policies, ond prices fall further; the cost of Treasury financing increases; the Federal terest component in the Budget becomes larger; and the deficit becomes greater, ading to a requirement for still more financing at higher interest costs, still rther increasing the Budget deficit, etc. A fundamental evaluation of the problem suggests that it was not the fear of inflation, but, rather, the Federal Reserve's own policies which initiated this new venture in perpetual motion! Had the Federal Reserve not resorted to an inordinate use of the blunderbuss of credit restraint at the very time that the necessity of maintaining investor confidence in Treasury long-term obligations was the greatest, the vicious circle would not have been set in motion. The concepts of control of credit which underlie the powers granted by Congress to the Federal Reserve, as an independent agency, were concepts applicable and operable in the Twenties. The level of national debt, the relationship of interest component to the total Federal Budget, the problem of Federal budgetary deficits, the nature of corporate financing—these and many other things were much different then. The evidence seems to suggest that these powers and, particularly, the practice of their use by the Federal Reserve, are too crude and too pervasive for our contemporary economic society.

It would seem that the approach and composition of the Federal Reserve Board require a thorough overhauling. Fundamental to its other deficiencies is the fact that the "Fed", in its Governors, advisory committees and Reserve Bank Boards, is dominated by representatives of creditor institutions, which are direct beneficiaries of higher interest rates. This is not to suggest that self-interest has been a conscious motivating factor in the deliberations and decisions of these men. But it is to recognize that their backgrounds, training and the self-interest of the business organizations by which they are employed causes them to accept uncritically recommendations which accord with their preconceptions. Similarly, the committee which advises the U.S. Treasury on debt financing policies is dominated by representatives of banking and creditor institutions. There is, therefore, a tendency to accept unchallenged the viewpoint that higher interest rates are "good" and contribute to the control of inflation. What is called for today, in no uncertain terms, is not only a re-examination of the premises and prejudices on which the Federal Reserve Board proceeds, but, also, a thorough reconstitution of the membership representation of the Board (and that of its Banks) and the Treasury's advisory committee. The borrowing interests should be accorded much greater—if not major—representation. The reality is that it is the corporate borrowers who establish prices for goods and services; in establishing prices they must, to survive, recover all of their costs, including interest and tax costs; and it is prices which evidence inflation—or the lack thereof!

There are other considerations. To the extent that the credit restraint policies are successful in inhibiting an increase in our aggregate production capacities or deter the replacement of higher-cost, old with lower-cost, new facilities, the supply of goods and services will be constricted just as the demand burgeons in the Sixties. The most effective arrestor of inflation is an adequate supply of goods and services produced at the lowest possible cost. Anything which effectively prevents the addition of new, lower-cost capacity or the replacement and modernization of present higher-cost capacity abets inflation, rather than tempering it.

We urge again on the Congress the consideration of more modern economic measures in its approach to the problem of inflation. The precursor of rabid inflation is the serious impairment, and then destruction, of the financing ability of a nation's central government. The present financing dilemma of the U.S. Treasury is a serious one—because of what it portends as well as what it immediately causes—that requires the most thoughtful consideration and most rapid correction. In fashioning new policies, the Congress would do well to recall the fundamental role that incentive plays in human conduct and should recognize, too, that the complicated society of the Sixties will not necessarily respond to the tools and methods fashioned and adopted in the Twenties.

March 6, 1959

Schenck, O. M.

May 7, 1958

Dear Mr. Schenck:

I have your nice letter of April 15th.

Thank you for sending me your Annual Report which I read with a great deal of interest.

Sincerely,

Mr. O. M.Schenck
Assistant Secretary
Citizens Utilities Company
Ridgeway Center
Stamford, Connecticut

mcc

CITIZENS UTILITIES COMPANY

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICES · RIDGEWAY CENTER · STAMFORD, CONNECTICUT

April 15, 1958

Tnx for material, etc.

ELECTRIC

KINGMAN, ARIZ.
NOGALES, ARIZ.
WALLACE, IDAHO
NEWPORT, VT.

GAS

NOGALES, ARIZ.
LA JUNTA, COLO.
BANGOR, MAINE

TELEPHONE

KINGMAN, ARIZ.
ELK GROVE, CAL.
FERNDALE, CAL.
RIO-VISTA, CAL.
SUSANVILLE, CAL.
NEW BETHLEHEM, PA.

WATER

MIAMI, ARIZ.
BOULDER CREEK, CAL.
FERNDALE, CAL.
GUERNEVILLE, CAL.
LOS ALTOS, CAL.
MONTARA, CAL.
NILES, CAL.
NO. SACRAMENTO, CAL.
WALLACE, IDAHO
ROSELLE, ILL.

ICE AND COLD STORAGE

KETCHIKAN, ALASKA
NOGALES, ARIZ.

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.
Columbia Broadcasting System Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We believe that at the current economic crossroads, you will be interested in reading the enclosed reprint of a section of our Annual Report for 1957, which has just been mailed to shareholders. This material went to press a little over a month ago: on March 7,1958.

We hope that you will find noteworthy the views expressed in the enclosure and the viewpoint which motivates their expression by our president, Richard L. Rosenthal.

Cordially yours,

O. M. Schenck

O. M. Schenck
Assistant Secretary

OMS:jg
enc.

THESE ARE OPERATING CENTERS. OVER 200 COMMUNITIES ARE SERVED BY FACILITIES WHOSE OPERATIONS ARE DIRECTED FROM THE ABOVE LISTED OPERATING CENTERS.

Outlook for 1958

. . . These observations reflect the anomaly that now characterizes the general American economy: recession (a perhaps inept term for adverse and unsettled general business conditions) accompanied by price increases at most levels of the economy including, particularly, consumer levels.

In our Annual Report for 1956, on March 8, 1957 – a year ago – we wrote:

> ". . . the major prospect for the year ahead is uncertainty . . . One wonders how much longer these consumers will be able to continue to absorb in adequate quantity goods priced at levels which reflect the strong, monopoly bargaining positions of the national labor organizations which represent the 15,000,000. It seems self-evident that, at some point, increases in wages for these strongly organized groups substantially exceeding increases in productivity will no longer be able to be recouped in the prices of the products produced by them, at an output level which will maintain 'full employment' – because the other four-fifths who constitute the preponderance of the consuming units do not receive the same annual increase in wage 'benefits'.
>
> "Many of these [earnings] results evidence the fact that, because higher costs can no longer be passed on to the consumer in the form of higher prices at the required levels of production, higher costs have been 'passed on' to the investor in the form of lower earnings. In these terms, much of what has heretofore been generally acclaimed as 'growth' is turning out to be the opposite for shareholders in too many companies."

This is a reprint of a section from the 1957 Annual Report of Citizens Utilities Company. It reflects our concepts of good citizenship and the obligations relative to the Nation's affairs which corporate management has to its shareholders, employees, consumers and Government. Citizens Utilities Company's Annual Reports for 12 years have each year included an extended discussion of problems and opportunities facing the Nation. This reflects the writer's belief that, long-range, the national economic environment has pervasive significance for each element of our society.

The comments reprinted here are, we believe, particularly timely. The viewpoint which causes the inclusion of a similar section in each year's Annual Report may be of interest to you. We should be happy to send you a full copy of our booklet Annual Report for 1957.

RICHARD L. ROSENTHAL, President
CITIZENS UTILITIES COMPANY
RIDGEWAY CENTER
STAMFORD, CONNECTICUT

The business upset we anticipated a year ago has arrived with a vengeance – a consequence of the factors quoted above and the "tight money" policy of the Federal Reserve Board, which was also discussed at length in our Annual Report for last year. Despite the so-called efforts at control of inflation – which, in our view, added inflationary fuel by increasing costs – the consumer price series shows that the past twelve months have witnessed almost as significant an increase in prices as in unemployment. Yet, despite the continuing inflation – with all of the adversity it portends, both immediately and long-range – both political parties are espousing still additional inflationary measures in an effort to eliminate all except upward fluctuations in the business cycle.

At both Federal and state levels, the policy of government seems to rest on the premise that tomorrow never comes; therefore, one need only be concerned with the actions likely to be most "effective" today. This has come to be the bipartisan viewpoint – despite the fact that today is, of course, the tomorrow of all the yesterdays of poor fiscal and taxation policies of more than two decades now.

A CRITIQUE

We cannot agree that the only concern of responsible government leaders should be with "full employment" – at any price. Perhaps political standards have so declined, and the competition for votes and the effort to get elected or reelected have become such primary objectives for our legislators, that the economic verities must be disregarded; in fact, discarded. But if this is the case, the long-range prospects for the American economy and the American people are dismal indeed.

An important school of economic thought has developed which contends that "a little inflation" is an annual necessity for our enterprise system, because it is required to achieve "full employment". The tenets of this group ignore the reality that the means may destroy – rather than achieve – the end. It has become fashionable to make light of the consequences of inflation and to delineate as necessary (if not, good) an increase in the price level in the order of 3% per year. By the nature of this approach, the fact that this is a compounded 3% and the consequences of such 3% compounding are both ignored. Yet the inexorability of mathematics demonstrates that pursuit of this policy would completely destroy the soundness of our monetary system and currency within another generation.

The palliative of "just a little bit of inflation" now dominates the prescriptions for the current economic ills compounded by both of our major political parties – and organized labor, too. Perhaps addiction to this "therapy" by the national organized labor group reflects a belief that wage increases equal to, or more than, cost-of-living price increases can be exacted for their members every year. But such exaction obviously does not proceed in an economic vacuum. Its ultimate consequence must be to negate the very "full employment" which organized labor urges on our National Government – as events of the last 18 months have demonstrated. Any business cost increases are a very real motivation for "pass-on" price increases – plus! And this is necessary in terms of the reality of enterprise management, because without it, there is a reduction in (and, ultimately, elimination of) return on capital employed in the enterprise. Those who put up the capital to make enterprises possible are themselves adversely affected by increases in the cost-of-living. They then seek an increase in return on capital, to offset the ravages of inflation: the fact that price increases reduce the real return of a nominally stable return on capital, in an inflationary era. Additionally, in a period of expanding population, enterprises need more capital to build the facilities to produce the goods to supply the expanding markets. Such capital is not forthcoming, unless it sees the probability of improved (or, at very least, maintained) real return on capital. Thus, throughout corporate industry generally, cost increases constitute a necessity for price increases, in order that enterprise survives and grows. The price increases, in turn, cause further cost increases . . . and the cycle proceeds with greater violence and intensity, the higher each round pushes the balloon.

In this process, all parties involved seem to have forgotten the many elements of our society who do not belong to the above-delineated groups – but who constitute a majority of our population and a majority of the consuming units of our economy! In aggregate, the national labor organizations represent no more than 15,000,000 members. Even if one were to accept rather optimistic data on corporate share ownership, the direct stockholders of the Nation do not exceed 9,000,000 in number—and today, many of these are also members of national labor organizations. The wage-cost-earnings-price cycle being carried on can "successfully" be contended with by only 24,000,000 heads of consuming units at best. The other 50,000,000 consumers or heads of consuming units – the self-employed, the white-collar groups, the pensioned, the retired, the Government workers, the members of the Armed Forces, work forces not members of the national unions, etc. – these cannot obtain increases in incomes sufficient to permit them to offset the adverse effect on their purchasing power of "just a little inflation" annually. Thus, they cannot buy the products of our production system in sufficient quantity fully to employ the national work force at "cost-of-living" wages and/or return adequate, inflation-offsetting profits to the owners of the productive facilities.

In the present immediate national economic dilemma, neither political party, nor labor, has suggested any corrective measures which are not inflationary in their effect. Our national legislators and various state leaders have called for expanded public works programs, increased defense expenditures and tax reduction as the "cures" for what is regarded as an intolerable aggregate of unemployment. Labor statesmen have endorsed the principles of all three of these "solutions" (although they differ with the detail of treatment suggested by some political statesmen) and have added the additional suggestion of increases in wage rates for their members "to increase purchasing power". Their reasoning is that such increases will provide a basis to buy more goods and that this will eliminate the unemployment – ignoring the fact that wage rates are not wages and that cost-price increases constitute one of the prime causes of present unemployment.

All of these measures must, and would, cause still further upward pressure on prices, via costs or otherwise. And the plain, simple fact is that the majority of our Nation can no longer tolerate or absorb such price increases and continue to purchase goods at an output level which will maintain "full employment".

REALITIES

Lost in political concentration on today's problem are tomorrow's realities. Economic measures which have the end consequence of further increasing the present all-too-high level of prices for goods and services cannot make it possible for the majority of consumers to buy increasing quantities of what they can already no longer afford. Subscription to the principle that correction of cost- and wage-price imbalance must always come by inflating prices – rather than reducing costs – ignores the fact that, although the large national industries and large national labor organizations dominate our economic scene, even with their peripheral impacts they do not constitute our entire economy.

The many excesses of a long period of inflation and "boom" have caught up with our Nation's economy. By unwise and unsound measures, we can, perhaps, postpone for a few more "tomorrows" the necessity for correction of these excesses – but we do so at the peril of making the ultimate correction a cataclysm. In a relatively free (as distinguished from command) economy, there must be both "downs" as well as "ups". In what must ultimately be a vain effort to eliminate the "downs" by legislative fiat, on the false premise that we cannot "afford" anything except "ups", we can, long-range, make the command economy necessary. It has been well said that the essence of our enterprise system is a reliable currency. Without it, inflation becomes self-perpetuating, as savings leave their normal habitat and flee to more protective media. This process "requires" Government intervention and the provision of Government capital to meet the requirements which private savings ordinarily supply. If the process once starts in the United States, it will be irrevocable the world over.

All of this recognizes that there is no easy solution to the current dilemma – although it must be noted that the only so-called "solutions" being pursued are the easy ones. Perhaps, as a Nation, we must now face up to the fact that the time to endure the hardships and disabilities of necessary readjustments to past economic excesses is that time when the excesses are smaller and the necessary readjustments are more manageable. The continual postponement until "tomorrow" by "easy" inflation will ultimately sorely disadvantage everybody – even those who, for a time, can individually or collectively successfully contend with inflation at the expense of the rest of the society in which they live. It clearly is not in fashion so to say – but it just as clearly is valid to observe – that a short, relatively mild recession (accompanied by appropriate measures to aid the individuals adversely affected) may be by far the lesser of the economic dilemmas really facing our society.

The above comments do not ignore the necessity for assistance to all of those whose personal circumstances are adversely affected by the necessity for economic adjustments. But we have now had convincing demonstration that the "happy dust" of still more inflation does not cure the economic ills of costs – and, therefore, prices – which are too high to permit consumers to absorb the volume of goods necessary to maintain adequate employment. In this respect, inflation may be likened to a narcotic which may temporarily cause the taker to forget that he has problems – but hardly wipes them out! In fact, the parallel is even more extensive. Narcotics addiction leads to the requirement for ever larger and larger doses. So with recourse to inflationary measures every time an even transient or mild economic upset develops.

In just these terms, some fundamental observations seem incumbent. Any economic upset – and economic upsets are one of the necessary features of a fluid society, based on an enterprise system – involves hardship for a limited number. In such circumstances, there assuredly is a societal obligation for such measures and steps as will directly alleviate the hardships of those affected. But the "shotgun" approach of massive inflationary measures does not fall within the classification of direct alleviating action. Surely, it is not too dispassionate to suggest that transient hardship for a relatively limited number – to be ameliorated by direct assistance – is preferable to uncorrectible ultimate hardship for all. Yet such permanent hardship for all will be the inescapable, final result of recurrent resort to measures of major inflationary consequences under every circumstance of limited economic decline.

CONCLUSION

Perhaps discussions of economic morality are not in vogue. But it must, nevertheless, be noted that the most extreme evidence of economic immorality imaginable is to be found in circumstances that Government pursues national policies which have clearly recognizable (or even avowed) inflationary consequences – and simultaneously sells its citizenry fixed-interest, fixed-dollar principal, long-term debt, whose payment must clearly be in a currency with purchasing power markedly depreciated from that which was used by investors when they were induced to purchase such obligations. Similar comment is also applicable to representations as to the "benefits" of Social Security at retirement ages. Such benefits are paid in dollars; and the number of dollars which the present schedule provides will be of little avail two or three decades hence (or even sooner), if recent trends in purchasing power of our currency are permitted to continue – or are even accelerated. In the final sense of the word, everybody is retired: those who now receive pension benefits or are supported by investment income; those who will be in that position next year; and those who will be in that position 40 years from now. These (all of us) are the people whom the compounded, annual "just a little inflation" must ultimately sorely affect – if not destroy.

These comments are prompted by our view that what Government does is everybody's concern – and responsibility. The resigned approach – to the effect that the individual can have no effect on his ultimate personal destiny – inordinately transfers to a central authority (and a limited few) the powers which should broadly reside to fulfill the requirements of a democratic society. The considerations outlined above do not just affect utility shareholders, utility consumers or utility employees. They affect all of us. In the most ultimate sense of the word, they are our business.

March 7, 1958

Schleifer, I.

December 17, 195[illegible]

Edward R. Murrow,
Radio & Television Commentator,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mister Murrow,

Please receive my thanks for having accepted the invitation to Membership of our Honorary Committee.

I should also like to use this opportunity to state, that our Association will be happy to welcome you, and to hear a lecture on a subject, choosen by you, during your forthcoming visit, to Israel, as you told me, in New York.

The Association and I, are wishing you and yours, all the blessings of peace, health, joy and happiness with the comming New Year.

Shalom,

Ida Schleifer

Schlein, Alex.

MRS. ALEXANDER S. SCHLEIN

907 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK 21, N. Y.

January 27, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am writing you because I know that you will have the courage to inform the public of a situation that should not be permitted to exist in our State and one the newspapers ignore.

During your recent interview with Genevieve you mentioned an ad that had appeared in the N.Y. Times regarding the A.S.P.C.A. noted, E.R.M.

Although they are a private organization they have been granted the unique privilege of collecting taxes from the public. Few people are aware of the fact that dogs not adopted by the public are either turned over to laboratories for vivisection or are destroyed by the A.S.P.C.A. in their decompression chambers.

All humane organizations would like to do something to make experiments like the ones described in the enclosed literature illegal; the biggest obstacle is the resistance of the A.S.P.C.A.

The organization of which I am a founder(American Society for the Protection of Dogs) is properly registered with the Department of Welfare and Charities. Yet we do not solicit public funds and we are all volunteers.
We are not anti vivisectionists, for we realize the necessity of using animals for medical research. But we are against the cruel treatment of animals and against the needless repetition of experiments on living dogs that have been proven to have no value in the past. We would like to see the law amended accordingly.
The law in Germany is more humane. It provides that an experiment may be performed only once at which time a film is to be made. Later on this film is used for study by medical students. This avoids the needless sacrifice of animals. This seems to us a sensible and humane procedure.

It is not possible to describe the entire situation in one letter. If you are interested, as I hope you will be, won't you ask your secretary to get in touch with me and I shall be happy to give her further information.

Sincerely yours,

Lena P. Schlein

(Mrs. Alexander S. Schlein)

Telephone: REgant 4-4124

Please, turn to last page.

ANIMAL EXPERIMENTATION

A Glimpse Behind the Doors of the Grim Experimental Laboratories

'IN NAME OF SCIENCE' – Dog appearing in above photograph is locked motionless in type of machine that would put Spanish inquisition rack and thumbscrews to shame. The "Animal Board" and Gag are standard laboratory equipment.

Broken and deformed on the rack of "science" in the torture chamber of the experimenters.

* * *

Vivisection includes—

Cutting, Freezing, Burning, Starving, Gassing, Electrically Shocking and Otherwise Torturing Living Animals, and Inoculating Them with Malignant Diseases

* * *

A detestable practice. . . . I cannot understand any civilized man committing or countenancing the continuance of such a practice.

CARDINAL MANNING

* * *

Damnable in effect upon human character.

BISHOP JOHN CHANLER WHITE
(Episcopalian)

In these rotating death drums vivisectors confine animals. In the case of one group—

5 cats survived the ordeal for 4 days
2 cats survived the ordeal for 5 days

THINK OF IT—day and night revolving these machines filled with helpless animals which crawl and fall within their solid walls until they die from nervous collapse or "fatigue!"

* * *

Vivisection is a crime!

VICTOR HUGO

* * *

There will come a time when the world will look back to modern vivisection in the name of science as they do now to burning at the stake in the name of religion.

DR. HENRY J. BIGELOW, late Professor of Surgery at Harvard Medical School and long associated with the Massachusetts General Hospital

The loyal and trusting friend of man, a helpless and uncomprehending victim of remorseless experimenters.

* * *

Luther Burbank

If, as we know, the creatures with fur, feathers or fins are our brethern in a lower stage of development, then, their very weakness and inability to protest, demands that man should refrain from torturing them for the mere possibility of obtaining some knowledge which he believes may be to his own interest.

* * *

George Bernard Shaw

From Shakespeare to Dr. Johnson to Ruskin and Mark Twain, the natural abhorrence of sane mankind for the vivisector's cruelty, and the contempt of able thinkers for his imbecile casuistry, have been expressed by the most popular spokesmen of humanity . . . Honorable men do not behave dishonorably even to dogs.

At the time this photograph was taken in a university laboratory kennel, the dog had been kept without food of any kind for 51 days. Attendants went by the cage daily with food for the other dogs in the kennel.

* * *

Modern scientific men in their biological Inquisitions have deliberately placed themselves outside the human conscience. What they are really doing is undermining the supreme achievement of evolution, namely, the spiritualizing and sensitizing of the general conscience.

JOHN COWPER POWYS

* * *

Gandhi

Vivisection, in my opinion, is the blackest of all the black crimes that man is at present committing against God and His fair creaton.

THE PROOF OF TORTURE

In proof of the facts, we hold on record—and in mass—references to recent vivisection journals which, in black and white, describe an endless gamut of torture—from mass scaldings to the merciless beating and re-beating in machines of totally unanesthetized animals. We give journal names, years, months and page numbers, the names of the vivisectors, and where the tortures were committed. It is a mass record of proof that cannot be denied.

FROM ROCHESTER, NEW YORK--- AN EXAMPLE

"Over 300 dogs" were tortured—many to death—by crushing their hind legs in a crushing machine. The machine is shown on page 128. The dog's thigh "high against the body" is placed between two large, opposing, coarse-ridged wood and steel jaws, and these jaws are screwed down with bolts to pressures of from 500 to 4,000 pounds. Each of the 300 dogs was subjected to five hours of continuous crushing. The vivisectors admit (page 127) "in almost no case" was any anesthetic given during the last hour before the press was removed, or after the press was removed. On page 128 they state baldly that the surviving dogs were "restrained" on the table for 12 hours following the removal of the press.

The Journal of Clinical Investigation
Volume 24: No. 2. March 1945. Pages 127-145.

The Vivisectors: Renato A. Ricca, K. Fink, Leonard I. Katzin, Stafford L. Warren. (Pages 140-145: L. T. Steadman replaced Katzin.)

The Place: Rochester, New York.

YOU ARE NEEDED IN THE FIGHT

Please join the League now . . . you are greatly needed. We are an incorporated non-profit society of volunteer workers. Your membership in the League can help shorten the duration of this system of MISLEADING, STUPID and MERCILESS cruelty.

The Humanitarian League of Rochester, N. Y., Inc.

97 Tremont Street, Rochester 8, New York

Annual Dues—Regular $2, Sustaining $5, Life $100

—Donations gratefully accepted. All funds are immediately put into active work. Literature on request.—

AN EXPERIMENT TO DEMONSTRATE CERTAIN KNOWN CHARACTERISTICS OF SHOCK BY MASHING THE LEGS OF DOGS WITH A RAWHIDE HAMMER

(Department of Physiology, Columbia University.)

THIS EXPERIMENT was the project of Magnus I. Gregerson and Walter S. Root, of the Department of Physiology, Columbia University. They reported on it in the American Journal of Physiology, Volume 148, dated January, 1947, Pages 98 through 123.

On a great many occasions—but especially during the first World War—doctors treating human patients noticed a reduction in blood volume during the development of shock. It was this observation, made in "Flanders' Field," which caused doctors to realize that transfusions should be given in shock cases.

However, Gregerson and Root decided that it would be interesting to watch blood volume drop in dogs as a result of shock. It should be noted that they knew at the outset that blood volume could be expected to drop in shock cases. In this experiment, Gregerson and Root were not searching for a means of preventing shock. They were not searching for any details as to the proper administration of plasma. They were not searching for a cure for anything in particular. They were intent merely upon shocking dogs by means of a procedure which neither man nor dog very well could be expected to encounter in ordinary living.

The "surgical" part of this experiment was very simple. The dog was strapped down. He was given a very light administration of ether—apparently enough to make his struggles ineffective, but, according to Gregerson and Root, not enough to blot out his sense of "feel." To use their own words: "Although we were able to produce fatal shock consistently in a high percentage of the animals, we never eliminated the element of 'feel'."

Protective hair covering over the dogs' hind legs was removed with clippers. Then a rawhide mallet was brought into play. Each dog received from 700 to 1,000 blows on each of his hind legs. Perhaps it would be well to let the vivisectors tell this part of it in their own words: "The contusions (injuries) produced marked swellings and hemorrhage into the tissues. The swelling extended into the flank and groin. The first few hundred blows usually caused a greater degree of swelling than did the later blows."

* * *

THE ETHER, never given in any great amount, was stopped as soon as the beating was finished. The dog was allowed to get up, if he could, on his mashed hind legs.

Of 30 dogs treated in this fashion, 25 died —but first they lived, for periods ranging from a bit less than one hour to nine hours and 21 minutes.

Numerous interesting observations were made: Dogs able to survive for less than 2-1/3 hours panted and gasped. An injured dog, allowed to drink water, immediately vomited. When death was near, the animals frequently twitched. These are the contributions to scientific knowledge made by the vivisectors Gregerson and Root.

It has been noted that of 30 dogs, 25 died within less than ten hours. But what of the other five?

They were brought back to the vivisection room the following day to be beaten again. Three of them died the moment they were placed once more upon the vivisection board. Apparently they died of terror. Here is the way the vivisectors express it: ". . . we have seen 3 dogs which survived shock suddenly expire the following day when they were again placed upon the animal board. We do not know how great a role this may play in our experiments" (the placing of the animals on the board, that is).

The vivisectors give no clue as to the ultimate fate of the surviving dogs in this experiment.

National Humane Education Association
Champlain Building,
Chicago 3, Illinois

NHEA

ANOTHER EXPERIMENT TO STUDY THE RESULTS OF SMASHING A DOG'S HIND LEGS.

(Section of Physiology, Biological Laboratory, Princeton University.)

IN RECENT MONTHS, a great deal of public attention has been drawn to the fact that the Vivisectors Gregerson and Root indulged in the procedure of tying down a number of dogs and pounding their hind legs to pulp with a raw-hide mallet. But it should be noted that Gregerson and Root are by no means alone in the performance of this procedure which has horrified so many people.

Let us examine the American Journal of Physiology, Volume 140, No. 4, Pages 490-

498, dating all the way back to January, 1944. At this point in the medical literature there is an article by the Vivisectors W. J. Eversole, W. Kleinberg, R. R. Overman, J. W. Remington, and W. W. Swingle, of the Section of Physiology, Biological Laboratory, Princeton University.

As early as 1944, these five vivisectors were pointing out that "traumatization of the leg muscles has been used often to produce shock in dogs." They then go on to name some of the vivisectors who have beaten dogs' legs to pulp and have written articles about it. These include the following: Blalock, et al; Parsons and Phessister; O'Shaughnessy and Slome; Lorber, Kabat, Welte and Freedman; Kendrick, Essex and Helmholz; Best and Solandt—and, last, but far from least, Dr. Donald Meek of the University of Wisconsin, who is the man who once testified before a legislative committee, "No agony is too acute to be inflicted upon an infinite number of animals if in the opinion of the least member of any medical faculty there is the slightest chance for adding to the sum of human knowledge — and this without reference to the question of whether such addition shall be of any practical use or not."

So—Vivisectors Eversole, Kleinberg, Overman, Remington, and Swingle decided that they also would have a turn with the rawhide mallet on the hind legs.

★ ★ ★

THEIR PARTICULAR SPECIALTY, they observe, is that they were studying the "nervous factor" occurring in dogs which have had their legs mutilated.

Specifically, the vivisectors in this particular experiment mutilated first a group of fifteen dogs and then a second group of twelve. They used an ether anesthetic during the actual beating which was administered to each animal —after which they allowed each animal to recover and consciously linger between life and death as the result of the fearful injury it had sustained.

In the group of twelve dogs, the vivisectors gave an additional spinal anesthetic with the result that three of the twelve animals survived. Perhaps this may be due to the fact that these twelve suffered far less than the fifteen dogs in the other group.

In the group of fifteen, the animals were kept on their backs, fastened to the "animal board" and left in that position either until they died or until a total of seven hours had elapsed. All but one died. Fourteen of them in from one to eight hours, the average being four hours of torture while stretched upon the animal board. Of the group of twelve dogs which were given spinal anesthesia and put back in their cages instead of being left on the board, three recovered, four lived a comparatively great length of time—as much as twenty-four hours in one case—while the rest died in a period of about four hours.

* * *

THIS EXPERIMENT would seem to prove two things: (1) that an animal won't die so quickly if he is treated a little less savagely, and (2) that the Vivisectors Gregerson and Root have a great deal of company when it comes to the practice of mashing dogs' legs with a raw-hide mallet.

National Humane Education Association
Champlain Building,
Chicago 3, Illinois

AMERICAN SOCIETY

FOR THE

PROTECTION OF DOGS

P.O. BOX 187

LENOX HILL STATION

NEW YORK 21, N. Y.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION

of the

AMERICAN SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF DOGS

ARTICLE I

Name and Purposes.

Sec. 1. This Society shall be called the American Society for the Protection of Dogs.

Sec. 2. This society shall not be maintained or operated, directly or indirectly, for private gain or profit, and no part of the income shall inure to the benefit of the members thereof.

Sec. 3. Its purposes are:

a) To improve the conditions associated with experiments performed on living dogs.

b) To promote a code of ethical procedures and practice with respect to experiments on living dogs.

c) To prevent and avoid by all legal means the suffering of dogs. To insure proper anesthesia in all experiments performed on living dogs.

d) To insure kind and humane handling of dogs, to encourage appropriate rules, regulations, legislation and standards to insure humane and kind handling of dogs.

e) To receive. acquire, administer funds and other property, real, personal and mixed, donated or left to it by corporations, associations, individuals or others for the exclusive benefit of the society.

ARTICLE II

Government.

Sec. 1. The government of the society shall be vested in a Board of Trustees which shall not be less than three, to be elected as provided for by the By-Laws.

ARTICL

Members

Sec. 1. Membership in the so viduals who are in sympathy with th and who have exhibited such sympa acts.

Sec. 2. All members have the rules and regulations of the society.

Sec. 3. Classes of membership.
of members as follows:

Permanent members, who are th
one vote each.

Associate members, who shall existing permanent members for one vote each.

Life members, who shall qualif
$250.00, and such exempts sai
Non-voting.

Annual members, who shall qua
bership fee of $25.00 for each y

Honorary members. The Board ary members such distinguished Honorary members shall pay no they shall enjoy the rights and p

ARTICLE

Amendme

These articles of association ma
(2/3) affirmative vote of the perman in writing at the annual meeting o notice setting forth the proposed ame reasons therefor and any known ob each Permanent member at least one meeting.

TICLE III

nbership.

ne society shall be open to all indi-
th the avowed purposes of the society sympathies through public or private e the obligation to conform to the iety.

rship. There shall be five (5) classes re the founders of the society, having shall be elected unanimously by the s for a term of one year, and having qualify as such by paying a fee of ts said members from further dues.

ll qualify as such by paying a mem-each year of membership. Non-voting.

oard of Trustees may elect as Honor-uished persons as they deem proper.
ay no fees, dues or assessments and and privileges of Annual members.

TICLE IV

endments.

on may be amended by a two-thirds ermanent members expressed orally or ting of the society, provided that a l amendment or amendments with the vn objection shall have been sent to st one month prior to the said annual

WHEREFORE, MICHAEL N. STRATE, RENA SCHLEIN, and PAUL P. ROUDAKOFF, as founders of the American Society for the Protection of Dogs, do hereunto place their hands and seals, this 7th day of March, 1957.

BY-LAW II SECTION 6

Sec. 6. Any officer of the society shall be reimbursed for expenses actually incurred by him in behalf of the society with the approval of the Board of Trustees. However, as long as the society shall exist, no Permanent or Associate member shall receive any salary or compensation whatsoever, and this particular section of the By-Laws shall not at any time in the future be subject to amendment but is and remains an irrevocable part of the Constitution of the American Society for the Protection of Dogs.

For Further Information Write To:
MRS. ALEXANDER S. SCHLEIN
987 Fifth Avenue
New York 21, N. Y.
Tel.: REgent 4-4124

Schmidt A.X

January 13, 1958

Dear Professor Schmidt:

I would like to try it, but unfortunately I do not dispose of enough time on this network to undertake it.

Between now and the beginning of the summer holidays we have on SEE IT NOW a total of four one-hour programs and they are all committed.

I am sorry.

Sincerely,

Professor A.X. Schmidt
The City College
Convent Avenue and 139th Street
New York 31, New York

fc

The City College
CONVENT AVENUE AND 139TH STREET
NEW YORK 31, N. Y.

SCHOOL OF TECHNOLOGY
DEPARTMENT OF CHEMICAL ENGINEERING

December 17, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

How would you like to do this one? Do you think it has the necessary ingredients..... national import, timeliness, human interest? As you know full well, it represents part of the number 1 problem in the "race for survival". What I am sure you could do is help generate a sorely needed sense of urgency and public approval for the establishment of adequate fellowships for basic research in science and engineering.

Yours very truly,

A. X. Schmidt

A. X. Schmidt, Chairman
Department of Chemical Engineering

AS:a
Encls.

The City College
CONVENT AVENUE AND 139TH STREET
NEW YORK 31, N. Y.

SCHOOL OF TECHNOLOGY
DEPARTMENT OF CHEMICAL ENGINEERING

December 10, 1957

Dr. Bernard M. Baruch
Kingstree
South Carolina

Dear Dr. Baruch:

I am sending this same letter to Dr. Mervin J. Kelly, President of Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc. I do this for two reasons: first, you both are acutely aware that the matter herein dealt with is part of the number 1 national problem; second, you may want to try to do something about it.

Enclosed are copies of my letter of November 1st to Dr. Bronk and his reply of December 7th. After reading them I think you will agree that there are two problems involved.

1. What to do about James Vincent Kehoe. As pointed out by Dr. Bronk, there are many fellowships open to him but not one that carries sufficient funds to meet the needs arising from his particular circumstances. There is no way of telling in advance whether he would develop into a member of the scientific elite corps of four years hence but certainly this should be determined by financially enabling him to do full time graduate work.

2. What to do about all the Jimmy Kehoes in the country. There may be as many as 1000 of them though I seriously doubt it. But such as they are and wherever they are, they are not babies that have to be nursed through high school to become potential fundamental researchers six or seven years from now. On the contrary, they are semi-proven stock ready to start graduate training at once. Even 1000 times $6,000 would be an insignificant annual outlay for the immediately available basic research potential they represent. It is frightening that Dr. Bronk should have to write a letter such as you have before you. As long as he must continue to do so, many of the Jimmy Kehoes will of necessity, not choice, succumb to the living wage offered by industry and be diverted to applied research or no research at all.

I put it to you that it is one thing for us to decry the situation in the newspapers, before the American Philosophical Society, or at meetings of the General Faculty; it is quite another to do something constructive about it. If you are sufficiently interested to join forces, who is to say that a precious year or half year might not be saved in one part of the grim race in which we now find ourselves? Maybe we can help Bronk in the good fight.

I should welcome hearing from you. My telephone number is ADirondack 4-2000, extension 233.

Sincerely yours,

A. X. Schmidt, Chairman
Department of Chemical Engineering

AXS:a
cc: Dr. Bronk

Encls.

The City College
CONVENT AVENUE AND 139TH STREET
NEW YORK 31, N. Y.

SCHOOL OF TECHNOLOGY
DEPARTMENT OF CHEMICAL ENGINEERING

December 10, 1957

Dr. Mervin J. Kelly, President
Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc.
463 West Street
New York 14, N.Y.

Dear Dr. Kelly:

I am sending this same letter to Dr. Bernard M. Baruch. I do this for two reasons: first, you both are acutely aware that the matter herein dealt with is part of the number 1 national problem; second, you may want to try to do something about it.

Enclosed are copies of my letter of November 1st to Dr. Bronk and his reply of December 7th. After reading them I think you will agree that there are two problems involved.

1. What to do about James Vincent Kehoe. As pointed out by Dr. Bronk, there are many fellowships open to him but not one that carries sufficient funds to meet the needs arising from his particular circumstances. There is no way of telling in advance whether he would develop into a member of the scientific elite corps of four years hence but certainly this should be determined by financially enabling him to do full time graduate work.

2. What to do about all the Jimmy Kehoes in the country. There may be as many as 1000 of them though I seriously doubt it. But such as they are and wherever they are, they are not babies that have to be nursed through high school to become potential fundamental researchers six or seven years from now. On the contrary, they are semi-proven stock ready to start graduate training at once. Even 1000 times $6,000 would be an insignificant annual outlay for the immediately available basic research potential they represent. It is frightening that Dr. Bronk should have to write a letter such as you have before you. As long as he must continue to do so, many of the Jimmy Kehoes will of necessity, not choice, succumb to the living wage offered by industry and be diverted to applied research or no research at all.

I put it to you that it is one thing for us to decry the situation in the newspapers, before the American Philosophical Society, or at meetings of the General Faculty; it is quite another to do something constructive about it. If you are sufficiently interested to join forces, who is to say that a precious year or half year might not be saved in one part of the grim race in which we now find ourselves? Maybe we can help Dr. Bronk in the good fight.

I should welcome hearing from you. My telephone number is ADirondack 4-2000, extension 233.

Sincerely yours,

A. X. Schmidt, Chairman
Department of Chemical Engineering

AXS;a
cc: Dr. Bronk
Encls.

THE ROCKEFELLER INSTITUTE

NEW YORK 21, NEW YORK

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

7 December 1957

Dear Professor Schmidt,

I am sorry that your letter of some weeks ago which you addressed to me at the National Academy of Sciences failed to reach me. How this happened, unless it were due to its being mislaid in transit between my two offices, I do not know.

I fully sympathize with your emphasis on the importance of young men of high competence and great promise, such as Mr. Kehoe, to go on with preparation for a creative career in basic research.

We have steadily increased the value of fellowships under the various fellowship programs supported by private sources and the Federal Government. Also, I have been working for over twelve years in raising more funds for larger numbers of fellowships. Up to the present time, however, I do not know of any predoctoral fellowship for graduate study which provides as much as $6,000 per annum. Here at the Rockefeller Institute, for instance, we provide up to $3500, or, if a fellow is married and has one child, up to $4000. I have been criticized for making these fellowship stipends so high. But I have continued in the hope that this would raise the general level throughout the country.

I still hope for more adequate support for our scientific students, and I will continue to work toward these objectives, but at the present time I do not know where to turn for a predoctoral fellowship that provides as much as $6,000 per annum.

With sincere regrets that I cannot be of more immediate help and with renewed assurances of my desire to do anything I can to be of assistance, I am

Yours sincerely,

Detlev W. Bronk

Professor A. X. Schmidt
Department of Chemical Engineering
The City College
Convent Avenue and 139th Street
New York 31, New York

The City College
CONVENT AVENUE AND 139TH STREET
NEW YORK 31, N. Y.

SCHOOL OF TECHNOLOGY
DEPARTMENT OF CHEMICAL ENGINEERING

November 1, 1957

Dr. Detlev W. Bronk, President
National Academy of Sciences
National Research Council
2101 Constitution Avenue, N. W.
Washington 25, D. C.

Dear Dr. Bronk:

I address this directly to you because the matter dealt with herein has far-reaching implications.

Mr. James Vincent Kehoe is an Army veteran, is married, and has one child. He will graduate in June, 1958 with a bachelor's degree in chemical engineering, at which time he will be 25 years old.

He has been working full time during his entire college career. For example, he is currently employed from 4 pm to 12 midnight as an assistant supervisor for a biochemical concern. The time that he misses because of conflicts with afternoon laboratory courses he makes up by working Saturdays. His current salary is $5100 per year.

Our chemical engineering undergraduate curriculum is particularly rigorous. Despite this, Mr. Kehoe, while living the active life described above, currently stands first in a class of 497 engineers with an almost incredible average of 93.9 percent out of a possible 95.0. I have not had another such student during twenty-three years of teaching.

This young man has expressed a desire to go into fundamental research. This, he and what few other Kehoes we can muster, should do. Circumstances are such that his wife should not work. His current market value in industry is of the order of $7000 per annum, even as a bachelor fresh out of school.

Owing to his age and other factors, Mr. Kehoe presents an exceptional case. What is needed here is a fellowship of the order of $6000 per annum to remove all financial pressure from him while he studies for his doctorate and prepares himself for a career in basic research. Enlightened national self-interest dictates this.

Is there any use in having him apply to you, or am I correct in assuming that you currently are powerless to muster a predoctoral fellowship of this magnitude?

An early reply will be deeply appreciated, since I may have to do a dredging job to find the answer to this one. Any helpful suggestions will likewise be appreciated.

Yours very truly,

AXS:a

A. X. Schmidt, Chairman

Schneier, Rabbi Arthur

April 21, 1958

Dear Sir:

I have your nice letter of April 17th.

I regret to have to tell you that it would serve no useful purpose to discuss your television program idea with me. I have nothing at all to do with programs other than my own.

If you care to pursue this further, I suggest you contact Mr. Irving Gitlin, Director of Public Affairs programs for CBS.

Sincerely yours,

Rabbi Arthur Schneier
Congregation B'nai Jacob
3017 Glenwood Road
Brooklyn, New York

mcc

Honorary President
SIMON SCHNEIROW
Honorary Life Member
ABRAHAM ROTTER
President
IRVING KATZ
Vice Presidents
EDWARD HOLZMAN
ISADORE SCHNADOW
MURRAY BERNFELD
Treasurer
ABRAHAM TRIEB
Financial Secretary
SAUL GWIRTZMAN
1087 EAST 8TH STREET
TEL. NA. 8-9563
Recording Secretary
WALTER KLEIN
1009 EAST 29TH STREET
TEL. NA. 8-6114
Gabbaim
RICHARD JOSEPHSON
ABRAHAM TRIEB
Sgt. at Arms
ROBERT MEISEL
Board of Directors
ISADORE BEERMAN
HENRY COHEN
MORRIS GINSBURG
BEN GOLD
GEORGE GOLD
WILLIAM KARLIN
ALEX KRAUT
SAMUEL MALLIN
LAWRENCE PILLER
JOSEPH SANDLER
LOUIS SELIKOFF
MAX SEIGEL
ALEXANDER STALOFF
MEYER STEINBERG
JOSEPH ZUCKERMAN
Past Presidents
MARVIN BERGER
BENJAMIN BIRNBAUM
DR. DAVID KAIL
SOLOMON MICHELSON
SAMUEL ROTH
SIMON SCHNEIROW
SAMUEL SIMON

Congregation B'nai Jacob

HEBREW SCHOOL OF FLATBUSH
3017 GLENWOOD ROAD
BROOKLYN 10, N. Y.
TELEPHONES: GEDNEY 4-9439-5222

ARTHUR SCHNEIER, RABBI
80 KENILWORTH PLACE
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
ULSTER 9-5954

N. SCHLESINGER, Cantor
2601 Glenwood Road
Brooklyn 10, N. Y.
GE. 4-1799

SALMAN L. LEVY,
Ritual Director
3015 Glenwood Road
Brooklyn, N. Y.
UL. 9-2913

no

April 17, 1958.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I would welcome an opportunity to discuss with you an idea that would be of great interest to the general T. V. public.

Looking forward to an early meeting with you, I remain

Sincerely yours,

Arthur Schneier
Rabbi

Schoenfeld, Merritt

December 5, 1958

Mr. Merritt R.C. Schoenfeld
MacFarland, Aveyard & Company
333 North Michigan Avenue
Chicago 1, Illinois

Dear Mr. Schoenfeld:

I have not yet had an opportunity to test-fly your Tar Gard which Merle Jones delivered to me. If it does in fact eliminate my sigarette cough, extend my life by ten years and eliminate the usual morning hangover, I shall quit this job and go and sell them on street-corners. Thanks very much.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

MACFARLAND, AVEYARD & COMPANY

ADVERTISING

333 NO. MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO 1, ILL. • RAndolph 6-936

TO:

To discuss

Return for file

F.Y.I.

(Record)

November 21, 1958

Mr. Merle S. Jones, Vice President
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Merle:

Under separate cover I am sending you three Tar Gards and I would appreciate it very much if you would send on one to Arthur Godfrey and one to Edward R. Murrow.

This cigarette filter was invented by one of the top aero-design engineers at United Airlines and if you remember your high school physics, you'll recognize the principle as an adaptation of the "venturi" tube.

There's a piece of literature in the plastic box that will tell you how it works and I am sure that after trying a couple of cigarettes in it you'll quickly see what it does.

There are three things that Tar Gard will do:

1. eliminate your cigarette cough;
2. extend your life at least ten years;
3. eliminate your usual morning hangover, as it has been found that by eliminating the tars and nicotines in your system, the alcohol has nothing with which to clash.

Will be very interested to hear of your reaction, and also of Godfrey's and Murrow's.

Em is great, and I plan to be in New York about the second week in December.

Cordially,

Merritt R. C. Schoenfeld

MRCS/seh

Schnitzer, Robert C.

February 12, 1959

Dear Mr. Schnitzer:

Thank you for your nice letter of February 4th and your kind comments concerning the IIE meeting in Washington.

Nothing would give Fred Friendly and myself more pleasure than to present the type of program discussed by Blanche Theborn and Mrs. Roosevelt, but the Marian Anderson program was presented on SEE IT NOW, which is no longer on the air. Mr. Friendly and I no longer dispose of the time on the network required for the report you suggest.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Robert C. Schnitzer
General Manager
The American National Theatre and Academy
1545 Broadway
New York 36, New York

mcc

INTERNATIONAL CULTURAL EXCHANGE SERVICE of THE AMERICAN NATIONAL THEATRE AND ACADEMY

Chartered by the Congress of the United States

1545 BROADWAY • NEW YORK 36, N. Y. • • PHONE: PLAZA 7-4133 • CABLE: THEATREUSA

ANTA COMMITTEE

Chairman:
ROBERT W. DOWLING
Chairman of the Board

Vice-Chairmen:
CLARENCE DERWENT
President of ANTA

ROSAMOND GILDER
U.S.—ITI Director

MRS. H. ALWYN INNESS-BROWN
President, Greater New York Chapter of ANTA, Inc.

WARREN CARO
Member U.S. National Commission for UNESCO

GEORGE FREEDLEY
Secretary of ANTA

JAMES HUTCHISON
Financial Manager, I.C.E.S.

ROGER L. STEVENS
Treasurer of ANTA

WILLARD SWIRE
Executive Director of ANTA

MILTON WEINTRAUB
Executive Committee of ANTA

ROBERT WHITEHEAD
Board of Directors of ANTA

ROBERT C. SCHNITZER
General Manager

February 4, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS-TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I wish to offer my congratulations and thanks to the many others you must be receiving on your panel chairmanship last Thursday morning at the Conference on Exchange of Persons under the auspices of IIE in Washington. (I, myself, was a delegate and panelist on the session on performing arts.)

In attending your panel, I noticed that Blanche Thebom gave a brief but effective summary of the work of the American National Theatre and Academy on behalf of the State Department's Cultural Exchange Program and that Mrs. Roosevelt made a suggestion to you that these things might be worthy of coverage by yourself in one of your distinguished television reportages.

Remembering the effectiveness of our collaboration when you made such a magnificent report on Marian Anderson's tour for ANTA, I cannot help but hope that you will consider the suggestion seriously. We do not have any press representation for this Program and we are consequently dependent upon such civicly-conscious reporters as yourself to bring our work to the attention of the American public.

Obviously, the American voter has a right to know about the very unusual work in this field that is being done on his behalf and just as obviously that work cannot be expanded if the voter does not know and approve of it. May I not discuss with you or with Fred Friendly the possibilities of a program which would cover not just a single tour, but more generally the whole operation of the "President's Program"?

Since you are already familiar with some facets of our work, I need not reassure you as to the colorful possibilities which it offers such an imaginative program creator as yourself.

Sincerely,

Robert C. Schnitzer
General Manager

Schorr, Tillie

April 23, 1958

Mrs. Tillie Schorr
Cabin 205A
SS Israel
Zim Lines
Kent Street
Brooklyn, New York

HOPE YOU HAVE MOST DELIGHTFULLEST TRIP STOP PLEASE LOOK AT OUR TREE AND SAY SHALOM TO ANY OF MY FRIENDS YOU ENCOUNTER STOP REGARDS

Ed Murrow

514-43
News

Reading, Pa.
11/15/59.
Schumann, E.R.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I think that you had get in touch with a lot of persons, I would be happy if you could help me out on these two men's clues.

Clue - This is a man.

- Born in New York, I attended P.S. 165 and Horace Mann schools; received a B.A. from Williams Collage and a law degree from Fordham. Although I never practiced law my current activity as moderator on a TV program deals with a contestant telling the truth under questioning by a panel.

other clue of other man on other side.

This is a man

Clue

I am known as the "Voice of the Yankees" but baseball broadcasting is not my sole activity. I have broadcast 9 Rose Bowl games, 16 World Series and 20 all-star games. Also I narrate a motion picture news reel. My catch phrase "How about that?" immediately identifies me.

I do hope you can help me out, I thank you very much.

Thank You.
Yours Very truly.

Edward R. Schumann
812 Mulberry Street
Reading, Pa.

Dear Mr. Marrow, Schwartz,

Enclosed is a letter which we have been circulating to members of the Queens College community. We hope that you too will give it your consideration.

Sincerely,

Alan Schwartz

Alan

150-37 60th Avenue
Flushing 55, New York
February 16, 1959

Dear Friend:

I should like to draw to your attention recent events at Queens College, one of the educational institutions that you support.

On December 17, 1958, the Associate Dean of Students officially requested that New Poems, the college poetry magazine, suspend sales of its current issue. Dean Spitz based his action on a section of the college's Publications Plan which states:

> "And finally, no Queens College publication will contain copy that is indecent, libelous, or in bad taste."

New Poems contained the poem "Abortion Eve" by Florence Goldberg, a senior majoring in English and philosophy, which was offensive to some members of the college and the community and so was deemed in "bad taste".

Controversy immediately flared up about the aesthetic merits of the poem, the question of its offensiveness, and the responsibility of the college's publications to the community. The student-faculty Publications Board met on Dec. 19 to decide whether or not to uphold the suspension. At this meeting the Publications Board submitted the poem for analysis to three members of the English Department, who deemed it aesthetically unsuccessful. Based on this analysis, the Publications Board continued the ban on the poem and the magazine with the statement:

> "Believing that the editorial board of New Poems failed to meet its responsibility, the Publications Board rules that the decision to publish 'Abortion Eve' in New Poems violates good taste, and the Board continues the suspension New Poems."

When a serious college publication is surpressed because of a violation in "taste" the old but vitally important principles of free expression and college-community responsibility are endangered. The following objections which have been raised against the ban procedure highlight this danger.

1. Sales of New Poems were suspended because one of the poems was in "bad taste."

   --A definition of "bad taste" or offensiveness is impossible.

(cont.)

--Blasphemy cannot be a criteria for censorship in a country which maintains a separation of church and state.
--"Abortion Eve" is neither libelous nor slanderous because it cannot be paraphrased into a directly defamatory statement.
--Many passages in literature now considered classic were at first called obscene and scandalous.

2. The English Department Committee judged the poem aesthetically weak.
--The editor of a college peetry magazine, his staff, and his faculty advisor are solely responsible for deciding the aesthetic merit of a poem, for the purposes of publication.
--Aesthetic merit is not a condition for censorship.
--There was much difference of opinion among members of the faculty and among students concerning the value of the poem.
--Suspending the magazine and banning the poem make further artistic judgments impossible.

3. The Publications Board, basing its judgment on the English Department Committee's decision, said that the weakness of the poem made it open to interpretations that could be offensive or in bad taste.
--The Publications Board will not release the complete text of the English Department Committee*s report.
--Limitations placed on serious college publications because of possible offensiveness negate the function of a college. It is impossible to develop critical minds when they are being protected from "offensive" literature and ideas.

Community pressure on a city college is a large factor in determining the policies of the college. The school has a resposibility to the community to educate its young and to serve as its cultural and intellectual nucleus. The college must serve the needs of the community but educational needs can only be met in an atmosphere of free inquiry. The community is responsible to the school for the preservation of this atmosphere. When one section of the community can impose its "taste" as the criterion for publications, the whole community suffers in direct proportion to the limitation of "free inquiry". If all the members of the community voiced their opinions on this issue the college would be able to handle its publications policies in a manner which would more truly represent the whole community while more nearly fulfilling its educational aims. To this end a committee of interested students has been formed to protest the ban.

As an active participant in community affairs, you are interested in your city college, and will want to voice your opinion about the incident at Queens College. I should like you to consider the following statement. If you agree with it--sign it! However, a personal statement from you, a community leader, would more effectively aid Queens College to maintain its educational responsibility and integrity.

Yours truly,
Alan Schwartz,
Editor, New Poems

ABORTION EVE

Lov~~ing~~e is a dying Easter egg.
Wh en it's red
As a love bed
It will be hard boiled.

I loved you
Hard
With a red red heart.

The red water boils
Below ~~Under~~ Christ's cross
I hung on a nail
On my kitchen wall.

A rooster crows
To Easter skies,
Tomorrow grows,
Soon the chicken dies.

Christ rose
On Easter morn
And Christ was born
On a Virgin dawn.

Mary is no longer a Virgin.

Christ was killed
When He first lived,
His love died red
As unborn blood.

Christ rose sore
As a pregnant whore,
His body broke
Like an open egg.

A waking egg,
Soft,
Rose red.

The Virgin Mary
Laid a live red egg;
My dying baby
Is as good as dead.

—Florence Goldberg

1/7/59

Statement Issued by the Publications Board

"A committee of three members of the English Department appointed by the chairman of the English Department at the request of the Publications Board reported in writing to the Board. The report consisted of a detailed interpretation of the poem "Abortion Eve" published in New Poems and a critical evaluation of the poem.

"The report included the following statements:

"The poem 'tries to achieve richness of concentration through reliance on multiple meanings...Because it encourages all possibly relevant interpretations, however, such ambiguity may lead to readings that the author did not intend.'

'Moreover, the whole structure of the poem fails for a reason the writer seems not to have considered. The poem appears to be a serious effort to imitate the sexual-religious, metaphysical poetry of the early seventeenth century. But it reverses the prevalent order in poems by such poets as Donne and Crashaw; instead of describing a Christian religious experience in sexual terms, it describes a sexual experience in religious terms...Thus instead of merely emphasizing contrast, the analogy cheapens both Mary and Christ through diminution; it is a rhetorical principle that juxtaposition of the holy with the contemptible will degrade the former.'

'Thus the poem fails because it does not control satisfactorily the meanings of its symbols, because it does not make clear the relationship between one idea and the next, and because it is based on an unsuccessful intensification through contrast. Essentially, it is the ineffective attempt of an inexperienced writer to use an extremely difficult poetic technique. To us, the poet tries sincerely to express complicated ideas; at times she shows competence in handling the complexities of symbolism; and she shows some sensitivity to the meanings of words. However, through inability either to clarify intended meaning or to prevent irrelevant and contradictory interpretations, she is unsuccessful.'

(CONT.)

"The Publications Board recognizes and feels bound to preserve the creative writer's freedom to write according to the dictates of his creative genius. It also feels, however, that the editorial board of New Poems had the heavy responsibility of evaluating "Abortion Eve" so closely as to realize that its very failure as a poem would lead inevitably to readings that would prove most offensive to large numbers of readers.

"Believing that the editorial board of New Poems failed to meet its reponsibility, the Publications Board rules that the decision to publish "Abortion Eve" in New Poems violates good taste, and the Board continues the suspension of New Poems."

1/7/59

Statement of Dr. Harold W. Stoke

"The current issue of the student publication, New Poems, includes materials offensive to the sensibilities of many people within and outside the college. The sale of the issue was immediately suspended and the suspension has been upheld and will be maintained by the Publications Board and by the President. The regulations of the college clearly forbid the publication of such material.

"While the college is dedicated, as all colleges are, to the principles of freedom of the press, it also affirms the reponsiblility of the faculty and administrators to determine what may be published as authorized by or identified with the college."

Statement of Dr. George A. Pierson (Dean of Students)

"I am in complete agreement with the statement of the Publications Board. The Board met its responsibilities with courage and tact. It was helped immeasurably in arriving at a decision by a special committee organized by the Department of English. The New Poems incident demonstrates once again the important fact that faculty and student groups can and will take responsibility in difficult situations."

PETITION

We, the undersigned, protest the action of the Queens College Publications Board which banned the poem, "Abortion Eve," by Florence Goldberg. Our protest is based upon the following:

1. "Abortion Eve" was banned because it was said to be offensive and therefore in "bad taste." "Bad taste" and "offensiveness", by their subjective nature, cannot clearly be defined. When used as a criteria for censorship these nebulous terms can be applied to suppress all serious literature. The legally definable criteria for censorship of college publications--indecency and libel--cannot be applied to "Abortion Eve."

2. The decision as to what shall or shall not be included in a college poetry magazine should only be made by the editor and the faculty advisor of the publication. Post-publication aesthetic criticism cannot be the basis for censorship.

3. We feel that the function of a college poetry magazine is to expose new poets to a critical audience of professionals and peers and to stimulate critical literary judgment in the student population. By removing a serious poem from student scrutiny, censorship destroys the function of a student poetry magazine and the educational function of a college in developing independent critical minds.

TO Mr. Murrow Schwartz, Alan

FROM Sheila Hogg December 9.

This is the man you are seeing at 3 p.m. today.

wpc.

Mr 5-1582 Schwartz

285 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK

November 18, 1958

C/ UN in Action
PL 4-1234
CA 2623

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

This is a kind of "Person to Person" letter and so has nothing to do with censorship, foundations, studies or surveys and the like. In fact Morris doesn't know anything about this letter and so any blame for wasting your time must be mine alone.

There is a friend of mine, about 25, who is rather talented. When at Harvard he did a lot of work with Archibald MacLeish and lived with Schlesinger for awhile. He's married to a lovely girl who is getting her graduate degree in English at Yale. I can only assume that he likes to suffer because he seems to want to dedicate his life to radio and television. At present he is working as a researcher for the CBS "UN IN ACTION" TV program. What he needs really I think, is advice. He needs somebody whom he respects to give him some idea about what his future in this business looks like. Somebody perhaps to tell him that he might be better off elsewhere, meaning another profession, or someone to give him an educated guess as to how he can best use his talents and his ideals within the industry. His respect for you and what you have done is of course boundless, and I think it would help him immensely if you could talk to him for 5 or 10 minutes sometime. In addition to being talented, he is a very sensitive guy and I think that any impression you make would go a long way towards pushing him in the right direction, whatever that might be.

I know how incredibly busy you are, and I certainly am reluctant to bother you, but I really feel that a few minutes with you would mean a great deal to my friend. His name is Sig Moglen and if you think that you might be able to squeeze him in sometime, I could have him call you for an appointment.

I'm sure you get hundreds of requests of this kind, and I certainly will understand if you won't be able to do it. But I felt it was important enough for me to try.

I find myself continually remembering your anecdote about your son and the ducks. I guess you're right that we learn dishonesty as we grow older, but it still is a bitter pill to swallow. Maybe that's why we're sad so much of the time.

285 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK

It certainly was good seeing you again at Morris' as always. I certainly don't have to tell you how much I respect and admire you and hope that someday soon you will be able to use your huge talent just as you would like.

Sincerely yours,

Alan

Alan U. Schwartz

bmo

Schwartz, I.

Lawrence Avenue
Lake Mohegan, N.Y.
July 7, 1959

Edward R. Murrow
Executive Offices
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I have been hearing with my other-directed ear that you are temporarily leaving your position at C.B.S. to engage in some matters of importance to you outside of the realm of direct t.v.and radio communication.... Halleleulah....

Television may lose a capable and talented personage but you will gain a semblance of inner peace and a dimension of true reflection that will more than make up for the sizzling pinnacle of impotence and parody you have had to contend with these many years in your position as commentator on the world and American scenes.

It does not appear that we have made any moral progress in the last two thousand years or so and I do doubt that we ever will.

A friend of mine the other day told of an attempt to gain access to a few moments of your agencies time in order to discuss with them what opportunity there might be at C.B.S. for a bright young man in the programming and editing dept. He was told that he could not speak with you or any other important personage but, must see the personnel people first. Now, he could understand that your time was valuable and that you couldnt see every ypung man who chanced to be looking for a job. And, especially one in such a fast moving and dynamic industry. But, he could not understand why people at the top of Americas fastest growing industry wouldnt set aside a few hours each week to take a real interest in who is coming into their field, for what reasons, and conversely, who was being excluded and the concomitant reasons for such exclusion.

When my friend told me about his chagrin I was a little bit surprised at his immaturity. Indeed, I still am. But, it got me to thinking and wondering about a few things which I am sure you will be interested in and concerned for.

I thought about a conversation I had had a few years ago with a young girl who was trying to explain to me the difference between a hipster and a bohemian, or as it is insipidly termed today.. a beatnik. A hipster, she said, is a person who "swings" ie. one who lives life to the fullest both in terms of creating and experiencing. One who does not weep about the absense of real morality and real dynamic meaning in life because such a person does not need such morality and meaning. They(and she was trying to become one at the time)are too busy utilizing the physical, emotional, and intellectual resources that they have to cry about the things that they do not have. A"beatnik", on the other hand, she described as a person who had the need to discuss, to beweep their fates, their lack of excellence and significance in more than a human way, to categorize and detach themselves from society , because they were intrinsically non- creative and even schizoid(I do not believe the term was hers)and, hence, were forced to skint around life... never to penetrate it to the fullest. Now, there may be some merit in what she was saying (I dont know) but her whole approach smacked to me of amorality . And, later, when she confirmed this by attempting to seduce me in an effort to teach me more empirically what it meant to "swing" and, even later pointed out to me that all of the show business world (she was an aspiring actress) swung I had my first serious moment of consideration about the people with their names in lights and living rooms.

I have not been doing any more swinging of late but I do have a concern for the honesty and humanity of the people in the public eye.

Another thought that ties in to the maze of my consciousness here is the fact that Jewish people and, especially, the jewish college graduate in New York City is highly discriminated against in this supposedly enlightened and, even swinging city of ours. To be a jew today means that certain industries and firms will have nothing to do with you as far as employment goes. And, this is by no means a fantasy. The anti- discrimination law is an ethereal whisper to the fellow(such as my friend) who is looking for a job in a non- service endeavor. Of course, jewish firms will rarely hire a non- jew but, is this not a sad commentary on the lives of people who who study Plato and even... Kant,together? When a man can not get a position which enables him to reflect and transmit the very structure of the culture within which he lives in a firm, in an industry that seems to be making the attempt the the nazis fluffed in a more subtle but, perhaps more corrosive manner. Of course, C.B.S. is not such a firm. I wouldnt be writing this letter if it were. But, can you imagine the feelings of a man, more importantly, a young man, who has to live this modern idiocy ... who has to return home at night and greet his new bride with the news that there is no point in looking for a job in the field of his choise but, must begin to look for one in the field his uncle thinks there might be an opening for a realistic and unquestioning jew . Is it not a moral urgency.. an imperative of the benevolent passions ... for men in high places to do their part to outmode and challenge this most poignant suffering? (at the cost of a few minutes devoted to the speaking with and, perhaps, inspiring of, a few young men a week who crave nothing more than the courtesy and humanity of a sincere and meaningful conversation with someone on the inside..in the know... someone who doesnt give you the inane smile of personnel managers and similar unconcerned insiders.)

And still a third thought occurs to me on this seemingly small but, deceptively contingent and idealistically generic matter. When you broadcasted the show on delinquency I had no opportunity to hear it. But, Joe Linda of the Home Service Bureau sent a copy of the record to some friends and cohorts of mine and I heard it then. It was quite impressive. However, through all of the details and descriptions of the personality limitations and social unconcern of delinquents and their adult counterparts I found no trace of recognition that the adult "reality" oftentimes inspires and perpetuates the "human nature" that is so recognizably distorted in the anti- social acts of delinquents. The social sciences have long taken the primal thinking of modern philosophers seriously. And, yet you failed in your presentation to sufficiently present the notion that objectivity, via the hypothesizations of knowledge and the hypostacizations of valuation implies the subjectivity of the interacting individuals of a collective group. That the experiences of cowardice, unconcern, and detachment which we all share in a depersonalized and intentionally pressurized community form the major learning and habit patterns of our populace. It is the learnin of ommision which conditions and determines the type of activity and behavior which we transmit to our young. Such a concept adequately worked up could have resulted in a dynamic and energized program. It would have demanded a lot from us in terms of our reexamination of our values and our real ideals when we cut away the putrid veil of outrage and anger by which we project away the threatening aspects of our own psyches which share very much in the violence and forbidden enjoyments delinquents act out for us. But, it would have shown us ultimately the severe limitations of subjectivity as a grounding and basis for our values. And, without becoming morbidly theistic it would have given us the opportunity to spontaneously engage in the real issues that are present to our civilization before we nonchalantly decide forothers the ultimate speculative questions of our existence "to be or not to be".

A few really trained people from the world of serious study and sincere concern... the world of the young college graduate who comes out into a society which pushes him around and entices him with the values of the ultra- sophisticated people who inhabit the ultimately closed areas of communication and the mass media, which shows him the pretentiousness and nuerosis inspired aspirations for a better show, a better station, a more sensitized populace....would have directed and diverted a few of the limitations you have made manifest in your serious and successful career into a concerted and more considered concern for empathetic and ethicized communication. Although a few of the hipsters in your world would have been replaced and displaced a few of the truly human and highly creative individuals in New York would have been given a quicker and more needed opportunity to work to their capacity ... a quantity which reduces itself ultimately to quality... the quality of real... and somewhat timid capability.

So..Mr. Murrow, although my friend has found himself a position and, possibly, a niche in life... remember this... that the television industry has perhaps thrown away its greatest and most eternal factor(symbolically,of course).. the factor of new and vital talent. Men who are multi-dimensional and, yet unified in one great endeavor... the sustaining of everything great and lasting about the human situation..

And, this occured because of something that should be "S.O.P." The concern of the boss for the quality and character of the people who are hired to work in his place.

Rectify this situation... the people of America deserve more than this.

Sincerely yours,

Irwin Schwartz

Nathan Schwartz
f

March 23, 1959

Dear Mr. Schwartz:

I am indeed grateful for the generous invitation contained in your letter of March 6. So far I have made no plans whatever, but should my travels take me to Puerto Rico, I shall certainly communicate with you.

I have seen your small hotel on top of Barranquitas from the air, and it is indeed a lovely spot.

Thank you again for your kind invitation.

Sincerely yours,

Edward R. Murrow

Mr. Nathan H. Schwartz
111 North Wabash Avenue
Chicago 2, Illinois

kt

NATHAN H. SCHWARTZ

111 NO. WABASH AVE., CHICAGO 2, ILLINOIS

March 6, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I read that you were contemplating taking a vacation and that possibly you would travel.

I am one of the owners of what I believe to be two lovely hotels in Puerto Rico, the Condado Beach Hotel in San Juan, and a quiet small hotel on the top of a mountain known as Barranquitas.

We would be pleased to have you visit either one of our hotels as our guest. No strings involved. Just the pleasure of having as illustrious a man as yourself as our guest.

Sincerely yours,

Nathan Schwartz

nhs'fma

Schwartz, Rose

Room 724

HOTEL CHESTERFIELD
JUST OFF BROADWAY
130 WEST 49TH STREET
NEW YORK 19, N.Y.

"IN THE HEART OF NEW YORK"

Sept. 22, 1958.

Dear Mr. Murrow

Have an idea in mind that might make a good weekly T.V. or radio show for a half hour.

It would be simple, direct and topical. Knowing you to be a man of greatest integrity and understanding, you are the only one I would like to present it to. Would not care to speak to anyone in your office but you personally!

Should you ever have

HOTEL CAESTERFIELD
JUST OFF BROADWAY
130 WEST 49TH STREET
NEW YORK 19, N.Y.

"IN THE HEART OF NEW YORK"

five minutes to spare, would like to discuss it with you.

May I take this opportunity to thank you for the many wonderful hours you have given the nation and me, and to wish you and your loved ones continued good health and peace of mind.

Most sincerely,
Miss Rose Schwartz
Rm. 724-above hotel

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
C.B.S. Broadcasting Co.
Madison Ave. + E. 52nd St.
N.Y. City.

Schwartz, Will

February 27, 1959

Dear Mr. Schwartz:

Thank you for your recent letter with your idea for a television program.

Since I have no control over any programs other than the programs that I am, at present, producing, I suggest you write a letter to Mr. Irving Gitlin, Director of programs for CBS Public Affairs.

Sincerely,

Mr. Will H. Schwartz
P. O. Box 414
Tacoma, Washington

P. O. Box 414
Tacoma 9 Wash.
February 4, 1959

Edward R. Murrow, Director and commentator for the Columbia Broadcasting Company

Dear Mr Murrow:-

This letter is intended to make you acquainted with my solution for the delinquency of our future parents. A solution to end the mis-information that ninety five percent of our children acquire from their environment, Home, school and society would be a world wonder. So if you would tell me you will make an honest effort to understand it, I will gladly send it to you.

I have studied self improvement and adjustment for better living for more than fifty years and I now feel that Ihave it quite well complete and will gladly send it to you for free. You can then give your TV such a boost that has never before been dreamed or emagined possible.

I just must find someone to help me get it started and the best person I know, and I have considdered others, is you. I am near 83 and may kick-the-bucket any time during the next few years and I would not want so much work and a proven scientific fact lost for,maybe,many years.

Let me give you the greatest surprise that has ever come to civilization? Remember there will not be one cent of expence to you. It will be free to you for your use.

Sincerely Will H. Schwartz

Will H. Schwartz
P. O. Box 414
Tacoma. 9, Wash.

P. O. Box 414
Tacoma 9, Wash.
Feb. 4 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow

Today I mailed you a letter by special delivery and registered mail so please put this quotatrd article with it. I forgot to get it in the other letter and please do give this and the other letter some consideratin.

Yours sincerely

Will H. Schwartz

Will H. Schwartz

This copied from the Psychiatric Quarterly of October 1946.Utica New York. Read at the bi-monthly conference of the New York State Department of Mental Hygiene, at Ogdensburg, Julyl, 1946.

"FRONTIERS OF SOCIAL PSYCHIATRY"
By D. Ewen Cameron, M. D.

"We are engaged --and will be during the rest of our lives -- in the opening up of a frontier. It is not hard to emagine that those who drove out the geographical frontiers of the west barely a century ago, and those who explored the scientific frontiers of bacteriology, found it often ~~enough~~ enough a confusing and heartbreaking struggle with half-understood facts and with their own weariness.

"For the men and woman of the unnumbered expeditiones which withered in Death Valey, there can have been very little realization of what they were doing. For Koch, the collapse of his hopes that his tuberculin would be a cure for tuberculosis must have clouded the bright picture of what his work was accomplishing. They lived too close to their times. Those who finally fought across to the Pacific, those whose bacteriological discoveries have made whole continents safe to live in, could not, save on rare occasions, see the surging sweap of what they had started.

"Yet their frontiers, compared to that upon the first engagements of which we are now entering, were limited affairs, limited in time and consequence. The west was opened by the turn of the century; the major battles of bacteriology have been won. There is now going on an orderly exploration and expansion of the territory which lies behind our advancing lines.

"There is a time for the unremitting prosecution of the enterlocking details of the days design. There are occasions when it serves well to stand back and view the march and meaning of our times and of the great and notable parts to be played by men and women working in the new science of human behavior. Let us then enlarge the block at which we look. To do so is to see that several generations of us have lived, and will live and work through, a period of which we have no recorded parallel. Its exceptional nature consists in the extraordinary speed with which changes in social organization are taking place. There have been many other periods equally remarkable, but for other reasons. Greek culture during the fourth and fifth centuries, B. C., saw a development of philosophic thought which has had no subsequent equal. During the Renaissance, the expressive arts blazed up into brilliance which we cannot match.

"But commencing some five decades ago, there set in an acceleration in social change, in the breakdown of old social institutions, in the appearance of new inventions and designs in ways of living, which seems, by no means, yet to have reched its maximum.

"There had, of course, been intimations and warnings long before, that our social organization, much of which had come unchanged from medieval times, was breaking up. The great French and American revolutions of the eighteenth century, and perhaps the English revolution under Cromwell in the previous century, were resultants of the accumulation of enormous pressure for change.

"But it was only when three great streams of human activity, which had found their sources far in the past, finally began to merge about the middle of the nineteenth century that we entered upon this period of racing, bursting terbulence.

"It seems long ago and far away--and seemed then, no doubt, a matter of little consequence--that young Watts should spend his time trying to work out his 'hunch' that there was power in steam. But he did, and power was harnessed to work.

to a force so compelling, so ominous in its consequences, that the most intrenched of the opposition must give way or be destroyed. This pressure is derived from the fact that the gap between our material and our social development has become so great that unless it is closed as speedily as possible, we shall be destroyed.

xxxxxxxx

"It is on the basis of this hitherto unsuspected consequence of the cultural pattern that the social psychiatrist is impelled to take his part, and we must anticipate that it will prove to be a leading part, in directing the transmission of attitudes, beliefs and ways of managing life.

xxxxxxxxxxx

"We now recognise that the transmission to children, and also to people at all ages, of beliefs, attitudes and customs which produce unnecessary anxiety, guilt, feeling of inadequacy and hostility, must come to an end as a matter of public health and individual well-being.

xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

xxx x."But the great flood of information which anthropology has set loose concerning the very different ways people in different parts of the world have found of working out such institutions as marriage—or for molding childrens personalities, or for social control through punishment—is beginning to put tremendious pressure on that key log. Jerk it out, and we shall be able to see that social inventiveness is the prime tool which we need to build the future. Once this recognized, new designs for reducing group hostility, for rapid ways of building up new attitudes, for social control without crippling guilt, will start pouring forth.

"Our next step must be the working out of means whereby these new developments can be transmitted most easily to the point where they are going to do the most good, namely, to pre-school and school training. We have accepted the principle that the child as a citizen has certain rights, that he has the right to be protected against neglect and want, that he has the right to be protected against certain diseases. Can we anticipate the possibility that he will also be assured of certain psychological rights—the right to protection against excessive insecurity in his home, the right to protection against sadistic parents, to protection against indoctrination with damaging, outmoded attitudes, against the implantation of taboos and inhibitions and palpably fallacious concepts which will limit and hobble his later capacity to deal with reality.

"It seems reasonable that we should look for the establishment, as one of the conveyor belts running from the fact-finding social sciences to the schools, of courses in human behavior, starting from the first grade onward, perhaps called 'Lessons in Living," which could be used as a means of transmitting our constantly expanding knowledge of human nature—serving to insure that the new designs and new inventions could be set to work with the minimum of delay. Needless to say, a similar development in adult education is necessary.

"At the next step in drawing up our plans of action, let me stress the need of devices and inventions which will permit us to identify and take action about the socially dangerous person. Here I refer to the individual whos own insecurity, anxiety, hostility, sadism, has reached such serious proportions that he adversely affects others. This is particularly frequent where that person is a parent. all of us have seen the transmission down the generations of insecurity, chronic anxiety, frigidity, feelings inadequacy. We at present have no means whatsoever of stopping this. It could be stopped, however, by remodeling and expanding our present concepts of suitability of marriage, of quarantine of individuals suffering from diseases likely to spread to others.

"This, then, is out frontier and we can never forget it, for it is the frontier of our peoples everywhere. No doubt many of us, when we choose to work in the field of human behavior, saw no sign that it was here that the great engagements of the times were to be fought. But none of us who are now possessed of the history of the last few decades can doubt our responsibility. For, with our fellow-worker in the other social sciences, there are no other people anywhere who have the necessary knowledge of human behavior and the techniques of the skill to add to that knowledge. when "The industrial revolution, which started as slowly snd jerkily as the first locomotive , moved swiftly into a momentum and a force that has swept the world. Old land-owning classes disappeared or became fantastically wealthy on unearned royalties; the processes of centralization of industry and of urbanization displaced segments of rural population, broke up their ancient patterns of living, taught them to read and rebel.

xxxxxxxxxxxx

"It is still further back, to the source of that greatest and most powerful of all the streams which are channeling out social change, for it has its springs in the early Swiss and Dutch republics and at Runnymede. Those early and limited assertions, that every man has some rights, have led, in the more advanced democracies, to an increasing possibility for each man to express himself and exert an influence upon his times, according to his capacities. If he can see that inventiveness is essentially dependent upon variation in the way in which a problem is tackled, it is easy to understand that where a great many people have a chance to bring their solutions forward, modification will go on much more rapidly than where leadership is confined to a few and where those few have every interest in preserving the statis quo.

"The violence of the mingling of these three great streams--the power industries, experimental science, and the democratic way of managing affairs--is still growing. They have immeasurably enlarged and enriched life; but from their uncontrolled poring-together have come many of the great disasters of this last half-century. There is no reason to think that these disasters are at an end or will be until we devise better means of social organization and control.

xxxxxxxx

"Today the problems of our relations with others seethe and swirl, expand and boil against each other as we are carried through the rapids which lie beteen the last great disaster and whatever may wait ahead. Before coming to deal with any of them, I have spent some time in trying to set the background and the meaning of the work which we have to do. For this is necessary. It was only yesterday that it was impossible to think of a doctor without his wooden stethoscope, his preoccupation with a single patient, with a single organ in that patient or with a part of that organ. Then there were, and indeed too often still are, the heart men, the brain men, the men who grew to affluence on the removal of stones. Despite this curious fragmentation of the problem, the wise and mature physician had always recognized that it was necessary to know the history of the man if he was to understand his ills properly.

xxxxxxxx

"At the outset, I said that this was a turbulent frontier upon which we are to fight. I do not think that any of the campaigns which will be faught until this frontier is wone are likely to be more bitter, more costly, more long-drawn-out than that for the transmission of new ways of managing human relations, of new designs for living.

xxxxxxxxxx

"Then we have to say that the development and transmission of new designs for living have been greatly impeded by individuals and by social institutions having a vested interest in the preservation of the older ways. This was certainly true in the material field as well; but, there, the profusion of invention and the immediate and considerable gains to be made by their adoption was sufficient to overcome the resistance. The builders of stage-coaches put up the stoutest opposition they could to the new steam locomotives; the owners of the clipper ship lines faught a tough battle against the "newfangled" paddle steamships; and, to our day, "handmade", "hand painted," "hand woven," "hand carved" are labels which are supposed to denote excellence over the machine-made.

"In the field of social inventing and redesigning, this pressure of productiveness and gain has been much less. But another pressure is rising swiftly to a force

Where we fail on the frontier, this crumbling of our social structure will continue breaking down in runs of fresh disaster, opening up depths yet more terrible than those that we have known. As we succeed, the rest of us can hope to live.

Allen Memorial Institute
Royal Victoria Hospital
Montreal, P.Q. Canada.

Copied by Neil H Schwartz
P.O. Box 414
Tacoma 9 Wash

WOWO RADIO

ANTHONY 9436 1190

124 W. WASHINGTON BOULEVARD • FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

February 3, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS-TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Harvey:

On Saturday, March 14th, the Indiana State High School Speech Tournament will be held in Peru, Indiana. Peru is approximately 50 miles Southwest of Fort Wayne. There will be over 1000 students from 120 Indiana High Schools taking part in this annual event.

The reason I am writing to you is that we would very much like to have you in attendance as chief judge for the radio division competition. There will be approximately 200 students competing in this particular phase of the tournament. We at WOWO have assumed the responsibility of handling the judging and the award presentations for the radio competition. To have you with us that day would lend great stature to the event and I know you have a great interest in the young people in our country. If you can be with us on that day I would certainly appreciate hearing from you at your earliest opportunity.

I might add, we are expecting to have the Governor and Lt. Governor of Indiana, U.S. Senator Vance Hartke, Congressman Roush and Ross E. Adair, as well as the president of Westinghouse Broadcasting Company, Mr. Donald McGannon in attendance.

Sincerely,

Cal A. Bollwinkel

Cal A. Bollwinkel,
Program Manager

jp

Schwep, Charles F

TRIDENT FILMS, INC.
510 MADISON AVENUE · NEW YORK 22, N. Y.
PHONE PLAZA 9-3580 · CABLE · DENTPIX

October 20, 1958

never turned up

Nov. 11.
3 p.m.

Mr. Edward Murrow
C.B.S.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am sorry - but not surprised - that you were unable to attend the premiere screening of "Symphony Across the Land". However, I am most pleased to report that the first screenings, in both New York and Brussels, were completely successful. The enclosed brochure very briefly describes the film. You may have an interest in seeing it at a future date, and I will be most happy to arrange anything at your convenience.

John Crosby's article in today's "Herald Tribune" is of great interest to me. Unfortunately, I have missed your "Small World" programs. 6 P.M., unfortunately, is a difficult time for me. But because we are personally, as well as professionally, interested in Public Affairs Programs, I am most anxious to obtain written transcripts of these important documents. Is this possible? Further, might it be possible to reprint certain aspects of your remarks?

I would like very much to again have the opportunity of meeting with you. Will this be possible?

Sincerely yours,

Charles F. Schwep

Charles F. Schwep

PS -
I am enclosing a reprint of an article I wrote for "Business Screen". I was in charge of Films for the US Pavilion.

CFS:ifg
Encl.

Facts about

Symphony Across The Land

Produced by

TRIDENT FILMS, INC.

510 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

SYMPHONY ACROSS THE LAND has been produced for the United States Information Agency and is designed for overseas distribution. Foreign language versions will be prepared for its use in at least 30 countries.

Recognizing that the battle for men's minds has extended into cultural competition, the purpose of this film is to correct the misconception that much of America is a musical desert. Such orchestras as those of Boston, New York and Philadelphia have, of course, received world-wide recognition. Symphony Across the Land, therefore, features other orchestras from wide geographical areas, each of which represents an important aspect of American Music. These are:

SENIOR YOUTH ORCHESTRA OF WICHITA
Conductor . . . . . James Robertson

WICHITA SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor . . . . . James Robertson

ATLANTA SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor . . . . . Henry Sopkin

KNOXVILLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor . . . . . David VanVactor

DENVER SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor . . . . . Saul Caston

OKLAHOMA CITY SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor . . . . . Guy F. Harrison

Title music by the
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The program features predominantly music by American composers:

WICHITA
Carmen . . . . . Bizet
Enigma Variations . . . . . Elgar

ATLANTA
Dance Overture . . . . . Creston

KNOXVILLE
Symphony No. 2 . . . . . VanVactor

DENVER
Night on Bald Mountain . . . . Moussorssky

OKLAHOMA CITY
Symphony 5½ . . . . . Gillis

TITLE MUSIC
Symphony No. 6 . . . . . Piston

The Film was designed and produced by

TRIDENT FILMS, INC.

Director . . . . . LEROY PRINZ
Photography . . . . . JULIEN TOWNSEND
Editing . . . . . ANGELO ROSS
Music Recording . . . . STEPHEN TEMMER

Writer-Producer . . . . . GUY K. BENSON
Executive Producer . . . CHARLES F. SCHWEP

The Producers wish to express appreciation for the generous support of the several Orchestras and of the:

American Federation of Musicians
American Symphony Orchestra League

The United States has no peer in the arts and skills of selling the products of Industry. But there is honest debate about the degree to which we succeed in interpreting our principles and portraying our values to the peoples of the world. This vital communications job calls for an approach quite different from product advertising techniques. It is this approach which is the business of Trident Films, Inc.

Among the clients for whom Trident has worked are:

Institutional and Public Relations

American Hotel Association, National Tuberculosis Association, National Council of Churches, Mosler Safe Co., Wittenberg College, Government Agencies, et al.

Creative and Development Services

The Richardson Foundation, Educational Radio and TV Center, Planned Parenthood Federation, etc.

Special Project — Brussels Fair

Development and production of 18 "Loop Films" about America for exhibition in the U. S. Pavilion. Also, Charles F. Schwep, President of Trident, was consultant to the Commission and Chairman of the Film Committee.

Trident has developed and owns several properties including a series of ½ hour color films featuring the Salzburg Marionette Theatre.

For further information contact

TRIDENT FILMS, INC.

510 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

An Eye-Witness Report on the Film Exhibits at Brussels

Circarama Theatre Most Effective of U.S. Displays; Films Fortify Designs According to Charles Schwep

All the United States' exhibits at Brussels are tools which must work together as a team, variously supplementing, implementing and/or strengthening one another.

And of all exhibits, films have proven to be the most adaptable and flexible. They help strengthen weakness and correct omissions which may become apparent after the work of the designers is put to the test. This has long been the intent and plan of our designers.

"Circarama" Wins Crowds

It is significant that our most popular and effective exhibit at the Brussels exhibition is Walt Disney's superb Circarama, a motion picture show previously described in Business Screen. Among the three or four other exhibits which have been acclaimed most popular are the thirty-three different continuously-running "loop films". The foreign press has been generous to both exhibits and Circarama, to most Americans, appears to be the only exhibit which gives a "truly representative picture" of the U.S.A.

Both of these exhibits can be considerably improved upon, under different circumstances. The primary means of bettering Circarama would simply be to enlarge it. At present only 400 people can attend the 18-minute showing at a time. Without ballyhoo or promotion, we are playing to capacity houses even during weekday morning hours. And because one must wait in line for as much as an hour, a great many people have been turned back.

More Seating with 35mm?

Enlarging Circarama to three times its present capacity would involve production and projection in 35mm instead of 16mm. This would more than treble the cost of production and exhibition. The cost of the existing 16mm color production is $400,000, and Walt Disney has indicated that this was inadequate. It is estimated that an improved Circarama in 35mm would cost about one and one-half million dollars. But even at this, the cost might be cheap considering it could reach and deeply impress over four million people durtng the six-month duration of the Fair.

Similarly, the "loop films" can be improved. Much has been learned from their production and exhibition and can result in a vastly improved product for future use. And this use need not be limited to exhibitions of the magnitude of a World's Fair.

Improving the "Loop" Films

Firstly, the films are too long. Their average length of 2½ minutes, while proper for some purposes, is a little too much for the circumstances attendant to a bustling World's Fair. Here, the films should run no more than 1½ minutes each. But more important than length is the selection of subject matter and its treatment.

The most effective films are ones in which there is a great amount of movement and action. A loop on Sports is unquestionably the most popular subject. Farm Machinery at Work, a seemingly dull subject to most Americans, attracts large and interested crowds.

A film entitled American Pageant features a football game, the Mardi Gras and a Rodeo—and draws large crowds.

Another which features a day in New York City with its crowds and traffic (and stop-motion photography) stops and intrigues. So does Nite Lights, a colorful and fast-moving travesty on neon signs.

But subjects which feature more or less static material such as a loop on education and one on architecture are not appealing in spite of interesting effects gained by editing.

Problem of Small Screens

Other subjects which feature landscapes and beautiful pictorial compositions are not as effective here as when projected on a standard large screen. The relatively small screen required for continuous rear screen projection is not an effective means of exhibition for this subject matter. Generally, the long panoramic shots are inappropriate, and conversely there cannot be too many closeups.

Originally the "loop films" were projected in clumsy, cone-shaped boxes mounted on a metal pillar and so located that the center of the screen was 6½ feet from the floor. Each installation was a separate unit and was located alone or in small groups throughout the pavilion with little consideration for light conditions. Accordingly, at least half of the screens were bleached out by exterior light falling upon them most of the day. Furthermore, the sharp low corners of these contraptions were so located that a number of visitors suffered head cuts from inadvertently backing into them.

Installations Are Improved

The installations are now changed and improved. The new units are so designed that their screens are at eye level. And deep light baffles prevent an excessive fall of extraneous light on the viewing screen. Further, partitions have been constructed so that groups of these units can play together in a semi-enclosed area. Their effectiveness is magnified considerably.

But greater improvements could have been made, had there been time and funds for experimentation. One has only to visit the British Pavilion where the designers planned in advance for the inclusion of a similar exhibit to see what can be done. Our films are better; yet they are not as effective as a bank of 23 British "loop films" dramatically presented in a specially prepared area.

A third film exhibit of major importance is the documentary film program which has a broad and impressive representation in the U.S. theatre adjacent to the pavilion. Here film programs are scheduled for late morning, afternoon and evening showing whenever the requirements of the "live" Performing Arts programs give free time.

Over sixty subjects including hour-long TV kinescopes were shipped to Brussels for inclusion in this program. The films were originally divided into seven categories and eleven programs—each approximately 1½ hours in length.

The categories included: "People and Places", "Sports and Pastimes", "Science and Industry", "The Arts", "Americana", "The Documentary Classics" and "Medicine". A committee was appointed to select the individual titles and develop programs. Besides the writer, committee members were: Arthur Knight, film critic and author; George Stoney, president of Potomac Films, Inc.; Richard Griffiths, the Museum of Modern Art; and William Pain, Life Magazine.

The Barrier of Languages

The selection of subjects was made difficult by the necessity of choosing films which were meaningful without full comprehension of the spoken word: The films are projected only in English. But brief resumes of each subject, recorded in French and Flemish, are played to the audience before each film.

Unfortunately, this language barrier precluded consideration of many superb and desirable subjects—for example, some of the fine films on human relations produced by Henry Strauss and Affiliated Film Producers. It also made it impossible to submit kinescopes of some of our outstanding live TV dramatic shows for which there have been many requests.

But in practice, the programs selected and developed before the Fair opened have been only partially successful. Every subject has been played at least once before a good house and has been evaluated. On the basis of this, Mr. Andre Gregory, assistant to Jean Dalrymple, is developing new programs which are increasingly successful. It is expected that the film program will attract an average of three thousand visitors a day into the theatre.

Due to the transitory nature of the audience, long and/or slow-moving subjects do not display holding power. Neither, apparently, do lengthy "nuts and bolts" films no matter how artfully done. But such totally dissimilar films as Esso's Energetically Yours, the classic Window Cleaner, In the Beginning, Echo of An Era and Helen Keller In Her Story have become staples of the documentary program.

THE U.S.A. AT BRUSSELS

A night scene captures the tranquil beauty of the U.S. pavilion

A Test of Arms

Two Exhibits at Brussels That Exemplify the World Contest

by Charles Schwep

THE ATOM is indeed the symbol of our age, and it is not surprising that it should have been chosen as the theme structure of the Brussels World's Fair. The glittering Atomium towers over the Fair to proclaim "faith in mankind's ability to mold the atomic age to the ultimate advantage of all nations and peoples". But its shadow now looms large and ugly in the eye of the mind and casts a cloak of fear across the face of the earth. It has become the symbol of the struggle between the West and World Communism and highlights the contest between America and the Soviet Union.

In Brussels this contest is the feature event for the thirty-five thousand visitors who daily arrive at the sprawling and beautiful site of the Fair. They gravitate to the area where the two Goliaths face one another across a busy avenue of banners, flags and general festivity.

"Selling" Two Opposing Views

The two pavilions are as dissimilar as are the socio-political principles which they represent. Yet even to the casual and unsophisticated viewer, they both serve the same purpose: They are salesmen for their respective national product and ideologies.

Here is the contest, the test. And to the Communists it is war—a test of arms. For to them "war is to be regarded as an organic whole from which the single branches are not to be separated and in which, therefore, every individual activity flows swiftly into the whole."* Accordingly, a "peace" conference, a cultural event or an economic aid program is as much an act of war as is military invasion. Perhaps more so considering the successes of the Soviets over the past twelve years. Krushchev has said: "We declare war. We will win over the United States. The threat to the United States is not the I.C.B.M., but in the field of peaceful production. We are relentless in this and it will prove the superiority of our system."

A More Attractive Package

At first glance, we seem to win this contest hands down. Our "package"—the building itself—is infinitely more attractive than is the huge and unattractive Russian edifice. It is immediately apparent that here is a superb and significant American exhibit. But a building, no matter how attractive, is primarily a package for its contents.

The sharp contrasts presented by the facades of the buildings are substantially greater inside. Our exhibition designers succeeded in their purpose of capturing a light and airy mood of tranquility and of excluding aggressiveness and obvious propaganda.

The Russian pavilion, on the other hand, is heavily propagandistic and dedicated to the theory of "hard sell". It is dominated by a mammoth statue of Lenin, and the focal point which attracts the attention of the visitors is, of course, the gleaming Sputnik. The focal point of our pavilion—and also its dominant feature—is the Fashion Show.

Russia Emphasizes Industry

The Russians have so arranged their exhibits that traffic flows naturally from the massive entrance down an avenue of heavy machinery and thru a maze of technical displays. It is difficult for the visitor not to see most of what has been prepared for him to see.

In the U.S. pavilion, there is no directed flow of traffic and because there are so many exits and entrances, there exists a certain relaxed confusion as people look about them and wonder where they came in, where they should go and where they should exit. Unavoidably, some visitors, accustomed to a directed flow of people elsewhere, react that "there isn't really much to see." But many others seem to enjoy this almost unique, undisciplined freedom.

Above: Jean Dalrymple of the U.S. Commissioner's staff confers with Mr. Schwep (left).

Our "low pressure sell" and the somewhat esoteric tone of our representation has inevitably netted a harvest of howls and grumblings from disenchanted American tourists, business men and self-styled propagandists. But few of them have offered useful constructive criticism. Perhaps these Americans, who are our most severe critics, tend too much to judge our propaganda appeal in terms of American standards.

The comment in the foreign press supports the contention of the exhibit planners that our pavilion is exceedingly popular with the Europeans for whom it was designed and who constitute over 90% of the visitors. Even so, and especially in the absence of any scientific poll of public opinion, it is evident that there is room for much honest disagreement. And one can only speculate about how much more criticism might have resulted had we determined to employ a "hard sell" approach. In fact, one must speculate about the degree to which our "soft sell" really sells and whether our approach has "staying power" which affects attitudes, refutes Soviet propaganda and helps mold opinion in our favor.

Evaluation is Warranted

Evidence of the popularity of the U. S. representation is abundant. So is evidence that the visitors are deeply impressed by the Soviet exhibit; for propaganda or not, the fact remains that their impressive display of industrial power has had its desired effect. Perhaps the public is not quite as skeptical about Russian claims following the spectacular accomplishment of the Sputniks. Perhaps a climate of opinion favoring greater believabilbility of Soviet claims has been created which makes it easier for the Russians to sell; and conversely, harder for us.

It is evident that a thorough and scientific survey of public opinion is called for so that we can determine where we have succeeded and where we have failed, and similarly, determine the whats and whys of the strengths and weaknesses of other national exhibits. Certainly our expenditure of over fourteen million dollars warrants such a "field" evaluation. The lessons thus learned can benefit our planning for future international exhibitions and Fairs and might also suggest programs of value to the United States Information Agency and to our international cultural exchange programs. Thereby, the taxpayer can, perhaps, be saved the cost of some future mistakes.

*From Clausewitz as copied and underscored by Lenin.

Scofield

PERSON TO PERSON CBS NEW YORK
501 MADISON AVENUE

June 5, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Av.,
New York, N.Y.

Dear Ed:

For your consideration an idea that may, or may not, have occurred to you.

There is at the moment a good deal of curiousity in the press -- both magazines and newspapers -- with your impending sabbatical. It might not be a bad idea to keep that curiousity alive over the months you'll be away.

During the year you are to be traveling had you thought about setting up some sort of "clearing house" to handle things that cannot be handled by your office. Someone who would know where you were, what you were doing and would see to it that the press was kept informed of your activities.

Perhaps you are not unaware too that most of the leading publications have requested pieces carrying your by-line on just about any topic you would want to cover. If you decided some time you wanted to do any writing, that could be handled too.

E. Lizzy

Edward R. Murrow
John A. Aaron
Jesse Zousmer

I know what your previous thoughts have been in this regard and I hasten to assure you that this "clearing house" operation would follow along the lines we've worked in the past. In other words it would not have to take your time or concern you (unless you so desired) but would be a method of keeping the public and press informed -- a kind of "information bureau."

I'd like a chance to talk to you further about this, to go into more detail but I did want you to know what I had on my mind before we got together.

Sincerely,

Jim

Scott

THOMAS Y. CROWELL COMPANY Publishers of Books

ESTABLISHED 1834

432 FOURTH AVENUE • NEW YORK 16, NEW YORK

TELEPHONE
OREGON 9-0630

CABLE ADDRESS
TYCROWELL
NEW YORK

F

May 13, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Some years ago you interviewed Mr. Calvin Robinson of Lowell, Massachusetts on your program, "This I Believe."

Mr. Robinson at that time wrote a book called GIVE YOURSELF ONE DAY which was more or less privately printed. We have taken this book over, redesigned it, and resold it to the book trade. I want you to have a copy, and send one with my compliments and best wishes.

Sincerely yours,

David H. Scott

David H. Scott, Manager
Religious Book Division

dhs:jk

125th Anniversary
1834-1959

Scribner, Belding H.

February 24, 1958

Dear Mr. Scribner:

I have your letter of February 9th.

Since I have no control over any programs other than my own, I suggest you write a letter to our Program Information Department and they will consider your idea for a possible television show.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Belding H. Scribner
Assistant Professor of Medicine
University of Washington
Seattle, Washington

mcc

Sunday Night Feb. 9,1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr Murrow:

I'm addressing this letter to you because I hope you will be able to properly evaluate it and refer it to the right department at Columbia. Perhaps I should have sent it to Alistair Cooke, but under the circumstances 'the authorities' might consider him prejudiced.

Incidently I'm a neighbor of Hal Hoak, of Albert Ltd. Seattle, Washington. I'm in London on a years leave of absence from the University of Washington. To get to the point---

Last night we (my wife, myself and 3 boys ages 13,11,nd 8 went to the Old Vic to see "A Mid-summer Night's Dream". The children laughed until their sides hurt. Shakespeare came alive for Betty and myself. It is truly a performance that should be seen by the world. The palce to start is American TV.

The current performance ends on Feb. 15. Why not send a critic over to see it before it closes? The time is, unfortunately, almost too short; but perhaps one of your old London cronies could do it. In any event I believe that this Old Vic company should be flown to New York to put on this superbe performance; or perhaps it could be filmed in London. In any case I hope CBS will do something to make it available to America and the rest of the world.

Sincerely yours,

Belding H Scribner

Belding H Scribner
Assistant Prof of Med.
University of Washington
Seattle, Washington

Scofield, Liz

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Ed Murrow

from: Liz Scofield

→ 868.

June 10, 1958

This is by way of alerting you to a phone call from Miss Kitty Hansen, a feature writer for the DAILY NEWS. She is writing a two-part feature about Peter Ustinov. She had called here to ask if it would be convenient for you to talk to her briefly, by phone and I suggested she call your office direct.

EM.

Sconce, R E

PUYALLUP VALLEY Daffodil FESTIVAL, INC.

Post Office Box 1561
Tacoma 1, Washington

February 19, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Why not meet Spring head-on and include events of the 26th Puyallup Valley Daffodil Festival (April 6-12) in your television plans? Interviews with honorary parade marshall Governor Egan of Alaska, the Queen on her royal float at the start of the April 11 parade, skippers of decorated yachts on Commencement Bay, or your choice of a host of others. The enclosed schedule of events from the nation's bulb capital should offer you numerous opportunities for direct pick-up coverage from Tacoma.

We can offer an interesting Person-to-Person subject for you in young Wally Staatz, bachelor bulb grower, skier and president of the Puyallup Valley Daffodil Festival association. His modern, glass house on the hillside overlooking the Puyallup Valley would be an interesting locale for a conversation with him the week of our Daffodil Festival. Should you want, he could have the Festival Queen at his side.

These are people on whom the spotlight shines but momentarily, like so many others throughout the nation. All of us cannot be leading, world-known personalities, but once in a while something occurs to put us head and shoulders above our friends and neighbors for a brief moment. This appeal would be human, down to earth for your viewers.

Sincerely,

R E Sconce

R. E. SCONCE
Publicity Director

RES/mr
Enc.

Scott, I. M.

February 5, 1959

Mr. I.M. Scott
Winner Manufacturing Company, Inc.
Trenton 3, N.J.

Dear Mr. Scott:

Casey and I thoroughly enjoyed our visit to the boat show the other day and not least of our pleasures was our talk with you. I don't know why Betsy should want my autograph but she may have it with my compliments.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

Winner

MANUFACTURING COMPANY, INC.

TRENTON 3, NEW JERSEY

OWen 5-5406

Scott, I. M.

January 26, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Thursday evening when I arrived home and told my family of the delightful conversation I had with you and your son, Casey, the immediate question of my oldest daughter, Betsy, was "Did you get Mr. Murrow's autograph?" She was sorely disappointed in me for not having done so. In order to restore my relationship with my daughter, I would be very appreciative if you would send me such an autograph.

It was a real pleasure having you visit our booth at the Motor Boat Show. Somewhat belatedly I trust you will accept the wishes for the New Year as indicated on the enclosed card.

Sincerely yours,

I. M. Scott
President

IMS:dd

GOOD NIGHT 1958

Season's Greetings from the Scotts

SCOTTY JOAN BETSY PEGGY JONATHAN TIP PI

GOOD MORNING 1959!

PIPER

Sea, Eric

September 11, 1959

to:

ERIC SEA
ENGER CORPORATION
REFORMA 46 5 PISO
MEXICO CITY

FROM MURROWS SECRETARY STOP MUCH REGRET RECORDING SEPTEMBER 15th 1940 BROADCAST IMPOSSIBLE TO LOCATE.

BURKE

514-70

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION
TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

1220 (R 11-54)

SYMBOLS
DL=Day Letter
NL=Night Letter
LT=International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

D85CC 6R 64 NL MEXICO CITY SEP 10 1959

ED MURROW, VICE PRESIDENT

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM NYK

ROYAL AIRPORT BRANCH IN MEXICO GIVING LIVE BROADCAST OVER THE NEWS STATION COMMEMORATING BATTLE OF BRITAIN ON SEPTEMBER 16TH STOP REQUEST A COPY OF YOUR RECORDING MADE IN ENGLAND ON SEPTEMBER 15TH 1940 DESCRIBING ACTUAL FIGHT FOR THIS BROADCAST STOP I AM CLOSE FRIEND OF JOHN WILHELM OF MCGRAW HILL STOP PLEASE REPLY TO ERIC SEA ENGER CORPORATION REFORMA 46 5 PISO MEXICO CITY

ERIC SEA

420A SEP 11

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

Searle, E. J.

December 5, 1958

Mr. E.J. Searle
Ganges
8 Stanhope Road
St. Albans
Herts.

Dear Mr. Searle:

Thank you for your letter of November 27. I regret that I cannot avail myself of your suggestion. I am not doing any documentaries at present and the programs I am concerned with are not scripted.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

E. J. Searle,
Ganges,
8 Stanhope Road,
St. Albans,
Herts, England.
Tel. St. Albans 57326.

27th Nov. 1958

Dear Mr Murrow,

I was told you might use some scripts of my experiences in India from 1949 to 1953 and again in 1956. In the early part, it was during the Civil rioting & looting after partition. I also worked for a time in S. Africa. I would like to give my version of some of the racial problems, which I believe, differ from those of many other Social Workers. I understand you made some of your views known to the British Reporter for "The Daily Mail of Britain". I could not get a copy of this but was given the basis of your remarks by a friend. I may say, I gave free hospitality and other help during World War 2 - to your American Service people on leave in England. The people who did far less - were encouraged by some recognition. I received nothing from my country only the Knights of Columbus association of Canada - sent me a framed Certificate of Thanks! I treasure that! I also read the recent book of Russell Bradden - Ex-prisoner of the Japs and now an Australian Author & Biographer in Britain (He wrote Cheshire V.C. - Nancy Wake of the French Resistance etc) He also mentions in his book that - no prize, letter or other honours has been bestowed upon him, tho others have had honours showered upon them! I mention this for I have felt equally that there is much unfairness in these things. I want to make enough just to see the States! I am willing to submit work for you to get re-drafted to suit your programme. You may make your terms of remuneration! I need encouragement firstly by having some of my work used.

I would like to send a variety of articles on very varied topics i-e - The Carpmans Version of "The Lambeth Conference" - on Bishops and upon some of their Resolutions.

I hope I may hear from you.

Yours Sincerely

E. J. Searle

* I wrote a Song called - "When the Yanks were coming".
I for one was over joyed when that news came to us as we struggled on under the strife.

First fold here

BY AIR MAIL
PAR AVION
AIR LETTER
AEROGRAMME
OCT. 9 1958
HERTS.

CHEAP TRAVEL
6 PENCE POSTAGE
& SUNDAY AFTERNOONS

Edward R. Murrow Esq
T.V. Studios (U.T. Fig.)
485 Madison Ave
New York
U.S.A.

Second fold here

Sender's name and address: SEARLE
"GANGES"
ST ALBANS
HERTS
ENG.

AN AIR LETTER SHOULD NOT CONTAIN ANY ENCLOSURE; IF IT DOES IT WILL BE SURCHARGED OR SENT BY ORDINARY MAIL.

~~Eng Dec~~

Seceniquia, Margaret

March 11, 1959

Mrs. Margaret Seceniquia
8 Pioneer Street
Warren, Pa.

Dear Mrs. Seceniquia:

It is most kind of you to suggest an interview, but at this time it is not possible for me to fit it in. I am leaving for Europe next week, where I shall stay for an indefinite period, and, as you know, I start my sabbatical year in July. The time between now and then is simply not my own to dispose of because of the pressure of my commitments.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

8 Pioneer St,
Warren, Penna.
March 3, 1959.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
CBS Television,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Let me introduce myself. I am Mrs. Margaret Seceniquia, a free lance feature writer. I write under the name, Margaret Lane.

I believe that the viewing public is more than interested in every move that Ed Murrow makes. The present news release that you are taking a years sabbatical leave has left too much unanswered.

I would like to write an article on the reasons behind your decision, what you hope to accomplish and friendly mention of Arthur Godfrey as your replacement.

The article will be for a Sunday magazine type publication. I will submit the script to you before publication. The article will mean a lot to my career. It will mean pleasant, dignified publicity for you.

Would it be possible to have a brochure of your proposed accomplishments during the year in question, along with the reasons for your decision, and several interesting 8 by 10 glossy prints from your programs and personal life.

My most sincere thanks for any cooperation you may extend.

Very truly yours,

Margaret Seceniquia

MS/lm

(Mrs) Margaret Seceniquia

Secondari, J.

American Broadcasting Company

4461 CONNECTICUT AVENUE, N. W., WASHINGTON, D. C.

KELLOGG 7-1100

August 7, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Glen Arden Farm
Pawling, New York

Dear Ed,

It is very pleasant to know that you find no need for seasick pills since I have never been able to discover an adequate remedy. Since all pills come in bottles, I have come to the conclusion that the only possible salvation from "mal de mer" is contained in liquid form in the larger size bottles.

I will do my damndest to come and see you and Janet and Casey before your departure on your scrumptuous trip. But so far, I must say, I have not been able to steal away from Washington for any more than two days, and prospects of being able to do so in the next couple of weeks are somewhat dim.

Jaygie is fine, growing and at present occupied and preoccupied with a new pony. His question of the moment is whether he is going to ride the pony, or the pony is going to ride him. He and I have been trying to diminish the woodchuck population of Virginia, but they seem to be more elusive than the ones you and I exterminated in your backyard.

Should it so happen that I do not get to see you, carry with you my very, very best wishes for a happy, free, independent year which, probably is all most of us would ask for, and so few of us ever have the guts to reach out and take.

My love to Janet, Casey and you.

Yours

John Secondari Jay

July 29, 1959.

Glen Arden Farm
Pawling, N.Y.

Dear Sec:

Thanks for your wire. I have not so far been in need of seasick pills, but will let you know if I am.

Casey and I are off to the West Coast to see my mother next week, but we will be here at the farm for about ten days the middle of August. We sail on August 25th. Any chance of seeing you before then?

As ever,

Mr. John H. Secondari.

Seehafer, Gene

Needham, Louis and Brorby, Inc. Advertising

PRUDENTIAL PLAZA • CHICAGO 1 • WHITEHALL 4-3400

September 5, 1958

Dear Ed:

Thank you for the photographs -- they'll work fine!

Cordially,

Gene Seehafer

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison
New York 22, New York

GS:pc

CHICAGO • NEW YORK • HOLLYWOOD • TORONTO

Seehafer, Gene:

August 28, 1958

Dear Gene:

I have your letter of August 7th asking for some photographs.

These are the only ones we have available at the moment and I hope they will do.

Sincerely,

Mr. Gene Seehafer
Needham, Louis & Brorby, Inc.
Prudential Plaza
Chicago 1, Illinois

fc

Needham, Louis and Brorby, Inc. Advertising

PRUDENTIAL PLAZA • CHICAGO I • WHITEHALL 4-3400

August 7, 1958

Dear Ed:

Sig Mickelson suggested I contact you directly for several 8 x 10 photographs of you in action on the air. My collaborator, Jack Laemmar of the J. Walter Thompson Company, and I would like to use these in SUCCESSFUL TELEVISION AND RADIO ADVERTISING. The book will be published early in 1959 by McGraw-Hill and is a revision of our original edition published in 1951 when I was on Ralph Casey's Journalism Faculty.

Rather than standard publicity shots, Ed, do you have any candid shots....maybe those fancy suspenders of yours as you're in shirt sleeves, an ashtray full of cigarettes, with the camera angle wide enough to show the entire production set with cameramen, cameras, a worried stage manager, and the like. I'd also like a radio studio shot, if possible, to tie in with reference to network radio newscasts.

I'm hopeful you'll be able to comply ... our deadline for pictures is around October 1. Best personal wishes.

Cordially,

Gene

Gene Seehafer

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

GS/jd

Harry Segessman F

March 30, 1959

Mr. Harry Segessman
The Bobbs-Merrill Company Inc.
468 Fourth Avenue
New York 16, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Segessman:

Thank you for your recent letter concerning my leave of absence and for the gracious remarks which your letter contained.

At present, I do not plan to do any writing in the coming year. However, I shall remember your kind offer in case I should change my mind.

Sincerely yours,

LOA

ESTABLISHED 1838

THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY • INC.

468 FOURTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

Publishers

February 17, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C.B.S.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Today's news that you are leaving C.B.S. is very disheartening in light of your excellent and perceptive contributions to the television field.

The New York TIMES reported that you planned "to engage in leisurely travel, reading, and contemplation." The usual result of the last two endeavors is writing, and I wonder whether you are contemplating writing a book in the near future on public affairs and your connection with them. It is a saddening fact that in a democracy, television, one of our country's most powerful means of communication and information, is reluctant to keep a lethargic public aware of its affairs. Your efforts on behalf of this country and its public have been thoroughly admirable and will be greatly missed.

If you are thinking about expressing your views in a book instead of television, I would greatly appreciate the opportunity of discussing such a project with you.

Hoping to hear from you on this matter, I am,

Sincerely,

Harry Segessman

Harry Segessman
Editor

Seggesman, Harry

May 27, 1958

Dear Mr. Segessman:

I have your nice letter of May 12th enclosing Jack Redding's comments on the Little Rock situation.

It was nice of you to take the time and trouble to bring it to my attention. Thank you.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Harry Segessman
Publicity Director
The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Inc.
468 Fourth Avenue
New York 16, New York

mcc

ESTABLISHED 1838

THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY • INC.

468 FOURTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

Publishers

TMf

May 12, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Ave.
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I thought that you would be interested in the enclosed comments by Jack Redding on the Little Rock situation which is once again in the news. Jack's book will be published in June, and he has asked us to send you a copy as soon as it is off the presses. He has done an impressive and controversial expose of both Democrats and Republicans.

I hope you can use the enclosed on your radio show.

Sincerely,

Harry Segessman

Harry Segessman
Publicity Director

NEWS ABOUT BOOKS AND AUTHORS

THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY • Indianapolis • Indiana

468 FOURTH AVENUE • NEW YORK CITY

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE May 12, 1958

Jack Redding, former head of public relations for the National Committee of the Democratic Party, writes on the use of troops in Arkansas in his new book, INSIDE THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY, Bobbs-Merrill, to be published June 16:

> Attorney General Brownell advised the use of troops in Little Rock. The President acceded. But there was actually no need to use soldiers for this purpose. A relatively small force of deputies could have accomplished the end of protecting the persons of the few Negro students involved---nine. But such an action would not have created so dramatic a situation as the dispatch of troops accomplished. So in 1958 the Negro finds himself still a pawn in the game of politics, with the lives and minds of young people being warped and swayed in cynical fashion. Fortunately the Little Rock incident has proved to be a sort of nine-day wonder, with the failures of the President and his Administration in the fields of national defense and scientific research overshadowing completely the shabby maneuvering in Arkansas.

Telephone: MU 4-6950
Harry Segessman
Publicity

Seiden, Elliot

March 22, 1956

Dear Professor Seiden:

Thank you for your letter of March 11th.

I wish I could be of some assistance to you in your problem and very much regret that I have no helpful suggestions. The fact is, people in my profession are usually experienced newsmen and I frankly do not know how you can make good use of your potentialities unless it were something in the line of research.

May I suggest that you contact Mr. Richard Stanley, our director of personnel. He may be able to offer some helpful advice.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Elliot Seiden,
Assistant Professor
Long Island University
385 Flatbush Avenue Extension
Brooklyn 1, New York

fc

LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY

385 Flatbush Avenue Extension · Brooklyn 1, N. Y.

COLLEGE OF ARTS & SCIENCES

Speech-Theatre Department

March 11, 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Sir:

After fourteen months of pondering and deep introspection I have mustered up sufficient courage to send this letter to you. Yes, sir, for fourteen months I have hesitated.

Briefly, this is the dilemma which confronts my every waking hour:

I am in my ninth year as a teacher in this college and for three years have held the rank of Assistant Professor of Speech. I have been told in every quarter that my talents and potential are wasting away under the circumstances. While I do not consent to this observation, I do feel that the American College Teacher is, without a doubt, the most intimidated and exploited professional in our society. These are strong words, written perhaps more out of a sense of desparation than frustration. However that may be, it is shocking to contemplate that after these years of loyal, dedicated and highly productive service, that my income is under $4000.00 per year. This fact alone is hard to take, but it is far more painful to see that the figure of Professor Seiden looks forward to nothing.

I write to you about this matter because in the entire area of professional radio and television there is no one whom I more respect and admire..I think you know about these matters and I would consider it an honor to be able to personally discuss this problem with you.

What can a man of my calibre, training and varied experience offer to your profession? Is there any place for me in any area of radio or television. Would I be useful and could I earn my money?

LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY

385 Flatbush Avenue Extension · Brooklyn 1, N. Y.

COLLEGE OF ARTS & SCIENCES

I realize that there are hundreds like me, indeed, thousands, who are reaching for the stars, clinging tenaciously to the elusive phantom of hope, but it is so utterly difficult to gather enough courage to put the first foot forward.

I think of Matthew Arnolds Lines:

> "For most men in a brazen prison live,
> Where, in the sun's hot eye...
> They languidly their lives to some unmeaning > taskwork give
> Clinging to nought but their prison walls...
>
> ...While the rest, a few, escape their prison
> And depart on the wide ocean of life anew..."

Of course, I don't look upon my teaching as a brazen prison, but our society forces the teacher to a remote corner where, even when the salary is "generous", he is ever counting his pennies and awaiting anxiously the next pay check. Thus, he is imprisoned by his own spirit of dedication and noble selflessness. Well, sir, this I too have done for a long time and I seek a way out. I seek a path which will allow me to make good use of my own potential, my experience, my ambition and my philosophy of life--all of which have molded me through metamorphosis to what I am today.

I could go on and on.

May I see you, soon?

Very truly yours,

E. Seiden

Elliot Seiden
Assistant Professor
Speech-Theatre Department

Seiferth, John C. Jr

MINEOLA PUBLIC SCHOOLS

UNION FREE SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 10
TOWN OF NORTH HEMPSTEAD

MINEOLA, NEW YORK

BOARD OF EDUCATION

JACOB KATZ
PRESIDENT
JOHN A. JAHN
VICE-PRESIDENT
ERNEST MICHAELSON, M.D.
MARIE I. DOWLING
JOSEPH L. BESOSA

APPOINTED OFFICERS

GEORGE S. EATON . . . CLERK
HAROLD K. EAST . . TREASURER
FRANCIS X. SPERL . . COUNSEL

RAYMOND H. OSTRANDER
SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS

May 8, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Morrow
WCBS - TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Morrow:

Enclosed is a request for photo coverage which you may consider an announcement.

I thought you might be interested in one way that the medium-sized, suburban, comprehensive junior and senior high schools in Mineola are better preparing themselves to meet the challenges of the space age.

This is one of three workshop conference days called by the superintendent of schools, Dr. Raymond H. Ostrander, during the school year for in-service education of teachers. The pupils do not attend school on these days.

Very truly yours,

John C Seiferth

John C. Seiferth, Director
School-Community Relations

JCS:lgw
encl.

MINEOLA PUBLIC SCHOOLS
200 Emory Road
Mineola, New York
PIoneer 7-6700

REQUEST FOR PHOTO COVERAGE

Educational Conference Day - Junior and Senior High School Faculties, Mineola, New York

THEME: "A Look At Tomorrow, Today"

-to gain a better perspective of the future, through a consideration of implications of recent research and development in science

WHO: Key Note Address - 9:00 to 10:00 a.m.

DR. R. GORDON HOXIE, Dean, C. W. Post College

Panel Discussion - 10:30 to 12 noon

cancelled due to debate on mutual Security Bill

~~THE HONORABLE STEVEN B. DEROUNIAN, Congressman, Second Congressional District, New York~~

MAJOR JOHN S. BRADT, Personnel Officer, Mitchell Air Force Base, Mitchell Field, New York

MRS. MARIETTE KUPER, Administrative Officer, Brookhaven National Laboratories, Upton, New York

MR. JACK MARRON, Systems Representative, International Business Machines, Garden City, New York

MR. JOHN N. DYER, Vice President, Airborne Instrument Laboratory, Mineola, New York

MR. ERIC JONES, District Manager, Commercial Department, New York Telephone Company, Hempstead, New York

MR. JOHN C. SEIFERTH - Moderator - Director of School-Community Relations, Mineola Public Schools

DATE: Monday, May 12, 1958

PLACE: Mineola High School Auditorium

Sein, Maung

MAUNG SEIN, M. D.

HUMAN FERTILITY

2300 CONNECTICUT AVENUE
WASHINGTON 8, D. C.

February 9, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It was a pleasure making your acquaintance at the Mayflower Hotel when you were last in Washington for the Institute of International Education proceedings. I would appreciate having a copy of the transcript of your recent broadcast, "The Business of Sex" for its sociological and scientific value which I am formally requesting as suggested by you.

Thanking you,

Sincerely,

Maung Sein

MAUNG SEIN, M.D.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Sent

Sellers, Marie E.

February 7, 1958

Dear Mrs.Sellers:

I have your letter of February 1st.

I hope your Parcel Post Booth is successful, and I would like to contribute the album on Winston Churchill, which I hope you will like.

You will find it attached.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Marie E. Sellers, Jr.
252 Preston Avenue
Elgin, Illinois

mcc
Enc.

February 1, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C.B.S.
485 Madison Ave.
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The 1958 P.T.A. project of Sheridan School in Elgin, Ill. is a carnival to be held February 21. We are planning a Parcel Post Booth, the proceeds of which are to be turned over to the Parents Teachers Association.

We know you have many admirers in this area and that they would be happy to be the recipient of an article contributed by you.

We are looking forward to hearing from you.

Yours very truly,

SHERIDAN SCHOOL P.T.A.

Marie E Sellers

Mrs. James B. Sellers Jr.
252 Preston Ave.
Elgin, Illinois

Send Churchill Album.

Serleifer, Ida

March 9, 1959

Dear Miss Serleifer:

I have your nice note of February 24th.

Unfortunately, it will be impossible for me to grant you the interview you want, since I will be leaving soon for England. Upon my return to the office, I shall be called away from my office so often due to television and radio commitments.

I am sorry, but am sure you understand.

Sincerely,

Miss Ida Serleifer
229 West 109 St.
New York 25, N. Y.

239 W. 109 St.
N.Y. 25, N.Y.

February 24, 1959

My dear Edward Murrow:

I am very anxious to meet you, before my leave for Israel. The topic I wish to discuss with you, is of mutual importance. Please answer without delay, since I am limited in time.

Thank you, and

With Best Wishes

Ida Schleifer

Seth, Wm. R.

LENNEN & NEWELL, INC.

ADVERTISING

SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE
235 MONTGOMERY STREET

BEVERLY HILLS OFFICE
308 NORTH RODEO DRIVE

380 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 17, N. Y.

February 5, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

Just a note to thank you for a really great job on the Lorillard sales meeting kine. Everyone here is delighted with it and I'm sure the Lorillard people are going to be equally enthusiastic.

Best personal regards.

Sincerely,

LENNEN & NEWELL, INC.

William R. Seth
Program Supervisor

WS:em

Seth, Wm.
F

January 27, 1959

Dear Bill:

I had a talk with Jesse and John about your proposal for the Greensboro meeting. Sorry I cannot make it in person.

John or Jesse will be in touch with you, since I am going to be out of town for the next couple of days.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. William Seth
Lennen & Newell, Inc.
380 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

mcc

Pete P has orig letter from MR. Seth.

Seymour, Maurice

November 26, 1958

Mr. Maurice Seymour
1715 Broadway
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Seymour:

I am most grateful to you for the two books of ballet photographs. They are beautifully produced works of art, and a handsome addition to my shelves.

I understand that you would like us to have a picture-taking session. I should be very pleased to do so, but would beg your indulgence for a short postponement of the date. My pre-Christmas schedule is extremely heavy but, as soon as I have a day clear, I shall contact you to make a definite appointment.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

Shaak, Dewey L.

December 15, 1958

Dear Mr. Shaak:

Thank you for your recent letter telling me of your program idea.

It may perhaps have merit, however, I cannot possibly use it. My PERSON TO PERSON and SMALL WORLD television shows deal with conversations and interviews.

I suggest you write a letter to Mr. Irving Gitlin, Director of Public Affairs programs for CBS.

Sincerely,

Mr. Dewey L. Shaak, D.C.
335 West Main Avenue
Myerstown, Pennsylvania

mcc

DEWEY L. SHAAK, D.C.
335 WEST MAIN AVENUE
MYERSTOWN, PA.
TEL. 301

A TV pgm Idea

November 25, 1958

Edward R. Murrow
C/O C.B.S.
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I know you are very busy so will keep this as short as possible and still attempt to get the general idea across.

I have an idea for a television series that would be of great EDUCATIONAL value to everyone, would APPEAL to everyone's THIRST FOR THIS TYPE OF KNOWLEDGE, would bring about an AWAKNING TO THE NEEDS AND ALMOST UNBELIEVABLE PROBLEMS of the peoples of the world, and lastly, would bring about a PLAN to correct these needs and problems. This plan would help the economy of the entire world and at the same time be informative... using T.V. as the medium thru which this service would be performed.

Since the thirst for this type of knowledge is present in everyone, I know that the series would gather greater audiences than any program ever ~~presented~~ gathered. It would fill the GREAT NEED OF THE DAY.

I write to you because I do not know what to do with this idea. Should I approach a sponsor or a network first?

DEWEY L. SHAAK, D.C.
335 WEST MAIN AVENUE
MYERSTOWN, PA.
TEL. 301

Perhaps you would be interested after hearing more about this idea? I want to join with anyone or any organization thru which I can make this program available to the public. Since your programs have always followed the vein of entertainment with a purpose, I naturally thought of you first.

I am very anxious to elaborate on the idea and eagerly await your reply. Please, if you are not interested, point me in the proper direction. Thank you, Mr. Murrow. I hope you and your family enjoy a very happy holiday season.

Very truly yours,
Dewey L. Shaak, D.C.
Dewey L. Shaak, D.C.

Shaffi, Laurie

September 19, 1958

My dear Laurie:

I think you are, as usual, a wise man. I have no present plans to come to the coast, but there is no-one out there I would rather see than yourself. Do let me know if you come back, even briefly, to this city of steam, scurry and scamper.

As ever yours,

KRM:skh

Mr. Laurie Shaffi
99 Via Robles
Monterey, California

Laurie Shaffi .....

PERSONAL

99 VIA ROBLES
MONTEREY, CALIFORNIA
MA 4-1296

My dear Ed,

I THOUGHT YOU WOULD PROBABLY BE INTERESTED TO KNOW THAT I HAVE RETIRED FROM GOVERNMENT SERVICE. I HAD COME TO THE REALISATION THAT I COULD NEVER BE COMPLETELY HAPPY LIVING ELSEWHERE THAN IN CALIFORNIA. THIS COUNTRY HAS BEEN SO VERY KIND TO ME IN THE NEARLY 15 YEARS I HAVE BEEN HERE, THAT I COULD SCARCELY EVEN CONTEMPLATE THE PROSPECT OF HAVING TO LEAVE THIS LAND, WITH THE MANY FRIENDS FOR WHOM I HAVE SUCH DEEP AFFECTION ... HOME IS WHERE THE HEART IS.

I AM, THEREFORE, IN THE PARLANCE OF THE THEATRE "AT LIBERTY", AS A PRIVATE CITIZEN, RESIDING FOR THE TIME BEING IN CARMEL. PLEASE BE SURE TO LET ME KNOW IF YOU ARE PASSING THIS WAY AT ANY TIME, FOR I WOULD LOVE TO SEE YOU.

WITH BEST GOOD WISHES,

MOST SINCERELY,

Laurie Shaffi

Shafton, Dan

University of Arizona

Associated Students

TUCSON

F

OFFICE OF THE GRADUATE MANAGER

CR.

February 6, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your air-mail special arrived in more than enough time for our international forum here at the University of Arizona. As I had mentioned earlier, the script will be an invaluable reference during our panels and round tables.

May I repeat, once more, the compliment on your "Years of Crisis" telecast. Reading it over in script form brings out, once more, the subtle humor and alert analysis.

Your own personal attention, I think, meant even more, and I hope that there is an opportunity to reciprocate should you ever be traveling in the Southwest.

Sincerely,

Dan Shafton

Dan Shafton, Councilman
Associated Students
University of Arizona

rh

Shafton, D

January 30, 1959

Dear Mr. Shafton:

I regret to say that your kind letter of January 1st was, for some inexplicable reason, side-tracked and has come to my desk only today.

We hasten to send you the YEARS OF CRISIS script you requested, in the hope that it will still reach you in time for your purposes.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Dan Shafton
Associated Students
University of Arizona
Tucson, Arizona

mcc

University of Arizona
Associated Students
TUCSON

OFFICE OF THE GRADUATE MANAGER

January 1, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
CBS Television,
New York City, New York.

Mr. Murrow:

Our Student body is planning a World Affairs Conference which will take place the first of February. After watching your compelling "Years of Crisis --- 1949-1959," I was impressed with both the content and enthusiasm of your own comments and those of your area-specialists. The whole telecast outlined with an alert exactness some of the many economic, military and political science problems confronting the world today.

If we did not know that it would be impossible, we would certainly wish that you could attend our conference as a keynote speaker; but since your commitments undoubtedly rule this out, would it be at all possible for the University to have a transcript of the comments or a dubbed tape of the program?

That script or dubbed tape would allow each conferee to take a simulated "You Were There" approach in drawing his own conclusions in our round table discussions.

Again may I compliment you and your staff not only on such complete coverage but also on such an honest and stimulating appraisal of world conditions. I, myself, am majoring in Polical Science and Economics here at the University. The telecast was to me a further impetus toward increasing my study of world affairs.

In line with one of your comments to Eric Severeid and his "Independent Pessimist Party," may world problems be resolvable by solutions which can spell out Peace as 1959 unwinds itself.

Sincerely,

Dan Shafton

Dan Shafton, Councilman

Associated Students

University of Arizona

Tucson, Arizona

DLS:ss

Shalett, Sidney

January 17, 1958

Dear Mr. Shalett:

I have your very nice letter of January 4th.

I appreciate your thoughtfulness in sending me a copy of your tape recording which I look forward to listen to as soon as I get the opportunity.

Thanks again.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Sidney Shalett
1617 Tuckerman Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

mcc

SIDNEY SHALETT
1617 TUCKERMAN STREET, N. W.
WASHINGTON 11, D. C.

ANITA SHALETT
RESEARCH ASSOCIATE

TELEPHONE
RAndolph 6-2366

Trust on shelf

Jan. 4, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
The Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am taking the liberty of sending you with my personal compliments a copy of a recording, titled VEEP, which I have just produced. Our mutual friend, Ted Koop, thought you might enjoy hearing it, and I remember so well your wonderfully worded tribute to Mr. Barkley when he died.

As related in the accompanying transcript, the record is a condensation of more than 40 hours of informal interviews I had with the Veep, which led to our Saturday Evening Post collaboration and later to his book, THAT REMINDS ME--. Some of the sequences--for example, the hog-calling demonstration by the Veep; his singing of an old Negro folk song, and his recital of the classic mint julep story, pinned on Stevenson's reluctance to take the 1952 nomination--are, in my opinion, collector's items.

As a reporter in another medium, I've long admired and respected your work. I do hope that some time in the future I am going to have the pleasure of meeting you.

Sincerely yours,

Sid Shalett

SS:as

Shams

September 22, 1959

Dear Mr. Shams:

Enclosed please find the tickets you requested several weeks ago. I regret that we could not send them sooner, but October 4th is the first available date.

We will call you as soon as we know when the Iran program will be on the air.

Sincerely yours,

Gabrielle Wachsner
Secretary

Ali-Reza Shams-al-Shoara
Consulate General of Iran
30 Rockefeller Plaza
New York, New York

encl

Shapiro, S O

November 24, 1958

Mr. S.O. Shapiro
Look
Cowles Magazines Inc.
Look Building
488 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Shap:

Thank you for your letter. It is very pleasant to know that the memory of SEE IT NOW lingers a little.

I am not very good at disinterring either memories or bodies and therefore must decline your gracious invitation to appear on the Garry Moore Show on December 30.

Why don't you ask Frank Stanton if he would like to accept it on behalf of the Company?

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

LOOK

COWLES MAGAZINES INC. Look Building, 488 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N. Y., MURRAY HILL 8-0300

S. O. SHAPIRO, Vice President

November 20, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Ed:

It's really a pleasure to inform you that the Look TV Awards balloting among newspaper TV critics and editors has just been completed, and that once again "See It Now" has been selected as the Best Public Affairs Series of the year.

Although "See It Now" is, of course, no longer on the air, any show which appeared any time between November 1, 1957, and October 31 of this year was eligible for an award.

Once again, the Look Awards will be presented on a major network show, and, as usual, many of the top names in TV will be on hand. This year the winners will receive their plaques on the Garry Moore Show of Tuesday, December 30th. Needless to say, Ed, we were delighted that you appeared on the Awards Shows of the past several seasons and hope that you again will be able to take time out to accept your award on the Moore Show.

In order that we may advise the Moore producers, I'd appreciate hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

Congratulations again and all best wishes.

Sincerely,

Shap

SS:vt

P. S. The Awards story will appear in the January 6, 1959 issue of Look, out December 23. Please keep your selection confidential until that time.

Shapiro, S O

LOOK

COWLES MAGAZINES INC. Look Building, 488 Madison Ave., New York 22, N. Y., MURRAY HILL 8-0300

S. O. SHAPIRO, Vice President

August 28, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

I thought you'd be pleased to see the enclosed advance copy of the new issue of Look (out September 2nd) which contains several references to you, "See It Now," and your upcoming show, "Small World."

You'll find this on page 75 and 76 of our annual TV forecast.

Our best wishes in the coming season.

With best regards.

Sincerely,

SOS:RB
Enclosure

Shapiro, S.O.

LOOK

COWLES MAGAZINES INC. Look Building, 488 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N. Y., MURRAY HILL 8-0300

January 21, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

Well, we sent John Crosby a "Happy New Year" card, and now we're sorry.

Our card crossed his libelous column of January 3, in the mail. Speaking objectively, I think we came off the worse in the exchange.

I suppose we'll have to wait until Halloween and try it again.

There are undoubtedly people who found Crosby's column entertaining, but frankly we found it libelous. More important than our bruised feelings, however, is the fact that Crosby's statement unchallenged would lessen the prestige of these Awards in the industry.

So, we fired off a wire demanding a retraction. And we got one too, of sorts. We do not think Mr. Crosby's retraction entirely satisfactory, but then I suppose he didn't find our wire entirely to his taste, either.

Since you are a more-or-less innocent party to this dispute, we thought you would be interested in seeing a copy of our wire and a copy of Mr. Crosby's return statement.

With all best wishes.

Sincerely,

Shap

S. O. Shapiro
Vice President

The following telegram was sent to John Crosby and officials of the New York Herald Tribune Syndicate by John F. Harding, Vice President and General Counsel of Cowles Magazines, Inc., publishers of Look:

John Crosby seriously libeled LOOK Magazine in his Herald Tribune column Friday, January 3, 1958, when he stated, quote, The LOOK Awards go invariably not to the best in TV but to the most famous, and to those who are most likely to give LOOK a plug on their shows, unquote. Either he is completely ignorant of, or deliberately chose to disregard, the manner in which the winners are selected and the safeguards employed by LOOK to insure the accuracy and integrity of the poll. LOOK has absolutely nothing to do with the selection of the winners. Both the nominations and the final selection of the winners are determined by a nationwide poll -- conducted under the supervision of the accounting firm of Ernst and Ernst -- of all the radio and TV editors and columnists listed in the 1957 editions of the Editor and Publisher Yearbook and the Radio-TV Annual Yearbook. Ballots were mailed to John Crosby and six other Herald Tribune columnists and editors. Completed ballots were returned by participating radio and TV editors directly to the accounting firm of Ernst and Ernst, who collated and tabulated the votes secretly within their own organization, and then made a written report to LOOK of the winners. Mr. Crosby's unwarranted and inaccurate accusations has caused and will continue to cause enormous damage to LOOK's reputation in the television industry and among advertisers, as well as with the general public. We, therefore, insist upon Mr. Crosby's making a complete retraction of his libelous statements immediately, with prominence equal to that given the original publication, in the Herald Tribune and all other papers carrying Mr. Crosby's syndicated column.

JOHN CROSBY

Jack Paar Tries Success for a Change

Jack Paar once—and not so long ago, either—gave an interview to Marie Torre called "Will Failure Spoil Jack Paar?" which was his own suggested title. This was just one of a whole series of interviews in which Paar lamented that his humor was too high or too bitter or, at any rate, too different to sit well with the public. "I had my chance and failed," he exclaimed dramatically in a different interview to my own Operative X-12.

John Crosby

Failure has been the keynote of practically all the Paar publicity for almost ten years and now that he is a big whopping success, it's going to take a tremendous readjustment on Paar's part to be able to talk to interviewers at all. Some years ago, after one of his distinguished failures (they were all distinguished failures), Paar declared savagely that he was going to abandon his subtle mockery forever, that the public wasn't ready for it, that he was tired of winning awards and the acclaim of critics and fellow comics—and then losing his job.

Actually on "Tonight," which is his current conspicuous success (which is even more conspicuous by the absence of any other comparable TV successes this season), the subtle mockery still flickers gently and sometimes brilliantly—but generally Paar is listening to it rather than uttering it. His regular, Dodie Goodman, and his irregulars, Peter Ustinov, Hermione Gingold, Arthur Treacher, Jonathan Winters and others, indulge in a great deal of subtle and sometimes bitter and almost always differen mockery which the "Tonight" audience seem terribly ready for. Actually, even in the darkes days of yore (and nobody but nobody has ha more shows canceled out from under him tha Jack Paar), I don't think Paar ever was as b a failure as he kept boasting he was.

Even on his first "Tonight" show, Pa opened up apologizing for the show being awful flop almost before the show was fi minutes old. But then the program went to betray him and become a big hit and Pa still seems uncomfortable with success. He a strange one, all right.

• • •

There is a good deal of repartee on the Paa "Tonight" show as there was on the old Stev Allen "Tonight" but the best parts of the sho to me are when the raconteurs take over. It been a long time since I have heard suc delicious stories so delightfully told as those b Peter Ustinov on this show. Ustinov's storie are practically three-act plays with character dialects, curtain lines and all the other trick of the stage.

A couple days later, a character named Ace Williams, who shoots movies in Africa, told yarns about the natives which is where I found out that mother-in-law jokes are quite common among the pygmies. Dody Goodman is not a raconteur, exactly. In fact, her bit is difficult to describe. On Jan. 6, for example, she smiled into the camera and said: "A Merry Christmas to all and to all a good 'Tonight.' I know it's too late to say this but I just thought of it." That's fairly typical of Dody, who defies analysis and is a very good performer in a zany way.

• • •

Every Tuesday Elsa Maxwell drops by—sometimes from as far away as Rome—and tramples all over the reputations of the great, the highborn and, once in awhile, me. Over the last months she has belted Hedda Hopper, Walter Winchell, Jean Paul Getty, Elvis Presley, Jayne Mansfield, King Farouk and the Biltmore bar. (I don't know how either I or the Biltmore bar got into such high-flown company but I'm terribly flattered and I bet the Biltmore bar is, too.) Just for a switch, Miss Maxwell rushed to the defense of Maria Callas after that celebrated walkout in Rome—and this I think was a mistake. Defense is not her line.

Paar himself in the middle of all this talent contributes some pretty good offbeat jokes and whimsy and satiric thrusts. From time to time, though—when he talks to Miss Goodman or to one of the guests or sometimes to a member of the studio audience—the old petulance and asperity creep back into his voice and his manner. It's as if all this success were getting on his nerves, and he wishes he were back in the more familiar haunts of failure where a guy could be properly bitter.

The "Look" magazine people were terribly upset by my charge that the "Look" awards "go invariably not to the best in TV but to the most famous, and to those who are most likely to give 'Look' a plug on their shows." John F. Harding, "Look" vice-president and general counsel, declares in an aggrieved telegram that "Look" has nothing to do with the selections; that both nominations and winners are "determined by a nation-wide poll of all the radio and TV editors and columnists." This was conducted by an impartial accounting firm.

"Ballots were mailed to you and six other Herald Tribune columnists and editors," he said. Well, I threw my ballot away, along with the Best Dressed Women ballot and several score other ballots of "best" this and that which drift in here every year. But I expect other columnists conscientiously filled their "Look" ballots out and mailed them in. Apparently I was wrong; but it is still a tiresome circulation stunt. Every one straight on that now?

© 1958, New York Herald Tribune Inc.

★ ★ ★

Announcer Gone, Forgotten

PRETTY CHEAP: It was sad to read that Ted Husing, the famous sportscaster of yesteryear, had been fired by CBS.

Husing, now partially recovered from a serious illness, lost his $150 a week job without explanation from the radio-TV network.

His friends are wondering why a company which earned $22 million in 1957, and which Husing served from 1927 to 1946, didn't come through with a livable pension.

★ ★ ★

Sharpe, Raymond

Raymond A. Sharpe
616 North Ashe Avenue
Newton, N.C.

March 20, 1958

Don't Answer

Columbia Broadcasting Company
Executive Offices
New York, N. Y.

Attention: Mr. Edward R. Murrow, Vice-Pres. (Personal)

Editorial Comment on
Mr. Ted Husing

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am attaching an extract taken from Editor John S. Knight's " Editor's Note Book " which appeared in the Charlotte (N.C.) Observer and other Knight Publications on Sunday, March 2nd, which I believe will be of interest to you.

The reason that I am tardy in mailing this is that I have been hospitalized, and up until now have not had the opportunity to dictate this letter.

Actually, I hesitated to write, first, because I can appreciate that you are an extremely busy man with your multiple responsibilities and have a mountain of correspondence to handle. However, I sincerely hope that you, personally, have the opportunity to read this letter and give it the consideration necessary to appreciate the thoughts that prompted my writing. Secondly, I am a novice at such letters, but felt compelled to write this one.

If Mr. Knight's information is correct, I agree with the sentiments outlined in the attached extract.

If such be the case, a grave injustice has been done to a man, who has, in the years gone by, thrilled and given many hours of enjoyment and pleasure to countless millions of Americans and many in foreign lands, as you do now.

True, you and your colleagues give the broad picture-- the passing parade of events that will affect, not only our lives, but those that come after us. You have no peer in this respect.

Ted Husing covered only the lighter side, the relaxation so sorely needed by all of us to cope with the more serious problems of living. I am sure you recall, as well as I, the many sporting events made even more exciting and thrilling by his graphic word pictures of the events in his particular sphere. They were electrifying and removed us mentally from the problems of the moment, in the same manner that your " This is London " brought home to us the serious situation confronting the whole world at that time.

I, frankly, have followed closely your personal programs and those of your colleagues. Your news programs, " This I Believe ", " Hear it Now ", "See it Now ", " You Were There ", etc., have all been informative as well as a source of enjoyment to me, as to millions of others.

In many of these productions, injustice, intolerance, and the lack of compassion have been illustrated as caused by individuals, groups or nations when both sides of the coin were examined. After all, whether it be a group or a nation, both are made up of individuals. If respect, tolerance, and compassion are practiced by individuals, either singularly or by groups, then it follows that the group or nation will travel the right road.

The great individual American pastime is the never ending fight for the underdog and it is an inherent National characteristic of every clear thinking American to resent the treatment of a man which is tantamount to kicking him in the teeth when he is down.

I believe, under the circumstances, it would not only be the right thing but an effective illustration of the American concept to have as the theme of one of your programs, perhaps " See it Now " or maybe " You were There ", a re-cap of the years of Mr. Husing's triumphs, he being the star and the proceeds going to him. There are, I am sure, millions like myself, who for 30 minutes or an hour would enjoy, re-live, and refresh our memories of the many happy hours we sat beside our radio and through his eyes and crystal clear voice, were thrilled by the many events and star performers that made up that fabulous sports era he so ably covered.

I look forward with anticipation to the news of what you are able to work out for one of the great ALL TIME ALL AMERICAN SPORTSCASTERS.

With every good wish, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Raymond A. Sharpe

Raymond A. Sharpe

RAS/d

Shayon, Robert F

February 24, 1959

Dear Bob:

Thanks for the kind words. I am off to Florida for a couple of weeks. Let's try to get together when I get back.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

Mr. Robert Lewis Shayon
12 Meeker Road
Westport, Connecticut

ROBERT LEWIS SHAYON

12 MEEKER ROAD WESTPORT, CONNECTICUT

February 17, 1959

Dear Ed:

Late last night I heard the news on radio about your leave of absence.

I don't know what it means but I hasten to say: "Good luck -- whatever it is."

The talks you've been making lately are great.

Last time we lunched together, you said: "Let's do this again." If your busy schedule permits, and you still feel so inclined, please let me know.

All the best.

As ever,

Bob

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Sl. Ill, Most Rev. R. J.

The Most Reverend Bernard J. Sheil, D. D.

Titular Archbishop of Selge expresses his heartfelt appreciation for the greetings and good wishes extended to him on the occasion of his

Golden Sacerdotal Jubilee

John Sheehan

August 12, 1959

Mr. John J. Sheehan
American Stock Exchange
86 Trinity Place
New York 6, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Sheehan:

As Mr. Murrow is away, I am answering your letter of August 10 to him on his behalf. I regret to tell you that he will not be able to join you on September 1. He is leaving in ten days' time for Scandinavia and does not expect to return to this country until July 1960.

Sincerely yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

AMERICAN STOCK EXCHANGE

DEPARTMENT OF
PUBLIC RELATIONS

RECTOR 2-0800
86 TRINITY PLACE, NEW YORK 6, N.Y.

August 10, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS News
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

We would be delighted if you could join us at the American Stock Exchange members' annual golf tournament and dinner to be held on Tuesday, September 1, 1959 at the Siwanoy Country Club, Bronxville, N. Y.

If you cannot get away for the full day, you might possibly arrange to be with us for cocktails and dinner. If so, we will arrange transportation to and from the Club.

If you have time for a round of golf, tee-off time is ten o'clock as usual. We will break for lunch before the back nine.

Please let us know if you can join us. We shall look forward to an affirmative reply.

Very truly yours,

John

John J. Sheehan
Director, Public Relations

JJS:mr

Sheean, Vincent

June 19, 1959

Dear Jimmy:

Many thanks for your letter of June 7th.

I shall look forward to seeing your interview with Nehru. I'm glad to hear that Arthur Bonner was so helpful. He is a good man and is thoroughly acquainted with his area of operations.

I expect to be here until the end of August, when I hope to leave for Europe. When do you return?

Best of luck.

As ever,

Mr. Vincent Sheean
Ashoka Hotel
New Delhi
India

mc

Ashoka Hotel, New Delhi, June 7th (Sunday)

Dear Ed,

I'm making my first television program tonight. Interview with Mr Nehru. Sound unit from Bombay, etc. In his house. I feel a bit foolish at starting in such a way---I should have had some experience. It's like a student pianist who can hardly play a scale busting out with a début in the Tchaikovsky concerto.

Anyhow, what I want to tell you is that I couldn't have done a damned thing without the advice and help of your Delhi correspondent, Arthur Bonner. When the Prime Minister first gave me a time it was only three days off and I had nothing but my bare hands to make a program with. I went straight from his office to Bonner. Bonner jumped into the breach and made all the preliminary arrangements, even advancing some rupees(about $150 worth) for a man to go to Bombay to get the sound unit. It proved impossible to get it done in time for that date(May 28) and the PM then fixed this evening, which gave us time to work and get set up.

Bonner has gone south and I haven't seen him for a week, but if he had not fully coached me, supervised the estimates, told me how to make the program, etc.,etc., I don't suppose I could have done it at all. Remains to be seen how good it is---but I guess Nehru can carry it. We seem to have a very good, experienced crew.

What a strange world!

I hope you and Janet have a pleasant summer on the farm. I heard the other day(pretty good source) that the Chinese Communists are going to be more receptive to applications for visas in the autumn, if such applications are made to attend the tenth anniversary celebrations in Peking. They're going to put on a hell of a show. Just now(this summer) they're unlikely to relax. So my informant said. This might suit you, also John Gunther, although it's too late for my present contract. So far I haven't heard a word from Peking and from all I hear the chances are slim.

All best,

JVS

Los Angeles Times
202 WEST FIRST STREET
LOS ANGELES 53, CALIFORNIA

Shellaby, Bob
F.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Ave
New York City

Jan. 23, 1959

Dear Ed:

Thank you for your kind note. Please pass the enclosed along to Mr. Day.

Please do not take time from your great duties to acknowledge this fan letter, latest because of the Norfolk program of Wednesday night. My school teacher wife was even more "emocionante" than I was about it.

As ever

Bob

Robert V. Shellaby

Shellaby, Robert

September 26, 1958

Dear Bob:

Thanks very much for the dope on the navigation of the Nautilus. I hope to have time to discuss that very point with Commander Anderson and now I can appear to be unusually well-informed. Hope all goes on well in California. I envy you.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

Mr. Robert K. Shellaby
News Bureau, North American Aviation Inc.
International Airport
Los Angeles 45, California

North American Aviation, Inc. General Offices

• INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT, LOS ANGELES 45, CALIFORNIA

September 22, 1958

Personal

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Co.
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

Glad to see an unfurrowed Murrow on Sullivan's, last night. I had to move back to California to keep from developing furrows, which in my case would have run all the way back to my collar. As we passed through Washington State, it looked as good to me still as it must have to you.

Sorry I have forgotten the name of your staffer who asked me for help a while back, on dope on Puerto Rico, when I was doing chores for Pan American. Therefore I address you directly with the enclosed material, in case it may be of interest in connection with your visit to Commander Anderson of Nautilus.

As ever, the best, - particularly from my wife.

Cordially,

Bob

Robert K. Shellaby
Manager-News Bureau

RKS:rjc

Enc.

Sherman, John H.

7

Keep on file
Don't answer
If asks for - return it

707 North First Street
Rockford, Illinois
13 May 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C B S
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow

There is no reason at all why you should take your time to read this. As the world views importance, I have none, but you must have found often that Truth, being itself humble and simple, often derives from humble and simple sources.

For some years now I have observed that you are a man more than ordinarily concerned with the quest for Truth, asking for declarations of belief from all sides and presenting to the world recently the beautiful-souled Lady from Philadelphia with her powerful faith and great gifts of voice and of love. And so it is to you that I send my newly found understanding of the basis of all Truth. Iwarn you that it is simple, but please do not dismiss it for this reason.

This, Mr. Murrow, I not only believe -- This I Know. You are already aware that I am not a writer, but if God has seen fit to give to me along with this understanding the words to convey it to others, this may well be, as you have said, not 11:59, but 00:01.....

Yours sincerely,

Marilyn Sherman

(Mrs. John H. Sherman)

TO MRS. JOHN H. SHERMAN
707 NORTH FIRST STREET
ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS
(FIRST CLASS)

May 22, 1958

Mr. Murrow:

To me, personally, it doesn't matter if you decide to do the decent thing or not. As was shown in previous letter, I have no personal investment in or around Orange Lake, Florida.

I do not own a television set - have no desire to own one, and rarely ever take a look at a show. I did not see your coverage which apparently gave the Orange Lake area such a bad "eye" all over the U. S. and parts of Canada. Or, judging from the many reports coming into the section, and many of them brought here by people who are interested, it did this.

I have no idea how much your coverage gave to the area - in minutes run. I would assume that even three or five minutes run now, perhaps showing some of the spots covered previously and then showing present conditions, would undo some of the damage.

It is very easy to tear down. Building up is just a bit harder.

Personally, judging from the many reports I have heard, and one or two personal talks with folk who saw your prior coverage, I think common decency requires that your TV show try to make some amends.

It is entirely up to you and your staff.

N. G. Sherouse

N. G. SHEROUSE

EDWARD R. MURROW
485 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

May 7, 1958

Dear Mr. Sherouse:

Thank you for your recent letter with its interesting proposal.

The only program where we could possibly use your material would be on SEE IT NOW, and we are committed for the remainder of the current season.

We will be glad to keep your idea on file.

Sincerely,

Mr. N. G. Sherouse
Reddick, Florida

mcc

Sherouse, N. G.

May 7, 1958

Dear Mr. Sherouse:

Thank you for your recent letter with its interesting proposal.

The only program where we could possibly use your material would be on SEE IT NOW, and we are committed for the remainder of the current season.

We will be glad to keep your idea on file.

Sincerely,

Mr. N. G. Sherouse
Reddick, Florida

mcc

N. G. SHEROUSE
REDDICK
FLORIDA

April 10, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow: Re: Orange Lake, in Marion County, Florida

Somewhat more than a year ago this splendid fishing lake near me in north Marion County was given a lot of very bad publicity, because of the fact that after some ten years of near drought the western part of this lake, lying at Orange Lake (P. O.) station, was actually practically dry.

The lake itself, i.e. the larger body of the lake, was of course never dry and many fishermen continued to come there and enjoy their sport. However, there seems to have been one individual who apparently had the faculty of getting himself quoted in numerous media, and although he has considerable money invested in a fishing camp on the western side of the lake he always managed to give out views that, when published, simply stopped those fishermen from far away, including Georgia, the Carolinas, Alabama, etc. from coming here to fish. I recall one man who was passing thru and, for some reason, decided to see if the stories he had heard were actually true. Well, he wound up with having a good day of fishing, with a nice catch.

Along about a year ago, as I understand it, this lake of ours actually was covered in one of your television shows and that, really, put the button on. A couple of weeks ago I was talking to a man at Orange Lake who, apparently, gets around a lot for his fishing, etc. He told me that last summer he was up in Saskatchewan, Canada, about 800 miles north of the border, and people told him about Orange Lake, in Florida, having gone dry. There have been many similar reports from folk in northern U. S. who seem to have gotten their information from this television coverage of yours.

Let me make it quite clear that I have no financial stake in or around Orange Lake whatever. I do have friends who have their business there, including fishing camps, and those people now could use a little favorable publicity. The rains which we have been having have put the water level back to a good normal and even with the continued cold weather we have had, and cold water, some very good catches are being made in that part of the lake which, a couple of years ago, was pretty well dry.

How about doing a good turn, and send your cameras down for another look at his very popular fishing spot. I think you will then have some pictures which will be enjoyed by any fishing man.

Very truly yours,

N. G. Sherouse

Comparative readings from U. S. Geological Survey gauge at western side of Orange Lake

1/11/57	51.78	1/23/58	56.18
2/20/57	51.30	2/28/58	56.32
3/2/57	51.16	3/4/58	56.30
3/27/57	50.95	3/21/58	57.42
4/4/57	51.00	3/27/58	57.66

P. S. Announcement on radio this morning that a rain which began yesterday at noon has registered 2.23 inches of rainfall at Gainesville. Now, at 10:00 A. M. it is still raining, so - because there is a very large watershed running up to Gainesville for this Orange Lake and Lochloosa Lake area, the current readings should soon be even higher.

WA

Sherrod

March 16, 1959

Dear Bob:

There ain't a chance that I can write before my final show, which will be the beginning of July. After that, as Mr. Luce's publications are wont to say, "knows God".

I am off for London Saturday to shoot film for a couple of days with Field Marshal Montgomery, and then a quick trip to Paris and Berlin. Will make you a signal when I return.

As ever yours,

Mr. Robert Sherrod
The Saturday Evening Post
The Curtis Publishing Company
Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

EEM/hl

EDITORIAL ROOMS

THE SATURDAY
EVENING
POST
FOUNDED BY
Benj. Franklin

ROBERT SHERROD
MANAGING EDITOR

THE CURTIS
PUBLISHING COMPANY
PHILADELPHIA 5

February 20, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

Could you now do that piece for us? It would be nice to time its publication with your final show before you start your travels.

Maybe this would be a good time for me to accept your invitation to lunch. When's convenient? Would you prefer to take half a day off, come to Philadelphia and eat with me and Ben Hibbs and Bob Fuoss?

All good wishes,

Sincerely,

Bob

RS:vw

Sherrod, Bob
Ugh.

November 3, 1958

Mr. Robert Sherrod
The Saturday Evening Post
The Curtis Publishing Company
Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Dear Bob:

Thanks for your note. God knows when I will get around to even looking at that speech again, but I will have a try at it some time. Meanwhile, let's don't set any deadlines, or anything like that.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

EDITORIAL ROOMS

THE SATURDAY
EVENING
POST
FOUNDED BY
Benj. Franklin

ROBERT SHERROD
MANAGING EDITOR

THE CURTIS
PUBLISHING COMPANY
PHILADELPHIA 5

October 22, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

Thank you for calling this afternoon. I'm delighted that you are going ahead with the recasting of the Chicago speech. Frankly, we would have been pleased to run it with very little alteration, but I agree that the newspapers and magazines have taken a bit of the bloom off the rose by quoting long passages. I can understand that you would want to do some revising for a mass audience.

We'll hope that you can find the time soon. Meantime, I'll take you up on that luncheon invitation soon after the elections.

I know that such mundane things as money are never mentioned around broadcasting studios, so I'll say this only in passing: we had in mind paying you $3,000 for the article.

All good wishes,

Sincerely,

Bob

RS:vw

17 fl

RECEIVED
1958 OCT 17 PM 5:34
C B S TELETYPE ROOM N.Y.

WU023 PD
FAX PHILADELPHIA PENN OCT 17 154PME
EDWARD R MURROW

ITS AN EXCELLENT SPEECH AND WE WANT TO DO SOMETHING WITH IT PLEASE PHONE ME AT YOUR CONVENIENCE IF YOU ARE TOO BUSY TODAY MONDAY WOULD SUIT REGARDS
BOB SHERROD.
407PME.

October 14, 1958

Dear Bob:

Here is the copy you requested. It is to be done in Chicago on Wednesday of this week at about 9:00 p.m.

As ever yours,

Mr. Robert Sherrod
The Saturday Evening Post
The Curtis Publishing Company
Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

mcc

EDITORIAL ROOMS

THE SATURDAY EVENING
POST
FOUNDED BY
Benj. Franklin

ROBERT SHERROD
MANAGING EDITOR

THE CURTIS
PUBLISHING COMPANY
PHILADELPHIA 5

September 17, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

Thanks for your letter of September 11. We'll look for the copy of your speech and hope that it contains some ideas for us.

All good wishes,

Sincerely,

Bob Sherrod

RS:vw

upcoming

September 11, 1958

Mr. Robert Sherrod
The Saturday Evening Post
The Curtis Publishing Company
Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Dear Bob Sherrod:

Thanks for yours of September 5. Having long ago forgotten how to punctuate a sentence, I am flattered to be asked to write a piece for the Post. The fact of the matter is, I am committed to radio and television seven days a week and I see no chance of unburdening myself on the subject of television.

I have one tentative suggestion. I am now working on a speech for mid-October which I hope will say what I want to say, or rather what I am willing to say, about the news and public affairs end of television. When I get the rough draft finished, I will send it along to you on a personal basis and you can have a look at it and decide whether there is an idea in it worthy of being committed to print. I am afraid my superiors here won't feel that it has much merit. I will send it along in the next couple of weeks.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

EDITORIAL ROOMS

THE SATURDAY EVENING
POST
FOUNDED BY
Benj. Franklin

ROBERT SHERROD
MANAGING EDITOR

THE CURTIS
PUBLISHING COMPANY
PHILADELPHIA 5

September 5, 1958

Wednesday
5-6500

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

In the August 23 Evening Bulletin I read a Hollywood-datelined column by Hal Humphrey which contained this paragraph: "Putting Ed in a chair beside his ashtray and having him talk with personages (some great and some of dubious stature) may sell beer and sundry other items, but it is almost a total waste of his talents as a perceptive, dedicated and honest reporter. Also, those of his producer, Fred Friendly."

This prompts me to ask whether you would be interested in doing an article for us on the subject of television. A great deal has been written about the crossroads at which television now finds itself. I can't think of anyone better qualified to speak his own piece on the subject.

The article wouldn't necessarily be confined to the diminishing number of quality shows. We aren't particularly interested in kicking TV in the teeth because it caters to the taste of the masses (look who's talking!) But I'm simply wondering what you'd like to say on the subject of television. We've got the medium if you have the inclination.

I'd be glad to come to New York and talk to you on this subject if you are interested. I haven't seen you in person since Christmas-time, 1952, in the Tokyo Press Club, but I have, of course, seen you on the screen many times since then.

All good wishes,

Sincerely,

Bob Sherrod

RS:vw

Shotwell, James

March 19, 1959

Dear Jim:

Thanks for your gracious note.

I'm just off to London, Paris and Berlin on a quick trip, and will hope to see you when I get back.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. James T. Shotwell
President-Emeritus
Carnegie Endowment for International
Peace
United Nations Plaza at 46th Street
New York 17, New York

ERM:jmi

CARNEGIE ENDOWMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE
UNITED NATIONS PLAZA
AT 46TH STREET
NEW YORK 17, NEW YORK
CABLE ADDRESS INTERPAX
JAMES T. SHOTWELL
PRESIDENT-EMERITUS

257 West 86th St.
New York, March 14/59

Dear Ed,

I am glad you found use for my little story. I've always liked it. I've an idea the taxi-man did better than Shakspeare!

All best wishes

Jim

Your dramatic discription of the firing of Pioneer IV was breath-taking —

Shriber, Elsie

January 9, 1958

Dear Miss Shriber:

I have your letter of January 1st.

Since I have not seen John Ficher's Easy Chair Editorial in the current issue of Harper's Magazine, I do not know what you are referring to in your letter.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Elsie Shriber
Box 482
Boulder City, Nevada

mcc

Box 482,Boulder City,Nevada

January 1,1958

Mr.Edward R. Murrow

CBS Radio

New York,N.Y.

Dear Mr.Murrow;

Haven't seen article & therefore, don't know what you ~~to~~ referred to.

I read,and I am sure you have too,John Ficher's Easy Chair editorial in the current issue of Harper's Magazine.And I thought what a pity that it will not reach more people.You,who do things like that so well,and who reach so many people in your radio reports,why do you not build one of your reports around it?Do you not think it would be worth while?I hope you will consider it.

Very sincerely,

Elsie Shriber

Shryock, Jean

February 9, 1959

Dear Miss Shryock:

Thank you for your nice letter of January 21st and your kind comments on THE BUSINESS OF SEX.

The program brought forth a considerable volume of mail, most of it favorable.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Jean Shryock
160 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

mcc

160 East 48th street
New York 17
Apt. 9-A

January 21, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison avenue
New York 22

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Please add my name to all the others who would like to hear a rebroadcast of "The Business of Sex."

This must not have had much advance publicity, or I'd have made it a point to listen.

I phoned your office today, and was passed along to the producer's office, so my request is already on the record.

Best regards from a former newspaper woman, now doing my best to tie in with your network somewhere in the news department. I assure you I can do a job.

Sincerely,

Jean Shryock

Jean Shryock

Shulenburg, Frank

April 20, 1959

Dear Mr. Shulenburg:

I have your letter telling me about your very interesting collection. It was nice of you to enclose your pictures.

Unfortunately, they may be misplaced if they are kept in our office. Therefore, I am returning them to you with thanks.

Sincerely,

Mr. Frank C. Shulenburg
1806 17th Street, N. E.
Hickory, North Carolina

mcc

Thanks.

1806-17th St. N.E.
Hickory N.C.
phone No- DA. 45938

Dear Sir:

I am sending a few pictures which I found in Germany during World war two. These are a part of 180 pictures I have which all are different Half of them are large + the others are small pictures.

Was wondering if you would have some use for them, or if you know of some one who might, someone like a Writer or a Collector who would be in business for that sort of pictures.

They are very interesting and I believe they may be a Collector's item. If in no way, you may not have use for them or know of no one who could use them. please return them to address as given, as I am enclosing fifty cents (.50) for their return

yours Truely
Frank C. Shulenburg
1806-17th St. N.E
Hickory, N.C.

Shuman, Howard

December 18, 1958

Mr. Howard E. Shuman
Legislative Assistant to Senator Paul H. Douglas
United States Senate
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Shuman:

Mr. Murrow has asked me to thank you for your courtesy in sending him your article "Senate Rules and the Civil Rights Bill". It will be very useful background material.

Sincerely yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

J. W. FULBRIGHT, ARK., CHAIRMAN
A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, VA.
JOHN SPARKMAN, ALA.
J. ALLEN FREAR, JR., DEL.
PAUL H. DOUGLAS, ILL.
A. S. MIKE MONRONEY, OKLA.
JOSEPH S. CLARK, PA.
WILLIAM PROXMIRE, WIS.
HOMER E. CAPEHART, IND.
JOHN W. BRICKER, OHIO
WALLACE F. BENNETT, UTAH
PRESCOTT BUSH, CONN.
J. GLENN BEALL, MD.
FREDERICK G. PAYNE, MAINE
CLIFFORD P. CASE, N. J.

J. H. YINGLING, CHIEF CLERK
ROBERT A. WALLACE, STAFF DIRECTOR

United States Senate

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

December 15, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS News
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am sending you a copy of an article, "Senate Rules and the Civil Rights bill" which I wrote for the American Political Science Review of December, 1957.

Although the article is detailed, and perhaps too complex for general interest, it may be useful to you as background material on the question of the Senate filibuster rule, and any civil rights action by the 86th Congress which is in large part dependent on what happens to Rule 22.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Howard E. Shuman

Howard E. Shuman
Legislative Assistant to Senator Paul H. Douglas

HES:bd

enclosure

SENATE RULES AND THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL:

A CASE STUDY

HOWARD E. SHUMAN
Washington, D. C.

The rules of the Senate of the United States are only 40 in number and comprise only 49 of the 832 pages of the Senate Manual. Yet, when literally invoked they can bring Senate business to a standstill. They are most often ignored or circumvented by unanimous consent in order that the Senate may operate conveniently as a deliberative and parliamentary body. To pass legislation when they are invoked is a formidable enterprise.

Just as the law is said to be no better than the procedures by which it is carried out, so the substance of legislation is shaped and modified by the procedures that may be required under the Senate rules, or by the mere threat to invoke those procedures, for they are compelling. The procedures preceding and surrounding the passage of the first civil rights bill in over 80 years illumine and illustrate the effect of the rules on the substance of legislation as have few other legislative controversies in recent years.

The Senate rules are the product of sectionalism. They were designed to prevent action unacceptable to a sectional minority. Among the more important specific rules with this design are: sections 2 and 3 of Rule XXII—the filibuster rule; section 1 of Rule XXII, which makes a tabling motion not debatable and which, therefore, acts as a "negative" form of majority cloture for, if successful, it can stop talk and kill a bill or amendment without a vote on the merits;[1] Rule XXVI, which requires that all reports and motions to discharge a committee of a bill must lie over one legislative day—in practice this can mean several weeks if the Senate recesses from day to day rather than adjourns; Rule XL which requires one (legislative) day's notice to suspend the rules; Rule VII, which requires that a petition to discharge a committee be filed in the so-called morning hour, except by unanimous consent; and the same Rule VII which when literally followed requires the reading of the Journal in full, the presentation of messages from the President and reports and communications from executive departments, and numerous other time-consuming procedures in the morning hour, and so may preclude the opportunity for discharge petitions to be reached, for at the close of that hour the Senate must proceed to the unfinished or pending business; and two unwritten rules, first, of seniority, and second, the rule of recognition under which the chair recognizes either the Majority or Minority Leader as against other Senators who are seeking recognition. This can prevent a Senator from making a timely motion or point of order to which the leadership is opposed and so helps give the leadership command of the parliamentary situation.

[1] The Senate has no similar form of "majority" cloture which could end debate and bring a vote on the substance of a bill or an amendment.

How these rules affected the course of the civil rights debate and the strategy of both sides in the 1956 and 1957 sessions is now to be shown.

I. THE ABORTIVE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL OF 1956

With only a few days of the 84th Congress remaining in July, 1956, the House of Representatives, by a margin of 279 to 126, passed H.R. 627, a bill substantially the same as H.R. 6127 of the 85th Congress, part of which is now the law of the land. A small band composed of Senators Hennings, Douglas, and Lehman and finally supported by Senators Langer, Ives, and Bender, attempted to gain Senate action on the bill when it came from the House. This move was made notwithstanding the determined opposition of both Majority and Minority Leaders which, in the end, proved crushing.

Senator Douglas was guarding the Senate floor as the House passed the bill, and left his seat to go to the House chamber to escort H.R. 627 through the long corridor from the Speaker's to the Vice President's desk. As he was walking to the House he was passed, unknowing, by a messenger carrying the bill to the Senate. With Senator Douglas outside the Senate chamber and with Senator Hill of Alabama in the chair, the bill, with jet-age speed, was read a first and second time and referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee where its Senate counterparts had languished for two years.

This action took place by unanimous consent and so by-passed the specific provisions of Rule XIV, which require three readings of a bill prior to passage, "Which [readings] shall be on three different days," but state that bills from the House of Representatives ". . . shall be read once, and may be read twice, on the same day, if not objected to, for reference. . . ."

An attempt was then made under Rule XXVI, section 2, to file a petition to discharge the Judiciary Committee from the further consideration of H.R. 627. Except by unanimous consent the petition must be introduced in the morning hour.

On the same calendar day the bill came from the House a unanimous consent request to file the petition was blocked by a motion of the Majority Leader to recess overnight. At the beginning of the next day's session, in what would ordinarily have been the morning hour, the Senator from Georgia, Mr. George, ruled that the petition could not be filed, except by unanimous consent, for the Senate had recessed the previous evening and, in fact, had not adjourned since the evening of July 13, i.e., 10 days previously. Although the date was then July 24, the legislative day was July 16, and thus technically there was no morning hour for the routine business of filing bills, reports, petitions, etc. Individual Senators then objected to further unanimous consent requests to file the petition. The Senate recessed that day and did not adjourn overnight until July 26, the evening before adjournment sine die. In the meantime a motion by Senator Douglas to adjourn for five minutes, in order to bring a new legislative day and a morning hour, was defeated by the crushing vote of 76 to 6.

In the morning hour on the last day of the session, the discharge petition was finally filed. But a discharge petition, under section 2 of Rule XXVI, must lie over one further "legislative" day. If consideration of the petition is not reached or is not concluded in the morning hour or before 2 o'clock on the next "legislative" day, it goes to the calendar. Then the motion to proceed to its consideration and the motion on passage of the petition are both subject to unlimited debate, unless cloture is applied to each. Such action, even if successful, would only result in placing the bill itself on the calendar, where it in turn must lie for another "legislative" day. The motion to proceed to its consideration and the motion on final passage are also both subject to unlimited debate, unless cloture is applied. Thus the filing of the petition came too late to bring action in the 84th Congress. Even if commenced at the beginning of a session, and even if 64 votes were obtainable for cloture on each of the four occasions when they are potentially necessary, the process of discharging a committee can be drawn out over several weeks, and even months, if the rules of the Senate are literally invoked.

Although this attempt was abortive the experience was useful to the civil rights proponents in 1957. It brought a familiarity with the rules of the Senate which can only be gained from step-by-step proceedings under them; from it they concluded that action must begin very early in the session if it were to be successful; they saw that the route of discharging a committee meant meeting countless roadblocks, which could only be stormed and surmounted by determined efforts and with overwhelming bi-partisan support; and they concluded that a fight to change Rule XXII was essential because the inadequacy of cloture had either killed previous civil rights bills or brought their death by the mere threat of a filibuster.[2]

II. THE FIGHT TO CHANGE RULE XXII

The effort to change Rule XXII was made at the opening of the 85th Congress in January 1957. In the past Rule XXII has been the gravedigger in the Senate graveyard for civil rights bills. Section 2 of Rule XXII requires 64 affirmative votes to limit debate and section 3 provides that on a motion to proceed to the consideration of a change in the rules there can be no limit on debate of any kind. The rules of the Senate have carried over from Congress to Congress and changes in them have been made only after a unanimous consent agreement has been reached narrowly limiting the language and amendments which could come before the Senate.

Because of section 3, the only chance of success seemed to lie in a move at the beginning of a Congress that the Senate proceed to adopt new rules, relying on Article I, Section 5 of the Constitution which provides that ". . . each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." Such a motion was made in 1953 and was defeated by a vote of 70 to 21. Its opponents argued then that a civil rights bill would be passed, and that the rules should be changed only by ordinary processes of piecemeal amendment.

[2] Since 1917, or for 40 years, cloture has been successful on only four of twenty-two attempts and never on a civil rights bill. Sixty-four votes have been forthcoming only three times, all in the period 1917 to 1927. Thus, no cloture motion has successfully prevailed in the last 30 years.

In 1957 the vote to table the motion to proceed to the consideration of new rules was carried, 55 to 38. Three absentees, Senators Neely and Wiley, and Javits, who had not yet taken his seat, opposed tabling and so brought to 41 the total who favored adopting new rules. Thus a shift of seven votes, plus a Vice President's favorable vote or ruling, was all that was now required to change Rule XXII. This was a major gain over 1953, for these 41 votes were obtained over the concerted objections of the leadership of both parties.

The size of the vote and its near success caught Southern Senators on the horns of a dilemma. They knew that any actual and organized use of the filibuster would ultimately bring an end to Rule XXII, and they also knew that if they did not use the filibuster Congress would most likely pass a civil rights bill. The fight to change Rule XXII thereby produced a climate in which not only a meaningful bill could pass but, it can be persuasively argued, a bill much stronger than that which was actually passed. The arguments and the parliamentary strategy involved in the Rule XXII fight were therefore crucial.

The opponents of the change relied basically on a single argument, namely, that the Senate was a continuing body, and as two-thirds of its members carry over from Congress to Congress, its rules should therefore also carry over from Congress to Congress as they have in the past.

The proponents argued that whatever the Senate had done in the past it had explicit constitutional power to adopt its rules at the beginning of a new Congress. Unlike their course in 1953, when the attempt to adopt new rules was hastily devised, the proponents did not meet the continuing body argument head on, but argued instead that it was immaterial whether the Senate was a continuing body or not. Acceptance of the continuing body argument did not deny to a majority of the Senate the right to adopt its own rules. Proponents also argued that proceedings on all bills and resolutions, as well as on treaties, begin again in a new Congress; that the Senate is newly organized and new committees are appointed; and that the newly elected one-third, even though only one-third, could alter the party alignment and thus provide a new majority and a new mandate which it had the right to carry out.

A second argument by the opponents, less used but probably more telling than the first, was that until the adoption of new rules the Senate would be in a parliamentary "jungle." Senator Russell combined with this argument a threat to proceed to rewrite each of the 40 rules of the Senate.

In rejoinder the proponents argued that the House of Representatives entered and left the parliamentary "jungle" in a very few minutes at each new Congress. They proposed that until the rules were adopted the Senate should proceed under general parliamentary rules including the motion for the previous question under which debate could be shut off by a simple majority. The proponents also relied on the precedents of the Senate to support the contention that majority cloture could be applied, for it was shown that the previous question rule was a part of the Senate rules from 1789 to 1806 and was used to bring debate to a close on several occasions.

The potential parliamentary moves were extremely involved, but basically the proponents sought to gain a ruling from the Vice President that their motion to proceed to the immediate consideration of the adoption of new rules was in order. This was their strongest position but, in the end, it was not gained.

It was their strongest position for a variety of reasons. To succeed, strong bipartisan support was needed. The Democratic Party, by its nature, was split on the issue and could not provide a majority of votes. This was true even though the Democrats have traditionally supplied more votes on procedural issues in support of civil rights, and occasionally more on substantive civil rights issues, then the Republicans. In 1953, of the 21 votes for the adoption of new rules, 15 were Democratic. Only 5 Republicans and Wayne Morse, then an independent, voted for the change. That year Vice President Barkley let it be known that he would rule such a motion in order. But he had no opportunity to do so for Senator Taft gained the floor and gave immediate and prearranged notice that he would move to table the motion and thus shut off argument after a short debate. In 1957 with a Republican Vice President and with Republican votes needed to win, it was obvious that the strongest position would follow from a favorable ruling by the Vice President, and on the vote to uphold or overturn his ruling. The Democrats could provide no more than half of their numbers in support of such a favorable ruling. But the Republicans could provide, potentially, almost all of their votes if the issue were one of supporting their own Vice President.

In 1953 it mattered little whether the motion to proceed to the adoption of new rules were tabled, or whether a point of order were made and a ruling sought, for there would still have been a limit to the number of potential Democratic votes on this issue in support of a Democratic Vice President. The Republicans were obviously under no political pressure to support the ruling of a Democratic Vice President who was to leave office in a very few days.

In 1957 it was a different matter. Whether the vote came on a motion to table or on an appeal from the ruling of the Chair was critically important. If a Republican Vice President now ruled favorably, he would no doubt be supported by more than a majority of his own party which, combined with the Democratic support, could provide the winning margin. The proponent group knew that they would make gains over 1953 however the Vice President ruled, but if he ruled for them there was an opportunity for spectacular gains and perhaps a victory.

The strategy was therefore devised that the mover of the motion to proceed to the consideration of new rules for the Senate should also couple with his motion a parliamentary request for a ruling from the Chair that the motion was in order. If this were not done a motion to table would no doubt be made, thereby cutting off debate and bringing an immediate vote. The proponents of a change in Rule XXII not only had more to gain from a ruling from the Chair but also felt that time for debate, which could educate and arouse public opinion, was necessary to the success of the effort. A steering committee representing those who favored adoption of the new rules therefore met with the Vice President to advise him of their proposed course of action. They did not seek nor did they receive the Vice President's opinion as to the merits of their proposal.

They were advised, however, that the Majority Leader had informed the Vice President that immediately following the motion to proceed to the consideration of new rules he would seek recognition for the purpose of tabling that motion. The Vice President then gave his opinion that under the precedents of the Senate a point of order could not be coupled with the substantive motion, and that under the unwritten rule of recognition he must recognize the Majority Leader as against some other Senator seeking the floor. This meant, of course, that once the motion was made the Majority Leader would be recognized to move to table that motion and thereby shut off debate before any other Senator, including the mover of the motion, could raise a point of order.

The unwritten rule of recognition thus brought the vote on the issue of Rule XXII on the least advantageous grounds for the proponents of new rules and an end to the filibuster. It was, however, very ironic that the proponents of unlimited debate should immediately move to shut off debate on the question of changing Senate Rule XXII which, in effect, provides for unlimited debate. Recognition of this anomaly led to a unanimous consent agreement which fixed a limited time for debate on the tabling motion. When the motion to proceed to the consideration of new rules was made, consequently, and was sent to the desk and read by the clerk, the Majority Leader sought and gained recognition. He proposed to table the motion which, but for the unanimous consent agreement, would have cut off debate immediately; as it was, debate was limited and the issue came to a vote as had been planned.

In the course of these events the Vice President gave it as his informal opinion, though not as a formal ruling, (1) that a majority of the Senate could adopt new rules at the beginning of a new Congress if it wished; (2) that Section 3 of Rule XXII was unconstitutional for it allowed a previous Senate to bind a majority of a future Senate;[3] and (3) that until such time as the Senate either adopted new rules or by some action, such as the tabling motion, acquiesced in the old rules, the Senate would proceed under its previous rules except for those which could deny a majority of the Senate the right or opportunity to adopt new ones, or, in short, sections 2 and 3 of Rule XXII.

Thus, the unwritten rule of recognition and the use of the tabling motion as a negative form of majority cloture, not available to the proponents of a motion, bill, or amendment, were decisive parliamentary weapons in the fight over Rule XXII and the filibuster.

Although the fight was lost it nevertheless brought several clear gains to the proponents of the civil rights bill and of majority rule, apart from the dilemma of the Southern Senators over their future use of the filibuster. First, rhetorically, it foreshadowed the end of the effectiveness of the argument that the Senate is a continuing body with necessarily continuing rules. The debate showed it to be irrelevant as well as circuitous to argue that the rules carry over because the Senate is a continuing body, and that the Senate is a continuing body because the rules carry over. Second, substantively, the episode brought clear bi-partisan gains over 1953; the Democratic vote increased from 15 to 21, and the Republican from 5 to 17. While the press was predicting an overwhelming defeat for the 1957 effort those close to the scene estimated quite accurately that approximately 40 would support the motion to proceed to the adoption of new rules. Third, tactically, this fight gave a political urgency to civil rights legislation which it might not otherwise have had, and improved immeasurably the chances for a meaningful bill.

[3] It has been asked why, if the Vice President believed section 3 was unconstitutional, Senators did not press the issue later in the session. The answer is that the Vice President's position was that it was unconstitutional to the extent that it bound one Senate by the actions of a previous Senate. However, if the new Senate agreed to be bound, i.e., acquiesced in the old rules as it did when the tabling motion was successful, section 3 would remain in effect throughout the 85th Congress.

III. FILIBUSTER BY COMMITTEE

H.R. 6127 passed the House on June 18, 1957. In the Senate its companion bill, as well as some 15 other civil rights bills, still had not been acted on by the Judiciary Committee.

This inaction followed precedent. In the 83d Congress four civil rights bills were reported from the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights to the full Judiciary Committee, where they died. In the 84th Congress, the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee reported three bills on February 23, 1956 and a fourth bill on March 4, 1956, to the full Judiciary Committee; but they too died following 10 days of hearings by the full committee spread over the 11-week period from April 24 to July 13. In the 85th Congress, after every legitimate attempt by Senator Hennings and his colleagues to gain action on the bills, not one was reported to the Senate during the entire session. A chronology of the efforts to report a bill to the Senate will show how filibuster by committee takes place.

A number of civil rights bills were introduced during the first days of the session. On January 22, Senator Hennings moved in committee that February 18 be set as the deadline for ending hearings on them and that a vote on the legislation and the reporting of a bill to the Senate should not be delayed beyond one further week. This motion was not acted on.

Four days later, on January 26, the 14 bills by then in committee were referred to the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee.

On January 30 Senator Hennings, the chairman, presented an omnibus bill to the subcommittee and moved that it be reported to the full committee. The motion was defeated.

The subcommittee then agreed to hold hearings and Senator Hennings moved that these should begin on February 12 and be limited to two weeks, after which the subcommittee should act on the bills immediately. This motion was defeated.

Hearings by the subcommittee did begin on February 14 and ended after three weeks on March 5. On March 19, the subcommittee approved S. 83 and reported it, along with majority and minority views, to the full committee.

On March 21, Senator Hennings introduced S. 1658; its language was identical with that of H.R. 6127.

On April 1, in the full committee, Senator Hennings moved that the Judiciary Committee dispose of civil rights legislation by April 15. He was unable to obtain a vote on this motion.

On April 8, Senator Hennings intended to renew his motion, but there was no meeting of the committee owing to the absence of a quorum.

On April 15, Senator Hennings moved that S. 83 be voted on by May 6. The committee took no action.

On May 13, at the next meeting, Senator Hennings desired to move that the committee meet every morning and all day, when the rules of the Senate permitted, and in the evenings if necessary, so that a vote on the bill could be taken by May 16. He was unable to obtain recognition to make this motion.

On June 3, the committee added the sweeping "jury trial" amendment to the bill.

On June 10 and June 17, Senator Hennings was unable to gain recognition during committee meetings.

On June 18 the House passed H.R. 6127 and it was sent to the Senate.

How was it possible for the Judiciary Committee, which contained only a minority of Southern Senators, to delay action on civil rights for such a lengthy period of time? Under Section 134 (c) of the Legislative Reorganization Act, "No standing committee of the Senate . . . shall sit, without special leave, while the Senate . . . is in session." Under Section 133 (a) of the same Act, each standing committee is required to fix a regular day on which to meet. The regular meeting day of the Senate Judiciary Committee is Monday. While the Senate is often in recess on other days of the week, it is invariably in session on Monday, because that day is set for the call of the calendar of unobjected-to bills, and because the Constitution provides that neither House may adjourn for more than three days without the consent of the other. Consequently, when the hour of 12 noon arrives or when, as in the latter stages of the session the Senate meets at an earlier hour, any member of the Judiciary Committee may make a point of order that the Committee may no longer sit. This was done, and was one means of postponing action.

In addition, by the chairman's power to recognize an opponent first, and by his power to hold off a vote on a motion until such a member has concluded his remarks on it, it was easy for the chairman either to prevent a motion from being offered or to prevent action on a specific bill during the Committee's normal two-hour meeting. Further, the unwritten rule of seniority has generally placed a Southern Senator in the chair when the Democratic Party controls Congress. While Rule XXIV reads that ". . . the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee. . .", this rule was not enforced either when Senator Eastland was first appointed chairman, on the death of Senator Kilgore, or at the beginning of the 85th Congress when he was reappointed. There was neither a ballot nor a motion to "order otherwise." Finally, on several Mondays it was impossible to muster a quorum.

IV. PLACING H.R. 6127 ON THE SENATE CALENDAR

Faced with this situation, a small group of pro-civil-rights Democratic Senators met a few days prior to the passage of H.R. 6127 by the House of Representatives, to determine on a course of action when that bill arrived in the Senate.

Several possibilities were canvassed. These included: (1) moving to send H.R. 6127 to the Judiciary Committee with instructions to report it to the Senate on a specific date; (2) allowing H.R. 6127 to go to Committee but moving to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration either of that bill or of one of several of the Senate bills; (3) moving to suspend the rules under Rule XL in order to place H.R. 6127 on the calendar; and (4) moving to place the bill on the calendar under Rule XIV.

After consultation with the Senate Parliamentarian the group ruled out the first possibility, of sending the bill to committee with instructions to report it to the Senate on a day certain. Such instructions may be added to a motion to refer or to commit only when the bill itself has been motioned up and is actually before the Senate. Before the bill could come before the Senate it had first to be placed on the calendar, and then to be motioned up. Such a motion is subject to unlimited debate unless cloture is applied. This procedure was therefore evidently impossible, notwithstanding later statements by Senator Morse who, in justifying his opposition to placing the bill directly on the calendar, asserted that instructions to report the bill on a day certain could have been added after the second reading.

Similarly, as we have already seen, the method of discharging a committee is lengthy, and was probably impossible for legislation as controversial as a civil rights bill. More specifically, the steps involved in this procedure include:

1. Filing a discharge petition during the morning hour.
2. A successful motion to adjourn so that a new legislative day may arrive.
3. Reaching the petition during the morning hour, in which case it would go to the foot of the calendar if debate were not concluded in two hours; or, if it was not reached in the morning hour, motioning it up at a later stage.
4. Moving to proceed to consideration of the petition, after it has reached the calendar, and after one legislative day has elapsed (which requires an intervening adjournment), when such a motion becomes in order.
5. Securing a vote on this motion, which is debatable and requires either unanimous consent or cloture and 64 affirmative votes to bring the debate to an end. Passage of this procedural motion requires only a simple majority.
6. Securing a vote on the next motion, to agree to the petition to discharge the committee. This motion too is debatable and requires cloture.
7. Placing the bill, now discharged from committee, at the foot of the Rule VIII calendar, which follows automatically if the previous steps are successful. It must remain there for another legislative day, which requires another successful motion to adjourn in order to reach a new legislative day.

8. Moving to proceed to consideration of the bill and securing a vote on this motion, which is by now in order, is debatable, requires cloture to end debate, and a simple majority for passage.
9. Moving to agree to the bill and securing a vote on it, after all amendments have been dealt with; this again is debatable and requires cloture.

In the face of determined opposition, and without the help of the party leadership, the procedures outlined here would take a minimum of five to eight weeks even if there were 64 votes in support of action at every stage, which was by no means certain. The group therefore determined that the route of discharging the Judiciary Committee was impractical; indeed, that the votes and physical endurance necessary to break four successive potential filibusters made it impossible.

Suspending the rules of the Senate in order to place the House-passed bill on the calendar was also considered. This procedure is no near cousin of the method of moving to suspend the rules and pass the bill, which is a short-cut frequently used in the House of Representatives and common in state legislatures, where with the backing of the party leadership and a disciplined two-thirds vote at hand an opposition minority can be steam-rollered. In the Senate version it has the advantage merely of reducing from four to three the number of potential filibusters and cloture motions to be met.[4] On the other hand, in comparison with the discharge procedure, it has two immediate drawbacks. First, because the tradition that all matters, unless by unanimous consent, should go to a committee before floor action is rightly very strong, suspension of the rules is open to the charge of by-passing the committee; the discharge procedure at least makes a gesture of giving the committee a chance to act. Second, because the suspension procedure has been so rarely used, it is open also to the charge of novelty in procedure—an unorthodox means of gaining an unorthodox end. The steering group of civil rights senators therefore discarded this alternative, and in fact concluded that if a choice had to be made between the two, the discharge route was preferable.

[4] The steps involved in suspending the rules in order to place the bill on the calendar run as follows: (1) When the bill arrives from the House, either a motion that it be laid before the Senate, or a wait until the presiding officer laid it before the Senate in order to object to the second reading of the bill on the same day. (2) Simultaneously giving notice of an intention to move to suspend the rules, and reading or placing in the Record the terms of the motion. (3) Gaining an adjournment to bring a new legislative day. (4) On the new legislative day and after the reading of the Journal, either calling up the motion to suspend the rules, or waiting until the presiding officer laid the bill before the Senate for a second reading. At this time, and prior to the customary referral to committee, gaining recognition to prevent such a reference by calling up the motion to suspend the rules. Since no motion to proceed to the consideration of that motion would be necessary, one potential filibuster is avoided at this point. (5) Securing a vote on the motion to suspend the rules, which is debatable and would require cloture to stop a filibuster. An affirmative two-thirds vote of those present and voting on this motion would send the bill to the calendar. (6) From this stage on the procedure is the same as with the discharge method—an adjournment to bring a new legislative day, when a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill would be in order; a vote on this motion, which is debatable and would require cloture; disposition of amendments and a vote on final passage, which again is debatable and would require cloture.

Finally, the possibility of placing the House-passed bill on the calendar under Rule XIV was canvassed. The relevant parts of Rule XIV read as follows:

> No bill or joint resolution shall be committed or amended until it shall have been twice read, after which it may be referred to a committee; bills and joint resolutions introduced on leave, and bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives, shall be read once, and may be read twice, on the same day, if not objected to, for reference, but shall not be considered on that day nor debated, except for reference, unless by unanimous consent. (Section 3, emphasis added.)

> Every bill and joint resolution reported from a committee, not having previously been read, shall be read once, and twice, if not objected to, on the same day, and placed on the Calendar in the order in which the same may be reported; and every bill and joint resolution introduced on leave, and every bill and joint resolution of the House of Representatives which shall have received a first and second reading without being referred to a committee, shall, if objection be made to further proceeding thereon, be placed on the Calendar. (Section 4, emphasis added.)

Although infrequently used, this seemed to be a relatively simple and direct method of placing the House-passed bill on the calendar. If it could be attacked for by-passing the committee, it was nevertheless a well settled part of the rules of the Senate; and, compared with many rules, its meaning appeared to be crystal clear. On that count it was therefore preferable to suspending the rules. And although perhaps less orthodox than discharging the committee, it reduced the potential number of filibusters in finally passing the bill from four to two. It was decided, therefore, that this method had the best, and perhaps the only, chance of success.

On June 14, following press reports that a group of Republican senators, including their leadership, were also considering using Rule XIV to place the bill on the calendar, a group of 15 Democratic liberals issued a statement in which they (1) urged the Judiciary Committee to report out a bill promptly, (2) stated that, while they preferred to act on a Senate bill, if a Senate bill were not reported they would join and cooperate with any other senator or groups of senators on either side of the aisle who wished to place the House bill on the calendar under Rule XIV, (3) gave formal notice of their intention to do so to the leadership and whips on both sides of the aisle, to the Parliamentarian, and to all other Senators, and (4) gave notice that they would not give unanimous consent to any motion to refer the House-passed bill to committee and formally requested that they be notified before the bill was laid before the Senate or referred, so that they might be in their places to ask certain parliamentary questions or to make certain motions. This last request grew out of the experience in 1956, when the House-passed bill was referred to committee while interested Senators were not on the floor. A further important reason for giving notice was that bills from the House as well as bills introduced in the Senate are ordinarily, for the convenience of all, read perfunctorily, not actually laid down by the presiding officer, and automatically referred to committee. Even when a bill is actually laid before the Senate, this can be done at any time and while the floor is unguarded, for under section 7 of Rule VII,

The Presiding Officer may at any time lay, and it shall be in order at any time for a Senator to move to lay, before the Senate, any bill or other matter sent to the Senate by the President or the House of Representatives, and any question pending at that time shall be suspended for this purpose. Any motion so made shall be determined without debate.

Thus with a senator who opposed civil rights in the chair, another senator could move to, or the chair without a motion could, lay the House bill before the Senate and have it referred before another senator could gain recognition to object.

Certain precautionary steps were therefore taken. The first was to try to make certain that a senator in sympathy with the move to place the bill on the calendar, or the Vice President, would be in the chair when the bill arrived at the desk. Teams of senators were organized to guard the floor at all times. Arrangements were made with House members to notify key senators of the step-by-step actions on the bill in the House. Further, it was publicly pointed out that when the bill arrived the Senate would be in executive session considering the Atomic Energy Treaty, and hence that the bill would remain in limbo at the desk until the Senate moved back into legislative session. As the Senate can move back and forth from legislative to executive session by a simple unanimous consent request, attention was called to this fact so that senators would not lower their guard and stay off the floor during executive sessions under the mistaken impression that no action on the bill could be taken. Sheets of instructions were issued to the Democratic senators in sympathy with the move, in which parliamentary details were outlined; these instructed them to object to any attempt to read the bill a second time or to refer it, and to call for a quorum when in doubt. As a result, the rights of individual senators were protected as they had not been in 1956. Agreements were entered into at almost every stage for a specific time when action would take place and motions would be made, so that the rights of each senator could be asserted.

H.R. 6127 was laid before the Senate on June 19. It was read a first time, after which Senator Russell asked unanimous consent that it be read a second time on that day. Objections were heard from Senators Knowland and Douglas.

At this time Senator Russell argued that Rule XXV took precedence over Rule XIV. He claimed that following the procedures under Rule XIV would ". . . throw out the window the laws, the rules, and the Constitution in order to get at 'these infernal southerners' in a hurry." His major argument rested on the premise that the changes made in the rules by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 superseded other rules with which they were inconsistent. In his view the language of Rule XXV, which enumerates the subject matter over which specific committees have jurisdiction, was in conflict with Rule XIV and therefore took precedence over that rule. He quoted Section 101 (a) of the Reorganization Act which reads, in part, ". . . such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith," and Section (k) of Rule XXV which reads:

Committee on the Judiciary, to consist of fifteen Senators, to which shall be referred all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the following subjects. (Emphasis added.)

A list of subjects then follows, including "civil liberties." Senator Russell urged specifically that the phrase "shall be referred" is mandatory and superseded sections 3 and 4 of Rule XIV.

The proponents of the move argued that nothing could be clearer than the language of Rule XIV; that Rule XXV was not mandatory concerning referral but merely a specification of the subject matter over which each committee had jurisdiction; that the history of the Legislative Reorganization Act showed this to be true; that there were numerous examples of House bills going directly to the calendar both by precedent and under Rule XIV; and that the phrase "shall be referred," should not now be construed as mandatory when it had not been so on hundreds of other occasions.[5]

Development of the argument brought out examples of House-passed bills which were automatically placed on the Senate calendar when a Senate companion bill was already on the Senate calendar, and examples of a House-passed bill placed on the calendar prior to the Senate bill being placed there, when it was known that a Senate bill would soon be reported. Further, although this point was not made on the floor, it is well known that, especially on the last day of a session, numerous House-passed bills are motioned up on the floor of the Senate when there are no Senate companion bills. There have even been examples of the bill clerk officially referring a bill to a committee and entering that referral in the Journal, only to find that the House bill is motioned up and passed in the last few hours before adjournment. In such cases the Journal has been corrected after the fact to show that the bill was sent to the calendar, in order to be there legitimately when motioned up. These examples added considerable weight to the argument that the phrase "shall be referred" in Rule XXV was by no means mandatory. Since these bills were sent to the calendar by a private decision of the Vice President or his agent, it was argued that what one man could do in camera under the precedents a majority of the Senate could do openly under the provisions of a specific rule.

[5] There were only a few examples of a bill going to the calendar under Rule XIV prior to 1946. Since then procedures under this rule were followed once on May 3, 1948 when Senator Downey of California objected after second reading to further proceedings on the Tidelands Oil bill, which then went directly to the calendar. Immediately following that action and on the same day Senator Fulbright attempted to do the same thing to the oleomargarine tax repeal bill. However, the chair (then the President pro-tempore, Mr. Vandenberg) had first recognized Senator Wherry, who raised the issue of committee jurisdiction before Senator Fulbright made his objection. In a series of parliamentary questions and votes the bill eventually went to committee, but it is quite clear from a thorough reading of that incident that it did not conflict with Senator Downey's action. Senator Vandenberg stated not only that it did not conflict but that the issue turned finally " . . . upon the pure question as to who is first recognized by the Chair to assert his rights under these conflicting rules." He said specifically:

There is no collision whatever between the precedent of yesterday and the precedent of today. . . . It is the view of the Chair that the question of precedence in a case of this character depends entirely on who raises the point first. Since the question of jurisdiction has been raised first it is the view of the Chair that the question of jurisdiction takes priority.

On June 20, Senator Knowland objected to the "further proceeding thereon" immediately after H.R. 6127 was read a second time. Senator Russell raised the point of order that Rule XXV took precedence; and debate on this point, which is not debatable except at the pleasure of the Chair, took place for several hours. One problem concerning the use of Rule XIV bothered some Senators, namely, that a "single" Senator, by objection, could prevent a bill going to committee. The proponents of the move argued that while such a case might theoretically arise, there would no doubt, on an issue of such importance as a civil rights bill, be a point of order, such as Senator Russell raised; and that a majority of the Senate would, in fact, decide whether the bill should go to the calendar or to the committee.

Senator Case of New Jersey was particularly concerned about a single Senator's objection sending the bill to the calendar, and felt that greater support for the move could be obtained if some method were found to decide the issue more directly by majority vote. He proposed that, after the second reading, a motion rather than an objection should be made, to send the bill to the calendar. He had numerous discussions with the Vice President on this point and prepared a detailed memorandum outlining his views. The Vice President's opinion on the Russell point of order reflects, to a considerable extent, these original views of Senator Case.

The leaders of the liberal Democratic group, while sympathizing with Senator Case's position, believed that if a specific motion were made to place the bill on the calendar following the second reading, rather than an objection by a single Senator under Rule XIV, such a motion would be debatable and hence would require 64 affirmative votes and cloture to end debate. If this were true then the attempt to place the bill on the calendar could not succeed.

This point was overcome by the opinion of the Vice President, who stated (1) that Rule XXV did not require a mandatory referral to committee; (2) that if objection were made under Rule XIV and no point of order were raised the bill would go directly to the calendar; but (3) that if a point of order were raised the effect of it would be to put the substantive question, "Shall the bill be referred," in which case the issue would be decided by a majority vote. A filibuster at this stage was precluded when the Vice President went on to state that a motion to table could lie against the point of order. A simple majority, therefore, could end debate by moving to table the point of order. No such tabling motion was made, but the fact that it could be made allowed the Senate to vote on the substantive issue, "Shall the bill be referred?" The vote was 35 to sustain Senator Russell's point of order and 45 who opposed; and the bill went to the calendar.

Major Results of the Maneuver. There were at least three major, and perhaps historic, results of this action. In the first place it was probably the only method by which a civil rights bill could have been placed in a position to come before the Senate. Without it the civil rights bill would no doubt have languished again in the Senate Judiciary Committee until the end of the Congress. This procedural move was a major and essential step towards the final passage of the bill.

Secondly, for the first important occasion since 1938, the coalition of Southern Democrats and conservative Republicans was shattered. The quid pro quo of that coalition has long been that Southern Democrats would provide enough votes to defeat liberal social and economic legislation while the conservative Republicans provided the votes to defeat civil rights moves. Now, for the first time, a coalition of Northern Republicans and liberal Northern Democrats had acted together on a procedural issue to further the progress of a civil rights bill. This was all the more significant for, in the past, the conservative Republicans had furnished their votes in support of the South mainly on procedural rather than substantive issues, such as the 1949 appeal from the decision of the chair and amendment to Rule XXII which made it even more difficult than before, to shut off debate. They provided just enough votes or absentees so that cloture could not be applied to previous civil rights bills. They opposed and defeated the 1953 and 1957 attempts to adopt new rules of the Senate at the beginning of a new Congress. In that way the Republicans hoped to avoid the charge of opposing civil rights, for they professed their willingness to support, at least in part, the bills themselves on which, in almost every case, they prevented action. This was playing both sides of an issue and, because procedural niceties are little understood by the public and even more difficult to explain, they avoided condemnation for opposing civil rights which was the real effect of their actions.

In place of this coalition two new coalitions emerged. One was the Knowland-Douglas Axis, as Senator Russell referred to it, on the civil rights issue. This coalition is probably limited to civil rights and was more the result of public opinion, of the Republican gains in the Negro districts in 1956, possibly of the personal Presidential ambitions of individual Senators, and of the effective filibuster by committee, than the basis for any agreement or tacit arrangement for mutual support on other issues.

The other coalition was a revival of cooperation between the Southern and Western Democrats together with the remaining hard core of the Republican right wing. In many respects this coalition was not new for it has operated for years on such economic issues common to both areas as legislation on sugar cane and sugar beets, rivers and harbors and reclamation projects, the wool tariff, the silver subsidy, aid to the Western mining industry, and similar matters. As the course of the civil rights debate continued, this combination became dominant and civil rights, apparently, was added as a part of the bargain.

A third and most important effect of the vote was that for the first time in many years the Senate asserted a disciplinary jurisdiction over one of its committees. In theory, at least, committees of the Senate should be the servants of the Senate as a whole. Notoriously, in practice this has not been so. Examples include the unwillingness of the Senate to deal with the excesses of investigating committees; the tacit arrangement whereby the leadership, committee chairmen, and those Senators who are within or who are seeking admittance to the "inner circle" join to provide 52 to 55 votes to defeat motions and amendments on the floor when offered by individual Senators who are not members of the committee; and the unwritten rule of the Senate leadership that it supports the substance of committee action without regard to opposition by what may be even a majority of the party. In this respect, placing the civil rights bill on the calendar was unique and precedent setting. Although committees will no doubt continue to operate substantially as they have in the past, the possibility or threat of similar action may well serve to allow action by the full Senate on controversial bills of great importance for which there is overwhelming support and which otherwise would die in a committee stacked against them.

V. THE DEBATE ON H.R. 6127

Although the vote to take up the bill was 71 to 18, the new Southern-Western coalition proved powerful enough to effect major changes in the bill itself. They forced the deletion of Section III of the bill and they added a jury trial amendment to the voting section which, as it passed the Senate, would have made the bill least effective in those areas of the Deep South where it was most needed.

Apart from the coalition, two other major factors operated towards weakening the bill. The first was the press conference statement of the President on Section III, saying that it was not his intention that the Attorney General should have the power to initiate civil rights suits under that Section and the 14th Amendment. The second was the fact that the press centered its coverage almost wholly on the contest—the strategy and maneuverings in connection with the bill—and avoided, almost completely, the moral and substantive grounds for supporting it in the first place. For example, Senator Douglas placed in the Record a detailed legal brief on the jury trial amendment and contempt proceedings, showing that no "right" to trial by jury was being denied by the provisions of the bill. This was ignored by the press. County-by-county figures on Negro registration in the South were also detailed, as were the various subtle methods by which Negroes are denied the franchise; and these too were largely, although not entirely, ignored. Further, Senator Javits and others made lengthy and even brilliant rebuttals of the attack on Section III of the bill which were little reported and went almost unnoticed even by such papers as the Washington Post and the New York Times.

On three further occasions after the bill was taken up the rules of the Senate, together with other internal and external factors, affected the substance of the bill materially. These include the abortive attempt on the part of the Knowland-Douglas forces to modify Section III when it was clear, following the President's press conference, that it would otherwise be stricken; the various revisions of the jury-trial amendment; and the successful use of the unanimous consent device to bring a third reading and deny the possibility of further amendments at the late stages in the debate.

Striking Out Section III. Once the bill was before the Senate, Senators Anderson and Aiken moved to strike out Section III. This section would have permitted the Attorney General to seek injunctive remedies under the equal rights provisions of the 14th Amendment in cases affecting the use of schools, busses, public parks, etc., either on his own initiative, or at the request of an aggrieved party, or at the request of local public authorities which, in practice, would generally have meant school boards. Despite repeated claims to the contrary during the course of debate, the bill gave him no power to issue court orders or to decide how fast school integration must proceed. The remedies sought were milder in form, though easier, it was hoped, to obtain, than the criminal penalties now available against those who deny rights guaranteed under the Constitution; they were to supplement, not supplant, these penalties. The Little Rock, Arkansas case has since shown something of the potential effectiveness of the injunctive remedies. But the Attorney General was able to act in that case only because the original court order was sought by the Little Rock School Board, and because the court then invited him to intervene. Section III would have given the Attorney General the right to take the initiative.

When it was clear, after the President's press conference, that Section III would be deleted, the Knowland-Douglas forces sought to reach agreement on some substitute which could gain majority support. The Knowland position was that such an amendment should allow the Attorney General to intervene only when he was requested to do so by the local school boards or officials. The Douglas group's position was that the amendment should enable the Attorney General to intervene in these cases and also when an aggrieved party sought his intervention. Both versions abandoned the provision for the Attorney General to initiate action on his own and without specific request.

The parliamentary situation was that the amendment to strike out Section III could only be decided after perfecting amendments to the section in its original form had been offered and voted on. Under the rules even though the motion to strike out was offered first its priority for purposes of voting was last. The Knowland forces were unable to agree to the Douglas amendment, largely because they felt they could not push beyond the President's position; but the two groups tried to work out a strategy whereby they would fall back step by step, attempting to pick up strength as they did so. They decided that Senator Knowland should first offer his amendment, and that Senator Douglas would then move to substitute his own amendment for it. In this way they hoped that the liberal Democrats and other supporters of the stronger position could vote for the Douglas motion and when defeated, as they no doubt would have been, they could join the Knowland position as the next defensive move.

Because of the rules and precedents of the Senate this strategy had eventually to be abandoned. The supporters of the Douglas position were willing to fall back a step at a time, but could not agree to support a weaker provision when it was presented against a stronger position. They could vote for the Douglas motion as against the Knowland motion. They could vote for the Douglas or the Knowland motion as against the Anderson-Aiken motion to strike out Section III. They could not vote for the Douglas or the Knowland motion if either were to lie against Section III.

The parliamentary situation made it impossible to carry out their strategy. Once the Douglas motion was defeated there was no way in which the Knowland motion could be made to lie against the Anderson motion to strike Section

III. The issue would have been between the Knowland motion and Section III, in which case the liberal Democrats and some Republicans would have felt compelled to vote against the Knowland motion. This was true because of the precedent that a motion to strike is only voted on after the perfecting amendments to the basic provisions of a section have been disposed of. Efforts to substitute a weaker provision for the existing Section III were therefore abandoned at this stage. It was decided to let the vote come on the Anderson motion to strike, and to offer a revised Section III at a later stage, preferably following a victory on some substantive issue.

The Moving Target. Yet another example of the effect of the rules of the Senate on the substance of legislation may be seen in the successive revisions of the jury trial amendment. It is a cardinal principle of most parliamentary procedures that once a motion is offered it belongs to the full body and not to the mover. The parliamentary body determines what action should be taken, i.e., to amend, commit, refer, etc. This is not true of the Senate of the United States. An amendment, even after it is offered, belongs to the mover of the amendment and until such time as the yeas and nays have been ordered, he may amend it, revise it, or change it as he sees fit. In this fashion the jury trial amendment was changed almost from day to day, not by any vote of the Senate but by the offering or acceptance of revisions on the part of its mover, Senator O'Mahoney. As Senator Douglas said on the floor, the opponents of the jury trial amendment were "shooting at a moving target." The initial point at issue was the definition of the criminal contempts to which a jury trial would be made applicable—an exceedingly intricate technical question.

The first version met strenuous objection. The distinction it drew between civil and criminal contempt was whether or not questions of fact were at issue. As any good defense lawyer could raise a question of fact, the effect of this version was to allow a jury trial in all contempt cases.

The second version attempted to distinguish between civil and criminal contempt on the basis of whether or not the act committed was a crime. The traditional distinction between the two types of contempt, often hard to draw in practice, turns on whether the action of the court is for the purpose of compelling compliance with a previous court order, or for the purpose of punishment for failure to carry out the order. Thus in a voting case, a local registrar could be held in contempt for failing to carry out the court's order, but so long as he could remove that contempt by compliance with the order it would be civil contempt. Once the day for election had arrived and passed, and the defendant was no longer able to remove his contempt by compliance, then the contempt would be criminal, for the court could send him to jail or impose a fine only for the purpose of punishment. Since almost all obstructive actions connected with voting in federal elections are criminal, the effect of the second version was to grant a jury trial in contempt cases arising from interferences with voting.

In the third version of the O'Mahoney amendment the orthodox distinction was finally drawn between civil and criminal contempt. In an attempt to gain more widespread support for it, however, the amendment was broadened to apply not only to voting cases but to all contempt actions under federal law. At least 40 other statutes were affected, but primarily this revision was aimed at gaining labor support, particularly from the Railroad Brotherhoods and the United Mine Workers who were sensitive about past abuses of labor injunctions and who, in turn, influenced a number of key votes in the Senate. This provision was a most radical departure from existing procedures. Like the second version, it was merely accepted on the floor by Senator O'Mahoney, and no vote was taken on the question of substituting it for the previous version.

At this stage the question of passage of a jury trial amendment was touch and go. Those opposed to it still appeared to be in the majority. Finally, a fourth version was offered to meet the complaints over the absence of Negroes from Southern juries, and so to pick up a few more votes. Federal law sets certain standards for service on Federal juries, but also provides that no one may serve on a federal jury who is incompetent to serve on the grand or petit jury under the laws of his state. As one must be a voter or qualified elector in Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, South Carolina, and the Parish of New Orleans in order to be eligible to serve on a local grand or petit jury, and as Negroes are largely excluded from voting in these states, this means that by law Negroes are also excluded from federal jury service there. The fourth version, offered by Senator Church, repealed the provisions of the United States Code which excluded those from federal jury service who could not meet state qualifications. The effect of this final version was to provide the margin of strength to pass the jury trial amendment. However, as Negroes are excluded from jury service in other Southern states, in practice and by other means, it is doubtful that this change will have much practical effect.

The right to revise and modify an amendment at the will of its sponsor played a large part in attaching a jury trial amendment to the bill, for had the vote come on the first, second, or possibly the third version, it appears fairly certain that the amendment would have been defeated; and that, once defeated, the forces favoring it could not have recovered enough strength to pass even a greatly modified new amendment.

Unanimous Consent. The final instance in which parliamentary practice affected the substance of the bill occurred following the jury trial amendment vote and prior to the vote on the remaining amendments. Senator Russell referred to it in a speech on August 30, after the bill had passed, in which he justified and explained the failure of Southern Senators to filibuster the bill and took great credit for watering it down. He had this to say on the floor:

> When we had arrived at this particular stage of the proceedings in the Senate I happened to learn that a determined effort would be made to revive some of the provisions of Part III that had been stricken from the bill. The new amendment appeared harmless on its face, but if it had been adopted it would have placed the stamp of congressional approval on the erroneous, if not infamous, decision of the Supreme Court requiring the mixing of the children in the public schools without regard to the wishes of the parents of either race. We, therefore, quickly closed the bill to amendments in order to assure that none of the victories that we had gained would be snatched from us.[6]

What happened was that a bi-partisan group determined to try to revive a part of the Section III previously stricken. Before they could offer their amendment a unanimous consent agreement was reached, at a time when there was general commotion on the floor, limiting further proceedings to those amendments which had already been offered and printed and confining the time for debate to 30 minutes on each amendment. Senator Douglas was within minutes of offering the revised Section III amendment and was prevented from doing so by Senator Johnson's unanimous consent request which was made and agreed to at a time of confusion when his request could not be heard in the chamber. Apparently a gentlemen's agreement had also been reached that all further amendments would be voted down by voice vote and without a roll call.

VI. THE FILIBUSTER: A PAPER TIGER?

One final point should be made concerning the effect of the rules of the Senate on the substance of the civil rights bill. A number of highly competent journalists who were not close to the debate, or who have since been misled by the interpretations placed on it by some, have asserted that the absence of a filibuster at any stage in the proceedings on the floor represented a willingness on the part of the Southern opponents to accommodate themselves at least to the voting rights provisions of the bill. A closer view leads to the opposite conclusion, that the passage of the bill represents no compromise or accommodation on the part of the Deep South Senators at all. Rather, the failure to filibuster may be regarded as a carefully calculated decision to avoid consequences which would have been worse, from the Southern point of view, than those of the bill as it passed the Senate.

Throughout the debate, and preceding the votes on Section III and the jury trial amendment, the threat of a filibuster was used to gain support for both these amendments. Senator Russell has since frankly admitted what many on the inside felt sure of at the time, namely, that the South would not filibuster and that the threat of doing so was more effective than the reality would have been. Notwithstanding the arguments made earlier in the year, that no meaningful civil rights bill could be passed unless Rule XXII was changed, the filibuster, after the Rule XXII fight and after the bill was placed on the calendar, became a paper tiger. In retrospect it seems clear that the Southerners did not dare to use it because they feared the results would be the loss of Rule XXII and the passage of a much stronger bill than was passed. They were sufficiently convinced that a filibuster would so outrage the country and the Senate that they had more to lose than to gain by its use. This accounts for the severe condemnation of Senator Thurmond by his Southern colleagues following his 24-hour "talkathon."

The Southern group decided, instead, to attempt to filibuster the bill to death in committee. In this they were successful; they could have kept it throttled there indefinitely. However, as a result of the great increase in votes for a change in Rule XXII and the vote to place the bill on the calendar, they knew they could not successfully transfer that filibuster to the floor. In Senator Russell's words:

[6] Congressional Record, August 30, 1957, p. 15171 (daily ed.).

> In years gone by, it has been a great source of pride to me that our group was able to defeat bills of this nature when they were forced to the consideration of the Senate. In the case of H.R. 6127 we were from the outset faced with greater odds than ever before . . .[7]

> There was not a man among us who was not willing to speak against this iniquitous bill until he dropped in his tracks. We would have done so, but for the conviction, growing out of our knowledge of the Senate and the experience of many years in this body, that a filibuster was certain to make a bad bill infinitely worse . . .[8]

> Our group held numerous meetings and the wisdom of launching a filibuster was often discussed. All members of the group were living with the problem from day to day, defending the things dearest to our heart while under heavy fire. At no time did any member of our group declare in any of our meetings that it was his belief that a filibuster was advisable, much less that one could be successfully waged. The contrary view was expressed on innumerable occasions . . .[9]

They therefore decided to avoid a filibuster while using the threat of it to gain their points. They decided also to keep debate relevant, and with one or two very glaring exceptions this was done. With the wholehearted support of Senator Johnson, the Democratic leader, they then pressed for the two basic amendments which, from their point of view, would gain the least offensive result. In this, too, they were successful. They took this course not from any desire for accommodation or willingness to compromise but because a different course would, from the Southern position, "make a bad bill infinitely worse."

Although the filibuster was not used, the existence of Rule XXII made it still possible for Senator Russell to claim that:

> . . . the fact that we were able to confine the Federal activities to the field of voting and keep the withering hand of the Federal Government out of our schools and social order is to me, as I look back over the years , the sweetest victory of my 25 years as a Senator from the State of Georgia.[10]

Because of the filibuster rule, the unwillingness of some professed supporters of civil rights to see that the South dared not filibuster at this time, the consequent surrender to the mere threat of its use, and the skillful tactics of Senators Russell and Johnson, the bill as passed by the Senate was largely a victory for the forces of segregation. As civil rights proponents saw it, all their sweat and struggle to overcome the parliamentary obstacles had led to a bill which, except for a few minor gains, was almost form without substance. They took what consolation they could in watching the House revise it enough to make it a modest forward step.

[7] Ibid., p. 15172.
[8] Ibid., p. 15171.
[9] Ibid., p. 15171–2.
[10] Ibid., p. 15172.

Reprinted from THE AMERICAN POLITICAL SCIENCE REVIEW
Vol. LI, No. 4, December, 1957

Siegal, Sheppard

American Committee for the International Anne Frank Youth Center of the Anne Frank Foundation, Inc.

12 EAST 94th STREET, NEW YORK 28 ENright 9-1543

December 5, 1958

Miss Sheila Hogg
Secretary to
Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Miss Hogg:

Attached is a copy of the letter of solicitation which I just mentioned to you over the telephone that will be going out on stationery containing the names of our Sponsors. This appeal letter will be signed by a Vice President of the Foundation.

I shall phone you again about this on Monday.

Sincerely,

Vivian W. Siegal

Mrs. Sheppard Siegal

SS:LF

Enc.

Dear

I am making a direct appeal to you about this internationally significant project because I believe you especially will want to know about it.

Anne Frank's hideout in Amsterdam is being converted into an active International Youth Center in her name. Enclosed is a brief description of the progress abroad to date and of the dynamic program in the making for the Center and for an American Anne Frank Foundation now in formation.

Our Committee is undertaking to raise as the American contribution the $300,000 still needed to establish the Center. We hope to get this with dispatch from a limited number of persons who will appreciate the significance of this project and are able to make a substantial donation.

Can we count on you for a generous contribution? We would appreciate your immediate check. If more convenient for you, however, a pledge, payable early in the New Year, will also be welcome.

It is contemplated that after this first fund raising no further appeals for large funds will be needed. We anticipate that the Center's annual operating costs will be met by small contributions from school children in many countries and from a few private sources, including Anne's father, Otto Frank.

Our first concern, however, is to be able to open the Center at the earliest possible time so that young people the world over may meet there in the spirit of Anne Frank. For this we need your help.

Sincerely yours,

Enc.

P. S. The Netherland-America Foundation - a New York non-profit organization - is taking an active interest in these plans and is accepting all contributions here to be made available for the establishment of the Center. Checks should be made payable to the Netherland-America Foundation. Contributions are tax-deductible.

Silberman, Lionel H.

March 10, 1959

Dear Mr. Silberman:

Thank you for your letter of February 16th.

Your kind thought in sending me the Herlong-Judd bill is appreciated. Thanks too, for enclosing the editorial from Life Magazine.

Sincerely,

Mr. Lionel H. Silberman
The A. and A. Stowe
25 W. Church Street
Orlando, Florida

BEN ARSTEIN LIONEL SILBERMAN

THE A. & A. STORE

"For The Man of Today and The Man of Tomorrow"

25 W. CHURCH ST. ✦ PHONE GA 2-7451

ORLANDO, FLORIDA

February 16, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am certain that you will be anxious to learn of the Herlong-Judd bill currently before the Un-American Activities Committee of the House of Representatives. Enclosed you will find the Bill itself, Mr. Herlong's floor speech, plus an editorial from the current issue of Life magazine. I most earnestly solicit your assistance in bringing this urgently needed legislation to the attention of the American people.

Cordially,

Lionel H. Silberman

Lionel H. Silberman

(Not printed at Government expense)

Congressional Record

United States of America

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 86th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

The Freedom Commission Act

The Western Predicament

SPEECH

OF

HON. A. S. HERLONG, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 2, 1959

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, the cold war is going badly for our side. Nation after nation in the Near East and the Far East is slipping from pro-Western to neutral, to pro-Communist neutral, and this same pattern is now taking shape in Africa. Even in Western Europe, where many thought the tide had turned, we see some nations like Greece beginning to slip back. In Latin America the Communist Party is gaining rapidly in size and influence in key nations like Venezuela and Argentina.

This is happening despite Hungary and Khrushchev's confessions about Stalin and despite our generous aid programs.

The Communists are winning because they have developed a new form of power struggle, a new dimension of political warfare, which makes it possible for them to get to the people in each target nation and to control or manipulate them in ever increasing numbers in the interest of the Soviets. As long as the Communists can do this and we cannot counteract it, our own diplomacy and aid programs will be largely undercut, while those of the Soviet Union and Red China will achieve success all out of proportion for the money spent.

This new dimension of political warfare is being fought by the Communists in labor unions, universities, cultural groups, newspapers, villages, and in every type of economic, racial or religious grouping.

In this war, the Communists have three advantages which give them a decided edge over their opponents:

First, the Communists have trained the most skilled, dedicated and cohesive leadership groups and cadres the world has known. They simply fight harder and with more know-how than their opponents. The intensity with which the Communists train their cadres is still imperfectly understood.

Second, the Communists have developed their conspiratorial version of political warfare into an operational science. They have become masters of the art of conflict management.

Third, they have a superior organization which is skillfully deployed throughout the fabric of each nation to obtain maximum power and influence for the numbers involved. This organization, manned by trained political activists, permits the Communists to take full advantage of the infinite variety of organizational possibilities inherent in a total political war, whether setting up a front to organize and manipulate a previously unorganized sector of a given society, infiltrating an existing institution, or recruiting student leaders for a guided tour of the "New China." It is significant that an advanced textbook on Bolshevik strategy and tactics is called "The Organizational Weapon"—Selznick, McGraw-Hill, 1952.

We continue to take a licking because we have failed to develop these three indispensable keys to a total political war.

Instead, we have relied on the conventional means of diplomacy, military and economic aid and intelligence. These conventional means, regardless of the skill with which they are employed, fail to engage the Communists on much of the battleground. There has been a stubborn almost suicidal refusal on our part to face up to what a total political war means in terms of cadres, organization and operational know-how, if the Communists are to be fought organization for organization, argument for argument and person to person within the free world.

We had hoped that the newly independent nations in the Near and Far East and Africa would somehow develop their own vigorous anti-Communist leadership groups if we would only bolster their economies and contain the Red army. With some exceptions, this has not happened and today there is a desperate need in these areas for native leaders who can fight the Communists in all segments of their societies with an equal degree of devotion and operational-organizational know-how. This means university professors, labor leaders, business men, student leaders, writers, and professional people as well as government leaders.

Moreover, the need is just as great within the United States. In all levels of our society, there is a glaring lack of understanding of the total nature of the Soviet political warfare offensive and what it has accomplished and what lies ahead. But most important, people from the community level up lack leadership which can show them how they can make their weight felt in the cold war. By and large our great civic organizations are uncommitted. Their members continue to think little league baseball while the free world comes unstuck under the relentless pressure of the Communist organizational weapon. With trained leadership showing the way many of our people could join in this struggle. Without such leadership tremendous energies are wasted and opportunities missed as we leave everything to Uncle Sam.

Within the Federal Government there are few who are well grounded in communism, political warfare and the interrelated economic-military fields. Each Federal agency or department dealing with the cold war produces within itself a multitude of competing plans and ideas. Some are based on a realistic estimate of the political warfare situation and some are not. Ultimately the agency head must pick and choose between these plans. If he lacks extended experience or training in communism, political warfare and the interrelated economic-military fields, and many have since the end of World War II, he may be more likely to pick the plan which corresponds with his level of understanding. Thus expert knowledge, even where it exists at the "desk level," is often frustrated.

Only a small percentage of the thousands of Federal employees who serve overseas have substantial knowledge of communism and political warfare, or special knowledge or even interest in the foreign areas where they serve. If these people learned the language, were articulate about the United States, and knowledgeable about the cold war, they could cultivate newspaper people, labor leaders, and rank and file citizens and do a great deal to combat Communist influence. Instead, most stay within their own narrow circle of American friends and are political warfare neuters or outright liabilities. The same applies to many private citizens working overseas.

Today, the Soviet political warfare offensive is hitting its stride as years of patient cadre training and organizing begin to pay off. Most alarming, the Soviets are now in position to add a huge economic, scientific-technical assistance program and cultural program to their existing organizational weapon. Already Soviet aid to certain countries exceeds our own, and Russian and Chinese cultural groups touring the Near and Far East are so numerous and diversified they amount to a cultural cold war. The Soviet Union is turning out scientists, engineers and technicians at a rate beyond their internal needs. Recent visitors report these people are receiving language training in many languages and dialects. The newly independent nations, eager for quick industrial expansion, are turning increasingly to Russia, which has become a symbol of what a backward country can do using Communist methods. All of this opens fascinating possibilities to Soviet planners who can now give their existing organizational weapon a tremendous added punch. It creates the gravest sort of problems for the West.

The western predicament is that we have been unable to develop effective countermeasures to the Communist organizational weapon. We know the conventional means alone will not do the job. Unless we come up with the answer, we face the day when the United States and a handful of shaky allies will be substantially isolated in a world that has become Communist or pro-Communist neutral.

To fight the Communist organizational weapon, we need trained, dedicated people who understand Communist strategy and tactics and the realities of a total power struggle, and we need these people deployed throughout each free world nation where they can organize strength against Communist imperialism and lay the groundwork for a broad-based coalition of freemen. The West must develop a new synthesis of the operational art to make this possible.

Today the whole area of countermeasures or counteraction, outside the conventional fields, is relatively unexplored. Counteraction can and should be raised to the level of an operational science, and its practitioners should be trained with the care and thoroughness of a surgeon. It can and should offer fascinating opportunities at the community, State, and National levels.

Believing so completely that this should be done, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] and I have today introduced legislation that we believe will accomplish this objective.

Before going on to specific proposals of the legislation, certain points should be clarified.

First of all, since the Communist organizational weapon is working within a multitude of political, religious, economic and racial groups, counteraction must be carried out by leaders of these same groups. This means that counteraction will be led by people whose views and backgrounds are widely divergent and who are united chiefly by their desire to stem the Communist tide. Counteraction then means a broad coalition in which coordinated action would be achieved by focusing on the supreme danger of Communist domination and by giving that business its due priority. The strength and virtue of free men rest on the integrity of their convictions. To achieve unity of action we must never belittle differences existing between convictions, but rather search for common purposes on which men and groups can agree without betraying or minimizing their individual differences.

Second, there is no desire or need to emulate Communist conspiratorial techniques in carrying out the proposal set out in our bill. The method and techniques proposed can and should be in full accord with democratic ethics and morality.

Third, this legislation seeks to fill a vacuum. It does not encroach upon any existing department or agency of the Federal Government. Hereafter, when the expression "counteraction" is used, it is intended to mean primarily counteraction outside of the conventional means already employed by the Government, and especially counteraction that may be conducted by private citizens and organizations.

Fourth, the Communists have built up so much lead time in political warfare we must proceed on a crash program basis.

THE FREEDOM COMMISSION ACT

Under the legislation an independent commission tentatively called the Freedom Commission would be established and given the responsibility and powers to develop counteraction, to train selected persons in counteraction, and to act as an information center serving all persons working against the Communist conspiracy.

In order to do this, the Commission would establish an advanced training center tentatively called the Freedom Academy. The best available experts in all relevant fields of knowledge would be brought together at the Academy where they could devote their full time to (a) developing counteraction into a science, and (b) training and turning out highly skilled, dedicated men and women, selected from throughout the free world to organize and lead counteraction.

The Commission: The Commission would be composed of seven members, one of whom would be chairman. The members would be appointed by the President with the advice and approval of the Senate and would serve for staggered terms of 6 years, except the chairman who would serve at the pleasure of the President. The Commission would have broad powers to achieve its purpose and could employ such advisers and establish such committees as it needs from time to time to operate the Academy, select the faculty, prepare a curriculum, select a student body, and so forth.

The Commissioners should be broadly representative, dedicated in their desire to fight communism and bipartisan in their approach. Above all the Commissioners must themselves demonstrate that a broad-based coalition of free men can recognize the primacy of the Communist threat and undertake sustained action of a high order without unseemingly bickering over individual political differences.

Joint congressional committee: The vital nature of the Commission's work, the need to proceed on a crash basis into a relatively unexplored field loaded with delicate policy questions, the necessarily generalized statutory authority—much of the area of the program being still unexplored—and above all the need for public confidence, requires that Congress as well as the executive branch be fully and currently informed of the Commission's activities and problems. The proposed legislation, therefore, provides for a joint congressional watchdog committee with a permanent staff empowered to investigate, advise, and report. This committee would be analogous to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and like it, dedicated to the promotion of the public and legislative will in a sensitive agency imperative to our country's international survival.

Academy students: The student body would be selected from throughout the free world and would be representative of the diverse groups within which the cold war is being fought. They must be men and women of character and intelligence ready to dedicate more than their spare evenings to the cause of freedom. On graduation they would return to their own communities and institutions where, using their special skills and techniques developed at the Academy, they would be leaders in counteraction.

ACADEMY CURRICULUM

(a) The common fund of knowledge: Anti-Communists of widely divergent political beliefs can cooperate on a surprisingly broad front if they possess a common understanding of communism and the realities of the total power struggle. Without this common fund of knowledge, a coalition is exasperatingly difficult whether among private citizens or free world governments. Therefore, the first function of the curriculum is to build this fund so that Academy graduates can talk shop and plan together on the basis of the mutual respect and confidence which flows from their common understanding. As part of this fund, the students will acquire a thorough understanding of the Communist conspiracy, including the history and development of Communist theory and doctrine; knowledge of Soviet Russia, Red China, and the satellite countries; the organization, strategy, and tactics of the Communist Party; and the heritage and the prospects of the free world. In order to provide perspective, related subjects will include an analysis of the world military situation, the political and economic situation in the principal nations, and other problems of international affairs as they relate to the Communist conspiracy. Also included—for foreign students at least—would be American history with special emphasis on American foreign and military policy after World War II, since it is of first importance that the leader of the free world be understood and trusted.

(b) Organizing skills: Academy students will be trained in the technique and procedures they should use in combating Communist influence and the Communist organizational weapon. This includes a study of organizing methods and operational techniques suitable for different classes, groups, and environments, keeping in mind these methods should be in accord with the ethics and morality of free men. Because Communists try to divide non-Communists in order to decrease their effectiveness as an opposition force, students will also be taught the techniques of meditation and coalition necessary to get non- and anti-Communists working together.

(c) Schools and teaching skills: The academy is only one school serving a world community and can train no more than a small fraction of the needed leaders. The success of counteraction will depend above all on the ability of graduates to recruit and train large numbers of activists. This means a series of training schools or training programs at community, regional or national level. The graduates should have concrete ideas on how to set up and finance these schools under varying conditions, and they, like the academy faculty, must give inspired instructions. This means the curriculum must stress teaching and speaking skills and a great deal of thought will have to be given to matters such as textbooks, teaching aids including films, minimum libraries, and so forth, to be used by the graduates in their own training programs.

(d) Special skills: Each student may acquire special knowledge and skills in his particular field. For instance, peasants make up a great majority of the population in most of the underdeveloped areas. No group suffers more under communism and the peasantry represents a huge potential source of anti-Communist strength. Under present circumstances, however, most villagers are submerged under the staggering problems of eking out a living and may have no interest in anti-communism per se. False promises of land and the simple fact that the Communists have become the "other party" to which the villagers give their protest vote is making them increasingly susceptible to Communist manipulation. The academy graduate who has a good technical understanding of the peasant's agricultural and public health problems and becomes a devoted village worker is in the best position to carry out counteraction, and special training in these technical subjects would appear to be part of the training for a well-rounded leader of counteraction from these areas.

Again, the Communists have captured labor organizations in many countries on bread and butter issues and because of greater skills in strike leadership, collective bargaining and grievance machinery. Once in, of course, the union treasury is milked for party purposes, the membership is manipulated and the comrades use their labor power to control political parties. This kind of thing can best be fought by trained anti-Communist labor organizers who have superior labor union skills and can beat the Communists on the bread and butter level as well as on ideological issues. Selected foreign students might be trained in these trade union subjects at AFL–CIO schools.

Some of the most promising potential leaders of counteraction may be hesitant at first to attend a school that deals primarily with political subjects. However, many can be induced to come, if they are promised additional training in their profession or business by way of on-the-job training in industry or business or additional study at a university of their choice either before or after completing their Academy program. The Commission should give careful study to subsidized training outside the Academy, particularly in the technical and administrative skills and knowledge so badly needed in the underdeveloped areas. We could perform no greater service to the free world and the underdeveloped countries than to train a leader in these critically needed technical or administrative skills while also turning him into a knowledgeable leader of counteraction. Our great failing with foreign students in the past is that we have made no effort to develop them into articulate anti-Communists or to make them feel that the free world is counting on them and backing them. They have returned home as individuals without a sense of mission and have often been recruited into the Communist party which has appeared to them to be the only group that had a dynamic program and knew where it was going and how to get there. Academy graduates in this country can play an important part in setting up these on-the-job training programs, and seeing to it that these students get to meet our business, labor, and cultural leaders and are made to feel they are important to us and the free world, and that we intend to back them in every way we can.

To develop a high-level leader of counteraction, depending on his previous experience, will take one to several years of instruction, preferably interspersed with practical work. Many key people cannot or will not give this much time. Therefore, shorter courses or a series of courses ranging from a few weeks to several months in length should be set up, in addition to the longer programs. An oil company transferring employees to South America might be willing to send them to the Academy for 1 month. Or an exchange student from a key Asian country who has finished his regular studies might be willing to stay on an extra 3 to 6 months or longer to attend the Academy. However, the major function of the Academy is to turn out high-level leaders of counteraction so the principal emphasis should probably be on the longer programs.

Academy faculty: The great and important task of developing counteraction into a science—outside the conventional fields—will be the job of the faculty under the supervision of the Commission. This will require special knowledge from a number of areas. Included in the faculty should be experts on all aspects of the Communist conspiracy along with historians, sociologists, military experts, political scientists, linguists, and experts on the area and groups within which the graduates will work. Never before has such a group been brought together within a single institution where they could devote their full energies to developing and teaching counteraction. Half formed ideas, discarded as unworkable without trained leadership and organization, could grow into bold dynamic programs under the stimulus of shop talk among these diversified experts and the realization that here at last is the organization that can put these ideas across. In the beginning the faculty will have to teach each other as well as the student body. The instructions must be of a high order, for the students must be instilled with esprit de corps and a sense of mission.

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS AND EXPECTED RESULTS

Academy graduates will have no strings attached when they return to their native lands or home communities, but as highly trained anti-Communists with a sense of mission and thorough understanding of what has to be done to fight the Communist organizational weapon, it is expected that the graduates from each country will cooperate closely in organizing counteraction, and in fact should be a working nucleus before leaving the Academy. They will be trained to furnish the three indispensable keys to counteraction: skilled leadership, organization and operational know-how. Being representative of the diverse groups and classes of their native land, they will have immediate access to those they will seek to organize.

The principal task of graduates in the United States will be to develop a sense of urgency in our people and a willingness to fight the cold war with the same intensity as a hot war; and then to provide the leadership and organization by which private citizens can make their weight felt in this total power struggle. This means building within each city and town a trained corps of persons well informed on communism and the military-economic-political warfare realities. This can only be done through intensive study programs and training schools at the community and State level.

Once we have these trained people in numbers, a vast array of long- and short-term programs become possible. Without them, very little of lasting importance can be done.

One example may illustrate this central point.

Several years ago the American Bar Association adopted a resolution to the effect our high school students should be taught the facts about the Communist conspiracy and the mortal danger facing their country. It was then discovered there were no teachers qualified in this subject and no textbooks or any center the teachers could turn to for help. The lawyers themselves could give little assistance and a worthy project launched with much fanfare fell flat on its face. Such a project would be a natural for academy graduates and their trainees.

496078—69248

The idea of private citizens participating in the cold war on a large scale requires a few brief illustrations.

The Soviets can commit the most brutal crimes against humanity and suffer only minor, short-term propaganda reverses. Yet, if we so much as stub our toe, the roof falls in. Following the crushing of the Hungarian revolution, a number of intellectual, student, and worker leaders were imprisoned and the arrests are still continuing. With calloused brutality the Soviets from time to time announce the execution of certain of these captives. Those familiar with sadistic AVO techniques can imagine the fate of the others. These freedom fighters are the most heroic, selfless allies freedom has ever had. There is reason to believe the Soviets might release many, if we made them pay a high enough price for their continued imprisonment and torture. Yet there has been no concerted effort along these lines to our everlasting shame. Every execution should be an occasion for cold fury among our citizens and free people everywhere. The continued retention of these free-world martyrs should result in massive demonstrations and pressures of every type against the Soviets. Academy graduates and their trainees working in civic organizations, labor unions, churches, and universities, could organize this protest not only in the United States but throughout the free world.

Russia and Red China are flooding India and other Asian nations with books and magazines promoting the Communist line. Sold at less than cost and tailored to every group and nationality—even including illustrated nursery books showing the friendly Russian bear saving little Red Ridinghood from the United States wolf—these books are making a considerable impression. Sometimes this is about the only reading material available to book hungry intellectuals. The Communist organizational weapon works overtime distributing this material, obtaining favorable reviews for Soviet books, plastering billboards with ads and pressuring bookshops and newsstands into favored displays.

Our great civic organizations through the leadership and prodding of academy graduates can directly involve themselves in a meaningful way in this crucial battle for Asian minds and loyalties. For example, hundred volume sets of the western classics interspersed with such notable anti-Communist books as "The New Class," "Darkness at Noon," "The Bridge at Andau," "A Century of Conflict," or "Dr. Zhivago" could be obtained in paperbound editions for as little as $15 or $20 per set. Our civic organizations could raise the money for printing and shipping thousands of sets to eastern nations where local academy graduates would insure proper distribution.

A trained leader of counteraction can be expected to take the long view of developing situations and to initiate the sustained corrective action now that will decisively influence events many years in the future. With the Soviets going all out to train scientists and engineers to insure their space supremacy and the development of a superior weapons technology, we must respond or concede world dominion to our enemies. The educational challenge of this across-the-board power struggle is perhaps the most important of all. Academy graduates trained to face the unpleasant realities will know what our educational system must produce to insure survival, and can be effective counterweights to those urging a softer education in our secondary schools and universities. Again, acting within a multitude of civic organizations, they can focus the attention and energies of these groups on this vital educational challenge and away from the business or pleasure as usual activities which often dominate present civic thinking. This is anti-communism or counteraction at its best.

Counteraction has drifted so long without trained leaders or adequate organizational forms, it is difficult for some to grasp the very great potential which will gradually come into being as successive classes are graduated from the academy. Slowly at first but surely a broad-based coalition of freemen ranging from anti-Communist Socialists to conservatives will emerge in many key parts of the free world. Led by dedicated, knowledgeable native leaders using new and imaginative techniques they will in time turn the organizational weapon against the Communists.

Today anti-Communist morale throughout the free world is at rock bottom. The Commission and the academy will be shot in the arm. They will become a symbol that at long last Uncle Sam is going to fight the cold war with both hands.

CONCLUSION

At this time, no one can be definitive or dogmatic as to precise details of the academy program. We are dealing with a new area where we of the free world have just begun to explore the outer fringes. We are seeking to develop an awareness of the problems facing the free world in meeting the Communists on a broad front, where they have been operating virtually unchallenged for half a century. It will not be easy to overcome so great a timelag, but as freemen we can never admit that it cannot be overcome.

We must not continue to stand by in hopeless confusion, in awe of a monster which in 50 years has devoured half the world. It is still not too late to meet the challenge. But time is running out faster than we dare think.

We can no longer afford the luxury of attempting at our leisure to perfect our program. We must proceed at once to gather what experts we can to set into immediate operation the two great phases of this legislation, development of counteraction, and intensive training. Our available experts must work as an emergency team, teaching each other their skills and knowledge so that each may become as quickly as possible the type of expert necessary to work out the many complexities of the program. All efforts must be made to set this phase of the legislation into operation as soon as possible. The training program will aid in the development of the science of counteraction. The development of counteraction will aid the training program. Neither phase can wait for the perfection of the other.

We are not dealing with a static situation, but with a constantly growing and changing problem. The program must be kept flexible, constantly expanding, constantly changing to meet new challenges in the world situation.

We cannot expect perfection in our program. We can expect the maximum effort by all concerned. This program promises no miracles, no easy and secure path to freedom. It offers a lifetime of sacrifice and toil to many who embrace it; for many, great danger, and for some, death.

For communism, with the lead time of half a century, it is already high noon. For us, it is the choice between continued darkness or early dawn. Let us choose the dawn and choose it now. The choice may not be ours again.

496078—69248

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1959

86TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 3880

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 2, 1959

Mr. HERLONG introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Un-American Activities

A BILL

To create the Freedom Commission for the development of the science of counteraction to the world Communist conspiracy and for the training and development of leaders in a total political war.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Freedom Commission Act".

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF POLICY

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress of the United States makes the following findings:

(1) The Soviet Union and Communist China are wag-

1 ing a total political war against the United States and
2 against the peoples and governments of all other nations of 3 the free world.

4 (2) Unlike the free world, the Soviet Union has sys-
5 tematically prepared for this total political war over several 6 decades. Drawing on the experience of previous conquerors
7 and upon their own elaborate studies and extensive pragmatic
8 tests, the Soviet leaders have developed their conspiratorial
9 version of political warfare into a highly effective operational
10 science. Recognizing that political warfare is a difficult 11 science making unusual demands on its practitioners, the 12 Soviet Union and Communist China have established an 13 elaborate network of training schools, within and without the 14 free world, in which have been trained large numbers of 15 highly skilled activists. These activists continue to receive 16 intensive continuous training throughout their party careers.

17 (3) In this total political war the Soviets permit no
18 neutrals. Every citizen, every economic, cultural, religious,
19 or ethnic group is a target and is under some form of direct 20 or indirect Communist attack. The battleground is every-21 where, and every citizen, knowingly or unknowingly,
22 through action or inaction, is involved in this continuous
23 struggle.

24 (4) Since the end of World War II, the Soviets, tak-
25 ing full advantage of their better preparation and often supe-

1 rior organizational and operational know-how, have inflicted 2 a series of political warfare defeats on the free world. The 3 total sum of these defeats is nothing less than a disaster
4 for the United States and the free world and the continua-
5 tion of this political war by the Soviets confronts the United 6 States with a grave, present, and continuing danger to its 7 national survival.

8 (5) In order to defeat the Soviet political warfare
9 offensive and to preserve the integrity and independence of 10 the nations of the free world, it is imperative—

11 (A) that the knowledge and understanding of all
12 the peoples of the free world concerning the true nature
13 of the international Communist conspiracy be increased
14 as rapidly as is practicable;

15 (B) that private citizens not only understand the 16 true nature of the international Communist conspiracy, 17 but that they also know how they can participate, and 18 do participate, in this continuous struggle in an effective,
19 sustained, and systematic manner;

20 (C) that Government personnel engaged in the cold
21 war increase their knowledge of the international Com-
22 munist conspiracy, develop a high espirit de corps and 23 sense of mission and a high degree of operational know-
24 how in counteracting the international Communist
25 conspiracy.

1 (b) It is the intent and purpose of the Congress that
2 the authority and powers granted in this Act be fully utilized
3 by the hereinafter created Commission to achieve the objec-
4 tives set forth in the preceding subsection (a) (5) of this
5 section. It is the further intent and purpose of the Congress
6 that the authority, powers, and functions of the Commission
7 and the Academy as hereinafter set forth are to be broadly
8 construed.

9 DEFINITIONS

10 SEC. 3. When used in this chapter—
11 (1) The term "Commission" means the Freedom Com-
12 mission;
13 (2) The term "Academy" means the Freedom Acad-
14 emy; and
15 (3) The term "joint committee" means the Joint Con-
16 gressional Freedom Committee.

17 ESTABLISHMENT OF THE FREEDOM COMMISSION; COMPOSI-
18 TION; CHAIRMAN AND ACTING CHAIRMAN; QUORUM;
19 OFFICIAL SPOKESMAN; SEAL

20 SEC. 4. There is established in the executive branch
21 of the Government an independent agency to be known as 22 the Freedom Commission which shall be composed of six
23 members and a Chairman, each of whom shall be a citizen
24 of the United States. The Chairman may from time to 25 time designate any other member of the Commission as

1 Acting Chairman to act in the place and stead of the Chair-
2 man during his absence. The Chairman (or the Acting
3 Chairman in the absence of the Chairman) shall preside at 4 all meetings of the Commission and a quorum for the trans-
5 action of business shall consist of at least four members
6 present. Each member of the Commission, including the 7 Chairman, shall have equal responsibility and authority in 8 all decisions and actions of the Commission, shall have full 9 access to all information relating to the performance of his 10 duties or responsibilities, and shall have one vote. Action
11 of the Commission shall be determined by a majority vote
12 of the members present. The Chairman (or Acting Chair-13 man in the absence of the Chairman) shall be the official
14 spokesman of the Commission in its relations with the Con-
15 gress, Government agencies, persons, or the public, and,
16 on behalf of the Commission, shall see to the faithful execu-
17 tion of the policies and decisions of the Commission, and 18 shall report thereon to the Commission from time to time
19 or as the Commission may direct. The Commission shall 20 have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

21 MEMBERS; APPOINTMENTS; TERMS; COMPENSATION;
22 EXTRANEOUS BUSINESS

23 SEC. 5. (a) Members of the Commission and the Chair-
24 man shall be appointed by the President, by and with the 25 advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than four

1 members, including the Chairman, may be members of any
2 one political party. In submitting any nomination to the 3 Senate, the President shall set forth the experience and quali-
4 fications of the nominee. The term of each member of the 5 Commission, other than the Chairman, shall be six years,
6 except that (1) the terms of office of the members first tak-
7 ing office shall expire as designated by the President at the 8 time of the appointment, two at the end of two years, two at 9 the end of four years, and two at the end of six years; and 10 (2) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior 11 to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was 12 appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such 13 term. The Chairman shall serve during the pleasure of the 14 President. Any member of the Commission may be removed 15 by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or mal-
16 feasance in office. Each member, except the Chairman,
17 shall receive compensation at the rate of $20,000 per annum;
18 and the Chairman shall receive compensation at the rate of 19 $20,500 per annum.
20 (b) No member of the Commission shall engage in any 21 business, vocation, or employment other than that of serving
22 as a member of the Commission.

1 AUTHORIZATION TO ESTABLISH THE FREEDOM ACADEMY;
2 FUNCTIONS

3 SEC. 6. The Commission is authorized and empowered
4 to establish under its supervision and control an advanced
5 training and development center to be known as the Freedom
6 Academy. The Academy shall be located at such place or 7 places within the United States as the Commission shall 8 determine. The principal functions of the Academy shall 9 be—

10 (1) the development of systematic knowledge
11 about the international Communist conspiracy;

12 (2) the development of counteraction to the inter-
13 national Communist conspiracy into an operational
14 science that befits and bespeaks the methods and values
15 of freemen, and to achieve this purpose the entire area
16 of counteraction is to be thoroughly explored and studied
17 with emphasis on the methods and means that may best
18 be employed by private citizens and nongovernmental 19 organizations and the methods and means available to 20 Government agencies other than the methods and means
21 already being used;

22 (3) the education and training of private citizens

1 concerning all aspects of the international Communist
2 conspiracy and in the science of counteraction to that
3 conspiracy;
4 (4) the education and training of persons in Gov-
5 ernment service concerning all aspects of the interna-
6 tional Communist conspiracy and in the science of 7 counteraction to that conspiracy to the end that they can 8 be more useful to their Government in defeating the 9 international Communist conspiracy.

10 ACADEMY STUDENTS; SELECTION; GRANTS AND EXPENSES;
11 ADMISSION AS NONIMMIGRANT VISITORS; DEPORTA-
12 TION

13 SEC. 7. (a) Academy students shall be selected, insofar
14 as is practicable and in the public interest, from a cross
15 section of the diverse groups, within and without the United 16 States, in which the total political war is being fought.
17 Before accepting any student for training who is an officer
18 or employee of a Government agency, the Commission shall 19 first obtain the concurrence of that agency. Persons in 20 Government service coming within the provisions of the 21 Government Employees Training Act may be trained at the 22 Academy pursuant to the provisions of said Act. All other 23 agencies and departments of Government are authorized to 24 aid and assist the Commission in the selection of students.

1 (b) The Commission is authorized to make grants to
2 students and to pay expenses incident to training and study
3 under this chapter. This authorization shall include au-
4 thority to pay travel expenses to and from the Academy
5 or other authorized place of training under this chapter, and 6 authority to give financial assistance to the dependents of 7 students during the time they are undergoing training au-
8 thorized under this Act. Foreign students selected for train-
9 ing under this Act shall be admitted as nonimmigrants under 10 section 1101(a)(15) of title 8, United States Code, for 11 such time and under such conditions as may be prescribed
12 by regulations promulgated by the Commission, the Sec-
13 retary of State, and the Attorney General. A person ad-
14 mitted under this section who fails to maintain the status
15 under which he was admitted, or who fails to depart from 16 the United States at the expiration of the time for which 17 he was admitted, or who engages in activities of a political 18 nature detrimental to the interest of the United States, or 19 in activities in conflict with the security of the United States,
20 shall, upon the warrant of the Attorney General, be taken
21 into custody and promptly deported pursuant to sections
22 1251–1253 of title 8, United States Code. Deportation
23 proceedings under this section shall be summary and findings

1 of the Attorney General as to matters of fact shall be con-
2 clusive. Such persons shall not be eligible for suspension of 3 deportation under section 1254 of such title 8.

4 NON-ACADEMY TRAINING OF ACADEMY STUDENTS

5 SEC. 8. The Commission is authorized to provide stu-
6 dents selected for training at the Academy (either before,
7 after, or during Academy training) with such additional edu-
8 cation and training at colleges, universities, or technical 9 schools other than the Academy, or with such on-the-job
10 training in industry and business as the Commission shall 11 determine to be in the public interest.

12 AUTHORIZATION TO ESTABLISH AN INFORMATION CENTER

13 SEC. 9. The Commission is authorized to establish an 14 information center at such place or places within the United 15 States as the Commission may determine. The principal 16 function of the information center shall be to disseminate
17 with or without charge information and materials which will 18 assist persons and organizations to increase their under-19 standing of the true nature of the international Communist 20 conspiracy and the ways and means of defeating that con-
21 spiracy. In carrying out this function, the Commission is 22 authorized to prepare, make, and publish textbooks and other
23 materials, including training films, suitable for high school,
24 college, and community level instruction. The Commission
25 is authorized to disseminate such information and materials

1 to such persons and organizations as may be in the public
2 interest on such terms and conditions as the Commission
3 shall determine.

4 RESTRICTIONS ON DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION

5 SEC. 10. Nothing in this chapter shall authorize the dis-
6 closure of any information or knowledge in any case in which 7 such disclosure (1) is prohibited by any other law of the 8 United States, or (2) is inconsistent with the security of the 9 United States.

10 SECURITY CHECK OF PERSONNEL

11 SEC. 11. (a) Except as authorized by the Commission
12 upon a determination by the Commission that such action is 13 clearly consistent with the national interest, no individual
14 shall be employed by the Commission until such individual 15 has been investigated by the Civil Service Commission to 16 determine whether the said individual is a good security risk
17 and a report thereof has been made to the Freedom
18 Commission.

19 (b) In addition to the foregoing provisions, the Com-
20 mission may request that any individual employed by the 21 Commission, or under consideration for employment by the 22 Commission, be investigated by the Federal Bureau of In-23 vestigation to determine whether the said individual is a good
24 security risk.

1 GENERAL AUTHORITY OF THE COMMISSION

2 SEC. 12. In addition to the authority already granted,
3 the Commission is authorized and empowered—

4 (1) to establish such temporary or permanent
5 boards and committees as the Commission may from 6 time to time deem necessary for the purposes of this
7 Act;

8 (2) to appoint and fix the compensation of such 9 personnel as may be necessary to carry out the functions
10 of the Commission. Such personnel shall be appointed
11 in accordance with the civil service laws and their com-
12 pensation fixed in accordance with the Classification
13 Act of 1949, as amended, except that, to the extent the 14 Commission deems such action necessary to the dis-
15 charge of its responsibilities, personnel may be employed
16 and their compensation fixed without regard to such 17 laws: Provided, however, That no personnel (except 18 such personnel whose compensation is fixed by law, and 19 specially qualified professional personnel up to a limit 20 of $19,000) whose position would be subject to the 21 Classification Act of 1949, as amended, if such Act were 22 applicable to such position, shall be paid a salary at a 23 rate in excess of the rate payable under such Act for 24 positions of equivalent difficulty or responsibility. The 25 Commission shall make adequate provision for admin-

1 istrative review of any determination to dismiss any 2 employee;
3 (3) to conduct such research, studies and surveys as
4 necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act;
5 (4) to make, promulgate, issue, rescind, and amend
6 such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry
7 out the purposes of this Act;
8 (5) to make such expenditures as may be necessary
9 for administering and carrying out the provisions of this
10 Act;
11 (6) to utilize, with the approval of the President,
12 the services, facilities, and personnel of other Govern-
13 ment agencies. Whenever the Commission shall use the 14 services, facilities, or personnel of any Government
15 agency for activities under the authority of this Act, the 16 Commission shall pay for such performance out of funds
17 available to the Commission under this Act, either in 18 advance, by reimbursement, or by direct transfer;
19 (7) to utilize or employ on a full- or part-time basis,
20 with the consent of the organization or governmental
21 body concerned, the services of personnel of any State
22 or local government or private organization to perform
23 such functions on its behalf as may appear desirable to 24 carry out the purposes of this Act, without said person-
25 nel severing their connection with the furnishing organ-

1 ization or governmental body; and further to utilize per-
2 sonnel of a foreign government in the same manner and 3 under the same circumstances with the approval of the 4 Secretary of State;

5 (8) to acquire by purchase, lease, loan, or gift, and 6 to hold and dispose of by sale, lease, or loan, real and 7 personal property of all kinds necessary for, or resulting 8 from, the exercise of authority granted by this Act;

9 (9) to receive and use funds donated by others, if 10 such funds are donated without restrictions other than 11 that they be used in furtherance of one or more of the 12 purposes of this Act;

13 (10) to accept and utilize the services of vol-
14 untary and uncompensated personnel and to provide
15 transportation and subsistence as authorized by section
16 73b–2 of title 5, United States Code, for persons serving
17 without compensation;

18 (11) to utilize the services of persons on a tempo-
19 rary basis and to pay their actual and necessary travel
20 expenses and subsistence and in addition compensation
21 at a rate not to exceed $50 per day for each day spent
22 in the work of the Commission.

23 GENERAL MANAGER; APPOINTMENT; COMPENSATION

24 SEC. 13. The Commission is authorized to establish 25 within the Commission a General Manager, who shall dis-

1 charge such of the administrative and executive functions of
2 the Commission as the Commission may direct. The Gen-
3 eral Manager shall be appointed by the Commission, shall
4 serve at the pleasure of the Commission, shall be removable
5 by the Commission, and shall receive compensation at a rate
6 determined by the Commission, but not in excess of $18,000
7 per annum.

8 ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT CONGRESSIONAL FREEDOM
9 COMMITTEE; MEMBERSHIP

10 SEC. 14. There is established the Joint Congressional 11 Freedom Committee hereinafter referred to as the "joint com-12 mittee" to be composed of seven Members of the Senate to 13 be appointed by the President of the Senate, and seven Mem-
14 bers of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the 15 Speaker of the House of Representatives. In each instance 16 not more than four Members shall be the members of the 17 same political party.

18 AUTHORITY AND DUTY OF JOINT COMMITTEE

19 SEC. 15. The joint committee shall make continued
20 studies of the activities of the Commission and of problems
21 relating to the development of counteraction to the inter-
22 national Communist conspiracy. During the first sixty days
23 of each session of the Congress the joint committee shall 24 conduct hearings in either open or executive session for the 25 purposes of receiving information concerning the develop-

1 ment and state of counteraction. The Commission shall keep 2 the joint committee fully and currently informed with re-
3 spect to all of the Commission's activities. All bills, reso-
4 lutions, and other matters in the Senate or House of 5 Representatives relating primarily to the Commission shall 6 be referred to the joint committee. The members of the 7 joint committee who are Members of the Senate shall from 8 time to time report to the Senate and the members of the 9 joint committee who are Members of the House of Repre-
10 sentatives shall from time to time report to the House, by 11 bill or otherwise, their recommendations with respect to mat-
12 ters within the jurisdiction of their respective Houses which 13 are referred to the joint committee, or otherwise within the 14 jurisdiction of the joint committee.

15 CHAIRMAN AND VICE CHAIRMAN OF JOINT COMMITTEE;
16 VACANCIES IN MEMBERSHIP

17 SEC. 16. Vacancies in the membership of the joint com-
18 mittee shall not affect the power of the remaining members
19 to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be 20 filled in the same manner as in the case of the original se-
21 lection. The joint committee shall select a chairman and a 22 vice chairman from among its members at the beginning of 23 each Congress. The vice chairman shall act in the place
24 and stead of the chairman in the absence of the chairman.
25 The chairmanship shall alternate between the Senate and the

1 House of Representatives with each Congress, and the chair-
2 man shall be selected by the members from that House
3 entitled to the chairmanship. The vice chairman shall be 4 chosen from the House other than that of the chairman by 5 the members from that House.

6 POWERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

7 SEC. 17. In carrying out its duties under this chapter,
8 the joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee
9 thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings or investigations,
10 to sit and act at such places and times, to require by sub-11 pena or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the 12 production of such books, papers, and documents, to admin-
13 ister such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such 14 printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it
15 deems advisable. The joint committee may make such rules
16 respecting its organization and procedures as it deems neces-
17 sary: Provided, however, That no measure or recommenda-
18 tion shall be reported from the joint committee or by any 19 member designated by him or by the joint committee, and 20 may be served by such person or persons as may be desig-21 nated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the 22 joint committee or any member thereof may administer oaths
23 to witnesses. The joint committee may use a committee 24 seal. The provisions of sections 192–194 of title 2, United 25 States Code, shall apply in case of any failure of any wit-

1 ness to comply with a subpena or to testify when summoned
2 under authority of this section. The expenses of the joint 3 committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the 4 Senate from funds appropriated for the joint committee upon
5 vouchers approved by the chairman. The cost of steno-
6 graphic services to report public hearings shall not be in 7 excess of the amounts prescribed by law for reporting the 8 hearings of standing committees of the Senate. The cost of 9 stenographic services to report executive hearings shall be 10 fixed at an equitable rate by the joint committee. Mem-
11 bers of the joint commitee, and its employees and consult-12 ants, while traveling on official business for the joint com-
13 mittee, may receive either the per diem allowance authorized 14 to be paid to Members of Congress or its employees, or their 15 actual and necessary expenses provided an itemized state-
16 ment of such expenses is attached to the voucher.

17 STAFF AND ASSISTANCE; UTILIZATION OF FEDERAL
18 DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES; ARMED PROTECTION

19 SEC. 18. The joint committee is empowered to appoint 20 and fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, and 21 staff employees as it deems necessary and advisable. The 22 joint committee is authorized to utilize the services, informa-
23 tion, facilities, and personnel of the departments and 24 establishments of the Government.

1 CLASSIFICATION OF INFORMATION BY JOINT COMMITTEE

2 SEC. 19. The joint committee may classify information
3 originating within the committee in accordance with stand-
4 ards used generally by the executive branch for classifying
5 restricted data or defense information.

6 RECORDS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

7 SEC. 20. The joint committee shall keep a complete
8 record of all committee actions, including a record of the 9 votes on any question on which a record vote is demanded.
10 All committee records, data, charts, and files shall be the 11 property of the joint committee and shall be kept in the 12 offices of the joint committee or other places as the joint 13 committee may direct under such security safeguards as the 14 joint committee shall determine in the interest of the com-
15 mon defense and security.

16 APPROPRIATIONS

17 SEC. 21. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of 18 any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so 19 much as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of 20 this Act.

86TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 3880

A BILL

To create the Freedom Commission for the development of the science of counteraction to the world Communist conspiracy and for the training and development of leaders in a total political war.

By Mr. HERLONG

FEBRUARY 2, 1959

Referred to the Committee on Un-American Activities

FOR A POLITICAL WEST POINT

Dorothy the Librarian

Dr. Dorothy Dodd, state librarian, has urged all public libraries in Florida to withdraw from circulation the following books: Uncle Wiggly, Tom Swift, Tarzan, the Bobbsey Twins, the Wizard of Oz, Horatio Alger, the Campfire Girls, the Hardy Boys, and others of the ilk. Dr. Dodd says these books are "poorly written, untrue to life, sensational, foolishly sentimental and consequently unwholesome for the children in your community."

Most Florida librarians, we are sorry to hear, seem ready to follow Dr. Dodd's recommendation. But children, nostalgic parents, editors and the vocal public have been having a field day of protest. Even Governor LeRoy Collins, who does not take a stand on every issue of the day, came out four-square in favor of freedom of choice for young readers, especially Alger readers. A grocery clerk as a boy, the governor declared, "I kind of grew up on Horatio Alger, and I hate to see him put out of business."

We have no wish to defend the literary quality of these attic classics; but Dr. Dodd's reasons for removing them are so tiresome and spurious that we must line up with the governor. They stem from that recurrent fad for teaching kids to "adapt to reality" by shunning fantasy. The same fad produced that wave of "here and now" children's books in which nothing happens except what happens every day, from alarm clock to applesauce (so why read?). The fad reached some kind of climax when Dr. Brock Chisholm, the eminent Canadian psychiatrist, declared that in the atomic age it is wrong to teach children to believe in Santa Claus on the ground that they will refuse to "think realistically" when they grow up.

As W. H. Auden put it, "I find such people . . . so unsympathetic and peculiar that I do not know how to argue with them." But let's state one argument just for the record. "Untrue to life" is the worst possible excuse for withholding a book from children. They know a lot more about what's true and untrue than parents do. Myth is truth, sentiment is truth, sensationalism is truth, giants, witches, magic carpets, cowardly lions, and the inventions of Tom Swift are all true and necessary parts of a healthy imaginative life. Adults who have lost touch with these truths are poorer for it. Let them not impose their prudish poverty on the next generation.

There slipped quietly into the congressional hopper last week a bill which deserves long, loud and public debate. We hope it survives this debate and in some form becomes law. Its sponsors, Representatives Herlong of Florida and Judd of Minnesota, are trying to close a gap—larger than any missile gap—in the range of weapons with which we are fighting the cold war.

The gap lies between our military preparedness at one end and our conventional diplomacy at the other. On this wide and surging central front we presently deploy a few smidgens of propaganda, economic aid and covert intelligence activities. To the Communists, on the other hand, this is the most important front of all. Throughout it, and in depth, they deploy all those techniques of political warfare, both overt and covert, which are the day-and-night work of the world's Communist parties and which were known to Lenin, their inventor, as "the organizational weapon."

•

This weapon, with and without the help of military threats, is chiefly responsible for all the gains the Communists have made since World War II. It becomes more potent with their rising capacity for economic, technical and cultural exports. Neither the Red army nor straight Marxist propaganda, with all their power, could alone have created student riots in Venezuela, frustrated the parliamentary system of Italy, won an election in the most literate state in India (Kerala), retained key footholds in the British and American labor movements, ridden the street whirlwinds of Baghdad to the edge of power, dazzled the opening mind of Africa, or poisoned strategic corners of press and university opinion from Paris to Tokyo. These are organizational successes, the fruit of long and rigorous training of dedicated individuals in a conspiratorial technique.

Lies and terror, as well as bribery and argument, are parts of this technique. But that is not the reason the free world has failed to counter it. Apathy and ignorance are the reasons. Given the will, the Communist political war can be countered by open and ethical methods which will uphold the values as well as the institutions of freedom.

The Herlong-Judd bill attempts to focus and organize this potential counteraction. It sets up what is tentatively called a Freedom Academy but what is really a West Point of political war. To selected candidates from the U.S. and all free countries, it would offer intensive courses in Communist political techniques and how to reverse or resist them. A graduate—whether American oil man, Indian peasant leader, African nationalist, Mexican labor boss, Japanese mayor or Indonesian bookseller—would be thus better equipped to meet the Communists, technique for technique and argument for argument, on his home ground. It sounds like a tall order. It is. The Soviets have scores of academies for training Communists in this operational science. They are way ahead of us. But the makings of a counter-science exist.

Among the first on our academy's faculty, for example, could be some U.S. and British labor leaders, who, since Marx and Lenin made unions a prime Communist target area, are veterans of many years of front-line Communist-fighting. In a recent New Leader, John Herling describes Mikoyan's recent lunch with Walter Reuther, James Carey and other U.S. unioneers and quotes the irritated Soviet deputy as saying: "The American trade union leaders are more antagonistic toward the Soviet Union than were the American capitalists whom I have met." To which Reuther replied that they understand the Communists better.

A similar sophistication is not beyond our grasp in other target institutions which need defending. A national academy would at least be cheaper and quicker than the very dear school kept by experience.

The Herlong-Judd proposals were not just dreamed up overnight. The gap in our armor has been long evident. The chief spark plugs behind the present bill, four dedicated young citizens of Florida, have been working at their plan since 1952. Besides an academy they propose a commission to act as a source of public intelligence on the political war, and to develop other forms of counteraction, both public and private, which are now neglected.

•

It will be objected that "counteraction" is too negative and static a concept for the cause of freedom. But it is surely not a negative act to collect and disseminate what knowledge we have about political infighting. Moreover, while diversity of belief is a hallmark of free man, a closer knowledge of their common enemy is bound to result in wider areas of free agreement and more constructive policies to promote freedom.

The Communist challenge does not confine itself to conventional arenas. As one good textbook puts it (Philip Selznick's Organizational Weapon), it tries to make all our institutions political and fights not only at the top but "everywhere in the social structure, wherever an increment of power can be squeezed from control of an institution or a portion of it." The big problem in meeting this total challenge is to avoid innocence on the one hand and hysteria on the other. An official academy would be the best guardian of a cool perspective. Thus the debate on the Herlong-Judd bill should certainly not divide the country along partisan or liberal-conservative lines; men of every political color except one can unite behind this proposal. It should be supported by all who take the Communist threat as seriously as the Communists intend it.

FLOATING PERIL, an iceberg more than 300 feet long above the surface, is sighted from plane looking for the Hedtoft. This area off Greenland is known to seamen as the place "where the bergs are born."

FIGHTING THE STORM, U.S. Coast Guard cutter Campbell lunges into a sea. Waves were running

Justice Silbert

June 19, 1959

My dear Mr. Chief Justice:

Thank you for your letter of June 17th and for your thoughtful suggestion of Thomas L. Fawick as a guest on PERSON TO PERSON.

There is only one program scheduled before the end of the season, and we are already committed to guests for that one. Arthur Godfrey will be doing the program next season, and I am, therefore, passing your letter along to him.

Sincerely yours,

Chief Justice Samuel H. Silbert
Court of Common Pleas
County of Cuyahoga
Cleveland 13, Ohio

mc

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS

COUNTY OF CUYAHOGA

CLEVELAND 13, OHIO

SAMUEL H. SILBERT
CHIEF JUSTICE

June 17th, 1959.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, New York.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am very well acquainted with you and your exceedingly interesting program which I see and hear every Friday on the Person to Person program.

Knowing your program and feeling that I understand the matters that might be of interest to you and your audiences, I thought you'd not mind my offering a nomination (wholly without authority) of a person who should interest you highly.

A friend of Mine, Thomas L. Fawick, of The Fawick Manufacturing Company would, in my opinion, be a terrific personality for one of your programs. He is one of the leading industrialists of our community and has innumerable patents to his credit.

He has risen from the ranks and has worked up to the top in true Horatio Alger fashion. These are great achievements per se, but that is not the big point about him. My big point is this:

Mr. Fawick has an artistic streak in him and is interested in musical instruments. He is particularly interested in the Stradivarius violin and has produced a violin which in beauty and in tone is in my opinion and that of experts of such a character that with sufficient aging it could well rank as a close rival of the great Stradivarius.

In addition thereto Mr. Fawick does not put these violins on the market, but goes about the country seeking young people of ability who are worthy and ambitious and after he's found them he generally either gives them a violin or loans them one so they can continue their careers wholly without cost to themselves

#2

I think a wonderful project and such help to further the arts is well worthy of being called to the public attention.

And now Mr. Fawick has discovered a new gadget which, in the opinion of experts who have examined it - a sound post - if inserted into the Stradivarius actually increases its tone and brings out and accentuates its mellowness and sweetness.

I mention this matter to you because I feel that you might be interested.

Yours most cordially,
Samuel H. Gilbert

SHS/wh.

Silbert Feted on Twin 50th Anniversaries

Chief Justice Samuel H. Silbert of Common Pleas Court is a veteran of 50 years as a lawyer and judge.

He is also a veteran of 50 years of married life, and his friends decided the occasion was too important to let pass unnoticed.

The jurist and his bride of a half-century, Anna, were given a surprise party at the home of a friend, Hyman Weinstein, 2654 Ramsay Road, Beachwood, yesterday afternoon.

The gathering included all 19 judges of Common Pleas Court.

Actually the Silberts' anniversary date is June 29, so the party amounted to a pre-golden wedding celebration. A trifle abashed by the unexpected attention but happy none the less, Judge Silbert declared:

"It's been one continuous honeymoon."

One of the country's outstanding judges in divorce proceedings, Silbert has untied the marital knots of perhaps 50,000 to 60,000 people during his years on the bench.

That's probably more, in his own words, than anyone else in the nation.

But the jurist said he believes he has also reconciled more people bent on divorce than any other man in the United States.

Judge Silbert and his wife, who were married in Steubenville, have no children.

Judge Samuel Silbert Mrs. Anna Silbert

Fifty years an attorney and judge, 50 years a married man. Plain Dealer Staff Photo

Silver, Charles

PERSONAL AND UNOFFICIAL

BOARD OF EDUCATION
OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
110 LIVINGSTON STREET
BROOKLYN 1, N.Y.

CHARLES H. SILVER
PRESIDENT

April 24, 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I want to thank you for joining the Sponsors' Committee for the luncheon honoring Dr. Benjamin Fine on Tuesday, May 20th at the Waldorf-Astoria, and to tell you how sorry I am that you were unable to attend the recent cocktail meeting of the Committee. More than 200 reservations were pledged. The enthusiasm shown by those who were there can't help but result in a very successful affair on May 20th.

I am sure I can depend on you and the other Committee members to help us attain a capacity attendance at the luncheon honoring Ben. The enclosed reservation form is for your convenience in making your own reservation early. Please persuade your friends to do likewise. If you can get together a full table of friends, so much the better. I will be delighted to send you additional reservation forms if you need them.

Again many thanks for your cooperation. I will be keeping in close touch with you and all members of the Sponsors' Committee.

Sincerely,

Charles H Silver

Chairman
Sponsors' Committee

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

April 11, 1958

Dear Mr. Silver:

Please forgive the delay in answering your letter of March 18th. I was absent from the city for about three weeks.

I would be happy to join the Committee to sponsor the luncheon for Dr. Benjamin Fine, at the Waldorf Astoria on the 20th. Unfortunately, it will not be possible for me to attend the luncheon since I will be out of the country at that time.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Charles H. Silver
President
Board of Education of the City of New York
110 Livingston Street
Brooklyn 1, New York

mcc

PERSONAL AND UNOFFICIAL

BOARD OF EDUCATION
OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
110 LIVINGSTON STREET
BROOKLYN 1, N.Y.

CHARLES H. SILVER
PRESIDENT

March 18, 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Dr. Benjamin Fine, former Education Editor of the New York Times, and recently appointed Dean of Education at Yeshiva University will be honored at a luncheon on Tuesday, May 20th at The Waldorf-Astoria by many of his New York friends, under the auspices of the Urban League of Greater New York.

This honor is being planned for Ben for the courage and zeal with which he has searched out and reported the facts during his 21 years with the Times. Specifically, the League will bestow an award upon him "for his outstanding reporting of the efforts of the New York school system to cope with the problems of de facto segregation and for the objectivity and honesty of his coverage of the Little Rock and Clinton, Tennessee incidents."

I am asking a representative selection of distinguished citizens to join me on the Sponsors Committee. If you will accept, I am asking the Committee to attend an only meeting on Wednesday, March 26th, at 4:30 P.M. in the Crane Suite (4th floor) of The Waldorf-Astoria; cocktails will be served.

In the interest of time, an immediate reply will be appreciated.

Sincerely,

Charles H. Silver

Chairman
Sponsors Committee

P.S. There will be no fund raising at the luncheon.

ELSIE SIMMONS
46 GRACE AVENUE, GREAT NECK, NEW YORK

Dear Miss Hoag,

My name won't mean anything to you -- but Mr. Murrow knows me as Mr. Paley's former secretary.

I'm very anxious for the enclosed note to reach him, but I'm afraid that if I address it to him and put it in the mail, it might be lost in the avalanche of letters that must be descending upon him right now.

So would you be good enough to take it into "protective custody" and see that it does reach your wonderful boss? Thank you!

Gratefully,

Elsie Simmons

February 18, 1959

Simons, Dr. Hans -

May 19, 1959

Dr. Hans Simons
The New School for Social Research
66 West 12th Street
New York 11, N.Y.

Dear Hans:

Thanks for your gracious letter of May 8. I really don't know what I shall be doing at the end of the so-called sabbatical, and I think it would be unfair to both of us and, more importantly, to the New School, were I to accept your kind invitation. Please let us wait until the year is over.

Both Janet and I were much refreshed and enlightened by the pleasant evening we had together.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

THE NEW SCHOOL
FOR SOCIAL RESEARCH
66 WEST TWELFTH STREET
NEW YORK 11, N. Y.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

OREGON 5-2700

May 8, 1959

Dear Ed:

Whether Felix Frankfurter said what he thinks he did to President Eisenhower at Columbia University he certainly is pleased with what he remembers. I, on the contrary, am displeased with what I remember to have said to you in connection with the New School.

I wonder whether I succeeded in convincing you that we -- in contradistinction to others pursuing you -- are not after your name and do not want to exploit you while you want to have your year of rest and reconsideration. What we are asking you is to permit us now to elect you to the Board of Trustees without making any public use of it. Your membership would go on public record only when you are ready to become active and agree to such an announcement.

The idea behind this serious and solemn proposal is to make sure that we shall be able to get you after your return to whatever may be in store for you come July 1, 1960. We know only too well that once you reappear in New York in whatever capacity you will be pursued even worse than is now the case.

I am very confident that your tentative acceptance now of a possible future commitment -- which you can cancel any time without the slightest embarrassment to you or anybody else -- will help you later to become active in connection with the New School. Even more will it help us to look forward to the future with additional confidence and anticipation.

Last but not least, I would love to leave this arrangement as my bequest to the New School. I could not think of a better one.

With many thanks for a charming and inspiring evening, and best regards,

Cordially,

Hans

Hans Simons
President

HS:LYF

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C.B.S.
485 Madison Avenue
New York City 22

Simons, Hans

July 9, 1958

Dr. Hans Simons
The New School for Social Research
66 West Twelfth Street
New York 11, N.Y.

Dear Dr. Simons:

Thank you very much for your letter to Mr. Murrow of July 8, which I am acknowledging because, as you know, he is away on vacation at present.

I will put your kind letter before him as soon as he returns.

Very truly yours,

Secretary to Mr. Murrow

skh

THE NEW SCHOOL
FOR SOCIAL RESEARCH
66 WEST TWELFTH STREET
NEW YORK 11, N. Y.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

OREGON 5-2700

July 8, 1958

Dear Ed:

I am glad to think that you are not now slaving in this muggy town but away for a rest and visits with relatives. After this long winter you certainly need such a break. Knowing your killing schedule I was especially grateful that you accepted our invitation at the end of the season and that you gave us such a helpful hand at a very crucial moment.

You did extremely well not only in terms of what you told the audience but also regarding the lasting impression which you left with them, and which in many instances resulted in sizeable contributions to our ever needy fund. That in addition you generously refused to accept the honorarium though it was available adds to the credit entry that you are already enjoying on the books of the New School and I am sure on the books of Heaven. It must long hence have reached the point where it not only guarantees you your own bliss in eternity but allows others to draw on the accumulated surplus. It must have flown from your "opera supererogationis" into the "thesaurus ecclesiae" -- whatever the church may be.

In the name of all those who stand to benefit from your good deeds here or elsewhere, and for myself as one of them I thank you again most warmly.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely,

Hans Simons
President

HS:LYF

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York City 22

Simon, Chas.

CHARLES SIMON
3D FLOOR
60 WALL STREET
NEW YORK 5, N. Y.

DECEMBER 7, 1959

MR. EDWARD R. MURROW
COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM
485 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK, NEW YORK

DEAR MR. MURROW:

THIS BOOK IS SENT WITH THE SINCERE HOPE THAT YOU WILL HAVE TIME TO GIVE IT THE CONSIDERATION I BELIEVE IT DESERVES.

SINCERELY,

Charles Simon

CS:JT
ATTACH.

Simon, Charles

January 16, 1959

Dear Mr. Simon:

Thank you for your letter of January 6th enclosing a copy of Dr. Livingston's Address and the copy of the Rockefeller Report.

I have not yet had an opportunity to study Dr. Livingston's Address, but hope to do so shortly.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Charles Simon
60 Wall Street
New York 5, New York

mcc

CHARLES SIMON

JANUARY 6, 1959

MR. EDWARD R. MURROW
COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM
485 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK, NEW YORK

DEAR SIR:

THE ENCLOSED DISTURBING SPEECH WAS DELIVERED IN OCTOBER BEFORE THE TRUST DIVISION OF THE NEW YORK STATE BANKERS ASSOCIATION IN ROCHESTER, NEW YORK. SINCE I HAVE NOT THE SOURCE MATERIAL TO SUBSTANTIATE DR. LIVINGSTON'S ADDRESS, I CAN ONLY FORWARD IT WITH THE ROCKEFELLER REPORT FOR YOUR PERUSAL.

I TRUST YOU WILL GIVE IT GRAVE CONSIDERATION.

SINCERELY,

Charles Simon

CHARLES SIMON
60 WALL STREET - 3D FLOOR
NEW YORK 5, NEW YORK

CS:JT
ENCLOSURES

By J. Sterling Livingston
Professor of Business Administration
Harvard University

THE SHOWDOWN WITH COMMUNISM--
WHEN AND HOW WILL IT TAKE PLACE?

The showdown with Communism is not inevitable. It is possible that the world will roll from the brink of one war to another without ever rolling over the brink. It is possible that this arms race--unlike any other in history--will not end in war, and that we will continue to develop more and more fantastic weapons but will never use them. It is possible that we are engaged in a perpetual struggle for survival that will continue without a showdown until both we and the Communists have exhausted our resources. In this unpredictable world, all these things are possible--but they are not probable. An eventual showdown with Communism is likely to occur. The critical question, therefore, is "when and how will it take place?"

Last fall Nikita Khrushchev stated that the Communists didn't need a war because they expected to win the struggle with capitalism by peaceful competition. "The threat to the United States," he said, "is not the ICBM, but in the field of peaceful production," and he added, "We declare war on the United States in the peaceful field of trade." Our State Department subsequently released a study in which it concluded that the Soviet economic offensive was indeed the "greatest challenge of all"--greater even than the threat of war. For that reason we should take a closer look at this aspect of the Communist challenge.

The Communist economic offensive has grown in intensity and has typically used three major tactical techniques. First, the Soviets have granted large credits to underdeveloped countries at low interest rates, which are to be paid in the surplus goods of the borrowing countries. Second, they have engaged in the pre-emptive purchase of commodities to obtain the cooperation of an underdeveloped country or to prevent it from obtaining the dollars or pounds needed to trade with the West; and third, they have dumped commodities on the world market at deeply cut prices for the purpose either of capturing those markets or of disrupting trade with the free world. All three of these tactics were used by the Soviets in their campaign to maneuver the Egyptian economy away from its ties with the West and to make it dependent on the COMMUNIST BLOC. AFTER GRANTING EGYPT SUBSTANTIAL CREDITS, THE SOVIET BLOC BEGAN LATE IN 1955 TO BUY EGYPTIAN COTTON, AND EVENTUALLY BID THE PRICE SO HIGH THAT EGYPTIAN COTTON WAS PRICED OUT OF WESTERN MARKETS. THE SOVIETS CONTINUED TO BID THE PRICE UP WHENEVER IT SHOWED SIGNS OF WEAKNESS. AT THE SAME TIME, THEY RESOLD SOME OF THEIR HIGH PRICED COTTON IN WESTERN MARKETS AT DEEPLY CUT PRICES. THE SOVIETS THUS WERE ABLE TO PREVENT EGYPT FROM OBTAINING WESTERN DOLLAR OR STERLING CREDITS WITH WHICH TO TRADE WITH THE WEST, AND SO MADE EGYPT INCREASINGLY DEPENDENT ON THE SOVIET BLOC. SIMILAR TACTICS WERE EMPLOYED IN THE CASE OF BURMA AND ITS RICE.

LAST YEAR, RUSSIA UPSET THE WORLD ALUMINUM MARKET BY SELLING ALUMINUM IN GREAT BRITAIN AT TWO CENTS UNDER THE PREVAILING WORLD PRICE. THE RUSSIANS WERE THUS ABLE TO CAPTURE A PORTION OF THE BRITISH MARKET FROM THE ALUMINUM COMPANY OF CANADA AND TO CAUSE THE TEMPORARY DISRUPTION OF THE WORLD ALUMINUM MARKET. LARGE SOVIET EXPORTS OF TIN SIMILARLY HAVE DISRUPTED THE INTERNATIONAL TIN MARKET, BANKRUPTED THE TIN STABILIZATION AGENCY IN LONDON, AND UPSET THE ECONOMIES OF SUCH TIN-PRODUCING COUNTRIES AS BOLIVIA, MALAY, INDONESIA, AND THAILAND. "ECONOMIC AGGRESSION BY RUSSIA," AS CHARGED BY THE BOLIVIAN FOREIGN MINISTER BEFORE THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY, WAS "DESIGNED TO BRING ABOUT THE COLLAPSE OF THE INTERNATIONAL TIN MARKET" AND HAS RESULTED IN WIDESPREAD UNEMPLOYMENT FOLLOWING THE CLOSING OF MINES IN SOME OF THE TIN-PRODUCING COUNTRIES. THESE SOVIET MOVES SEEMED TO HAVE BEEN DESIGNED BOTH TO CAPTURE A PORTION OF THE INTERNATIONAL TIN MARKET AND TO CREATE ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL INSTABILITY, WHICH THE COMMUNISTS HOPE TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF IN ORDER TO GAIN CONTROL OF THESE COUNTRIES.

SIMILAR TACTICS HAVE BEEN USED BY THE CHINESE COMMUNISTS TO CAPTURE ASIAN TEXTILE MARKETS. IT IS REPORTED THAT AS A RESULT OF DEEP PRICE CUTS AND BARTER ARRANGEMENTS, THE CHINESE HAVE CAPTURED ALMOST FIFTY PER CENT OF INDIA'S TEXTILE MARKETS DURING THE PAST SIX MONTHS, THUS SERIOUSLY IMPAIRING INDIA'S FIVE-YEAR PLAN.

THERE CAN BE LITTLE DOUBT THAT THE MOUNTING COMMUNIST ECONOMIC OFFENSIVE PRESENTS A SERIOUS CHALLENGE TO THE FREE WORLD. THERE IS, HOWEVER, LITTLE REASON TO

CONCLUDE THAT IT WILL BE A DECISIVE FACTOR IN THE STRUGGLE BETWEEN COMMUNISM AND CAPITALISM, PROVIDED WE TAKE AGGRESSIVE ACTION TO COUNTER THE COMMUNIST MOVES. MUCH OF THE SUCCESS OF THE COMMUNIST ECONOMIC OFFENSIVE HAS BEEN ACHIEVED BECAUSE THE WESTERN NATIONS HAVE FAILED TO ORGANIZE TO MEET THIS OFFENSIVE. THE WESTERN GOVERNMENTS DID NOT HAVE EFFECTIVE IMPORT RESTRICTIONS TO PREVENT THE DUMPING OF COMMODITIES BY THE COMMUNISTS, AND FOR THAT REASON THE MARKETS OF THE FREE WORLD WERE PARTICULARLY VULNERABLE TO SOVIET AND CHINESE EXPORTS. BUT WHEN THE ALUMINUM COMPANY OF CANADA, WHICH SUPPLIES EIGHTY PER CENT OF BRITAIN'S ALUMINUM NEEDS, ASKED THE BRITISH BOARD OF TRADE TO IMPOSE ANTIDUMPING DUTIES AGAINST SOVIET ALUMINUM, THE RUSSIANS QUICKLY AGREED TO RESTRICT THEIR EXPORTS OF ALUMINUM TO FIFTEEN THOUSAND TONS, OR ABOUT FIVE PER CENT OF BRITISH IMPORTS, RATHER THAN RISK COMPLETE CURTAILMENT BY THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT. THE RUSSIANS CLEARLY DID NOT WISH TO FORCE A SHOWDOWN, BECAUSE THEY REALIZED THAT THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT COULD COMPLETELY FORCE THEM OUT OF THAT COUNTRY'S MARKETS. ALTHOUGH IMPORT RESTRICTIONS BY THE BRITISH HAVE NOT STABILIZED THE INTERNATIONAL TIN MARKET, CONCERTED IMPORT CONTROLS BY ALL WESTERN NATIONS COULD EFFECTIVELY BLOCK THE FURTHER DUMPING OF TIN BY THE CHINESE AND THE RUSSIANS. INDEED, IT IS HIGHLY PROBABLE THAT THE SOVIETS WILL VOLUNTARILY AGREE TO RESTRICT TIN EXPORTS IN ORDER TO AVOID CONCERTED INTERNATIONAL RESTRICTION OF SOVIET TRADE.

THE COMMUNIST ECONOMIC OFFENSIVE NEED NOT AND WILL NOT BE DECISIVE IF THE UNITED STATES AND THE WESTERN NATIONS ORGANIZE TO MEET IT. WE SUCCESSFULLY WAGED ECONOMIC WARFARE DURING WORLD WAR II AND WE CAN DO IT AGAIN BY RE-ESTABLISHING AN OFFICE OF ECONOMIC WARFARE AND GIVING IT THE FUNDS AND AUTHORITY TO DEAL WITH THE COMMUNIST TACTICS. THE COMMUNIST ECONOMIC OFFENSIVE ACTUALLY PROVIDES US WITH AN EXCEPTIONAL OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH CLOSER TIES WITH THE UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES WHOSE ECONOMIES THE COMMUNISTS SEEK TO CONTROL. THE EGYPTIAN GOVERNMENT, FOR EXAMPLE, HAS ANNOUNCED A DISCOUNT POLICY WHICH IN EFFECT WILL ENABLE THE WEST TO PURCHASE COTTON AT TWENTY-ONE PER CENT BELOW THE PRICES TO WHICH IT HAS BEEN BID BY THE SOVIET BLOC. THE GOVERNMENTS OF MALAYA, INDONESIA, THAILAND, AND BOLIVIA HAVE SHARPLY CRITICIZED THE SOVIET TIN-DUMPING TACTICS AND HAVE BECOME ACUTELY AWARE OF THE DANGER OF BECOMING DEPENDENT ON THE COMMUNISTS. IF WE FORCE A SHOWDOWN WITH THE COMMUNISTS ON THE ECONOMIC FRONT, WE WILL FIND THAT WE HAVE EAGER ALLIES AMONG THE UNDERDEVELOPED AND UNCOMMITTED NATIONS OF THE WORLD.

THE COMMUNIST ECONOMIC OFFENSIVE NEED NOT BE A GRAVE THREAT TO THE FREE WORLD. ON THE CONTRARY, IT PRESENTS US WITH AN OPPORTUNITY TO LAUNCH A COUNTER-ATTACK AGAINST THE COMMUNISTS WHERE THEY ARE MOST VULNERABLE. A SHOWDOWN ON THE ECONOMIC FRONT COULD BRING COMMUNIST ADVANCES IN THE UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES TO A HALT, AND MIGHT EVEN CONTRIBUTE TO A CUTBACK IN ARMAMENT PRODUCTION.

LET ME EXPLAIN WHY I BELIEVE THIS TO BE THE CASE. THERE IS CONSIDERABLE EVIDENCE THAT WE HAVE OVERESTIMATED THE STRENGTH OF RUSSIAN INDUSTRY, AND THAT THE HUGE SOVIET MILITARY PROGRAM IS CAUSING SERIOUS STRAIN AND IMBALANCE WITHIN THEIR ECONOMY. AS THE EDITORS OF FORTUNE REPORTED IN THE JULY 1958 ISSUE OF THAT MAGAZINE:

> . . .MANY AMERICANS HAVE ALLOWED THEMSELVES TO BE BAMBOOZLED INTO BELIEVING ALL SORTS OF LEGENDS ABOUT A PRODIGIOUS SOVIET ECONOMIC GROWTH THAT WILL ENABLE THE RUSSIANS TO SURPASS US SOON, AT LEAST IN INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION . . . . ALLEN DULLES, THE DIRECTOR OF THE U. S. CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY, CONTRIBUTED TO THE LEGEND WITH A SPEECH DELIVERED IN APRIL, IN WHICH HE CITED, WITHOUT CHALLENGING, THE RUSSIANS' CLAIM THAT THEIR INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION WAS UP 11 PER CENT IN THE PAST YEAR . . . . SOVIET INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION IS NOT GROWING BY 11 PER CENT OR ANY SUCH AWESOME FIGURE, AND SOVIET G.N.P. IS SCARCELY GROWING AT ALL . . . . THERE ARE SERIOUS DISTORTIONS AND IMBALANCES IN THE SOVIET ECONOMY.[1]

THE RATE OF GROWTH OF SOVIET INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION HAS BEEN DECLINING SINCE ITS EARLY RECOVERY FROM THE WARTIME DISLOCATION. THE EDITORS OF FORTUNE ESTIMATE THAT WHEREAS SOVIET INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION GAINED NINE PER CENT A YEAR IN THE EARLY 1950s, IT GAINED ABOUT EIGHT PER CENT IN 1956, AND ONLY SIX PER CENT LAST YEAR. IN ORDER TO EXPAND THE PRODUCTION OF CONSUMER GOODS MODESTLY, RESOURCES AVAILABLE TO SOVIET HEAVY INDUSTRY HAVE ACTUALLY BEEN CUT BACK. THE SOVIET MILITARY PROGRAM HAS NOT BEEN AFFECTED APPRECIABLY, HOWEVER, AND CONTINUES TO TAKE TWENTY-SIX PER CENT OF SOVIET

---

1 - FORTUNE, JULY 1958, P. 81.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION.

THE SOVIETS CANNOT ENGAGE IN A SUBSTANTIALLY LARGER SCALE OF ECONOMIC WARFARE WITHOUT CUTTING BACK ON EITHER THEIR MILITARY PROGRAM OR THE EXPANSION OF THEIR HEAVY INDUSTRY. IN FACT, IF THE SOVIETS DO NOT SOON REDUCE THEIR MILITARY EXPENDITURES SIGNIFICANTLY, MANY OBSERVERS BELIEVE, KHRUSHCHEV WILL BE UNABLE TO DELIVER THE CONSUMER GOODS HE HAS PROMISED. THE STRAIN ON THE SOVIET RESOURCES WILL BECOME SEVERE BY THE EARLY 1960S BECAUSE THE RUSSIANS FACE A SERIOUS MANPOWER SHORTAGE EXACTLY AT THE TIME OUR OWN GENERATION OF WAR BABIES WILL REACH MATURITY AND BEGIN TO SWELL OUR RESERVOIR OF SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL MANPOWER. THE SHORTAGE OF RUSSIAN MANPOWER--THE RESULT OF THE GERMAN INVASION IN WORLD WAR II--WILL SHARPLY INCREASE THE CONFLICT BETWEEN THE DEMANDS FOR CONSUMER GOODS, HEAVY INDUSTRY, AND THE TRADE-AND-AID WAR. THUS, IF WE ENGAGE THE SOVIETS IN A LARGE-SCALE ECONOMIC WAR, WE MAY BE ABLE TO FORCE THEM TO REDUCE THEIR MILITARY EXPENDITURES. IF WE PROTECT THE MARKETS OF THE UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES, THE RUSSIANS MAY BE FORCED TO GRANT INCREASED CREDITS TO THOSE COUNTRIES IN ORDER TO KEEP THEM UNCOMMITTED. A SHOWDOWN WITH COMMUNISM ON THE ECONOMIC FRONT MIGHT, THEREFORE, SIGNIFICANTLY SLOW THE COMMUNIST MOVEMENT AND BRING ABOUT A REDUCTION IN ARMAMENT EXPENDITURES THAT COULD LESSEN THE DANGER OF WAR.

THIS, OF COURSE, IS AN ATTRACTIVE CONCEPT, BUT IT ASSUMES THAT NIKITA KHRUSHCHEV REALLY EXPECTS TO WIN THE STRUGGLE WITH CAPITALISM BY PEACEFUL COMPETITION AND DOES NOT EXPECT TO WIN BY USING THE INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILE. BUT HOW REALISTIC IS THIS ASSUMPTION IN VIEW OF THE FACT THAT THE SOVIETS CONTINUE TO GIVE WEAPONS PRODUCTION OVER-RIDING PRIORITY AMONG THE CLAIMS ON SOVIET RESOURCES, AND CONTINUE TO POUR MORE THAN A FOURTH OF ALL RUSSIAN PRODUCTION INTO THEIR MILITARY PROGRAM? IF THE ALLOCATION OF SOVIET RESOURCES MEANS ANYTHING, IT MEANS THAT THE COMMUNISTS ARE BETTING ON WINNING BY MILITARY FORCE RATHER THAN BY PEACEFUL TRADE. IT MEANS THAT THE ECONOMIC OFFENSIVE IS MERELY A LARGE-SCALE DIVERSION AND THAT THE ULTIMATE SHOWDOWN WILL BE DETERMINED NOT BY THE TACTICS OF ECONOMIC WARFARE, BUT BY

THE RELATIVE PROGRESS OF SOVIET AND UNITED STATES PRODUCTION OF INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILES AND THERMONUCLEAR WEAPONS.

THE SHIELD OF TIME AND DISTANCE THAT HAS PROTECTED THE CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES FROM ATTACK IN TWO WORLD WARS, HAS BEEN SHATTERED BY THE INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILE. ARMED WITH THERMONUCLEAR WARHEADS, THESE MISSILES MAY WELL GIVE THE SOVIETS A CAPABILITY NEVER BEFORE POSSESSED BY AN AGGRESSOR IN THE HISTORY OF MANKIND--AND THAT IS THE CAPABILITY TO DESTROY ITS ENEMIES IN A SINGLE SURPRISE ATTACK. AND THAT IS THE CAPABILITY THE RUSSIANS ARE STRIVING TO ACHIEVE BY THE EARLY 1960s.

IT IS DIFFICULT TO APPRECIATE THE FULL SIGNIFICANCE OF EITHER THE TECHNOLOGICAL REVOLUTION WHICH IS TAKING PLACE IN MILITARY WEAPONS, OR THE LEAD THE SOVIETS HAVE ACHIEVED IN BALLISTIC MISSILE PRODUCTION. WE HAVE TAKEN THE SPECTACULAR PERFORMANCE OF THE "PIONEER" IN OUR RECENT MOONSHOT AS EVIDENCE OF OUR PROGRESS IN MISSILE DEVELOPMENT, BUT THE "PIONEER" ACTUALLY UNDERSCORES SOVIET LEADERSHIP IN THIS FIELD BECAUSE ALMOST A YEAR AGO THE RUSSIANS SUCCESSFULLY FIRED A ROCKET WITH THREE TIMES THE THRUST OF THE "PIONEER."

THE ENORMOUS DESTRUCTION POWER WHICH THE SOVIETS WILL SOON COMMAND CAN BE DEMONSTRATED BY COMPARING MODERN THERMONUCLEAR WEAPONS WITH THE FAMOUS BLOCKBUSTERS OF WORLD WAR II, WHICH HAD AN EXPLOSIVE CHARGE OF TWENTY TONS OF TNT. THE HIROSHIMA ATOMIC BOMB HAD AN EXPLOSIVE POWER EQUIVALENT TO TWENTY THOUSAND TONS OF TNT, OR A THOUSAND BLOCKBUSTERS. THERMONUCLEAR BOMBS HAVE ALREADY BEEN TESTED THAT HAVE AN EXPLOSIVE POWER EQUIVALENT TO TWENTY MILLION TONS OF TNT, OR A MILLION BLOCKBUSTERS. A GROUP OF THE PRESIDENT'S SCIENTIFIC ADVISERS ARE REPORTED TO HAVE ESTIMATED THAT WITHIN TWO YEARS THE RUSSIANS WILL BE ABLE TO FIRE A SALVO OF BETWEEN ONE HUNDRED AND ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FIVE INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILES AT THE CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES BASES OF OUR STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND. IF THESE MISSILES HAVE WARHEADS IN THE TWENTY-MEGATON RANGE--AN ASSUMPTION THAT IS REASONABLE IN VIEW OF THE ONE-AND-ONE-HALF-TON SPUTNIK III--THIS MISSILE SALVO WOULD HAVE AN EXPLOSIVE POWER EQUIVALENT TO

ONE HUNDRED TO ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FIVE MILLION BLOCKBUSTERS. THE SOVIETS ALSO HAVE A FLEET OF ABOUT FIFTY MISSILE-LAUNCHING SUBMARINES THAT COULD LAUNCH A MISSILE ATTACK SIMULTANEOUSLY AGAINST OUR MAJOR COASTAL CITIES AND OUR MILITARY INSTALLATIONS, ADDING THE POWER OF PERHAPS ANOTHER FIFTY MILLION BLOCKBUSTERS TO A SURPRISE ATTACK.

SECRETARY OF DEFENSE MCELROY HAS STATED THAT THE SOVIETS ARE AHEAD IN THE PRODUCTION OF INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILES, AND SECRETARY OF THE AIR FORCE DOUGLAS RECENTLY ANNOUNCED THAT THE SOVIETS HAVE SUCCESSFULLY FIRED "DURING THE PAST YEAR" SEVERAL INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILES OVER THEIR FULL RANGE OF FOUR TO FIVE THOUSAND MILES. HE ADDED THAT THE RUSSIANS WILL HAVE A SMALL NUMBER OF INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILES COMBAT-READY NEXT YEAR AND THAT A SUBSTANTIAL NUMBER OF THESE WEAPONS WILL BE AVAILABLE TO THE SOVIETS BY 1960. WE, ON THE OTHER HAND, WON'T HAVE A WORKABLE ANTIMISSILE DEFENSE SYSTEM BEFORE 1962 AT THE EARLIEST. WE WON'T BE ABLE, THEREFORE, TO STOP A SINGLE INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILE FIRED AT US BETWEEN 1960 AND 1962. IN THE EVENT OF WAR, THEY ALL WOULD GET THROUGH. EVEN AFTER 1962, OUR MOST ENTHUSIASTIC ANTIMISSILE ENGINEERS DON'T BELIEVE WE COULD INTERCEPT MORE THAN HALF THE MISSILES FIRED AT US. SINCE THE RUSSIANS ARE EXPECTED TO HAVE TWO THOUSAND ICBM'S BY 1964, THAT MEANS ONE THOUSAND COULD GET THROUGH, WITH AN EXPLOSIVE FORCE OF ONE BILLION BLOCKBUSTERS. IT IS APPARENT THAT OUR ABILITY TO PREVENT A MILITARY SHOWDOWN WITH THE COMMUNISTS DEPENDS INCREASINGLY ON OUR ABILITY TO RETALIATE, AND THUS TO DETER WAR.

AT PRECISELY THE SAME TIME THAT SOVIET NUCLEAR STRIKING POWER IS GROWING SO ALARMINGLY, HOWEVER, OUR OWN RETALIATORY CAPABILITY WILL BE DETERIORATING DANGEROUSLY. THE STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND'S BASES, FROM WHICH A RETALIATORY ATTACK MUST BE MOUNTED, ARE BECOMING INCREASINGLY VULNERABLE TO SURPRISE ATTACK. ALMOST ALL AMERICAN AIR BASES IN EUROPE, AFRICA, AND ASIA ARE NOW WITHIN RANGE OF SOVIET OPERATIONAL AND ON-SITE INTERMEDIATE-RANGE BALLISTIC MISSILES. AS MAJOR ALEXANDER P. DE SEVERSKY TESTIFIED BEFORE THE SENATE PREPAREDNESS INVESTIGATING SUBCOMMITTEE, "EVERY BASE AND EVERY STRATEGIC POINT IN THE NATO ANATOMY IS ALREADY XEROED BY THESE MISSILES AND COULD BE WIPED OUT INSTANTANEOUSLY AND SIMULTANEOUSLY." OUR BASES IN JAPAN, FORMOSA, AND THE PHILIPPINES ARE SIMILARLY VULNERABLE TO ATTACH BY OPERATIONAL MID-RANGE MISSILES NOW IN THE HANDS OF THE CHINESE, AND THESE MISSILES MAY SOON BE EQUIPPED WITH THERMONUCLEAR WARHEADS. (THIS, OF COURSE, IS WHAT MAKES THE SITUATION IN THE FORMOSA STRAITS SO DANGEROUS AND UNDOUBTEDLY EXPLAINS WHY SECRETARY DULLES HAS FOUND THE CHINESE REDS UNWILLING TO NEGOTIATE OVER QUEMOY.) THE CHINESE ALSO ARE EXPECTED TO BE EQUIPPED EVENTUALLY WITH SOVIET INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILES THAT WILL BE ABLE TO REACH THE CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES. THIS PREDICTION IS SUPPORTED BY THE CHINESE ANNOUNCEMENT THAT THEY ARE MAKING PLANS TO LAUNCH THEIR OWN EARTH SATELLITE.

DURING THE EARLY 1960S, WHEN THE SOVIETS HAVE SUFFICIENT INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILES, THEY WILL, THEREFORE, HAVE THE CAPABILITY TO NEUTRALIZE OUR AIR BASES THROUGH THE WORLD.

MOST OF OUR MILITARY LEADERS BELIEVE THAT AT THE PRESENT TIME A SOVIET SURPRISE ATTACK COULD NOT DESTROY ENOUGH OF OUR RETALIATORY FORCES TO PREVENT DEVASTATION OF THE SOVIET UNION. BUT EVEN NOW SOME MILITARY EXPERTS ARE OF THE OPINION THAT THE RUSSIANS POSSESS THE CAPABILITY TO DESTROY CLOSE TO ONE HUNDRED PER CENT OF OUR STRATEGIC FORCES THROUGH A SURPRISE COMBINATION ATTACK BY SUBMARINE-LAUNCHED MISSILES, LONG-RANGE AIRCRAFT, AND NUCLEAR SABOTAGE. DR. ELLIS A. JOHNSON, HEAD OF THE OPERATIONS ANALYSIS OFFICE AT JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY - WHICH HAS BEEN CONDUCTING TACTICAL AND STRATEGIC STUDIES FOR THE ARMY FOR TEN YEARS - BELIEVES, FOR EXAMPLE, THAT A RUSSIAN ATTACK WOULD BE MORE THAN ADEQUATE RIGHT NOW TO DESTROY OUR ABILITY TO RETALIATE EFFECTIVELY, AND SOME MILITARY MEN IN THE NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENSE COMMAND ARE REPORTED TO SHARE THIS OPINION. AS LARGE NUMBERS OF SOVIET INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILES WITH THERMONUCLEAR WARHEADS BECOME OPERATIONAL, THE SOVIETS CLEARLY WILL HAVE A SUBSTANTIALLY GREATER CAPABILITY TO DESTROY OUR AIR AND MISSILE BASES AND OUR ABILITY TO RETALIATE EFFECTIVELY.

THIS SITUATION WILL INCREASE THE LIKELIHOOD OF A MILITARY SHOWDOWN, BECAUSE THE SOVIETS MAY WELL BELIEVE THAT THEY CAN PREVENT THOSE OF OUR BOMBERS THAT ARE AIRBORNE AFTER A SURPRISE ATTACK FROM GETTING THROUGH TO RUSSIAN TARGETS. THE UNITED NATIONS DEBATE EARLY THIS YEAR ON THE FLIGHT OF AMERICAN BOMBERS OVER THE NORTH POLE REVEALED THAT UNDER OUR "FAIL SAFE" SYSTEM, OUR BOMBERS MUST RETURN TO THEIR BASES UNLESS THEY RECEIVE ORDERS ISSUED BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TO PROCEED TO THEIR TARGETS. IT CAN BE ASSUMED, THEREFORE, THAT ANY SOVIET SURPRISE ATTACK WILL BE INITIATED BY NUCLEAR OR OTHER SABOTAGE DIRECTED AT THE WHITE HOUSE TO PREVENT THE PRESIDENT FROM ISSUING SUCH ORDERS. EVEN IF SABOTAGE DID NOT PREVENT THE NECESSARY ORDERS FROM BEING ISSUED, THE SOVIETS MIGHT BE ABLE TO PREVENT OUR RELATIVELY SLOW B-47S AND B-52S FROM PENETRATING SOVIET ANTI-AIRCRAFT DEFENSES. THE PRESENT RUSSIAN AIR DEFENSE SYSTEM IS CONCEDED TO BE BETTER THAN OUR OWN, AND THE SOVIETS ARE NOW BUILDING AROUND THEIR MAJOR CITIES AND MILITARY INSTALLATIONS A NEW AIR DEFENSE SYSTEM EMPLOYING A COMBINATION OF GREATLY IMPROVED RADAR AND ANTI-AIRCRAFT MISSILES WITH THERMONUCLEAR WARHEADS. SOME MILITARY EXPERTS BELIEVE THAT WHEN THIS AIR DEFENSE SYSTEM IS COMPLETED (SOMETIME BETWEEN 1960 AND 1962), NEITHER THE B-52S NOR THE B-58S WILL BE ABLE TO PENETRATE IT. WEHRKUNDE, A GERMAN MILITARY JOURNAL, FOR EXAMPLE, CARRIED AN ARTICLE IN ITS APRIL 1957 ISSUE WHICH CONCLUDED THAT ANTI-AIRCRAFT MISSILES WITH THERMONUCLEAR WARHEADS WILL ENVELOP AN AIRPLANE WITH A FIREBALL LONG BEFORE IT REACHES ITS TARGET AREA, PERHAPS AS FAR AS NINE HUNDRED MILES FROM THE BOUNDARY OF THE NATION BEING ATTACKED. THE ARTICLE STATED:

> THE EXPLOSION OF A NUCLEAR WARHEAD WITH A MEDIUM CHARGE (ONE MEGATON, FOR INSTANCE) WILL MELT THE STRONGEST SKIN OF A BOMBER AT A DISTANCE OF 2 OR 3 MILES. A CHARGE OF 20 MEGATONS WOULD INCREASE THE EFFECTIVE DISTANCE TO 12 MILES AND FOR THIN SHEET METAL UP TO MORE THAN 18 MILES . . . . A THERMONUCLEAR EXPLOSION CANNOT BE COUNTERED BY DOUBLING ALTITUDE AND SPEED. NEITHER THE B-58 HUSTLER, THE F-104 STARFIGHTER, NOR THE WHOLE ROW OF OTHER PLANES IN PREPARATION TO FOLLOW THESE TWO INTO PRODUCTION, WILL BE ABLE TO SURVIVE.[1]

---

1 CAMILLE ROUGERON, WEHRKUNDE (GERMANY), APRIL 1957. (TRANSLATED AND DIGESTED BY THE MILITARY REVIEW, JANUARY 1958, PP. 108-109).

It is significant, however, that Major Alexander P. de Seversky testified to the Senate Preparedness Investigating Subcommittee that:

> In view of the rapid increase in the electronic defense capability of the U.S.S.R., with the corresponding increase in the rate of attrition of our offensive forces, the size of our Strategic Air Command should be quadrupled.[1]

The Russians expect, of course, to take some punishment in the event of a nuclear war. But it is entirely possible that they will conclude, after this new anti-aircraft defense system is installed, that they can keep their losses to an acceptable minimum.

The Soviets must, of course, take into account our intermediate-range "Thor" liquid-fueled ballistic missiles, which are being activated in the British Isles and other NATO countries. These missiles have "soft" bases with launching sites on the surface, however, and are as vulnerable to destruction as are existing air bases. Since these missiles require from two hours to two days to prepare for firing, it may not be possible to get them off the ground in the ten to fifteen minutes' warning time available in a surprise attack. Mr. Duncan Sandys, the British Minister of Defense, has assured the House of Commons, moreover, that the nuclear warheads for the missiles will be under American control and that the missiles will not be fired without a "positive decision" by both the British and American governments. Under these circumstances, our initial ballistic missile squadrons constitute a questionable deterrent.

However, time will start to run against the Soviets in 1960 when our first Atlas operational intercontinental ballistic missiles are expected to be placed on launching pads at the Warren Air Force Base in Cheyenne, Wyoming. The equalizing

---

[1] Hearings before the Preparedness Investigating Subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services, United States Senate, 85th Congreee, First and Second Session, Part 1, p. 1307.

SWEEP OF TIME WILL GAIN MOMENTUM LATE IN 1960 WHEN THE FIRST OF THE NAVY'S SOLID-FUELED, SUBMARINE-LAUNCHED POLARIS MISSILES IS SCHEDULED TO BECOME OPERATIONAL. SINCE THE POLARIS SUBMARINES CAN HIDE UNDER THE POLAR ICE CAP, THEY CANNOT BE DESTROYED BY A SURPRISE ATTACK. OUR RETALIATORY CAPABILITY WILL FURTHER INCREASE WHEN THE ARMY'S SOLID-FUELED, PERSHING INTERMEDIATE-RANGE BALLISTIC MISSILES ARE READY FOR LAUNCHING FROM MOBILE PLATFORMS THAT CAN BE MOVED BY TRUCK FROM SITE TO SITE, THUS AVOIDING EASY DETECTION AND DESTRUCTION IN A SURPRISE ATTACK. BY 1963 OR 1964 THE AIR FORCE IS EXPECTED TO HAVE THE MINUTEMAN, A SOLID-FUELED ICBM, WHICH CAN BE LAUNCHED FROM "HARD" UNDERGROUND SITES THAT WILL BE EXTREMELY DIFFICULT TO DESTROY IN A SURPRISE ATTACK, AND A SOLID-FUELED IRBM, WHICH CAN BE LAUNCHED FROM B-52 BOMBERS ONE THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED MILES FROM THEIR TARGETS. IF OUR BALLISTIC MISSILE PROGRAM IS CARRIED OUT ON SCHEDULE, THEREFORE, AFTER 1964 IT WILL NOT BE POSSIBLE FOR THE SOVIETS TO DESTROY OUR ABILITY TO RETALIATE FROM A SURPRISE ATTACK. CLEARLY, THEN, IF THE SOVIETS DO NOT USE THEIR NUCLEAR STRIKING FORCES BEFORE 1964, THEY WILL FORFEIT ANY OPPORTUNITY THEY MAY HAVE TO ATTACK AND ESCAPE ANNIHILATION BY OUR RETALIATORY MISSILES.

THE CONSEQUENCES OF A NUCLEAR WAR MAY BE TOO HORRIBLE FOR US TO CONTEMPLATE, BUT AGGRESSORS HAVE NEVER BEEN DETERRED BY CONCERN OVER THE CONSEQUENCES OF WAR. NEITHER NAPOLEON NOR HITLER COULD HAVE ACCURATELY APPRAISED THE CONSEQUENCES OF THEIR ATTACK ON RUSSIA, NOR COULD THE JAPANESE HAVE APPRAISED THE OUTCOME OF THEIR ATTACK ON PEARL HARBOR. THE SOVIETS DID NOT PROPERLY CONSIDER THE CONSEQUENCES OF THE KOREAN WAR, NOR THE BRITISH OF THEIR ATTACK ON SUEZ, NOR THE FRENCH OF THEIR BOMBING OF TUNISIA. THERE IS NO PRECEDENT, THEREFORE, FOR THINKING THAT MODERN AGGRESSORS WILL BE DETERRED BY THE AWFUL CONSEQUENCES OF A NUCLEAR WAR. THIS CONCLUSION IS UNDERSCORED BY THE PEKING ANNOUNCEMENT THAT EVEN IF A NEW WORLD WAR OCCURS, CHINA, WITH ITS POPULATION OF SIX HUNDRED MILLION " WOULD STILL HAVE THREE HUNDRED MILLION PEOPLE LEFT."

ALTHOUGH THERE IS NO WAY TO DETERMINE WHETHER THE SOVIETS ACTUALLY INTEND TO LAUNCH A NUCLEAR ATTACK DURING THE PERIOD FROM 1960 TO 1964, SUCH AN ATTACH WOULD BE ENTIRELY CONSISTENT WITH CURRENT SOVIET MILITARY DOCTRINE. THE SOVIET GENERAL

STAFF RECOGNIZED IN 1955 THAT NO NATION COULD WIN A NUCLEAR WAR IF IT FIRST SUFFERED A FULL-SCALE ATTACK AND CONCLUDED, THEREFORE, THAT THE SOVIET UNION HAD TO BE ABLE TO DESTROY ITS ENEMIES WITH A SURPRISE PRE-EMPTIVE OR FORESTALLING BLOW. ACCORDINGLY, IT ADOPTED THE DOCTRINE OF PRE-EMPTIVE WAR - OFTEN REFERRED TO AS THE KHRUSHCHEV DOCTRINE. THIS DOCTRINE WAS OUTLINED AS FOLLOWS BY MARSHAL P. ROTMISTROV IN AN ARTICLE, "ON THE ROLE OF SURPRISE IN CONTEMPORARY WAR," PUBLISHED IN FEBRUARY 1955 BY MILITARY THOUGHT, THE OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE SOVIET GENERAL STAFF:

> . . . ONE CAN SAY DIRECTLY THAT, UNDER CIRCUMSTANCES WHERE ATOMIC AND HYDROGEN WEAPONS ARE UTILIZED, SURPRISE IS ONE OF THE DECIDING FACTORS IN ATTAINING SUCCESS, NOT ONLY IN A BATTLE OR AN OPERATION, BUT ALSO IN THE WAR AS A WHOLE. IN SOME CASES, A SURPRISE ATTACK WITH MASSIVE UTILIZATION OF NEW WEAPONS CAN BRING ABOUT THE RAPID COLLAPSE OF A STATE . . .
>
> . . . SINCE AGGRESSORS HAVE TOO OFTEN UTILIZED SURPRISE ATTACK AGAINST OTHER STATES IN THE HISTORY OF THE PAST, WE CANNOT IGNORE THESE LESSONS OF HISTORY AND MUST ALWAYS BE READY FOR PRE-EMPTIVE ACTIONS AGAINST THE CRAFTINESS OF THE AGGRESSORS.
>
> . . . OUR BLOWS MUST BE A COMPLETE SURPRISE WITH RESPECT TO SPEED . . . POWER . . . (AND) TIMING . . . FOR THE ENEMIES TRYING TO COMMIT AN ACT OF AGGRESSION AGAINST THE U.S.S.R.[1]

THE DOCTRINE OF PRE-EMPTIVE WAR EXPLAINS THE INCREASINGLY VICIOUS COMMUNIST CAMPAIGN TO CREATE AN IMAGE OF THE UNITED STATES AS AN AGGRESSIVE, IMPERIALISTIC NATION, POISED AND READY FOR WAR. THIS CAMPAIGN CONSTITUTES THE MOST INTENSE PSYCHOLOGICAL PREPARATION FOR WAR THAT THE WORLD HAS EVER BEFORE WITNESSED. INSTEAD OF TRYING TO TRANQUILIZE RUSSIAN AND WORLD FEAR OF NUCLEAR WAR, AS HAS BEEN OUR POLICY, SOVIET PROPAGANDA HAS SOUGHT TO PLAY UPON THIS FEAR. DR. RAYMOND BAUER, A HARVARD PSYCHOLOGIST WHO VISITED RUSSIA LAST YEAR, REPORTED THAT THE RUSSIAN PEOPLE FEAR A NUCLEAR WAR MORE THAN WE. THIS FEAR IS UNDERSTANDABLE SINCE PRAVDA HAS REPEATEDLY ATTEMPTED TO PROVE TO THE RUSSIAN PEOPLE THAT THE UNITED STATES IS PLANNING TO ATTACK THE SOVIET UNION WITH NUCLEAR WEAPONS.

---

[1] U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT, FEBRUARY 7, 1958, P. 64.

FEAR THAT WE PLAN TO ATTACK CAN BE USED BY THE COMMUNISTS TO JUSTIFY A PRE-EMPTIVE WAR AS AN ACT OF SELF-DEFENSE. THUS, WHILE WE RELY ON A "SHIELD OF FEAR" TO PROTECT US FROM A NUCLEAR ATTACK, THE SOVIETS APPEAR TO BE MANIPULATING FEAR TO CREATE THE EMOTIONAL JUSTIFICATION FOR SUCH AN ATTACK.

DR. PHILIP E. MOSLEY, DIRECTOR OF STUDIES FOR THE COUNCIL ON FOREIGN RELATIONS AND FORMER HEAD OF COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY'S RUSSIAN INSTITUTE, IS OF THE OPINION THAT A PREVENTIVE OR PRE-EMPTIVE WAR BY THE SOVIET UNION WOULD NOT REQUIRE "EVEN TWO DAYS" OF PROPAGANDA PREPARATION. "THERE IS," HE SAYS, "NO MORAL RESTRAINT INVOLVED IN THE SOVIET SYSTEM TO PREVENT ITS RULERS FROM USING THIS DEVICE IF THEY FELT IT WAS GOING TO WORK. THEY WOULD ASSUME THAT AFTER A SURPRISE VICTORY THERE WOULD BE COMMUNIST PARTIES, COMMUNIST-LED BLOCS GOVERNING EVERYWHERE, AND ALL OF HISTORY EVERYWHERE WOULD BE REWRITTEN TO SUIT THEIR DOCTRINES, SO THEY'RE NOT WORRIED ABOUT THE ATTITUDE OF PUBLIC OPINION TOWARD A PREVENTIVE WAR." IT IS DR. MOSLEY'S PREDICTION THAT, "IF THE SOVIET LEADERSHIP SHOULD DECIDE, CORRECTLY OR INCORRECTLY, THAT IT HAS A DECISIVE LEAD IN MILITARY TECHNOLOGY SUCH THAT IT COULD WIPE OUT THE RETALIATORY POWER OF THE UNITED STATES SUCCESSFULLY WITHOUT TOO MUCH DAMAGE TO ITS OWN SYSTEM, THIS WOULD BE PRECEDED BY MANY CONCILIATORY WORDS AND SPEECHES, BY A PERIOD OF CALM AND PERHAPS OF INACTION." IN THIS CONNECTION, DR. MOSLEY'S PREDICTION IS SIMILAR TO THAT OF LENIN, WHOSE CONCEPTS NIKITA KHRUSHCHEV INSISTS HE WILL FOLLOW FAITHFULLY. LENIN PROPHESIED:

> WE SHALL MAKE SENSATIONAL OFFERS AND UNPRECEDENTED CONCESSIONS. THE CAPITALIST COUNTRIES, STUPEFIED AND DECADENT, WILL COOPERATE JOYFULLY IN THEIR OWN DESTRUCTION AND WILL HASTEN TO WELCOME EVERY POSSIBILITY FOR RAPPROCHEMENT. ONCE THEIR VIGILENCE IS RELAXED WE SHALL DESTROY THEM WITH ONE BLOW.

A PRE-EMPTIVE SURPRISE ATTACK BY THE SOVIETS IS NOT, OF COURSE, THE ONLY WAY IN WHICH A MILITARY SHOWDOWN COULD TAKE PLACE. WHILE MOST STUDENTS OF SOVIET STRATEGY DO NOT BELIEVE THE SOVIETS WOULD FORCE A MILITARY SHOWDOWN OVER THE MIDDLE EAST WHERE A WAR MIGHT QUICKLY SPREAD TO SOVIET TERRITORY, THEY DO BELIEVE THAT AN ATOMIC WAR COULD BEGIN IN ASIS IF THE SOVIETS WERE ABLE TO MANEUVER THE CHINESE COMMUNISTS INTO A WAR WITH THE UNITED STATES. ADLAI STEVENSON, FOLLOWING HIS VISIT TO

Moscow, reported that "the pace of China's industrialization is viewed with awe" in Russia. China already appears to be playing a major role in Communist policy and as its industrialization proceeds, China, with its tremendous population, may well constitute a formidable threat to Soviet leadership of the Communist movement. It is perhaps well to keep in mind that since the Korean War, China's population has increased by fifty million people and that within forty years its population is expected to reach one billion, overshadowing the combined population of Russian and all of Europe. Unless Nikita Khrushchev has forgotten the lessons of Soviet history, he undoubtedly is concerned about future relations with Red China. He undoubtedly remembers that the Soviets, after World War I, aided Kemal Pasha in Turkey and made favorable arrangements with Iran. These two nations are now aligned with the West. In a showdown with the West, Khrushchev can be expected to try to maneuver the Chinese Communists into hostilities before committing Soviet forces. It is unlikely that Khrushchev will restrain the Chinese Communists in the Formosa straits, as President Eisenhower has asked him to, but rather will do whatever he can to prevent a peaceful settlement of the Quemoy and Formosa issues.

I have emphasized the possibility of a military showdown with the Communists because, as the Rockefeller Report concluded: "the most difficult thing for us to accept is the reality of our own peril."[1] Until we recognize that a trade war is not now the greatest challenge and that we cannot rely on a shield of fear to deter nuclear war, we are unlikely to accept the reality of our own peril or take the steps necessary for our own defense.

But little is to be gained by recognising the danger of a possible military showdown unless we do something about it. There are a number of things we can do - but none of them will be easy. The most important single thing we should do, in my

---

1 Rockefeller Report, p. 8. Special Studies Report II of Rockefeller Brothers Fund, "International Security - The Military Aspect" (New York, Doubleday, 1958), p.8.

OPINION, IS INCREASE OUR DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS SO WE CAN ACCELERATE THE DEVELOPMENT AND PRODUCTION OF WEAPONS THAT WILL PROTECT OUR STRATEGIC MILITARY POWER FROM DESTRUCTION IN A SURPRISE NUCLEAR ATTACK. OUR MILITARY BUDGET FALLS FAR SHORT OF THAT RECOMMENDED BY THE ROCKEFELLER REPORT. ALTHOUGH DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS WERE INCREASED BY $1.9 BILLION AFTER THE SHOCK OF SPUTNIK, APPROXIMATELY HALF THE INCREASE IN MILITARY APPROPRIATIONS WILL BE REQUIRED FOR INCREASED MILITARY AND CIVILIAN PAY; AN INCREASE OF ONLY ABOUT $700 MILLION IS AVAILABLE FOR INCREASED WEAPONS PROCUREMENT, AND MUCH OF THAT WILL BE REQUIRED TO MEET HIGHER MATERIAL COSTS AND WAGE RATES. IN ORDER TO CARRY OUT MILITARY PROGRAMS RECOMMENDED BY THE ROCKEFELLER REPORT, DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS SHOULD BE INCREASED BY $3 BILLION THIS YEAR, $6 BILLION NEXT YEAR, AND $9 BILLION THE FOLLOWING YEAR. AND THE GAITHER REPORT ON CIVILIAN SURVIVAL - WHICH HAS BEEN LOCKED IN THE SAFE - RECOMMENDED SUBSTANTIALLY HIGHER DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS. A REALISTIC APPRAISAL OF SOVIET CAPABILITIES INDICATES THAT A CONSIDERABLE INCREASE IN OUR DEFENSE PROGRAM IS DEMANDED.

I EMPHASIZE THE NEED FOR LARGER DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS BECAUSE THERE IS A DANGER THAT THE GOVERNMENT'S ACUTE FISCAL POSITION WILL CAUSE US TO REDUCE OUR DEFENSE EFFORT RATHER THAN INCREASE IT. OUR HUGE BUDGET DEFICITS ARE, OF COURSE, CREATING SERIOUS PROBLEMS FOR THE ADMINISTRATION AND THREATEN TO SHRINK THE BUYING POWER OF THE DOLLAR. I REALIZE THAT, AS SECRETARY OF DEFENSE MCELROY HAS PUT IT, THERE MAY BE "A POINT BEYOND WHICH GAMBLING HUGE SUMS ON UNTRIED WEAPONS WOULD BE FOOLHARDY." BUT MAY I EMPHASIZE THAT THIS GAMBLE ON UNTRIED WEAPONS IS WHAT HAS GIVEN THE SOVIETS THEIR LEAD IN INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILES AND THAT THE SECURITY OF OUR COUNTRY MAY WELL DEPEND ON OUR TAKING SIMILAR GAMBLES. LET ME ILLUSTRATE: THE CURRENT ISSUE OF FORTUNE MAGAZINE REPORTS THAT THE AIR FORCE HAS REQUESTED $300 MILLION FOR TOOLING TO PRODUCE THE MINUTEMAN BALLISTIC MISSILE BEFORE THAT MISSILE HAS BEEN TESTED IN PROTOTYPE. THE REQUEST HAS BEEN VETOED BECAUSE IT REPRESENTS TOO BIG A GAMBLE ON AN UNPROVEN WEAPON. FROM A BUDGET POINT OF VIEW THIS MAY MAKE GOOD SENSE. BUT THE SOVIETS AS A MATTER OF STANDARD PRACTICE GAMBLE ON PRODUCTION

TOOLING BEFORE A WEAPON IS PROVEN SO THEY CAN GET IT INTO PRODUCTION AS SOON AS IT IS TESTED. IN THE CASE OF THE MINUTEMAN, PERHAPS $300 MILLION WOULD BE WASTED IF THE MISSILE FAILED - A TREMENDOUS SUM. BUT IF THE GAMBLE IS NOT TAKEN, PRODUCTION FO THE MINUTEMAN WILL BE DELAYED ONE YEAR: INSTEAD OF BEING READY IN 1963 IT WON'T BE READY UNTIL 1964. THAT, TOO, IS A TREMENDOUS GAMBLE WITH THE SECURITY OF THE NATION.

IT IS IMPERATIVE, THEREFORE, THAT WE DO NOT PERMIT OUR FISCAL DIFFICULTIES TO INTERFERE WITH THE DEVELOPMENT OF SUFFICIENT DETERRENT POWER TO MEET THE COMMUNIST MILITARY CHALLENGE.

THESE ARE DIFFICULT TIMES -BUT NOTHING CAN BE GAINED BY IGNORING THE FACT THAT A SHOWDOWN WITH COMMUNISM IS PROBABLE. WE SHOULD DO EVERYTHING POSSIBLE TO BE PREPARED FOR THAT SHOWDOWN.

50¢

DOUBLEDAY
HEADLINE
PUBLICATIONS

International Security The Military Aspect

AMERICA AT MID-CENTURY SERIES

The "ROCKEFELLER REPORT" on the Problems of U.S. Defense

Special Studies Report II of Rockefeller Brothers Fund

RBF

America at Mid-Century Series

INTERNATIONAL SECURITY
THE MILITARY ASPECT

REPORT OF PANEL II
OF THE
SPECIAL STUDIES PROJECT

(This is Special Studies Report II, the first of a series. Other reports will be issued subsequently.)

Published by
DOUBLEDAY & COMPANY, INC.
GARDEN CITY, NEW YORK
1958

INTERNATIONAL SECURITY—THE MILITARY ASPECT

Contents

	PAGE
Foreword by the Overall Panel	3
A Word by Panel II	6
I—Framework of the Study	8
II—The Nature of Our Strategic Problem	11
III—Developing Power Trends	15
IV—Missions	20
V—The Problem of Nuclear Weapons	25
VI—Defense Organization	27
VII—Alliances and the Role of Force	36
VIII—The Special Case of NATO	41
IX—Civil Defense	46
X—International Tensions and the Reduction of Armaments	49
XI—Budget for National Security	55
XII—Conclusion	60
Summary of Main Points	62

© 1958 by
Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Inc.
All rights reserved.

Foreword by the Overall Panel

The Special Studies Project of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Inc. is an attempt to assess major problems and opportunities which are likely to confront America over the next ten years.

As the twentieth century nears the end of its sixth decade, America faces a world in swift and often turbulent change. Both within our borders and beyond, enormous transformations—in human aspirations, in the structure of society, in economic development, in scientific knowledge—are reshaping the pattern of existence at a speed without parallel in history. The recurrent shock of our age is the discovery that concepts and patterns of action of a more secure past no longer fit the present reality.

We live in a period which insists continually on choices being made. But choice without purpose leads to paralysis or to fitful and erratic behavior. And power without a sense of direction may drain life of meaning if it does not destroy humanity altogether. Our problems, therefore, require for their solution not only great effort and skill, but even more importantly steadfast conviction. And our opportunities will reflect above all the boldness and vision with which we face the future.

This report on international security is the work of Panel II, one of seven panels. Others deal with United States international objectives, foreign economic policy, domestic economic and social objectives, education and manpower, the democratic process and the moral framework of national purpose. Thus security was only one of our concerns. While it is the most urgent it is not in the long run necessarily the most important. We are concerned with national security because we must be. We are concerned with more positive tasks because we want to be. Security defines our military necessities. Our other panels will deal with our hopes and our humane necessities.

Despite the fact that the work of the other panels still is in progress, we consider it appropriate to release this report on international security before the other studies are complete. Power alone will not supply an answer to the challenge of the future. It does offer the prospect that there will be a future. A people preoccupied as we are with the tasks of peace is always in danger of confusing its aspirations with reality, of refusing to believe that there may be states which prefer conquest to peace. Because we would prefer to dedicate ourselves to constructive tasks, we need constantly to be reminded that we are in great peril and that we cannot substitute our preferences for our duty.

Our goal is a world under law; our aspiration is an international community from which the threat of war has been removed and based on respect for individual and national dignity. But we will not realize these aims unless we are prepared to make the effort required to survive. We must therefore strike a fine balance between vigilance and conciliation, prepared to use force to defend freedom but wary not to let force become an end in itself. Power can only give us security against immediate dangers. In the long run, our security is founded in the principles for which we stand and in the confidence which we earn.

Each of the members of this Overall Panel has also served on one of the subpanels. We have met regularly since November 1956. Obviously we are most familiar with the subpanels on which we have served. But we have heard periodic reports from all other groups. We have considered the draft of this report at various stages of preparation and we have gone over the final draft in full committee. Not every member of our group necessarily endorses every detail, but we have approved its substance and we strongly urge implementation of its recommendations.

This report concludes that we can afford what has to be done to assure our security; indeed that we cannot afford less. We are convinced that we can achieve the necessary military power while preserving and expanding other elements of our strength, such as health, education and economic growth. We recognize that this will require great exertion. But although the leadership of a democracy is a far more exacting task than the direction of a police state, the power which is generated by the voluntary effort of a free people cannot be equalled by the reluctant compliance of subject nations.

NELSON A. ROCKEFELLER, chairman of the panel

ADOLF A. BERLE, JR., senior partner, Berle, Berle & Brunner and former Ambassador to Brazil

CHESTER BOWLES, former Ambassador to India and former Governor of Connecticut

ARTHUR F. BURNS, president, The National Bureau of Economic Research

GENERAL LUCIUS D. CLAY, chairman, Continental Can Company, Inc. and former commander-in-chief, U. S. Forces in Europe and Military Governor, U. S. Zone, Germany

JOHN COWLES, president, Minneapolis Star & Tribune and chairman, The Des Moines Register & Tribune

JUSTIN W. DART, president, Rexall Drug Company

GORDON E. DEAN, senior vice president—nuclear energy, General Dynamics Corporation and former chairman, Atomic Energy Commission

JOHN S. DICKEY, president, Dartmouth College

JOHN W. GARDNER, president, Carnegie Corporation of New York

LESTER B. GRANGER, executive director, National Urban League, Inc.

CARYL P. HASKINS, president, Carnegie Institution of Washington

THEODORE M. HESBURGH, president, University of Notre Dame

MARGARET A. HICKEY, public affairs editor, Ladies' Home Journal

OVETA CULP HOBBY, president and editor, The Houston Post and former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare and director of the WACS

DEVEREUX C. JOSEPHS, chairman, New York Life Insurance Company

MILTON KATZ, director International Legal Studies, Harvard University Law School

HENRY R. LUCE, editor-in-chief, Time, Life, Fortune

THOMAS B. McCABE, president, Scott Paper Company

GENERAL JAMES McCORMACK, vice president, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and former director of research and development, U. S. Air Force

RICHARD P. McKEON, Department of Philosophy, University of Chicago

LEE W. MINTON, president, Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States and Canada

CHARLES H. PERCY, president, Bell & Howell Company

JACOB S. POTOFSKY, general president, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America

ANNA M. ROSENBERG, public and industrial relations consultant, and former Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower and Personnel

DEAN RUSK, president, The Rockefeller Foundation

DAVID SARNOFF, chairman, Radio Corporation of America

CHARLES M. SPOFFORD, partner, Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Sunderland & Kiendl and former Deputy Representative to NATO

EDWARD TELLER, professor of physics, University of California, Berkeley and associate director, University of California Radiation Laboratories

FRAZAR B. WILDE, president, Connecticut General Life Insurance Company

ROBERT B. ANDERSON, resigned from the panel when he was appointed Secretary of the Treasury. JAMES R. KILLIAN, Jr., president, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, resigned from the panel when he was appointed Special Assistant to the President

HENRY A. KISSINGER, director of The Special Studies Projects, Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Inc., and associate director of the Center for International Affairs, Harvard University

A Word by Panel II: International Security The Military Aspect

This report is the result of a group effort by Panel II of the Special Studies Project of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Inc. Although not every member subscribes to every detail, it reflects our substantial agreement.

We were charged with exploring the military aspect of international security, the strategies most likely to achieve this end and the challenges in this area which may face the country during the next ten years. We have been meeting since November 1956. We have had the benefit of many specially prepared papers and we have heard testimony of numerous experts.

It is our judgment that all is not well with present U.S. security policies and operations. The over-all U.S. strategic concept lags behind developments in technology and in the world political situation. In major respects defense organization is unrelated to critically important military missions. Systems of budgets, appropriations, and financial management are out of gear with the radically accelerating flow of military developments. The United States system of alliances must be adapted to constantly changing strategic requirements. The United States is rapidly losing its lead in the race of military technology.

We are convinced that corrective steps must be taken now.

We believe that the security of the United States transcends normal budgetary considerations and that the national economy can afford the necessary measures.

Our panel therefore hopes that the most important result of recent Soviet advances in the field of earth satellites may be that they will serve to spark a deep review of the basic attitudes and policies affecting the security of our country and of the free world.

For the U.S. lag in missiles and space machines, however worrisome, is a symptom and not a cause. It reflects our national complacency over the past dozen years. It is vitally important to the U.S. to calculate its security requirements on an integrated and long-range basis, and to set about correcting all deficiencies.

We cannot conclude without paying tribute to one of our colleagues. Frank Nash was a member of our group until his untimely death on December 11, 1957. In a real sense he was a victim of the principles in which he believed and which caused him to give of himself unstintingly in the service of his country. He will be remembered with respect for his services to our nation and with affection for his warmth and greatness as a human being.

FRANK ALTSCHUL, vice president, Council on Foreign Relations

GENERAL FREDERICK L. ANDERSON, former Deputy U. S. Special Representative in Europe

KARL R. BENDETSEN, vice president, operations, The Champion Paper and Fibre Company and former Under Secretary of The Army

DETLEV W. BRONK, president, Rockefeller Institute and president, National Academy of Sciences

*GORDON E. DEAN, senior vice president—nuclear energy, General Dynamics Corporation and former chairman, Atomic Energy Commission

JAMES B. FISK, executive vice president, Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc. and former director of research, Atomic Energy Commission

BRADLEY GAYLORD, chairman, The Pennroad Corporation

ROSWELL L. GILPATRIC, partner, Cravath, Swaine & Moore and former Under Secretary of the Air Force

TOWNSEND W. HOOPES, J. H. Whitney and Company

ELLIS A. JOHNSON, director, Operations Research Office, Johns Hopkins University

COLONEL GEORGE A. LINCOLN, professor, Social Sciences, U. S. Military Academy

*HENRY R. LUCE, editor-in-chief, Time, Life, Fortune

*GENERAL JAMES McCORMACK, vice president, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, served as chairman of the panel until October 1957 when illness forced him to withdraw from that position

FRANK C. NASH, U. S. Delegation to General Assembly of the U. N. and Presidential consultant on overseas base study, was a member of the panel until his death on December 11, 1957

LAURANCE S. ROCKEFELLER, president, Rockefeller Brothers, Inc.

ARTHUR SMITHIES, Department of Economics, Harvard University, and former economic advisor, Office of Defense Mobilization

*EDWARD TELLER, professor of physics, University of California, Berkeley and associate director, University of California Radiation Laboratories

T. F. WALKOWICZ, aeronautical engineer

CARROLL L. WILSON, president, Metals & Controls Corporation and former general manager, Atomic Energy Commission

JOHN F. FLOBERG, served as a member of this panel until his appointment as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission in June 1957 after which date he did not participate in the deliberations of the group or the drafting of the conclusions.

This report has been prepared under the direction of Dr. Kissinger.

*Also Overall Panel members

I—Framework of the Study

THE WORLD is living through a period of swift and far-reaching upheavals. Standards and institutions which have remained unchanged for centuries are breaking down. Millions who have hitherto passively endured their place in life are clamoring for a new and more worthy existence. Western Europe, the fountainhead of our civilization, has lost its position of dominance in world affairs. Across the great land-mass of Eurasia and on the continent of Africa new nations are rising in the place of colonial empires.

Mankind is yearning to realize its aspirations in peace. But it is faced by two somber threats: the Communist thrust to achieve world domination which seeks to exploit all dissatisfactions and to magnify all tensions; and the new weapons technology capable of obliterating civilization.

The United States has thus been placed in a fateful position. Our whole tradition impels us to desire peace. Relatively invulnerable behind two great oceans, we have until the end of World War II asked little of the world save to be free to work out our destiny undisturbed. But we have been forced to realize that our security is inextricably bound up with the safety of the rest of the free world and that freedom everywhere depends on our strength and resolution. Force alone will not supply the answer to the hopes of humanity. Yet our strength effectively mobilized can help bring about a framework of security in which these aspirations may be realized in freedom and without fear.

Looking at the world from the perspective of our past isolation and recent nuclear supremacy, perhaps the most difficult thing for us is to accept the reality of our peril. Other more exposed nations have had to learn to live over a period of centuries with the awareness that their existence might be imperiled by foreign attack. It is a new experience for Americans.

A new technology of unprecedented power and destructiveness has placed all nations of the world in dire peril. The largest "conventional" bomb of World War II—the famous blockbuster—had an explosive power of 20 tons of TNT. The first atomic bomb had an explosive power equivalent to 20 thousand tons of TNT, a thousandfold increase. Today weapons with an explosive equivalent of 20 million tons (20 megatons) have been tested and there is no theoretical upper limit: it is possible to construct weapons of almost any explosive power.

As the weapons have become more powerful, their speed of delivery has grown ever faster. Soon missiles will be able to travel intercontinental distances and wipe out whole cities in one blow. A blow on 50 of our most important metropolitan areas would bring under attack 55 per cent of our population and 75 per cent of our industry. Moreover, if the fireball of a nuclear weapon touches the ground, it sucks up particles of earth and buildings and deposits them downwind as radioactive material. The area of this "fall-out" would depend on meteorological conditions, but it could cover an area of 10 thousand square miles or the size of the State of New Jersey. A successful attack on 50 of our most important urban centers would produce at least 10-15 million dead and 15-20 million injured from blast and heat and another 25-35 million casualties from "fall-out" or a total of 60-65 million dead and injured.

What gives this weapons technology its ominous quality is that it is in the hands of a Communist movement which has proclaimed for over a generation now—the last time in the Moscow declaration of all Communist states on November 16, 1957—the irreconcilability of its system with that of the free world. Of course "peaceful co-existence" has reappeared periodically as a Soviet slogan. But, as used in Soviet propaganda, it has in the past been primarily a device to disarm intended victims. After World War II, it did not stand in the way of Soviet domination of the satellite orbit and the breaking of the most solemn wartime pledges regarding respect for freedom and independence of Eastern Europe. It did not stop the Berlin blockade, the Greek civil war and the Korean aggression. After the Geneva "summit" conference, "peaceful co-existence" did not restrain the Soviet Union from fomenting a crisis in the Middle East or from brutally suppressing the Hungarian revolution. In 1957 it did not keep the Soviet Union from threatening nuclear attacks on Norway, Denmark and Turkey. Both their doctrine and their internal dynamism will impel the Soviet Union and Communist China to try to encourage every dissatisfaction and to fill every vacuum. Should we ever allow the U.S.S.R. and Communist China to attain strategic superiority, we can be certain that subsequent events will be brutal. And the power of these states, particularly of the U.S.S.R., has been growing both absolutely and relative to the United States until today it constitutes a grave threat.

The willingness and ability to resist aggression is the best guarantee for peace. Until there occurs a change in Soviet attitudes, everything depends on the steadfastness of the United States and other free nations and on the willingness to act resolutely in the face of continuing peril and ambiguous challenges.

II—The Nature of Our Strategic Problem

EVER since our unilateral disarmament at the end of World War II failed to produce the peace we desired so earnestly, the United States has been forced to engage in a military effort unprecedented in our history in peacetime. Even so, it has still proved inadequate to the challenge we confront. The sporadic nature of our effort has been caused by many factors including the nature of our historical experience. Tradition impels us to believe that peace is the normal relation among states. As a result, we have conceived it to be the task of our military policy to assemble overwhelming power to "punish" the disturber of the peace—the aggressor. Also, aggression is best understood when it is an unambiguous and clear act. Because, in the past, many other states were threatened before the danger to our security became explicit, we have been able to count on other countries to hold a forward line while we rallied our physical, moral and psychological resources. Thus, our remoteness from the other major centers of world affairs has enabled us hitherto to rely on relatively small forces-in-being and to mobilize our resources only after a war had started.

Many of these ideas have been overthrown by technological developments since World War II and by the emergence of the United States in the forefront of world affairs. Soviet policy has coupled an attempt to develop overwhelming power with a strategy of deliberate ambiguity. The ambiguity resides in advancing by steps so small that the risks of resisting any given advance always seem out of proportion to the objective or masking the aggression so that the Soviet move appeals to what the free world considers as "legitimate" methods of political warfare. As a consequence, the recognition of aggression has often proved as difficult as finding the means to resist it. A symptom of the difficulty is that a United Nations committee charged with the task of defining aggression felt itself forced to abandon the effort.

At the same time that the forms of aggression have multiplied and become more ambiguous, we have lost the safety indicators of a more secure past. We can no longer think of our military effort as designed for a conflict which we enter only after other nations have run the initial risks as was the case with our participation in World Wars I and II. Since no other nation any longer has the strength to resist alone, the safety of the non-communist world will depend on our ability, psychological and military, to engage our forces promptly and decisively in case of aggression.

The importance of forces-in-being is magnified by the changed significance of industrial potential. As long as the destructiveness of weapons was relatively limited as compared to the complexity of their means of manufacture, victory in war could be achieved only through a quantity of equipment too large to stockpile before the outbreak of hostilities. Massive production of armament during the course of a war was thus a vital element of national strength and an attack on production facilities was a highly effective strategy. But with the rapid and overwhelming destructiveness of modern technology each major power will, in the absence of a massive and reliable defense, be able to disrupt the production facilities of its opponents with a relatively few weapons in a matter of hours. Industrial strength is therefore a military asset only to the extent that it can provide armaments before the outbreak of war.

Thus our military problem, with which this particular Subpanel is exclusively concerned, has four aspects:

(a) We require a growing industrial technological and scientific base in order to achieve a state of continual readiness for the long haul. Without an adequate industrial plant we will not be able to produce the ever-increasing variety of weapons required for our protection. Without an expanding pool of scientific talent and a steadily rising level of scientific activity, we shall not be able to maintain our security in a situation where the real armaments race is in the laboratories.

(b) Scientific development by itself is ineffective strategically, however, if it cannot be translated rapidly into operational weapons. Great importance therefore attaches to two kinds of lead-time: (1) the interval between the drawing board and operational weapon; and (2) the rapidity with which weapons are manufactured. A lag in either category is certain to create a strategic weakness.

(c) At the same time, long-range programs and balance cannot become ends in themselves. However powerful we may be potentially, our strategic effectiveness in any given crisis depends on our active forces supplemented by any quickly mobilizable reserve capabilities. Given the power and destructiveness of modern weapons, we cannot count on an extended period of mobilization prior to the outbreak of hostilities.

(d) But however vast our over-all strength, it may still be ineffective in meeting certain challenges if it cannot be applied with discrimination. With the development of the Soviet nuclear stockpile and the means to deliver it, we can no longer rely on our capability to deliver crushing retaliation on the Soviet homeland as the deterrent to all types of aggression. For with the growth of the Soviet capability to inflict a massive blow on the United States, there exists the great danger that the Soviet Union will seek to use its nuclear striking force as a shield behind which to expand by more limited means. Thus the adequacy of our military establishment will be determined by its ability to discharge two distinct though related tasks: one, to discourage an all-out attack through the existence of a powerful, instantly ready retaliatory force; and, two, to react effectively to limited aggression through the ability to make our response fit the challenge.

These four factors—the importance of a growing industrial base, the crucial role of lead-times, the increasing significance of forces-in-being, and the necessity of a versatile military establishment—impose on policy makers an unparalleled problem of choice. It is further complicated by the explosive rapidity with which technology is developing. Almost up to the outbreak of World War II a weapons system would be good for nearly a generation; the equipment of U.S. ground forces, for example, changed very little between 1919 and 1940. Today a weapons system begins to be obsolescent when it has barely gone into production. The B-17 "Flying Fortress" remained in operational use for eight years; the B-36 intercontinental bomber was obsolescent in less than five years; and the B-52 jet bomber is beginning to be outdated even before all wings of our Strategic Air Command are fully equipped with it.

Moreover, all weapons are becoming increasingly costly. A new submarine costs ten times as much as its World War II counterpart. A B-52 wing is four times as expensive as the B-36 wings it replaces. Each new weapons system costs more than double its predecessor which it replaces at shorter and shorter intervals.

This technological race places an extraordinary premium on the ability to assess developing trends correctly, to make and back decisions firmly and to be prepared to change plans when necessary. It also places the side which is on the defensive at special disadvantage. The aggressor need prepare only for the war he proposes to fight. But the side which is militarily on the defensive must gear its planning and procurement to the possibility of an attack at any moment. We must therefore take care to see that no important strategic weakness exists at any given point of time.

The basic problem of American strategy then is the ability to make effective choices. This will depend on the courage and sense of purpose of our leadership, the effectiveness of the organization of our government, and on the spirit of our people.

III—Developing Power Trends

THE OUTSTANDING characteristic of the strategic situation is a military technology in a state of spectacular change. Starting with World War II scientific research has produced military equipment and new patterns of military operations at an ever accelerating pace. Four trends appear to be of particular significance.

1. Weapon technology will become increasingly complex with a corresponding increase in the difficulty of choosing the most effective combination of weapons. The atomic bomb of 1945 has been outmoded by a broad range of highly developed weapons both large and small. The original nuclear weapons required a large aircraft and crew. Equally powerful warheads have been reduced in size and simplified to the point where it will soon be possible to employ them effectively in anti-aircraft rockets. And with the increasing capacity for the production of fissionable materials, nuclear and thermonuclear weapons have become available in very large quantities.

The outlook is even more portentous than the achievements of the recent past. Aircraft will be capable of cruising at several times the speed of sound, of bombing from altitudes of a dozen miles and more, and of carrying air-launched missiles so that they need not pass directly over heavily defended target areas. New high energy fuels will give them greatly increased range and performance.

Within a very short time, a major role in both offense and defense will be played by missiles. It will be possible to produce missiles of almost any desired range, from very short distances analogous to traditional artillery to intercontinental ranges of five thousand miles or more. Because these weapons require less extensive installations than airplanes, it will be possible to disperse and protect them more easily and they will therefore be less vulnerable to surprise attack.

Earth satellites are a special adaptation of missiles which explore a new frontier in outer space and which will have important military applications.

Submarines, already extremely powerful weapons, will be even more important as nuclear propulsion comes to play an ever greater role. They can imperil our harbors and our sea communications with friendly nations. As a platform for missiles they can pose a constant threat of a sudden, devastating blow from unpredictable directions.

These are not dreams of the far distant future. Many of these weapons are in existence now; even the most remote among them is attainable within the time frame of this report by both the U.S. and the Soviet Union. Many of them will be in the hands of several nations.

2. The rate of technological change will increasingly complicate the tasks of the defense relative to the offense. Both offense and defense will improve—and improve enormously. However, foreseeable new offensive weapons such as intercontinental ballistic missiles—sudden in action, massively destructive, difficult to destroy either before launching or in flight—will greatly aggravate the problems of strategic defense and enormously increase its costs.

3. The U.S.S.R. will continue to gain in over-all military strength greatly aided by Communist China and some of its other allies. Although the rate of growth of these countries may slow down, the economic superiority of the West will become less and less significant militarily at our present levels of effort. By sacrificing the civilian sector of its economy, the Soviet Union has caught up with the United States in major fields of technology. In certain areas assigned high priority by the Kremlin, the Soviet Union has surpassed us qualitatively as well as quantitatively. Unless we greatly increase the pace and level of our military effort, the Soviet Union will achieve superiority in other fields as well.

4. The concept of "scarcity" in nuclear weapons will disappear from the calculations of the U.S., the U.S.S.R., and to a lesser extent Great Britain. The U.S., the U.S.S.R. and Great Britain will continue to increase the number and variety of their atomic weapons. Other countries will in due course have their own atomic arms if on a more limited scale.

Soviet Capabilities

Ever since World War II, the United States has suffered from a tendency to underestimate the military technology of the U.S.S.R. When the Soviet Union produced its first long-range bomber we comforted ourselves with the belief that it was simply a copy of our B-29. When it developed jet engines some dismissed this achievement as due to the imitation of a British design. When our atomic monopoly was ended we treated it more as a reflection on our security methods against espionage than as an indication that our technological lead was inherently transitory.

In the meantime the Soviet Union has demonstrated that its achievements in the immediate post-war period were far from accidental. Today Soviet science is at least equal to our own in many strategically significant categories. In the military field, the technological capability of the U.S.S.R. is increasing at a pace obviously faster than that of the United States. If not reversed this trend alone will place the free world in dire jeopardy.

The result of the Soviet concentration on military technology is an impressive and rapidly growing military establishment which already poses a very serious threat to the free world. The generally accepted facts with respect to it can be summarized as follows:

The Soviet ground forces, far larger numerically than our own, are being reorganized and re-equipped for atomic war. New rockets and missiles capable of carrying nuclear warheads add to their atomic capability. New tanks, artillery pieces, and light weapons give them a powerful conventional strength. Vehicles and communications equipment have been markedly improved. In addition to these substantial forces-in-being, the U.S.S.R. possesses a vast and readily mobilizable reserve.

The Soviet Union now has the second largest navy in the world and since World War II has produced more vessels of every type, except aircraft carriers, than the United States. The Soviet Union has long concentrated on submarines. A fleet of well over 400 is already in operation. This number is greatly in excess of the German force which severely menaced Allied surface shipping during the early years of World War II. There is no doubt about the capacity of the U.S.S.R. to develop naval atomic power plants, or to adapt ships and submarines to launch short and medium-range missiles; in fact, Soviet leaders have pointedly discussed the vulnerability of the United States to such attacks. The magnitude of the threat becomes clear when it is realized that 43 of our 50 largest cities and 85 per cent of our industry are located within 500 miles of our coasts. Missile launching submarines are the Soviet equivalent of our overseas air bases.

Soviet air defense is based on a good radar detection and tracking system, supported by a large number of all-weather interceptor aircraft, an increasing proportion of which is supersonic. Ground-to-air missiles are a major element of the air defense system.

Over the last ten years, the U.S.S.R. has not only maintained the largest number of planes in the world, but has progressively re-equipped its airforce with new and modern aircraft. The Soviet Union now produces many aircraft at least as advanced as our own—and produces them in large numbers. Moreover, the Soviets have demonstrated their ability to manufacture modern electronic equipment and to master the techniques required to guide and direct defensive and offensive aerial operations.

The Soviet weapons program has given high priority to the development of rockets and missiles. A medium range ballistic missile capable of reaching Japan, Taiwan, and most of Western Europe from Communist bloc bases is already operational in limited quantities. Missiles of intercontinental range will soon follow.

From what is known of the present Soviet stockpile of nuclear weapons it is inferior to that of the United States, but it is already large and growing rapidly. Soviet nuclear attacks against the United States of great severity are possible now; within a few years the U.S.S.R. will be capable of delivering massive air and missile attacks against all major targets in the non-communist world. In short, Soviet military strength poses a major threat to all countries of the non-communist world.

U. S. Capabilities

As compared with the U.S.S.R., the United States now has these military advantages:

Our democratic structure is more stable and commands wider popular support than the Soviet system of dictatorship which can resolve policy differences only by periodic purges.

We have a superior industrial base and production know-how, which, providing we apply it with a clear sense of direction, should enable us to assign high priority to a greater variety of projects than the U.S.S.R.

The system of alliances in which we participate is superior in integrity and strength and in the cohesiveness that comes from free association to the Soviet system of forced satellites. Moreover our allies are stronger domestically, industrially and in technical and scientific potential.

We have superior operational experience in the use of long-range manned airplanes. Our location coupled with our system of advanced bases favors us geographically.

We have superior and more flexible naval power, especially surface naval power.

We have more atomic weapons, and a greater variety of them.

However, some of these advantages must be qualified, and others are only temporary. For example, our long-range bomber force is always in competition with improving defenses. And our advantage in training is transitory because missiles will increasingly take over missions heretofore performed by manned planes. Moreover, some U.S. forward bases will continue to be exposed to the instability of the areas in which they are located and all of our air bases at home and abroad are vulnerable to surprise attack, particularly as Soviet missiles become operational.

Nor can we afford to take for granted an indefinite continuation of our present superiority at sea. The aircraft carrier, around which our naval power is built, is vulnerable to nuclear attack, though protected to some extent by its mobility. It also faces a problem of limited refueling facilities, particularly for its aircraft complement. The unresolved naval weakness is the inadequacy of our anti-submarine capability. Moreover, our submarine fleet has not been given the attention its potential warrants.

Another point of present U.S. military advantage is in the number and variety of atomic weapons. But the U.S.S.R. is closing the gap and because of the destructiveness of nuclear weapons numerical superiority tends to become less important after a given point, at least for certain purposes. It is therefore crucial to develop a notion of "adequacy" for each military mission so that we do not drain resources from some vital tasks by maintaining an excessive capacity in others.

Thus it appears that the U.S. is rapidly losing its lead over the U.S.S.R. in the military race. For perhaps the next two years, we still possess a superiority in strategic striking power and any Soviet attack on us would meet a crushing reply. But our position a year or two hence depends on decisions which must be taken immediately. Unless present trends are reversed, the world balance of power will shift in favor of the Soviet bloc. If that should happen we are not likely to be given another chance to remedy our failings. However, it is emphatically not too late if we are prepared to make the required big effort now and in the years ahead.

IV—Missions

THE VARIOUS challenges with which we may be confronted tend to overleap the traditional boundaries between the military services. With modern weapons the distinctions between the missions of the three services based on land, sea and air warfare have lost a great deal of their validity. The criteria by which any future wars can be distinguished will turn on the nature of the conflict, the issues in dispute, and the geographical area of hostilities, rather than on means of locomotion.

Among the possible challenges we may confront, three stand out most starkly: all-out war, limited war and a kind of war new to the twentieth century and highly developed by the communists—the disguised or obscure war concealed as internal subversion or take-over by coup d'etat or civil war.

All-Out War

Of the threats to our security, all-out war is the most overwhelming. It can be defined as an attack of such magnitude that our survival would be directly and immediately at stake. It is therefore the ultimate war, in which no inhibitions would apply as regards the use of weapons.

For this reason the purpose of our capability for all-out war is above all to prevent war from breaking out; it is effective to the extent that it deters a sudden onslaught on us. At the same time, our capability for all-out war is the essential prerequisite for more discriminating applications of our power. Since the growth of the Soviet nuclear stockpile, the capability to conduct all-out war does not protect all our security interests. But it does preserve our ability to protect these interests by means less drastic than all-out war. Limited war, for instance, can be kept limited only if an opponent must consider expansion of the war too risky. Preparedness for all-out war must therefore be the first charge on our military establishment.

The basic requirement for all-out war is a retaliatory force so well protected and numerous that it can overcome any defense. For the next two or three years this will be largely composed of manned planes; later missiles will continue to play an increasingly important role. The hard core of this striking force, whether based at home or overseas, must be continuously alert, fully armed, and as secure as we can make it against destruction or neutralization by surprise attack.

The second requirement for all-out war is an active and passive defense system capable of protecting the bulk of our striking force no matter what the scale of any foreseeable surprise attack, and of reducing the effects of a blow against our centers of population and industry.

Active defense seeks to blunt the enemy attack by providing warning to likely targets and by destroying as many attacking vehicles as possible. The speedier the enemy delivery system, the more rapid must be the reaction time of the active defense. The more powerful the offensive weapons, the higher must be the percentage of "kills" achieved. Thus, the protection of our retaliatory force and of our civilian population both require that a major and increasing effort be made to strengthen our active defense. Should the U.S.S.R. achieve an effective air defense before we do, our retaliatory force would correspondingly diminish in value. Conversely, a strong active defense on our side would reinforce the deterrent to surprise attack.

As attacking vehicles become speedier and weapons ever more destructive, increasing attention will have to be paid to passive defense, often called civil defense. Its task is to reduce enemy damage as much as possible. This can be accomplished through shelters, dispersal of industries and air bases, and the stockpiling of critical supplies. A nation which has succeeded in protecting its population at least to some degree is in a stronger psychological position than an opponent totally vulnerable to attack. In the age of the long-range missile, the known ability of a society to withstand attack through passive defense will become an increasingly important deterrent.

Preparedness for all-out war therefore depends on a combination of three factors: (a) A retaliatory force so powerful and well protected that, no matter what the scale of the enemy attack, an aggressor must always contend with a return blow which will inflict an intolerable amount of damage; (b) An active defense which can assure survival of at least a sizeable portion of the retaliatory force and which is able to limit the disruptive effects of an enemy blow on our population and economy to the smallest possible proportions; (c) A passive defense which affords some protection for our population and economy.

The importance of defensive measures is that they force the enemy to increase his investment of resources in his offensive effort without adding to its strategic effectiveness. The value of a powerful retaliatory force is that it can deprive the aggressor of the fruits of a surprise attack. The task of strategy is to decide on the relative emphasis to be given to offensive capabilities and to active and passive defense and on the "mix" which will provide the greatest degree of deterrence.

In looking at the strategic equation for all-out war there is reason for serious concern. Our retaliatory power, on which we have heretofore relied as the major element of our security, is imperiled by Soviet advances in the missile field and by the inadequate dispersal and protection of our Strategic Air Command. Our active defense designed against manned planes will have to be redesigned for the missile age. Our civil defense program and that of our allies is completely inadequate. A substantially greater effort is therefore required in order to insure an adequate system of deterrence.

Limited War

Unfortunately, the capability to deter all-out war does not exhaust our strategic problem. For no matter how vast our over-all strength, we face the dilemma that the magnitude of the total does not assure its sufficiency in any particular situation. Even if we succeed in deterring all-out war by the threat of total annihilation, our country and the rest of the free world remains in peril. For we cannot expect to counter limited military challenges by the response appropriate to all-out surprise attack.

Until the development of a Soviet nuclear stockpile and the means to deliver it, our retaliatory force could serve as the major deterrent to Soviet aggression. But as the Soviet capability to attack American cities increases, our reluctance to engage in all-out war will grow proportionately. If all-out war becomes our only counter to aggression, the Soviet Union may be enabled to use its strategic striking force as a shield behind which to achieve limited advances, confronting us in each case with the alternative of yielding to what will seem a marginal Soviet gain or of precipitating a world-wide holocaust.

As a result, though all-out war is our greatest danger, it does not represent the most likely threat. The distinctive feature of limited war is that its outcome does not involve or seem to involve national survival. It is precisely for this reason that we have had such difficulty in coming to grips with it. For any peripheral Soviet move raises doubts whether this particular encroachment warrants a final showdown. A major difficulty is our lack of mobile forces capable of intervening rapidly and of restoring a local situation before matters get out of hand.

The forces designed to deter all-out war will, of course, also be useful in preventing or stifling limited war. It would be dangerous, however, to rely too heavily on the principal deterrent—our strategic striking force—to fight limited war. Since the chief sanction against the expansion of a limited war resides in a crushing capability for retaliation, the deterrent force must be kept in a state of the highest readiness particularly during periods of limited conflict. An aggressor who could inflict substantial attrition on our strategic striking force in a limited war would gain an advantage however those particular military operations ended.

It is therefore imperative that in addition to our retaliatory force, we develop units which can intervene rapidly and which are able to make their power felt with discrimination and versatility. For this task we require modern sea lift and an airlift capacity we do not now possess. Our mobile forces must be tailored to the gamut of possible limited wars which may range from conflicts involving several countries to minor police actions. Limited wars may require a highly complicated weapons system including nuclear weapons. They may involve conventional forces capable of assisting friendly governments to resist border incursions.

The effectiveness of our power thus depends on our unmistakable ability and willingness to oppose force with force at whatever level of intensity may be required. We do not now possess the necessary versatility.

The Problem of Non-Overt Aggression

We must not make the mistake of assuming that even a diversified military establishment can protect us against the total range of our dangers. To begin with, force by itself is useless without the resolution to use it if need be. A great deal, therefore depends on our psychological and political readiness. An effective policy must not only find the means to prevent adverse changes in the strategic balance, it must also be able to determine what changes to resist.

For our security can be imperiled not only by overt aggression but also by transformations which are made to appear, insofar as is possible, as not aggression at all. These "concealed wars" may appear as internal revolution or civil war, they may be instigated by outside forces or merely exploited by them. Greece has furnished one example; Vietnam another; the Middle East still another. One of the greatest threats to the security of the Free World is gradual Soviet infiltration and domination of vital areas through steps each of which is so small and seemingly so insignificant that it does not seem to justify overt intervention.

These conflicts raise issues with which in terms of our preconceptions and the structure of our forces we are least prepared to deal. The gradual subversion of a government by concealed foreign penetration is difficult to deal with from the outside, even though the fate of millions may depend on it.

As a result, unless we have a clear understanding of our national purpose and close political ties with other nations of the free world we shall find ourselves paralyzed in the face of upheavals which may gravely imperil the safety of the whole world. We must also realize that non-overt aggressions presents issues which are deliberately and intrinsically unclear. To ask for certainty in these situations is a prescription for inaction. Nor is it possible in advance to determine the nature of the conflict or every United States response. The problem in its deepest sense is not military but political and will therefore be treated more fully by Panel I.

It should be our aim to prevent such situations from developing. When they do become acute we may have a choice only between evils. Our security and that of the rest of the non-Communist world will then hinge importantly on our willingness to support friendly governments in situations which fit neither the soldier's classic concept of war nor the diplomat's traditional concept of aggression.

V—The Problem of Nuclear Weapons

NO ONE can look at the prospect of nuclear war with equanimity. It is with us not by our wish but because of Soviet hostility. The world knows that the United States will never engage in preventive war. But in resisting aggression we cannot in advance forego weapons which technology makes available to all who seek them, including those who might attack.

In dealing with the use of nuclear weapons we come up against the hard fact that the choice is no longer entirely our own. Whatever we may decide, the Soviet Union may choose to conduct its aggressions with nuclear weapons. The introduction of nuclear weapons by an opponent would immediately raise the question of our reaction. Would we be prepared to respond with all-out war? And if not, we would be forced into a limited nuclear war under the worst possible circumstances: in the confusion of battle and without adequate psychological preparation.

Thus against a nuclear power we must always be prepared to fight a limited nuclear war. Even when we decide to use conventional weapons, we would not dare to do so without a nuclear establishment ready at hand. And in a war in which the U.S.S.R. is a direct participant, nuclear weapons will have to be used almost of necessity. Confronted with their use, the huge Soviet conventional armament becomes obsolescent. In their absence the Soviet Union will have the choice of seeking to prevail with its preponderant ground army or to introduce nuclear weapons at a moment of maximum difficulty for us.

The use of nuclear weapons has been the subject of much debate. It is argued by some that the use of nuclear weapons marks the dividing line between all-out and limited war. Others maintain that even if there should be an intention to keep the war limited, neither side would accept defeat without resorting to every weapon in its arsenal.

Modern technology has created a spectrum of weapons, however, which makes it unreasonable to draw such rigid dividing lines.

Some "conventional" weapons are more powerful than the lowest yield nuclear weapons. Very powerful nuclear weapons can be used in such a manner that they have negligible effects on civilian populations—as high altitude explosions over purely military objectives, for example. Relatively low yield weapons or "conventional" bombs used against population centers can have devastating consequences. Whether a war produces more or less devastation depends on the manner and discrimination with which any modern weapon, nuclear or otherwise, is employed. Morality does not depend on the type of explosive, but upon the use to which the explosive is put.

As for the argument that neither side will accept defeat short of having exhausted every means at its disposal, it would not seem to make any difference whether the war started as a conventional or as a nuclear war. A power unwilling to accept defeat in a nuclear war is not likely to be more prepared to accept defeat in a conventional war. This particular argument tends to run counter to every experience since World War II. If we keep our retaliatory force in a high state of readiness, it can be expected that both sides will look for reasons to limit, not to expand the war. The Korean war was limited because of the fiction that the Soviet Union was not a direct participant and because neither the United States nor the Soviet Union wished to precipitate a general war.

We would also do well to recognize that since World War II it has been primarily the U.S. nuclear stockpile and delivery capability which has stood in the way of Soviet domination of the world. That the Soviet Union is well aware of this is shown by its persistent "ban the bomb" propaganda. Even a U.S.-Soviet equality in nuclear weapons will not change the fact that nuclear weapons complicate the tasks of an aggressor and reduce the significance of Soviet numerical superiority in conventional forces. The argument for not renouncing the use of nuclear weapons is that it represents our best chance to maintain the peace and to eliminate the Soviet advantage in conventional forces. The willingness to engage in nuclear war, when necessary, is part of the price of our freedom.

VI—Defense Organization

BECAUSE of the tremendous significance of the affairs which center in the Department of Defense, all studies of the national security inevitably concern themselves to some extent with the organization and methods of the Pentagon. This concern is not new. It has been a preoccupation of successive administrations since the creation of the original National Military Establishment ten years ago. It has been the subject of numerous studies which have found the organization of the Department of Defense inadequate to its task and constantly outstripped by a rapidly evolving weapons technology.

Detailed organizational recommendations lead quickly to arguments outside the scope of this panel's undertaking. We have therefore confined ourselves to identifying the critical areas of weakness and to advancing several broad principles which should guide the development of specific organizational changes. It seems to us that the major defects in the present organization are inherent in its structure. They cannot be removed by modifying it. They will be further aggravated by the passage of time. These defects are three in number:

1—The roles and missions assigned to the individual military services have become competitive rather than complementary because they are out of accord with both weapons technology and the principal military threats to our national safety;

2—The present organization and responsibilities of the Joint Chiefs of Staff preclude the development of a comprehensive and coherent strategic doctrine for the United States;

3—The Secretary of Defense is so burdened with the negative tasks of trying to arbitrate and control inter-service disputes that he cannot play his full part in the initiation and development of high military policy.

These points will be discussed in order.

The Problem of Roles and Missions

The range and destructiveness of modern weapons have tended to overleap the traditional boundaries among the services. As a result, our effort to develop an integrated national strategic plan has been beset by interservice rivalry. This rivalry is not due fundamentally to "parochialism" on the part of our military leaders; it is built into the present assignment of roles and missions.

Ten years ago, whatever else was hoped for in the new defense organization, one result was expected by the public: that through joint planning by the Chiefs of Staff, supplemented when necessary by the authority of the Secretary of Defense, there would be a coordinated and harmonious development of our potential in all three media of operations: land, sea, and air.

Such has not occurred. With the advantage of hindsight, it is now clear that the organization itself doomed this important goal. For the assignment of roles and missions among the Army, Air Force and the Navy has become increasingly inconsistent with the new technology. Heretofore, the Army has been assigned the task of winning a war on land; the Navy has been charged with control of the seas and the Air Force has been responsible for dominating the sky. Thus the method of transportation by which a weapons system moved determined which service controlled it.

Until the development of long-range airpower, the division of functions based on methods of locomotion worked relatively smoothly because it reflected the actual tasks each service had to perform. Each service was therefore able to develop its own strategy and to develop under its own control the weapons required for achieving its mission. But the revolutionary advances in technology have made the traditional division of functions increasingly obsolete. Given the range and destructiveness of modern weapons the present assignment of roles and missions forces each service to duplicate the efforts of some other service. Thus one service, the Navy, operates in all the media—sea, land and air. Other missions are shared by two or more services, such as tactical air support. There are three services with airpower and two with armies; the Air Force is responsible for coordinating air defense but the Army is responsible for the air defense of specific targets. And there are three separate service war plans with the common tendency of reducing the reliance on other services as much as possible.

Thus the division of functions which worked without fundamental frictions until the end of World War II has led to bitter conflict in the nuclear air age. It is inherent in the philosophy and training of each service that it should see in any developing enemy threat predominately those elements which its own particular organization seems best adapted to counter. And each service by a natural rationalization judges the proper balance of forces to be the one which maximizes its own role.

A duplication of weapons systems and a wastage of scientific talent is inevitable. This prevents us from drawing the full benefit from our military expenditures and forces our policy makers constantly to arbitrate among sharply conflicting advice. New weapons are placed into the strait jacket of obsolescent missions instead of missions being reshaped to conform to an evolving technology and to new military problems.

Conversely, the present organization may neglect certain vital tasks. An example is the problem of airlift for the ground forces. To provide such facilities is an Air Force responsibility. When budgets are tight, the Air Force is understandably reluctant to favor this mission at the expense of its primary task of defeating the enemy in the air, especially against the background of growing Soviet strength in planes and missiles. On the other hand the Army is prevented by our mechanistic assignment of functions from developing and operating the transport aircraft required to move forces swiftly to the combat zone.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff

Except for the Chairman, the members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff are the senior officers of the military services. Therefore, even with the best will in the world, they cannot avoid being advocates of a service point of view. The position of each reflects a lifetime of dedication to his service. He is primarily the product of its training schools, and its environment. Since he is responsible for the future of his service, its status and morale must be one of his chief concerns.

Thus under the present organization most of the decisive pressures on the Joint Chiefs of Staff organization are produced by the individual services, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff functions too often as a committee of partisan adversaries engaged in advancing service strategic plans and compromising service differences. Too little in present arrangements permits the Chiefs of Staff time and opportunity to think spontaneously or comprehensively about over-all strategic problems. The result is that our military plans for meeting foreseeable threats tend to be a patchwork of compromise between conflicting strategic concepts or simply the uncoordinated war plans of the several services.

The Role of the Secretary of Defense

The organization of the military establishment into three competing services, and the aggravation of this difficulty by ill-defined and sometimes obsolete roles and missions, have shaped the role of the Secretary of Defense in ways not foreseen when the office was created in 1947. To a considerable extent, these conditions have confined him to the essentially negative functions of arbitration and control. He has become the referee in disputes over policy issues originating in the services or in the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It is the essence of a referee's position that disputes reach him only after positions have hardened. The Secretary of Defense has, in consequence, found it difficult to play the positive, creative role required of the cabinet officer who together with the President and the Secretary of State formulates high policy for foreign and military affairs.

In exercising the functions of arbitration and control, the Secretary of Defense and his staff have become overwhelmed with many administrative tasks which, were it not for deep-seated interservice rivalry, could be better handled by the individual services. This condition is reflected in the ever increasing number of Assistant Secretaries of Defense and the heavy emphasis of the Secretary's office on financial controls at the expense of strategic doctrine. Financial controls are no doubt essential. Nevertheless a principal objective of any reorganization plan should be to create conditions in which the Secretary of Defense can give a more effective lead to the initiation and formulation of broad military policy, while delegating to the substructures of the defense organization a substantial portion of his present administrative burden.

Recommended Changes

The foregoing analysis indicates that the difficulties described are inherent in the present organization of the Defense Department, and that they cannot be removed merely by adjustments of the existing structure. The obstacles to correcting these deficiencies are formidable indeed. Yet the growing complexity of modern technology, the foreseeable rise in the cost of maintaining weapons systems, and the interdependence of foreign policy and military capability make it clear that our future security—which is to say, our survival as a nation—will require a far more efficient system for military planning and military decisions.

To remedy the central weaknesses, the following changes are recommended.

Roles and Missions:

a) The military departments should be removed from the channel of operational command. The existing military departments should cease to be responsible for carrying out particular combat missions. Henceforth, their responsibility should be to provide support in matters of recruitment, training, research, procurement and supply for unified operational commands (to be described below). Relieved of their responsibilities for strategic planning and combat operations, the service chiefs and their civilian superiors could concentrate on tasks of management and logistics.

b) All of the operational military forces of the United States should be organized into unified commands to perform missions which are called for by our strategic requirements. No foreseeable conflict will fit the category of land, sea or air battle. Therefore, unified commands, each composed of appropriate land, sea and air elements and assigned a particular mission, are essential. Each unified command should be composed of the appropriate elements from each military service brought together under a single commander. As units complete their training within the existing services they would be assigned to a functional command. The units assigned to each of the unified commanders should be organic to his command and not simply placed under his operational control temporarily. Each unified command would be, in effect, a combined force with its own mission and trained to carry out a distinctive task.

The composition and mission of these unified commands should not be frozen by legislation. They should be determined from time to time in the President's discretion, so that they remain abreast of technology and of the tasks an evolving strategy will require. The conduct of all-out war may be one mission; continental defense another; limited war still another.

In such an organization officers could more easily transcend the confines of service loyalty and address themselves more objectively to strategic problems. With each functional area representing a clear strategic mission, the requirements of self-interest and of strategic doctrine would be much more in harmony than now.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff:

c) The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff should be designated Principal Military Advisor to the Secretary of Defense and the President. The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs is the only member who can give his full-time attention to problems of over-all strategic doctrine. It is therefore logical that he be the Principal Military Advisor to the President and the Secretary of Defense instead of the Joint Chiefs collectively. The Chiefs of the several services would continue to serve on the Joint Chiefs of Staff but only as advisors to the Chairman and with particular responsibility for the areas of logistics, training and procurement.

d) The staff of the Joint Chiefs of Staff should be organized on a unified basis and placed under the control of the Chairman. The Chairman should be in a position to shape strategic planning. One major obstacle is that officers on interservice staffs and committees are negotiators rather than planners and tend to represent the point of view of a service rather than an over-all approach. A unified staff under the direct control of the Chairman would remove many of the service pressures on the members of the staff. The organization of the unified staff would be analogous to that of the functional commands. It would assist the Chairman in his capacity as Principal Military Advisor to the President and the Secretary of Defense in strategic and operational planning.

e) All officers above the rank of Brigadier General or equivalent should receive their permanent promotions from the Department of Defense and would become officers of the Armed Forces of the United States. This change is essential in order to derive the full benefits from recommendation (d). For effective over-all planning, it is vital that we develop a group of top officers who throughout their careers have been encouraged to transcend the thinking of any one service. The procedure recommended here would retain the specialization necessary to command specific units and the morale which goes with membership in a service. At the higher levels, however, where the requirement is for an over-all view, the primary loyalty of all high-ranking officers would transcend service boundaries. Since entry into this group would be the goal of most if not all officers throughout their careers, junior officers would know that their future would depend on their ability to take a broad view, rather than on the ability to defend the point of view of their service on interdepartmental committees. When a higher rank within a service seems required by circumstances, a temporary appointment should be made.

The Authority of the Secretary of Defense:

f) The line of operational command should be from the President and the Secretary of Defense to the functional commanders through the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in his capacity as Principal Military Advisor. Any modern war requires swift reaction and this can be achieved only if there are a minimum number of organizational layers. Since the present division of functions among the military services often represents no distinguishable strategic task, the separate military departments should be relieved from responsibility for the unified commands as recommended above. Rather, the unified commands should be under the Principal Military Advisor to the President. This proposal recognizes that the Secretary of Defense is the deputy commander-in-chief. His position in the line of command would preserve civilian control over the armed forces.

g) The line of logistic command should be from the President through the Secretary of Defense to the Secretaries of the three military Departments. This recommendation is an application to logistics and the recruitment and training of manpower of the previous recommendation.

h) The Secretary of Defense should be given authority over all research, development and procurement. He should have the right of cancellation and transfer of service programs together with their appropriations. He should also be given a direct appropriation for the conduct of research and development programs at the Defense Department level. One of the outstanding characteristics of the present period is the basic relationship between strategy and technology. When technology was relatively stable, the technical aspect of military planning usually involved problems either of procurement or of engineering. But today with technology developing at an explosive rate, the direction of both research and development is a primary strategic concern. As a result, another war may well be won or lost in the laboratories and on the drawing boards. As long as the Secretary of Defense cannot shape the direction of research and development or of procurement, his role will be the essentially passive one of arbitrating disputes formulated elsewhere. Where so much depends on keeping up and staying ahead in the technological race, it is essential that our weapons development reflects a clear sense of direction and not a series of compromises.

The Problem of Lead Times

Lead time—the interval between conception and execution—has never been more crucial. The best plans will be fruitless if they cannot be carried out rapidly. The best production apparatus will be ineffective if it requires too long to produce the necessary implements of defense. A nation can achieve a basic advantage if it is able either to develop or to produce weapons more rapidly than its opponent.

One of the major weaknesses in our strategic posture has been our inordinately long lead-times. They have been produced in part by the cumbersome machinery in the Department of Defense. In part they have been caused by a quest for perfection in development and by its corollary which is an over-concern with the avoidance of mistake. As our government has grown, it has followed the familiar course into a system of rewards that favors caution and mediocrity. Punishment for inaction is rare, but retribution is swift and harsh for measures that were imaginative, risky and failed. It is especially important that this pattern be reversed in a situation which is inherently uncertain and where great achievement is inseparable from great risk. It is essential that we compress our lead-times and the recommendations in this report should help in this direction. At the same time there has to be a greater flexibility and willingness to run risks in research, development and procurement.

Strategy and Psychology

Another great weakness in the organization of our national government is the absence of a clear focus at any single point to assess the psychological impact of our actions. Whatever the wisdom of the decision not to engage in a race with the Soviet Union in the space satellite field, it does not appear that the psychological reaction of other nations to a Soviet "first" in this field has been given sufficient weight. Yet the more revolutionary the developments of technology, the more their significance depends on the interpretation placed on them. Since very few of the modern weapons have ever been used in wartime, their impact on policy reflects what people think with respect to them. It is therefore essential that within our national government there exists a mechanism to assess the psychological impact both at home and abroad of our actions in the military field as in others. This is a problem far transcending the organization of the Department of Defense and will be dealt with at greater length in the report of other Subpanels. It is mentioned here only because a section on organizational remedies would be incomplete without it:

Conclusion:

Implementation of the recommendations in this section would provide a unity and coherence now absent from our defense organization. They are the primary means to achieve economies in our defense structure because they will permit a better utilization of resources and eliminate the present duplication of functions.

VII—Alliances and the Role of Force

WITHIN the framework of Articles 51 and 52 of the United Nations Charter the U.S. has since the end of World War II entered into a wide variety of mutual assistance agreements with other states. These range from the sweeping multilateral defense arrangements of the Rio Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance to a number of bilateral agreements with individual nations. Our armed forces overseas are reminders of our determination to carry out these commitments.

The Basis of the Free World System of Alliances

Strategically, the system of alliances in which the U.S. participates is invaluable in the over-all world balance of power. Overseas bases provide advanced observation and warning posts against possible Soviet aggression. They bring the retaliatory forces closer to possible targets, thus adding to the deterrent by making the counter blow more certain. The advent of missiles will not reduce the importance of alliances. To be sure, missiles will increase the vulnerability of all free world nations. On the other hand, intermediate and short-range missiles can reach almost all of the U.S.S.R. from present free world territory. The geographic relationship is such that intermediate range missiles in the hands of our allies or on their territory have strategic significance similar to that of intercontinental missiles in the hands of the U.S.S.R. And the shorter range the missile, the more mobile its launching site and, therefore, the less vulnerable it is to Soviet surprise attack.

The significance of alliances has been further increased by the growth of the Soviet nuclear stockpile. As long as the United States possessed an atomic monopoly, the chief significance of alliances was in providing advance notice of the American intention to resist a Soviet move against countries covered by security arrangements. At the same time, as long as the chief deterrent to Soviet aggression was the U.S. predominance in retaliatory power, there was an understandable reluctance on the part of our allies to make a major military effort. As long as it was believed that the issue of a war would be decided elsewhere, few of our allies saw much significance in making a large military contribution. The reliance on an all-out strategy tended to run counter to our desires for building common strength.

But with the growth of the Soviet nuclear stockpile and the means to deliver it, all members of the alliance have an equal interest in removing any Soviet illusion that it might use its capability for all-out war as a shield behind which to expand by more limited means. They also share an interest to keep any war that does break out to the smallest proportions. This is possible only to the extent that local resistance is feasible. Alliance arrangements can provide local forces to deter or check aggression. They can strengthen the local will to resist because they guarantee that a threatened country would not stand alone. The efficacy of the alliances in which we participate may not only determine the issue of a war; they are good insurance against such wars breaking out in the first place.

Alliances and the United Nations

The United Nations remains the greatest symbol of man's hope for peace and the most comprehensive organization working toward it. It has proved its ability to act in a number of situations from Korea to Suez. It is an indispensable forum for expressing the hopes of humanity and an effective institution for pursuing agreed ends.

Still, it would be idle to pretend that under present circumstances the United Nations can replace the regional alliances the need for which was foreseen in the Charter. The Soviet veto in the Security Council prevents effective action by that body in all situations where communist powers are parties to the dispute. And these are precisely the cases which present the gravest threat to the security of the world. Moreover, many other dangers may see the United Nations paralyzed either by communist intransigence or by disputes among U.N. members extraneous to the issues actually at stake. Thus while we should strive to resist aggression through the widest possible expression of the consensus of humanity, we cannot permit the world to be dominated by hostile totalitarian nations simply because these have been able to hamstring the machinery of the United Nations. Until United Nations action is taken we should try to act in concert with the widest grouping of nations attainable as provided by Article 51 of the Charter. The system of free world alliances thus is not an alternative to the United Nations but its complement; it is the only means for collective security where the processes of the United Nations may be blocked or its action rendered ineffective.

Pressure on the Alliance System

To assert that alliances are important does not imply that all is well with them. On the contrary it is essential that we recognize three sets of forces tending to weaken our system of alliances: the fear of communist military power, the ambiguity of communist tactics of aggression, and the lack of a strategic concept offering reasonable prospects of protection to our allies.

Our allies are faced with a situation in which, at one and the same time, the danger of war seems less imminent and the fear of the consequences of war grows greater. In Europe and in Asia, the communist bloc is steadily improving its military capabilities, including nuclear weapons and delivery systems. Against the threat of nuclear attack, many of our allies have little defense of their own. The concern —assiduously fostered by the U.S.S.R.—that the use of even the smallest atomic weapon would involve enormous destruction may weaken the will to resist of many allies, in and out of NATO.

A correlative force contributing to the reluctance of many countries to make a substantial military effort is the growing cost and complexity of modern weapons. This imposes a heavy burden on frail economies and it requires skills and facilities which some of our allies do not have. The attainment of a capability to deter or check local aggression is made much more difficult. In many cases, the ability to resist locally is actually decreasing, while the need for it has become greater than ever.

Aggravating the other pressures on our alliance arrangements is the concept of aggression which underlies them. Existing treaties essentially are concerned with open attack by armed regular troops, and do not cover a whole range of communist aggressive techniques, from economic strangulation to slow take-overs by communist-guided and communist-armed fifth columns. As a result, the communist bloc has learned that if it keeps its challenges sufficiently ambiguous and below the level of intensity which the non-communist world considers to warrant major military measures, we and our allies may prove unable or unwilling to take effective action. Korea, Indochina, and the Middle East deserve close study with this problem in mind. Confronted by an ambiguous threat, even a group of nations whose interests are very similar often find it exceedingly difficult to achieve an effective concerted response.

Alliance Strategy

One of the major problems faced by our alliance policy is to devise a military strategy equally meaningful both to us and to our allies. In view of its manifold commitments, the United States has been understandably reluctant to commit itself to defend specific allied territories locally. Instead, we have largely relied on our retaliatory force, supplemented by mobile sea and tactical air power, to deter aggression of all kinds. While the allies of the United States have joined together on that basis, none has ever given up the strong desire to see its own homelands protected from invasion or devastation.

This difference of viewpoints has meant that, with the partial exception of NATO, the alliances in which we participate are not based on a military strategy equally congenial to all partners. The lack of an agreed strategy has resulted in weaknesses, indecisions and contradictions at all levels of our security arrangements. It has led to endless difficulties in formulating and implementing U.S. base agreements and military aid programs. There have been disagreements concerning military requirements and programs. And there has been a reluctance on the part of our allies to make or to meet specific force commitments, partly because the function those forces would perform has been so vague. Moreover our strategy is largely atomic, those of our allies generally non-atomic, except those of Great Britain. Thus as nuclear weapons and delivery systems play an ever greater role, present allied forces will become less capable of making major military contributions to other than internal security missions.

The United States must therefore make a concerted effort, together with its allies, to develop and implement plans which meet the joint security requirements of all partners. If allied forces are to be capable of acting in concert with U.S. forces, we will have to assist in their transformation and development. This does not mean that all allied elements must inevitably be equipped along the lines of comparable U.S. units. To the maximum degree possible both the types and levels of equipment should be adapted to the particular security requirements of our allies. But we must establish a measure of harmony between the tactical doctrine of our allies and our own and equip the respective forces accordingly.

The free world is faced with a major task of strengthening and re-equipping its forces at a time when both rapidly changing technology and, in many parts of the world, decreasing popular support for military programs combine to make the job extremely costly and difficult. It is probable that the United States will have to provide—either directly or indirectly—substantial quantities of equipment needed by our allies, or else see their political stability decline along their military strength. Increased consultation will be of great significance in removing the sense of impotence of many of our allies produced by unfamiliarity with modern technology and by a feeling of being left out from decisions which affect their fate.

The proposed military measures are by no means the sole means of maintaining the vitality of the system of free world alliances. They must be supplemented by positive programs for political cohesiveness, for economic and technical cooperation, and by other measures discussed more fully by various groups of the over-all study project of which this panel is but one part.

VIII—The Special Case of NATO

Introduction

OF THE alliance systems in which we participate, the two most important are the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. NATO is militarily the most highly developed of our multiple alliances. It covers an area of great cultural and economic significance to both East and West. As in the case of our Western Hemisphere allies, it embraces nations with whom we share a common spiritual and cultural heritage.

In order to appreciate the military importance of NATO we need only to contemplate our situation were Western Europe in Soviet hands. The Communist Bloc would then have an industrial potential at least equal to our own. It would lie astride the world's main communications lines. It would flank and engulf the Middle East. It would be able to manipulate the manpower, factories and cultural prestige of Europe to dominate Africa and infiltrate South America.

The Weaknesses of NATO

Western Europe is deeply affected by the revolutionary changes taking place all over the world. Its position in world affairs has been altered by the emergence into nationhood of many of its former colonial possessions in Asia, the Middle East and Africa. At the same time, for a variety of reasons, the sense of urgency on which NATO was founded has declined and a number of rivalries and irritations between NATO members have been revived. The dispute over Cyprus was permitted to fester to the detriment of NATO; France has withdrawn most of her NATO units for action in North Africa. The Anglo-French adventure in Egypt and our reaction to it weakened NATO ties while the British White Paper on Defense for 1957, the issuance of which was hastened by the debacle at Suez, foreshadows sharp reductions of British military power on the continent.

Sentiment toward neutralism, or at least toward a more passive adherence to the alliance, has been growing in some NATO countries. Many factors contribute to this psychological retreat from a nuclear reality in which they have no part, including the relative weakness of our NATO partners as compared to the Soviet Union and the United States. But perhaps the most pervasive reason is the reaction to the consequences of nuclear warfare. This anxiety has two aspects: on the one hand, Europeans recoil from the damage and destruction they believe would result from the use of any sort of atomic weapons; on the other, they are beginning to question whether the growing Soviet nuclear stockpile will not make the U.S. reluctant to risk devastation of the American mainland in order to protect Europe.

Nevertheless, whatever the disagreements within NATO, the U.S.S.R. has demonstrated the significance it attaches to NATO by its incessant efforts to disrupt it. The disagreements indicate, however, that in order to continue to play a major role in the protection of the free world, NATO will have to be adapted to the new conditions created by an evolving technology. It will have to find new means of political and economic collaboration and a new expression for its military strategy.

NATO Strategy

Since 1954, NATO planning has been based on the assumption that in any major war NATO forces would use nuclear weapons from the outset. Accordingly, NATO strategy calls for the maintenance of two components: a shield of local tactical forces and a sword of nuclear retaliatory force. The shield component of NATO has a double purpose: it provides sufficient tactical forces in Western Europe to discourage or contain local aggression, and its presence notifies any possible antagonist that aggression with which these forces might not be able to cope, would trigger the second component of NATO strategy, the sword of strategic striking forces carrying nuclear weapons.

However, three factors have served to cast serious doubts upon this strategy:

The first is the Soviet development of a large-scale air-atomic capability. This has led to speculation that the "sword" of NATO

—the strategic air forces of the United States and the United Kingdom—may not be unsheathed in the event of Soviet aggression on Europe for fear of a devastating attack on the United States and the United Kingdom.

The second factor is that recent trends in U.S. military policy, and perhaps even more in British military policy, have done much to discredit the NATO effort to build forces capable of resisting locally. Both countries have emphasized the massive deterrent rather than the shield force. Thus our European allies are placed in a position where they feel they can no longer rely on the retaliatory force to deter every form of war while that element of power is being stressed at the apparent expense of forces needed for their local defense. This is compounded by the fact that the retaliatory forces are not under NATO command, that of the tactical forces only the British and the Americans possess nuclear weapons, and that the opposing Soviet forces are daily increasing their capabilities to wage both strategic and tactical nuclear warfare. Under these circumstances many Europeans may well regard aggression as posing solely a choice between occupation and destruction.

A third factor making for instability is the reverse of the above: a tendency on the part of some NATO allies to seek to escape their dilemmas by a policy of disengagement and neutralism. There is an understandable temptation to depend for deterrence on the military effort of a stronger power and to rely for protection on a war fought elsewhere. The strategic striking forces in the exclusive possession of the United States and the United Kingdom tend to produce a feeling of impotence inhibiting a major effort.

Recommendations with Respect to NATO

The problem of NATO is therefore one of will as much as of power. All partners must realize that henceforth security can be enhanced only by a sharing of risks and capabilities. And they should all be placed into a position where they are able to contribute responsibly to their own security.

To be sure, the ultimate answers to the problems of NATO may be found in the realm of policy and not of strategy. NATO to survive must generate a common sense of political economic and social purposes. Many of the difficulties of NATO are aspects of East-West relations in general; others are produced by situations outside of NATO area proper. Subpanel I is dealing with the political problem at greater length and Subpanel III with the economic and social factors. Nevertheless, an alliance designed to provide protection against aggression can survive only if it is able to develop a common military strategy in which all partners can play a role. If it cannot adapt itself to new conditions, it must of necessity become sterile.

Fortunately there are two factors which seem to offer possibilities for a viable common strategy. The first of these is the disaffection in the Soviet bloc, so vividly illustrated in the cases of Hungary and Poland. This reduces the combat value of satellite forces and makes even more precarious the already tenuous line of communications between the Soviet forces in Central Europe and their home base.

The second, and more important, is the availability in quantity of tactical nuclear weapons. The battlefield advantage accruing to tactical defensive forces, through preparation of positions, prior determination of target areas and stockpiling of both nuclear and conventional munitions, offers hope that even relatively small but highly trained NATO forces could hurl back a local attack and blunt major aggression. It is perhaps too early to say that this is possible; it is crucial that we re-examine our present concept of the capabilities required to defend Western Europe in addition to the threat of strategic retaliation on the U.S.S.R.

Thus a prime element in the new strategy must be a significant strengthening of the NATO shield forces. The ability to resist local incursions will remove one temptation to aggression. The knowledge that an attack will meet with substantial local resistance provides an additional deterrent to Soviet encroachments. The United States must pursue with conviction this task of strengthening the shield forces, for it is equally in our interest to see that a conflict arising in Europe, either by design or by miscalculation, does not inevitably result in all-out war. But however earnest our effort to strengthen the shield forces it will be unavailing unless our allies are prepared to make a substantially greater contribution both in forces and in the spirit with which they approach the common task of defense.

A corollary of this central problem of establishing an adequate NATO shield is to provide within Europe—controlled by Europeans—an atomic and missile capability that will substantially reduce Europe's dependence on U. S. and British strategic air power. This is necessary to restore the declining power position of NATO vis-a-vis the U.S.S.R.

and to give reality to the European sense of participation, which is a basic ingredient of the will to resist.

A strong NATO shield is all the more important because one of the purposes of the growing Soviet naval threat is undoubtedly to bring about a situation where the Soviet Union may be able to disrupt sea communications between us and our NATO allies by submarines and by mining European harbors. In such a situation, the willingness to resist a simultaneous Soviet invasion will depend importantly on the forces available in Europe and under NATO control.

The Role of the United States

To accomplish these objectives will require the following of the United States: First of all, we must pool with our allies scientific and technical information and assist in mobilizing the research and development capability of NATO both in the civilian and the military field. The history of science suggests that such pooling would in the long run be of special importance to the United States which throughout its history has drawn heavily on the intellectual resources of Europe.

Second, we must strive for a true military interdependence which closely ties together the United States and the other NATO powers.

Thirdly, we must acknowledge the necessity for maintaining in Europe for an indefinite period a strong contribution to the shield forces.

Finally, we must provide those of our allies that desire them with nuclear weapons and delivery systems, as well as with some of the other complex equipment of modern war. A step in the direction of these objectives was taken at the NATO Council meeting in December 1957.

It would be unrealistic to say that such policies will be either cheap or without risk. But the cost and risk of being without them would be greater still. A strong, self-reliant Europe must always be a major American concern. Such a Europe, continuing along its present path toward greater unity, is a major force for peace and can play an ever greater role in the future evolution of free society.

IX—Civil Defense

THERE are few problems of the atomic age with which the United States has had greater difficulty in coming to grips than civil defense. Because of our historic invulnerability to direct military attack, we have treated civil defense as a minor adjunct to our over-all strategy both in terms of planning and in the resources allocated to it.

The full civil defense problem is well beyond the scope of this report and has been the subject of a special study in the government. The technical possibilities of defending our cities and homes, the costs, the impact on our national psychology and ways of working and living present a complex of considerations deserving detailed and separate examination. Nevertheless, the connection between civil defense and the other elements of our national security requires a general evaluation of the subject.

If relations with the Soviet bloc ever reach the showdown stage, the edge of difference, which may be very fine, may well depend on the strength of the competing wills. This in turn is likely to reflect the relative vulnerabilities. It is an oppressive thought that such circumstances might in fact occur, but it would be irresponsible to suggest that they are impossible. Courage in crisis, if it is to be effective and continuing, must rest on confidence and hope.

Deterrence, in short, depends on a combination of power and will. The factor of power requires a retaliatory capability sufficient to overcome any enemy defense, and as invulnerable as possible to surprise attack. The factor of will may hinge importantly on a reasonable combination of active and passive defense measures. An enemy who felt confident that he could disrupt and disorganize our society while preserving the substance of his own might be tempted to launch an all-out blow. Conversely the ability to afford reasonable protection to our population may enable us to act with firmness and resolution in times of crisis. In the age of the ballistic missile the known capability of a society to withstand attack will become an increasingly important deterrent.

Civil defense will not be easy, and it can never be complete. Protecting against massively destructive weapons is an enormous problem. A 20-megaton thermonuclear weapon, which is by no means the largest available, with a radius of surface destruction by blast and heat of between five to eight miles, will inevitably have devastating consequences.

Difficulty does not mean impotence, however, While it may be impossible to protect the population against the blast and heat of an atomic explosion, protection against radioactive fall-out and other contamination appears to be much more feasible. Equally important is increased understanding on the part of our people about the effects of modern weapons. This will enable us to respond with discipline and effectiveness to a surprise attack and it will discourage such a move because an aggressor would no longer be able to gamble that a sudden attack might disorganize our society.

It is possible to state certain general principles in relation to the development of any civil defense program:

1. Civil defense must be considered as part of the over-all U.S. strategic posture. It must be faced forthrightly. It should be part of our defense planning and included in our over-all strategic plans. Cadres charged with supervising civil defense activities, both in possible pre-attack and the post-attack phase, must be developed and trained immediately. The expense involved should be in addition to existing military outlays.
2. The American people need to be told more clearly the dimensions of the damage that would be inflicted on us by a sudden attack and about the measures to reduce its effects. Any civil defense program must have as a prerequisite a program of public information supported by the Federal Government and carried through at all levels.
3. A civil defense program should be integrated with the construction program needed for the normal development of our expanding population and economy.

An effective civil defense program can be separated into three stages:

1. To provide warning, where possible, and information about radiological levels. This requires an attack-proof radiation-level monitoring system and an attack-proof radio-net to broadcast instructions during and after an attack.
2. Protection against fall-out. It has been estimated that half of the casualties of a large-scale atomic attack or between 25-35 million might result from radioactive fall-out. A fall-out shelter program could prevent such a calamity by reducing casualties substantially.

3. Protection against atomic blast and heat. This is a major problem particularly in our big urban concentrations. This panel has heard testimony about the utility of deep shelters. The subject is of such complexity, however, and the costs are so very large that this report cannot go further than to commend such a program for careful study. If indeed it proves feasible, it will add greatly to our security as a nation.

The major difficulty with civil defense has been our failure to treat it as an integral part of our defense planning. The first step will have to be to construct an attack-proof radio-net, and to begin on a program of fall-out shelters. Fall-out shelters are more feasible than blast shelters because they are easier to construct and because the population does not need to enter them until after an enemy attack has in fact occurred. Thus in most areas a warning time of 45 minutes could be counted on. The shelter program should be carried out with a maximum degree of cooperation with local and state authorities.

In addition to the protection of the population against fall-out, provision should be made for the post-attack period. It will be highly important to plan on centers of administration and government. Stockpiling food supplies and industrial reserves in safe places will prevent famine and enable the early resumption of economic activity. At the same time a continuation of organized activity will be aided by the greatest possible degree of dispersal of industry. It would be too costly to disperse existing industrial installations but tax incentives could be provided for the location of new facilities away from main concentrations.

While engaging in a civil defense at home, we must be prepared to assist our allies in similar efforts. Nothing would demonstrate better our basic concern for the security of our allies than a readiness to cooperate in the protection of their populations.

The main feature to note with respect to civil defense is that it is overdue. It does not make sense for the free world to engage in a major military effort without at the same time protecting its most important resource: its civilian population.

X—International Tensions and the Reduction of Armaments

Arms and the Prospects of Peace

THE destructiveness of modern weapons has focused the hopes of mankind as never before on the attainment of a stable peace. Considerable attention has been paid to the effort of reducing tensions through the reduction and control of armaments.

This panel, as all Americans, considers the achievement of a peaceful world the primary challenge before mankind. The United States disarmed unilaterally and drastically immediately after World War II; it refused to take advantage of its atomic monopoly; it acted patiently and moderately in the face of constant Soviet provocation. Even after the Greek civil war, the Berlin blockade, and the Korean War had caused us to undertake a substantial rearmament program, we have responded to every seeming relaxation of tension by reducing our military establishment, sometimes even below the point of safety. In fact, many of the difficulties described in this report are due to this tendency.

The desirability of easing international tensions therefore does not require argument. It would be highly irresponsible, however, to raise hopes which cannot be fulfilled or to hold out prospects which on closer examination prove to increase our peril. However dangerous the multiplying armaments, the illusion of security brought about by a spurious agreement to disarm would be a poor substitute for vigilance based on strength.

Genuine, enforceable, inspected reduction of arms is an objective on which all Americans are agreed. Yet we must realize that of all the outstanding issues, disarmament is the most difficult problem to settle directly. There are many other problems such as German unification or Soviet subversive activities in the Middle East which, if resolved, would greatly ease tensions and thus almost automatically bring about a reduction of arms. We will make disarmament negotiations more realistic if we face their inherent difficulty frankly and if we are not seduced by Soviet slogans which in the past have used these negotiations as a means to disarm their intended victims.

The nature of disarmament must be understood if peace and not slavery is to result from efforts to attain it. It has several meanings, all of which hide great complexities: the reduction of forces, the control of arms, the prevention of surprise attack and the end of bomb testing. Each will be considered in turn.

The Reduction and Control of Arms

Reduction of forces is bound to be difficult to negotiate because it seeks to compare unlike quantities. What for example is the relation between the United States Strategic Air Command and the ability of Soviet ground forces to overrun nearby countries? How does one compare an aircraft carrier to an armored division? If the United States disbanded its Strategic Air Command, it would take a decade at least to reconstitute. The Soviet Union can demobilize parts of its vast army and still retain the ability to reassemble it from reserve components at very short notice.

Moreover, the Soviet Union is not likely to accept a reduction of forces which curtailed its ability to control the satellites and to play a major role in areas like the Middle East. But forces sufficient to accomplish these tasks are also sufficient to imperil all the powers on the Soviet borders. A reduction of forces which leaves unimpaired the Soviet ability to overrun its neighbors will not diminish the basic security problem of the non-Soviet world.

A reduction of armaments is not meaningful unless it contains safeguards against violations of the agreement. But effective control has been complicated by the increasingly rapid advance of technology. Scientific research and development can decide the armament race. Hence no reduction in standing forces, however scrupulously carried out, can protect a nation against a technological development which drastically changes the strategic balance. The fact that so much of the armaments race occurs in laboratories makes control and inspection more and more complex. It is difficult to find something when one does not know what it is one is looking for.

Many control schemes which would have been effective had they been accepted at the beginning of a given scientific development become meaningless when that range of technology is fully developed. Thus acceptance by the Soviet Union of the U. S. Baruch-Lilienthal plan of 1946 which proposed the control and inspection of the production of fissionable material might have practically eliminated the possibility of nuclear war. In the meantime so much fissionable material has been produced and it is so easily hidden that no control scheme could completely guarantee against a violation. And the spread of fissionable materials through the peaceful uses of nuclear energy will complicate the problem even further.

The Problem of Surprise Attack

Because a controlled and verifiable reduction in forces has proved so complicated, a major emphasis of disarmament efforts has turned to the prevention of surprise attack. It is often argued that an inspection system which reduced the danger of surprise attack also would remove some of the urgent strains from international relationships.

There is no doubt that the danger of surprise attack contributes to the tensions of the nuclear age. But with evolving technology it is questionable whether aerial inspection will significantly reduce the element of surprise. The high state of readiness required of strategic striking forces means that they need no noticeable mobilization to launch their blow. As the speed of planes increases, warning times will be progressively reduced. And in the age of the Inter-Continental Ballistic Missile, which is close upon us, the maximum warning time afforded by even a perfect inspection system will be half an hour, the period of time the missile will be in transit. Under such circumstances, even a foolproof inspection system will tell largely what is already known: that the opponent possesses the capability to launch a devastating attack on very short notice and with a minimum of warning.

But if aerial inspection can no longer protect against surprise attack, it can reveal an almost equally grave threat from hidden installations. Even a partial inspection system, operated by the U.N., would protect the world to a degree from hidden military capabilities. But more than this is unlikely from aerial inspection. Much as we would like to be more optimistic, we cannot see how present vigilance could be reduced or insecurity be removed, by any aerial inspection system now in prospect.

The Problem of War Limitation

This study has considered various suggestions for preventing the catastrophe of an all-out war caused by miscalculation or through the spreading of small wars. It seems doubtful that ground rules for the conduct of limited war could be established by mutual agreement, since in order to undermine the will to resist, the Soviet Union has every interest in painting the consequences of resistance in the direst terms. Nevertheless, it would seem wise for the U. S. to include on the agenda of disarmament negotiations concrete proposals to limit such wars as may be forced on us to the smallest necessary dimensions. Even should the Soviet Union reject our proposals, they would serve to clarify our intentions and make less likely a war caused by miscalculation. Even a unilateral declaration which gave an indication of some of the steps we propose to follow to achieve the goal of reducing noncombatant casualties, such as a decision to use only weapons without substantial fall-out effects, would give an opponent a strong incentive to follow suit.

The value of unilateral declarations is proved by the experience of World War II. Neither the Soviet Union nor Japan had ratified the Geneva convention of 1929 with respect to the treatment of war prisoners. Yet on June 27, 1941 the U. S. S. R. informed the International Committee of the Red Cross of its decision to adhere to the convention and within a week of the outbreak of the war Japan announced that it would abide by the Prisoners of War convention. Though violations undoubtedly occurred, this indicates that both countries saw an advantage in projecting themselves before the world as subscribers to rules of war. Clear United States declarations, firmly adhered to, might provide a similar framework for mitigating the consequences of modern war.

The Issue of Testing

Despite the vital importance of nuclear weapons to our survival, it would be irresponsible to be blind to the hazards inherent in their use. An indiscriminate and all-out use of existing nuclear stockpiles would bring about an extremely serious level of radiation on the entire planet.

The growth of nuclear stockpiles on both sides has been aptly described as the "balance of terror." It is a condition which some have incorrectly interpreted as a static, unchanging, nuclear "stalemate" or "standoff." Nothing could be further from the truth.

Nuclear deterrence is immensely complicated, since each new scientific advance, if applied by one side and not the other, is capable of overturning the strategic equation. In a dynamic situation, we must continually strive to improve our technological position lest an accumulation of advances by an aggressor ultimately confront us with overwhelming strength. It is this situation which should cause us to be extremely wary about ending nuclear weapons testing.

It has been proposed to start disarmament by an agreement to stop tests of nuclear weapons. It has been claimed that such a ban would be self-policing. Nuclear tests are said to be a hazard to the health of all people and of generations yet unborn; and they are represented as leading to ever more horrible weapons.

Unfortunately a nuclear test is easily recorded or monitored only if no serious attempt is made to keep it secret. If a nation wants to hide its tests, observation will become very complicated and uncertain. To be sure, secret tests require considerable effort. But the Soviet Union has never spared resources in order to secure a military advantage. On the other hand, our history and our free society make it certain that we will respect the international obligations which we undertake.

As to the medical danger, there is much evidence to indicate that past tests have had a much smaller effect on public health than other biological effects to which mankind is constantly exposed. The accumulated radiation from weapons tests is only an insignificant fraction of the dosage to which most Americans are exposed from X-rays. To be sure, exposure to any additional radiation should be avoided. As in the case of X-rays what is involved, however, is a balancing of risks. The dangers of continued weapons testing must be weighed against the hazards inherent in conducting them. If an end of weapons testing weakened the deterrent and made a war more likely, or more catastrophic, we would have brought on what we most wished to avoid.

As long as the production of fissionable material continues, an end of weapons testing would probably ensure that any future war would take the most extreme form. It would have to be fought with weapons in their present state of development and past tests on both sides have concentrated on the most powerful devices. Conversely, since the most destructive weapons have already been tested, further tests will enable us to use nuclear arms in a more discriminating manner. By increasing our capability for limited war this will add to the deterrent to local aggression. At the same time continued testing may enable us to reduce radioactive fall-out to the point where we will become increasingly able to confine any war which may be forced on us to our opponent's war machine. And it may make possible the development of nuclear anti-aircraft or anti-missile weapons to protect our population against enemy attack.

Thus, a ban on weapon testing without adequate inspection and without an end to the production of nuclear weapons would be beneficial only to the side prepared to violate the agreement. Our strong desire for peace and security should not induce us to buy the semblance of one at the expense of the other.

The Prospect of Peace

A world from which the threat of war has been removed would correspond to the deepest desires of American society. But peace cannot be attained by wishing for it. It requires patience, understanding and determination. We must always stand ready to negotiate on the issues that divide the world including disarmament. But until the Soviet Union has shown a greater willingness to settle these disputes on terms other than her own, it would be dangerous for us not to be wary of a power that has brutally suppressed Hungarian freedom, fanned the flames of violence elsewhere and constantly threatens the world with rocket and nuclear attacks. As soon as the Soviet Union shows a sincere willingness to help in the construction of a peaceful world order it will be able to count on an eager American cooperation in any disarmament effort.

XI—Budget for National Security

ACHIEVEMENT of the objectives of our national security programs in the years ahead hinges on the availability of financial resources and the manner in which they are applied. There is grave reason for concern with respect to the inadequacy of recent levels of military appropriations as well as with respect to the workings of the budgetary process.

The Budgetary Level

Programs of great importance to U.S. security now suffer from insufficient funds. Several reasons have brought about this state of affairs. When the Korean War ended, it was natural that an effort be made to reduce military expenditures. But the execution of the reductions has had serious consequences which did not become evident for some time because of a backlog of unspent appropriations. For example, the momentum of the Air Force build-up continued until unspent appropriations from 1952 and 1953 ran out. Similarly, Army procurement has been financed well into 1956 from pre-1954 appropriations.

The result has been a serious imbalance in our military preparedness. Recent budgetary ceilings could be maintained only by a reduction of forces in all services, a process which has been slowly going on for the past three years. The budgetary squeeze affected not only force-levels, it also slowed down our research effort in many fields causing us to lose ground to the U.S.S.R.

Recent military expenditures are therefore insufficient to maintain even our current force levels. And events have made clear the inadequacy of these levels. This panel has noted these major shortcomings in our strategic posture:

Strategic Forces

1. Aircraft procurement to modernize existing units will have to be authorized into the 1960's. Otherwise, a gap in ready forces between the latest types of manned aircraft and the operational stage of ballistic missiles seems unavoidable. We cannot risk obsolescence of present weapons before new ones are ready.

2. At the same time we should press for the most rapid development and procurement of operational Intermediate Range and Inter-Continental Ballistic Missiles.

3. The base structure of the Strategic Air Command, long out of phase with other elements in its program, should be made less vulnerable to surprise attack through dispersion and other protective measures.

4. Accelerated research and development support should be provided for all key programs including missiles and advance reconnaissance systems.

5. The SAC alert time should be reduced. As the Soviet strength in missiles increases, the maximum warning time available will probably not exceed 20 minutes. It is therefore essential that as long as we rely on manned planes, the Strategic Air Command achieve a 15 minute alert time.

6. The establishment of a retaliatory system based on missile-launching submarines should be expedited.

Active Defense

Today, the U.S.S.R. can attack the U.S. with a strong bomber force. In a few years it will be able to attack with a stronger bomber force, submarine-launched missiles, and Inter-Continental Ballistic Missiles.

Whichever side first achieves a strong defense will be in a strong psychological position. The stronger the active defense, the more it reduces the threat of the opposing strategic striking force.

Our early warning and anti-missile defense systems therefore require greater attention.

Forces for Limited War

To provide the mobile units essential for limited war, additional troop lift should be authorized in the form both of modern aircraft and modern ships.

The Army should be permitted to speed up the modernization of its weapons and of its division structure.

Navy

Anti-submarine warfare requires additional funds. The program of equipping both surface and underwater ships with missiles of various types should be accelerated. We require a large number of modern, nuclear-powered submarines.

Personnel

With the complexity of modern weapons, the importance of a highly competent professional force has never been greater. But despite recent increases present pay scales are inadequate to retain the skilled officers and men necessary to an effective and economic military establishment. Neither are we attracting a sufficient number of the best of our youth to military careers.

Civil Defense

A start should be made without delay on a program of fall-out shelters and related warning and communications equipment.

Mutual Assistance

The re-equipping of allied forces, particularly in NATO, with modern weapons should be speeded up.

The Level of Effort

The above deficiencies in our strategic posture can be removed only by substantially increased defense expenditures. These increases will run into billions of dollars and must rise substantially in each of the next few years. This panel does not possess the data to determine the precise budgetary level. The best testimony it has heard indicates that the deficiencies noted above will require successive additions on the order of $3 billion each year for the next several fiscal years. This figure does not cover the necessary increases in mutual assistance programs and in civilian defense. Because we must maintain our present forces, particularly of manned planes, even while we go into production on new weapons, such as missiles, the cost of military programs will continue to rise with no leveling-off likely before 1965.

This is a heavy burden, even though its effects will be cushioned by the expected growth of our Gross National Product. The impact of defense spending on our national economy will be discussed by Subpanel IV. It is worth noting here that the proposed increases in expenditures will be ineffective or reduced in value if national policies permit any important reduction in the purchasing power of the dollar.

The price of survival, then, is not low. This panel is convinced however that the increases in defense expenditures are essential and fully justified provided that the greater expenditure is coupled with increased efficiency. We can afford to survive.

The Budgetary Process

An increased defense effort will not be fully effective unless it is accompanied by the organizational changes outlined in Section VII. These in turn can be prompted by improvements in existing methods of presenting the budget.

The budgetary process could be greatly improved if military budgets were prepared and presented in more discriminating terms. The present method of preparation does not give the President, the Secretary of Defense, Congress or the public a clear indication of what the funds requested will accomplish in terms of military missions or effective units. As a result, it is natural for Congress to make reductions by percentage cuts across-the-board, without the opportunity for a full examination of the effect on strategy and military missions.

Complete budgetary reform may not be immediately feasible. However, a start can be made toward a system that corresponds more closely to a coherent strategic doctrine. It should not be too difficult, for example, to restate the presentation of the service budgets, so that instead of the present categories of "procurement," "operation and maintenance," "military personnel," etc., there would be a much better indication of how much goes, for example, to strategic air, to air defense, to anti-submarine warfare and so on.

Another highly desirable change is to transform the present one-year budget cycle to two years. Under present rules, the top personnel of the services spend a great part of six months of every year preparing, justifying and revising the budgetary requests of their departments. Much of the next six months are consumed in testifying before congressional committees and otherwise defending the service budgets as approved by the President. If the budgetary process would extend over an entire congressional term, the energies of key personnel could be directed toward strategic doctrine and overall management. At the same time congressional control would be more meaningful because the examination of requests could then be more careful.

XII—Conclusion

NO ASPECT of America's problems presents a deeper challenge than the field of national security. It is not only because the technical problems are so complex, though an accelerating technology will test severely our wisdom and our ability to make choices. Nor is the economic challenge the most complicated one we face, though the price of security in the nuclear age is high and likely to increase. It is not even the field of strategic doctrine which presents our deepest problem though military strength is sterile without a doctrine for employing it.

Rather our long-run difficulty resides in our approach to the problem of the role of force. We like to believe that reasonable men can settle all disputes through good-will and compromise and that power should be invoked only as a last resort. We therefore tend to think of diplomacy and force as successive and separate phases of national policy. Unfortunately the position in which we find ourselves does not permit such absolute distinctions. In a revolutionary period the ability and willingness to use force may in itself provide a factor of stability. To a world threatened by aggression and infiltration, American strength and resolution are essential if there is to be a guarantee of security.

To be sure, this may not always be apparent in the public declarations of other nations. To countries primarily concerned with domestic development, foreign aggression may seem unreal and the measures required to resist it may appear as irritating interruptions of more primary tasks. But while we should have full understanding for the psychology which produces these reactions, we would be wrong to gear our policy to it. Force will not solve the problems of this period but the resolution to use it if necessary may afford the breathing spell in which nations can work out their own destiny without foreign interference. We must not forget that the neutrality of many nations is possible only as long as we are strong, just as for a century and a half the British navy made possible our American neutrality. Many of our most vocal critics would be deeply troubled were the protection of our military strength suddenly withdrawn.

Power is a fact whether it be ours or that of the Soviet Union. Its existence cannot be ignored. The dilemmas which it imposes cannot be wished away. Yet the destructiveness of modern weapons confronts us with a normal dilemma. The extensive and indiscriminate use of modern weapons in war runs counter to our deepest sense of private and public morality. We should seek to prevent war and to limit it if it breaks out to the smallest area, terminate it as rapidly and decisively as possible, and conduct it with the minimum loss of life. Yet in a conflict between despotism and freedom, it would be immoral were we to shrink from an adequate defense of the values for which we stand. The very shrinking may serve to precipitate armed conflict.

We are engaged in the phase of a global struggle which has come to be known as the cold war. In this report we have tried to set forth measures which we feel are imperative in the interest of national security. We consider them essential if we are to reduce the likelihood of war and to make sure that if in spite of all our efforts war should be forced upon us, we shall not be overwhelmed by it.

The cold war poses a two-fold dilemma: In our desire for peace, we must not overlook the importance of power in maintaining it. But once we have recognized the role of force we must forever beware that it does not become an end in itself. The more drastic the consequences of modern war, the more we must make certain that we are true to the principles the defense of which alone justifies resort to force. These are facts which we must never forget in the middle of the cold war.

When the security of the United States and of the free world is at stake, cost cannot be the basic consideration. The cold war cannnot be won and a "hot" war cannot be avoided without a major effort. This is clearly not time for complacency; it is just as clearly not a time for hysteria. What is required throughout the country is an attitude of sustained and informed determination. If this report makes a contribution to the emergence of such an attitude, it will have served its purpose.

Summary of Main Points

The Special Studies Project of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Inc. is an attempt to assess major problems and opportunities which are likely to confront America over the next ten to fifteen years.

This report on international security is the work of Panel II which is one of seven panels. The others deal with United States international objectives, foreign economic policy, domestic economic and social objectives, education and manpower, the democratic process and the moral framework of national purpose. Thus security was only one of our concerns. While it is the most urgent, it is not in the long run necessarily the most important. We are concerned with national security because we must be. We are concerned with more positive tasks because we want to be. Security defines our military necessities. Our other panels will deal with our hopes and our humane necessities.

Each of the members of the overall panel has also served on one of the subpanels. We have been meeting regularly since November 1956. Obviously we are most familiar with the subpanels on which we have served. But we have heard periodic reports from all other groups. We have considered the draft of this report at various stages of preparation and we have gone over the final draft in full committee. Not every member of our group necessarily endorses every detail, but we have approved its substance and we strongly urge implementation of its recommendations.

It is the judgment of the panel that prepared this report that all is not well with present U.S. security policies and operations. The over-all U.S. strategic concept lags behind developments in technology and in the world political situation. Defense organization is unrelated in major ways to critically important military missions. Systems of budgets, appropriations, and financial management are out of gear with the radically accelerating flow of military developments. The United States system of alliances must be adapted to constantly changing strategic requirements. The United States is rapidly losing its lead in the race of military technology.

We are convinced that corrective steps must be taken now.

We believe that the security of the United States transcends normal budgetary considerations and that the national economy can afford the necessary measures.

In brief the conclusions of the panel are:

I. The world knows that we would never fight a preventive war. But we and the rest of the free world must be prepared to resist any one of three types of aggression: all-out war, limited war, and non-overt aggression concealed as internal take-over by coup d'etat or by civil war.

II. In order to deter aggression, we must be prepared to fight a nuclear war either all-out or limited.

III. At present there are major shortcomings in our posture for both all-out and limited war. Our retaliatory force is inadequately dispersed and protected. Our active and passive defense is insufficient. Moreover, we lack mobility and versatility for limited war.

IV. Basic changes in our defense organization are recommended to correct the inefficiency and duplication of effort growing out of interservice rivalry.

a) The military departments should be removed from the channel of operational command.

b) All of the operational military forces of the United States should be organized into unified commands to perform missions which are called for by our strategic requirements.

c) The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff should be designated Principal Military Advisor to the Secretary of Defense and the President.

d) The staff of the Joint Chiefs of Staff should be organized on a unified basis and placed under the control of the Chairman.

e) All officers above the rank of Brigadier General or equivalent should receive their permanent promotions from the Department of Defense and would become officers of the Armed Forces of the United States.

f) The line of operational command should be from the President and the Secretary of Defense to the functional commanders through the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in his capacity as Principal Military Advisor.

g) The line of logistic command should be from the President through the Secretary of Defense to the Secretaries of the three military departments.

h) The Secretary of Defense should be given direct authority over all research, development and procurement. He should have the right of cancellation and transfer of service programs together with their appropriations. He should also be given a direct appropriation for the conduct of research and development programs at the Defense Department level.

V. We must strengthen the regional groups of nations, not as an alternative to the U.N. but as its complement in line with Article 51 of the Charter.

VI. The U.S. must make a concerted effort to meet the joint security requirements of all partners in the alliances in which we participate by contributing to the development of a common strategic concept, by assisting in the re-equipping of allied forces by fostering political cohesiveness and by economic and technical cooperation.

VII. We must pool with our allies in NATO scientific and technical information, and provide them with nuclear weapons and delivery systems.

VIII. Civil defense must be part of our over-all strategic posture. A program must be undertaken to include a warning system and fall-out shelters.

IX. We must face the fact that a meaningful reduction of armaments must be preceded by a reduction of tensions and a settlement of outstanding issues that have divided the world since World War II. At the same time, concrete proposals to limit such wars as might be forced on us should be introduced into negotiations on reduction in forces. Even if the Soviet Union should reject our proposals, a unilateral declaration might give it a strong incentive to follow suit.

X. Starting immediately, defense expenditures must be increased substantially over the next few years. Testimony indicates that current deficiencies in our strategic posture require additional expenditures each year of approximately $3 billion for the next several years. This does not include necessary increased appropriations for mutual assistance and for civil defense. Because we must maintain our present forces as we go into production on new weapons, such as missiles, the cost of military programs will continue to rise until at least 1965.

Specific recommendations include the following:

a) Aircraft procurement to modernize existing units be authorized into the 1960's while pressing for the most rapid development of operational Intermediate Range and Inter-Continental Ballistic Missiles.

b) The SAC base structure be made less vulnerable to surprise attack through dispersion and other protective measures.

c) An accelerated research and development support be provided for such key programs as missiles.

d) Additional troop transport be authorized in the form both of modern aircraft and ships.

e) The program of equipping both surface and underwater ships with missiles of various types be accelerated and additional funds for anti-submarine defense be provided.

f) Military pay scales be raised to retain skilled officers and men.

PRINTED BY PUBLISHERS PRINTING-ROGERS KELLOGG CORP., N. Y.

DOUBLEDAY HEADLINE PUBLICATIONS

Doubleday Headline Publications give busy, modern, thinking people a unique perspective on the news. More comprehensive than newspapers and TV, more timely than regularly-produced books, Doubleday Headline Publications clarify the major issues and crises of our times.

Merci

Danke schon

GRAZIE

謝謝 tack

χάρις

ขอบคุณ

In any language

Thank you

Ed,

our letters just passed!
thank you so much for the wonderful contribution
Mickey S.

Simonson, Mrs. Mildred

COPY

25 North Drive
Haddonfield, N.J.

July 23, 1958

Dear Miss Hogg,

Thank you for your nice note re my letter to Mr. Murrow. Did he have time to look at it on July 14th or didn't he get in?

If you do hear from him you might tell him I will present a check to Hermann Huber on Aug. 5th or 6th in Muenchen Germany. It will be a very simple ceremony with a few representatives from the university and Studenthaus present. What with money Ella Drischer Schirmacher has collected in Germany, we have close to $1,000. I think that is pretty good because most of the money has come from $5 to $10 contributions from old student friends of Anne Wiggin.

As regards Gloria Brigiotti Etting, author of "Born in a Crowd", I have heard her speak twice. The last time she showed slides of her family growing up in Florence, Italy. Every member of the family from the wife of Ambassador Lodge in Madrid to Marie the musician and director seems to be interesting. Mrs. Etting showed a family reunion. They all seem to have so much fun and I thought what a wonderful family to have on "PERSON TO PERSON". Mrs. Etting's home on Panama Street in Philadelphia is interesting with its "green door painted with the green paint found only in Tuscany".

Well, it's a nice idea!

We leave Saturday for Madrid and Geneva, Muenchen, etc. Will be back Aug. 25th.

Sincerely,

Mildred Simonson.

Mrs. Lloyd Simonson
25 North Drive, Haddonfield, N. J.

July 23, 1958

Dear Miss Hogg,

Thank you for your nice note re my letter to Mr. Murrow. Did he have time to look at it on July 14th or didn't he get in?

If you do hear from him you might tell him I will present a check to Hermann Huber on Aug. 5th or 6th in München Germany. It will be a very simple ceremony with a few representatives from the university and Studentenwerk present. What with ~~What~~ money Ella Drucker Schirmacher has collected in Germany we have close to $1,000. I think that is pretty good because most of the money has come from $5 to $10 contributions from old student friends of Anne Wiggin.

As regards Gloria Brigotti Etting author of "Born in a Crowd". I have heard her speak twice. The last time she showed slides of her family growing up in Florence Italy. Every member of the family from the wife of Ambassador Lodge in Madrid to Mario the musician and director seems to be interesting Mrs. Etting showed a family re-union. They all seem to have so much fun & I thought what a wonderful family, to have on "Person to Person". Mrs. Etting home on Panama Street in Phila. is interesting with its 'Green door painted with the green "paint found only in Tuscany"

Mrs. Lloyd Simonson

25 North Drive, Haddonfield, N. J.

Well, it was a nice idea!

We leave Sat. for Madrid and Geneva, Munchen etc. will be back Aug. 25th.

Sincerely,

Mildred Simonson

Simonson, Lloyd
(Mrs)

July 21, 1958

Dear Mickey:

Sorry for the delay in answering your letter. As my secretary told you, I was on vacation.

Enclosed herewith is my check for $50.00 as a contribution to the Anne Wiggin Memorial Fund. I shall be interested to hear more about the Anne Wiggin Room anytime you have the information.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Lloyd Simonson
25 North Drive
Haddonfield, New Jersey

mcc

July 1, 1958

Mrs. Lloyd Simonson
25 North Drive
Haddonfield, N.J.

Dear Mrs. Simonson:

Thank you for your recent letter to Mr. Murrow, which arrived after his departure on vacation. Although he will be away most of the summer, he will be coming into the office on July 14th, when I will show him your letter.

Very truly yours,

Secretary to Mr. Murrow

skh

Letter from:

Mrs. Lloyd Simonson
25 North Drive
Haddonfield, N.J.

undated - received July 1.

Dear Ed:

I was in New York Friday and talked with Ken Holland. He suggested that I call you but I didn't so I am writing once again in case you still want to make a contribution to the Anne Wiggin Memorial Fund?

Naomi Fernelius called me last night and reported $790 in the Fund. She is going on vacation for a month and altho people are living in her home & will take care of the mail, I suggest you send your contribution to me.

I am going to Europe July 26th and will give Ella Drescher Schirmacher or Manni Huber our check at that time. I will also find out more about the Anne Wiggin Room and just how our money will be spent.

I told you about Gloria Brigiotti Etting in a previous letter. I thought she might be a possibility for your PERSON TO PERSON show. I may see her sister, wife of Ambassador Lodge, when in Madrid but we have all too short a time there. My husband has a lot of business in Madrid also.

Will probably see Walter Kotschnig in Geneva and Ella in Kassel, Manni Huber in Muenchen. After all these years it will be fun! My best to Janet.

C.

Letter sent on to you by Mrs. Lloyd Simonson, written to her by Gloria Etting, and to be returned to Mrs. Simonson.

1922 Panama Street
Philadelphia, Pa.

(Telephone PE.5-8956)

June 11, 1958

Dear Mrs. Simonson:

Please forgive me for this late reply to your most kind and thoughtful letter. How nice of you to take all the trouble to mention us to Ed Murrow, but I'm afraid we are not "in the news" for him. I admire him so much.

I shall write to my sister Francesca Lodge today and tell her that you will telephone her as soon as you arrive in Madrid. I think she will still be there in July, though she is never very pinned down. She prefers that I tell my friends to call her as she has so many things to remember and sometimes she is afraid she might forget to make the contact at the right time - so please do call her. In the meantime, I shall write to her.

When you return in the fall, do let me know how it all went.

Again, thank you for your kind and encouraging words.

Most sincerely,

GLORIA ETTING.

Mrs. Lloyd Simonson

25 North Drive, Haddonfield, N. J.

Dear Ed,

I was in New York Friday and talked with Wen Holland. He suggested that I call you but I didn't so I am writing once again in case you still want to make a contribution to the Anne Wiggin Memorial Fund.?

Naomi Fenelins called me last night & reported $790. in the Fund. She is going on vacation for a month & all the people are living in her home & will take care of the mail, I suggest you send your contribution to me. I am going to Europe July 26th & will give Ella Dresscher Schirmacher or Manni Huber our check at that time. I will also find out more about the Anne Wiggin Room & just how our money will be spent.

I told you about Gloria Brigiotti getting in a previous letter. I thought she might be a possibility for your "Person to Person" show. I may see her sister wife of Ambassador Lodge when in Madrid but we have all too short a time there. my husband has a lot of business in Madrid also. Will probably see Walter Katschnig in Geneva & Ella in Kassel, Manni Huber in München. After all these years it will be fun! my best to Jack.

Mickey S.

Please return

TEL. PE 5-8956

1922 PANAMA STREET

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

June 11, 1958

Dear Mrs. Simonson —

Please forgive me for this late reply to your most kind and thoughtful letter. How nice of you to take all the trouble to mention us to Ed Murrow but I'm afraid we are not "in the news" for him, ~~though~~. I admire him so much.

I shall write to my sister Francesca Lodge today and tell her that you will telephone her as soon as you arrive in Madrid. I think she will still be ~~there~~ in July though she is never very pinned down ... she prefers that I tell my friends to call her as she has so many things to remember and sometimes she is afraid she might forget to make the contact at the right time — so please do call her. In the meantime I shall write to her.

When you return in the fall do let me know how it all went.

Again thank you for your kind and encouraging words,

Most sincerely,

Gloria Ettling

Simonson, Lloyd

Mrs. Lloyd Simonson

april 25, 1958

25 North Drive, Haddonfield, New Jersey

dear Ed,

Time goes by so quickly but as you can see from the enclosed letter I have made some progress; with the help of a great many people of course.

I hope this plan of furnishing a room in the new Student house will meet your approval.

Enclosed is a letter from Walter which I thought you might enjoy.

I only learned recently that you are a pretty good gambler — you throw a "mean die".

Sincerely,

Mickey Simonson

Simpson, Margaret C.

April 16, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow-

I had not meant to write again so soon for it must be very wearisome, writing endless acknowledgements to people who will write pages and pages. In all your other involvements it is likely you do not remember, but I am the one who writes you about inherent needs, aloneness, Aldous Huxley and a number of other things. Since you will not give me anything in words about yourself, I am forced to to use the slim evidence I have in seeking to know you better. With much help from Karen Horney, Erich Fromm, Dr. Maslow and other notables in their field, I believe I begin to get a true picture of you. From the time of "This is London" fame, you have experienced a kind of Self-transcendence that has given you much fame and prestige. Of course this is something everybody knows but I believe that I have discerned one of the reasons. There are always many reasons involved in in a hopeless complexity that cannot be disentangled but often there is one reason that predominates. This is the one I see.

I would need to be very insensitive indeed not to recognize the resistance you have to my prying into your inner life, but I had hoped you would perceive that mine is not the psychopathic curiosity of the window peeper, the Confidential Magazine or the back fence gossip, but the passion of the biographer, disciplined and controlled, but necessary to all who seek to see another through all the badges of class, caste, and prejudice, to see clearly without distortion in a world where real communication between people is so seldom possible - - where the distractions of entertainment and diversion are pursued frantically in an effort to fill up the vacuum left by isolation. This is the pehalty for our loss of those values essential to human happiness. Perhaps I should not say "loss of values", but rather illustrate by this beautifully expressed sentiment of David Reisman - "Already by the late Middle Ages, people were forced to live under new conditions of awareness. As their self-consciousness and their individuality developed, they had to make themselves at home in the world in novel ways. They still have to."

And so I feel we are now engaged in seeking a re-evaluation of human needs- a recognition of the basic needs in man in his new state of awareness - a set of values that will give both stability to society and yet leave him free to be "himself" in the highest, most creative, most satisfying way. The use of the male pronoun is significant in the implication that women are still enslaved by rules and codes that are quite unrealistic as well as completely unfair and unjust. If we sometimes behave in ways that incur resentment by the male it is because we are helplessly conditioned to these old patterns, and we sometimes react with an exaggerated aggressiveness and independence. Woman should be the complement to man and not his reflection.

I will be in New York in September and of course I should like very much to meet you. By then you may be in Singapore or Calument City since you are taking a long vacation and I hope you have a happy and wonderful Holiday. I should like to visit CBS (I have never been in New York) and view the places where you work and see some of the people involved in this tremendous business. I should feel it a more than fair exchange if you could send me some card of entry for "the time and trouble" I have taken to write to you. (These are your own words, not mine.) I wish the best of everything for you always.

Very sincerely,

Margaret C. Simpson

(Mrs.) Margaret C. Simpson
915 Oak Street
Saginaw, Michigan

Simpson, Margaret C.

October 2, 1958

Dear Mrs. Simpson:

Thank you very much for your recent letter.

The picture of me, I must say, is quite good. As requested, I have autographed it for you.

I wish I had the time to write in greater length, however, it is just impossible at this time.

Thank you for writing as you did.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Margaret C. Simpson
915 Oak Street
Saginaw, Michigan

mcc

915 Oak Street
Saginaw, Michigan
September 18, 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am neither a hero worshipper, nor autograph seeker, nor have I ever written to a stranger before. Not that I expect this to place me in any special favor. I only hope I may escape being cataloged with the crackpots and favor askers who write to you. It would be easier to forget the whole thing than to try to write a letter that could be of any possible interest to you. After all, one accustomed to living so close to world crises, fascinating and brilliant people, financial manipulators, diplomats and assassins, one whose life has no doubt been as full of romance, adventure and danger as a paper-back-thriller can hardly be expected to give much notice to the commonplace. Speaking as one who has never made the front page of the local paper, all the awards, honorary degrees and other distinctions conferred upon you seem very impressive and I am surprised that I have the temerity to write to you in such a personal and familiar tone. Possibly others are deterred from writing for just this reason thus giving my letter a certain novelty at least. Just as a person accustomed to caviar and champagne may enjoy a hamburger for a change, so may this letter add a slight new flavor to your life. Anyway, it is something I have felt I must do for a long time now so perhaps it is time I stopped weighing the pros and cons and set about it.

It seems to be a part of our culture to want to achieve a certain uniqueness in the world, something that would give us individuality and stature and prominence and raise us from anonymity to recognition. Sometimes our strivings lead to some pretty wierd behavior depending on what direction they take, our talents, and the degree of self-confidence we possess. Some of us have a need to express certain inner urges and drives and convictions in a more tangible way than the opportunities in our average day-to-day living provides. More often than not we never "make the grade", sometimes we resort to religion or alcohol but most of us, as Rousseau said, "live out our lives in a kind of quiet desperation."

There is no doubt you have worked untiringly to become not only a good newsman but the best in your field either consciously or unconsciously, and if you are not the best you are without doubt the best known in the world. Although this is not intended to be a letter of congratulation for I am sure even that must become wearisome by its very abundance, I must express my gratitude for the circumstances that have brought the magnetic charm and dignified simplicity of your person into my small world. I should think the kind of "pure" news reporting that seems to be your specialty must be difficult and even antagonizing at times. You must need to develop a kind of saintly self-effacement which I suppose becomes easier with practice. Curiosity is one of the most common human emotions (this should sound familiar). Your program "Person-to Person", was developed on that premise. It is inevitable that public figures become objects of great interest and curiosity. It seems a little ironic that the man engaged in the acquisition and dissemination of information about famous people has become an object of such great curiosity himself. After considerable research I find regrettably, that to learn anything of significance about you would require a man of your special talents. This gives me an idea, why not an interview titled "Ed Murrow interviews Ed. Murrow?" There are sillier things on TV every day. It seems an original idea certainly. No doubt you will dismiss this suggestion on the grounds of being too sensational, even vainglorious. It would be an admission that you considered yourself worth hearing about - but you are worth hearing about. I have tried to imagine how the average citizen would react to such a program by substituting Eric Savareid or Douglas Edwards (since my interest in these people is probably average) and I find I should certainly make an effort to hear such a program.

I seem to have gotten off the track of what I originally planned to say in this letter and so in returning to my original purpose I should like to ask whether you remember a picture taken of you at the CBS radio studio in New York by Arnold Newman in about 1953? The enclosed drawing is one I made from that picture which appeared in the "Photographers' Annual" of that year. My Mother, who is excessively fond of me urged that I send it to you requesting you autograph it. She feels it is exceptional, but a Mother's opinion is not likely to be reliable. I have no idea whether or not it is good. It is probably the best I can do and in working so long on it I have become very attached to it. While your autograph may be valuable to a collector it would be of no use to me. I should like to have indulged her in this as she is an old lady but it seemed a little presumptuous. It was in studying this photograph that my interest in you developed to such a degree that I was compelled to write this letter. I have seldom looked at a face so interesting in its mysteriousness. I kept studying the picture trying to determine what emotions and thoughts and character traits had etched the lines in your forehead, developed the angles and contours of maturity, given the mouth such seriousness and determination while denying it levity and humor. Was the restless fire of the eyes a reflection of zealous devotion to work and singleness of purpose? It is said that eyes are the windows of the soul. It is impossible to say how much of what one sees in them is artificially created by the imagination or inspired by a kind of mystical insight. It depends on the beholder, I suppose. Perhaps each of us sees something different in another. To me, your eyes revealed many things; a penetrating directness that looked at things carefully and with understanding; a suggestion of pathos and inquiry; of intensity, passion and great depth of feeling. There was an overall impression of ruggedness, toughness, indestructibility, of gravity and awareness. These, however, are merely impressions, not facts, and as such, unsatisfying. In spite of feeble efforts to dismiss you from my mind I found myself seized with a kind of compulsion to really know you. But how? I knew no one who knew you. Not even anyone who knew anyone who knew you. Obviously, I could not write - Dear Mr. Murrow: Please tell me about your inner life. Are you ever lonely, unhappy, afraid? Do you feel you are a great man in a small world or a small part of an unknowable universe? Are you gentle, compassionate, practical? Are you greedy, selfish, impatient, amenable, dogmatic? If you bothered to reply at all you might remind me that such personal information is not available to the public. You might question the propriety of this line of inquiry. Possibly such information as I desire would make sensational "copy", but it is only valuable to me because of my great need to know you.

Before making the sketch of you I decided to find what I could concerning your life from the local library reference department. There were vital statistics, pictures and articles from the Post and other magazines. The title of one article intrigued me. It was "An Intimate Chat with Ed Murrow". Surely such a provocative title suggested something more interesting and revealing than the others. As it turned out, this was some more of H. Allen Smith humor and contained nothing at all about you. One article seemed to have been written by an erratic type individual who veered from praise to criticism and back again. He hinted that some people considered you to be a snob. This was a depressing bit of information. If true, I had no chance of my letter's being acknowledged by you or possibly even being read for I certainly can add nothing to your already considerable prestige. Snobishness, like any other character trait, should show a little, but I failed to find any trace of affectation, superiority or arrogance in your face. Perhaps some people have mistaken discrimination for snobishness. Reading further, I found each article mentioned "you never could fire anybody." You also applied for membership in the "Murrow is not God Club." Actually very little meat in such a meal of several thousand words.

This poem though a little ridiculous in parts in order to make a rhyme describes my feelings -

I have studied the lines of your face
Your hair, and the shape of your head,
Everything written about you
And everything publicly said;
But when all the facts are collected
They seem to be woefully few
It left me disheartened, dejected
With little left that I could do.

Are you ruthless and mean?
Careless or neat
Calm and serene
Irresistibly sweet?

What are your hopes, your morals, your creed?
What gives you the drive that has made you succeed?
All of the stories they write of you tell
Really nothing at all, they're only the shell
Crumbs of truth mixed with chaff
Compiled to sell by a clever staff.

You haunt my sleep
Fill me with despair
Do I look too deep
For what isn't there?

At this point it occurs to me that writing the real truth about a person would not be easy. It took Stefan Zweig ten years to tell the story of Balzac. It required tremendous work and study for Maurois to give us the lives of Hugo, George Sand, etc. Of course, the people written about were dead but that should have made it easier since they could raise no objections or interfere with the biographers. Some day in the far distant future some one may write your biography but that is small comfort to me for obvious reasons.

With every passing year and with the threat of a general atomic war hanging over the world like the sword of Democles I become more aware of the shortness and uncertainty of life. Perhaps th t has given me a certain recklessness and determination where I might otherwise show more caution and reticence. Circumstances and necessity (need) has forced me into a kind of dual existence. One a life of keeping house, polite conversation, entertaining, being entertained, coping with the tragedies, great and small that come to all households. This in not entirely satisfying. Routine and repetition can make life automatic, meaningless, uninspiring with an awful monotony. While life in a middle class society offers many advantages of a practical nature, without a determined effort it can become so regimented and mechanical that one feels more a machine than an individual. This leads to frustration and unhappiness. I often wonder if it is not responsible for so much alcoholism, so many religious cults and fads and other wasteful consumers of energy. Fortunately, there is a library full of knowledge and contacts with the world's greatest thinkers, there is music, art, the wonderful luxury of day-dreaming and meditation when there is time. Sometimes a close personal relationship if one is lucky. Once in a while one finds a person to whom one is drawn. The attraction is a complex subtle process impossible to analyze fully. It is a kind of rapport or empathy. Two such people stimulate each other, their conversations are satisfying, their relationship is based on mutual respect and sympathetic understanding. This sounds like an ideal basis for a perfect marraige and perhaps it is. Often though, the ability to appreciate and recognize such a relationship only comes with maturity and real maturity is only achieved through a multitude of experiences, through mistakes and disappointments and suffering. Many people marry too young to have reached that maturity. Some never reach it. Some husbands do and wives do not and vice versa. Often people remain together out of a very real affection when they have little left in common and no real understanding of each other. And so the need for special relationships sometimes becomes acute. I know you must have many such relationships for your work has brought you into contact with such a marvelous variety of people. When circumstances are right this kind of association is certain to develop into an unforgettable experience sometimes transitory, sometimes lasting for many years, but always satisfying and of value in its tremendous capacity for sharing and communicating something of the self and lightening the burden of alone-ness which none but the schizophrenic can entirely escape. You may well wonder how this discourse concerns you. If you do wonder, then any explanation would have little meaning to you and would be only a further waste of time. I write you with the assumption that the insight and astuteness so apparent in your news broadcasts and your serious concern for the problems facing the world may carry over into your personal contacts. When you speak to the world it is as though you considered your listeners to be highly intelligent, thoughtful people who deserve to know the facts. This may not be your private opinion but it is a most effective method of presentation. You may be motivated by (to use a favorite cliche of Mr. Eisenhauer) enlightened self-interest since your methods have made you famous and probably rich.

You, more than the average person, can understand and appreciate the curiosity and interest one person may feel for another. Curiosity can kill the cat but I suspect it is much more likely to kill a mouse. When you go about probing, prying, investigating, it is with a thorough knowledge of the business and with the blessings of CBS and the public.

Your reasons are legitimate and "socially acceptable". I may find in sniffing a piece of particularly exotic cheese, a trap snapped on me for my inquisitiveness; a trap of disappointment, disillusionment, and self-doubt.

The enclosed snapshot represents many hours of work in trying to create your likeness on paper. Do you think I have done so: The original is somewhat larger than this typewritten sheet. It is quite likely, you have many better ones in which case I should like to keep it. However, if you like it particularly, it would give me pleasure to send it to you.

I have tried to write you with honesty and sincerity and with what I hope is not bad taste. I know you to be an honorable man - without hypocrisy, fair. I could not have written had I thought otherwise. I know too, that you are a busy man and that my letter is overlong and for that I apologise.

Sincerely,

(Mrs L.G.) Margaret C. Simpson

Sims, Edward H.

February 14, 1958

Edward H. Sims
Editor's Copy
1090 National Press Building
Washington, D. C.

REGARDING YOUR LETTER FEBRRUARY 5, MR. MURROW OUT OF TOWN FOR A FEW WEEKS, UNABLE TO REACH STOP SINCERE REGRETS

Mary Cecchini
Ed Murrow's office

Radio
514-43

EDITOR'S COPY

EDWARD H. SIMS, Publisher

BUSINESS OFFICE
ORANGEBURG, SOUTH CAROLINA

WASHINGTON OFFICE
1090 NATIONAL PRESS BUILDING

EUROPEAN OFFICE
LONDON, W. I, ENGLAND out of town

February 5, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am taking the liberty of writing you personally (and my only connection is that I am a brother Kappa Sigma) about my new book, "American Aces."

The book is being published by Harper & Brothers on February 17th. It is a reconstruction (authentic and accurate) of the most thrilling mission of the twelve highest-scoring aces of the three theaters in World War II. General Twining, in his foreword, Senator Symington, Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson, General Clark, and many others have been kind about it.

It is a literary first (whether good or bad) in that fighter missions have never been treated in such detail, with maps, etc. Moreover, we are getting these top aces together in New York for a publication party, and an appearance on the Ed Sullivan show. They will be on the show on the 16th, and we are having a press conference and afterwards a cocktail party, for these aces, in the Biltmore Hotel at the Wings Club, at 4:30 Monday afternoon, February 17th.

I think you would find the event most interesting, and I would be happy if you could attend. It is something of an historical occasion.

Yours sincerely,

Edward H. Sims

dz

Singer, Kurt

November 19, 1958

Dear Mr. Singer:

Very many thanks for sending me a copy of THE DANNY KAYE STORY.

I enjoyed it very much and am most grateful to you for your thoughtfulness.

I do indeed remember meeting you at the United Nations and clearly recall our discussion. Unfortunately, I see no possibility at least for the time being, of undertaking a film on life in Russia.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Kurt Singer
7861 Stanton Road
Buena Park, California

mcc

KURT SINGER
7861 Stanton Road, Buena Park, California,

Nov.
13
1958

Mr. Edward R. Morrow
Vice-President of CBS
CBS Studios
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Morrow:

Knowing that you are a staunch admirer of Danny Kaye, I am taking the liberty of sending you one of the first copies of THE DANNY KAYE STORY.

This book was first published in England and, with the help of Reuters, syndicated in some twelve countries. Perhaps you will find it of interest.

It was my pleasure to meet you at the UNICEF Press Conference at the United Nations Building after your return with Mr. Kaye from his last tour in behalf of the children of the world. At that time I introduced myself as a correspondent for Reuters and added my hope that you would soon do a documentary film on life in Russia. I still feel we are all waiting for your treatment of that little known country.

Of course, no treatment of Mr. Kaye is complete without his humanitarian contributions and your close cooperation with him in giving the world the inside information on UNICEF through the film THE SECRET LIFE OF DANNY KAYE. I hope in some small way I have been able to point out your significant contributions.

With many thanks for the truly great moments you have given the public through the media of television and radio, I am

Sincerely yours,

Kurt Singer

Singh, J

November 21, 1958

Mr. J.J. Singh
232 East 61st Street
New York 21, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Singh:

Thank you for your letter giving details about the dinner on December 11. Mrs. Murrow and I are looking forward to being there.

Sincerely yours,

MR. AND MRS. J. J. SINGH
232 EAST 61ST STREET
NEW YORK 21, N. Y.

November 13, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C.B.S.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

I am writing this letter in continuation of my letter of November 11.

Our Indian buffet dinner in honor of India's new Ambassador - Mr. M. C. Chagla - has had to be postponed and will now be held on Thursday, December 11, at the above address, at 7:30 P.M. (black tie).

Only last evening Ambassador Chagla called me from Washington to tell me that he has received instructions from the Government of India to go to Mexico on the 30th of November to represent India at the time of the inauguration ceremonies of the new Mexican President.

Still hoping that you and Mrs. Murrow will be able to accept our invitation, and trusting to hear soon from you,

Sincerely yours,

J. J. Singh

TO: Mr. Murrow

FROM: Sheila Hogg November 12, 1958

Do you by any chance remember whether Mr. Singh mentioned a date for this dinner?

MR. AND MRS. J. J. SINGH
232 EAST 61ST STREET
NEW YORK 21, N. Y.

November 11, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C.B.S.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It was good to see you yesterday at Marian Anderson's luncheon.

As I told you then, we are having an Indian buffet dinner in honor of India's new Ambassador to the United States - His Excellency Mahomed Ali C. Chagla.

The dinner will be held at our house, at the above address, at 7:30 P.M. (black tie).

My wife and I would be delighted if you and Mrs. Murrow would join us on this occasion.

Hoping that you will be able to accept our invitation, and trusting to hear soon from you,

Sincerely yours,

J. J. Singh

WU006 PD

RB WASHINGTON DC JUN 26 1041AME

EDWARD R MURROW CBS INC

RECEIVED
1959 JUN 26 PM 12:21
C B S TELETYPE ROOM N

GOOD LUCK. GOOD NEWS AUF WIEDERSEHEN

HELEN /SIOUSSAT/

1114A..

Sioussat Helen J

April 21, 1959

Dear Helen:

Thanks for yours of April 14. I know something about Mark Hatfield, who is everything you say he is. Unfortunately, we cannot originate PERSON TO PERSON from Oregon without going bankrupt in the process. I am told that the technical situation will change some time next year, but I don't know exactly when.

I will be down in your fair city for a week some time during May and will certainly make you a signal.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

Miss Helen J. Sioussat
Columbia Broadcasting System Inc.
1735 De Sales Street N.W.
Washington 6, D.C.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, INC.

1735 De Sales Street, N.W. Washington 6, D.C. · Emerson 2-9300

HELEN J. SIOUSSAT
Executive Offices

April 14,1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS News
17th Floor
CBS News
485 Madison Ave.
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Ed:

Ralph Cake, former Republican National Committeeman from Oregon, whom I have known since he managed Wendell Willkie's campaign, has been telling me quite a lot about their new Governor in Oregon, Mark Hatfield, who I believe is supposed to be the youngest governor that state has ever had. He feels that Governor Hatfield would make an extremely interesting guest for you to have on you Person to Person program and that the Governor's Mansion in Salem would prove to be an interesting pick-up point. Mrs. Hatfield is to have a baby the first part of June, so Ralph was thinking about some time in July and was under the impression that you were not going away until October. However, I told him that your sabbatical year begins sometime in July and I could not hold out a great deal of hope, as you might already be scheduled through that date.

Would you be good enough to let me know whether you would have any interest in having Governor Hatfield as a guest and if not, perhaps you could tell me with whom Mr. Cake should talk the matter over with for a possible airing in the fall.

I do hope that you will be able to get down to Washington and take a few moments to pop in and see me before you leave. I am sure that Casey will enjoy your sabbatical even more than you, if such is possible. I hope you have a stimulating and glorious time. You have certainly earned it.

Sincerely, Helen

HJS:fw

Sioussat, Helen J.

October 27, 1958

Dear Helen:

Many thanks for your little note of October 13th.

I am so glad you enjoy SMALL WORLD. As a matter of fact, I enjoy it, too!

I hope all goes well with you.

As ever yours,

Miss Helen J. Sioussat
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
1735 De Sales Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

mcc

Scoussat, Helen

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, INC.

1735 DeSales Street, N. W., Washington 6, D.C. — Emerson 2-9300

Oct. 23,1958

Mr. Jesse Zousmer
Person to Person
CBS
501 Madison Ave.
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Jesse:

Thanks so much for your nice note of the 22nd giving me the information that Chloe Gifford would be welcome on Person to Person sometime around the end of January or the beginning of February, in connection with the Heart Fund Drive. You may, indeed, call on me for any aid you may need, but I have first hand information that if she is in this part of the country, or in fact, in this part of the world at that time, she will be only too happy to be your guest and she does expect to be here.

Please drop by and see me when you are next in Washington.

Sincerely,

Helen

HJS:fw

cc: Mr. Murrow

Thanks so much, Ed.

E

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, INC.

1735 De Sales Street, N.W. Washington 6, D.C. · Emerson 2-9300

HELEN J. SIOUSSAT
Executive Assistant to the Vice President

Thanks

Oct. 13,1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS Television
485 Madison Ave.
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Ed:

I was simply thrilled by the first program of your new series,"Small World". This, rather than "Person to Person", is the type of program with which I associate you.

All the best for continued success.

Sincerely,

Helen

HJS:fw

Sioussat, Helen

March 19, 1958

Dear Helen:

Belated thanks for sending me the letter from Mrs. Ray Erb.

Frankly I don't think there is any purpose to be served by my writing to her. I am sure that she would not have expected us, in the Marian Anderson piece, to do a clinical study of what the Daughters of the American Revolution had done in the field of race relations, however admirable it had been.

In the program in question we merely made a passing reference to a small bit of history, and that history is not in dispute. If it is any comfort to anybody concerned, my own mother is a member of that distinguished organization although I don't know exactly what that proves.

Hope you are enjoying the job in Washington.

As ever yours,

Miss Helen Sioussat
Executive Assistant to the CBS Vice President
Washington, D.C.

fc

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, INC.

485 Madison Avenue, New York 22, New York · PLaza 1-2345

HELEN J. SIOUSSAT
~~Director~~ ~~Talks Department~~

March 10,1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Ave.,
New York, N.Y.

Dear Ed:

I tried to reach you the week following your very kind phone call to tell you about my decision to go to Washington. I was told you were on your vacation.

So much has happened since, it wasn't until today I had an opportunity to try to reach you again and tomorrow I shall be on the Hill so I thought best to send you this little note.

Mrs. Ray Laverne Erb, National Defense Chairman of the DAR has been most helpful to me. When I first met her she was quite irate about the Marian Anderson Person-to-Person broadcast. When I finished talking with her, though, I believe she felt differently but she did send me a great deal of material which she verbally asked me to show to you.

I'm not at all sure what you can do or would want to do about the matter but I would be grateful if you could either give me something to tell her in response to all this or better still if you could write to her and send me a copy of your letter.

Of course, I could have told you much more on the telephone but your secretary said you were going to be in late and I knew you would be busy when you reached your office.

Should you, however, wish to discuss this further before replying, please call me.

All ~~the~~ my best wishes as always,

Sincerely,

Helen

Executive Ass't. to the CBS Vice President, Washington.

National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution
MRS. FREDERIC A. GROVES, PRESIDENT GENERAL

NATIONAL DEFENSE COMMITTEE
MRS. RAY L. ERB, NATIONAL CHAIRMAN
ADMINISTRATION BUILDING, 1776 D STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D.C.

January 30, 1958

Rec'd. by HJS
Feb. 10, 1958

Miss Helen J. Sioussat
Director, Talks Department
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Miss Sioussat:

It was delightful to talk with you during luncheon last Saturday, and I wish to thank you for your gracious offer to assist in the efforts to bring to the public the truth pertaining to the Marian Anderson - D.A.R. situation.

I am enclosing a statement which was issued in 1956. As I mentioned to you, in 1939 Washington was a segregated city and the rules pertaining to Constitution Hall and its rental were made so as to conform to the rules of the District. Constitution Hall was the first public assembly hall where there were never any restrictions as far as the Box Office was concerned. On an attached sheet, I am quoting from certain newspaper articles. As soon as the rules for the District were changed the rules for Constitution Hall were changed. In other words, we have consistently been obedient to the District rules regarding the commercial use of our Hall. You will be interested, I believe in the following:

January 7, 1943: By invitation of the Daughters, Miss Marian Anderson and a group of artists sang in Constitution Hall at a concert given for the United China Relief.

June 3, 1946: By invitation of the Daughters, a concert was given in Constitution Hall by the Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, the entire personnel of this organization being Negro. The National Society paid all the expenses in connection with the operation of the hall, together with the purchase of a box for the President General, and the United Negro Fund profited to the extent of $5,329.00. This was a notable contribution to the welfare of Negro education by the D.A.R.

April, 1948: The National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution passed a resolution to promote the distribution of Booker T. Washington 50 cent memorial coins which are being sold for a dollar. The proceeds of this sale are to be used to establish a Negro training school for industrial arts on the site of Booker T. Washington's birthplace.

Miss Marian Anderson gave a concert in Constitution Hall in 1953; another on March 30, 1954; another on March 20, 1955; another on April 1, 1956; and she is scheduled to give another one on March 30, 1958.

I believe you will agree that the above record is proof of the injustice which our National Society has suffered. All through the years there seems to have been a determination on the part of someone, or many, as the case may be, to suppress the true facts and keep the public from knowing the situation as it actually has been. If you can assist in clearing this situation, you will be contributing a very real patriotic service.

With the thought that you would be interested, I am enclosing two of our little booklets which will give you a slight idea of part of our program. Much of our efforts are devoted to work with children, and the misrepresentation we have suffered has been a very real challenge.

The material from your office has been received, but due to the fact that I have just returned to my desk after an absence of several days, I have not had the opportunity to read it. I shall do so within the next day or two, and will, if possible, assist you in your effort.

Sincerely yours,

Mary Barclay Erb

(Mrs. Ray L. Erb)

Enclosures

From the Norwalk Hour, Norwalk, Connecticut
~~October 13, 1945~~
~~Letter to Editor~~ from Mrs. Leroy Montgomery

"The newspapers, in every article on the barring of Constitution Hall to certain artists, always refer to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as resigning from the D.A.R. because Marion Anderson was not allowed the use of the Hall; but they never once have told about the article written by Eleanor Roosevelt in Woman's Day - in the August 1940 issue of this magazine entitled 'Men Have to be Humored' in which she says: 'The D.A.R. followed a man made rule in the District of Columbia which would have required great conviction to break.' On the same page of the magazine bearing this article will be found a picture of Marion Anderson taken with Harold Ickes in front of the Lincoln Memorial where Marion Anderson sang in the open air.

"Now it must be apparent to any one of average intelligence, with all the rentable halls and auditoria in Washington, when a recital by such an excellent artist is performed in the open air, there must be a very definite and positive reason for it other than the refusal of the D.A.R. to rent their single auditorium. Other halls and auditoria are there. Why were they not used?

"Any one knowing the rules governing Washington knows the root of the matter. In Washington provision is made for separate schools, theatres, hospitals, churches, playgrounds, auditoria; and separate living localities. This custom is recognized and concurred in by every public institution in Washington. Furthermore, this policy is sustained by the United States Court of Appeals, District of Columbia, 1944-45 (May vs Burgess-Vol. 79, Appeals p. 347). The policy is cited: 'As to the District of Columbia,we must take judicial notice of the fact that separate schools are established for the white and colored races, separate churches are universal, and are approved by both races ..... And these accepted practices are not intended to and should not be considered to imply the inferiority of either race to the other."

"It seems to me it is time for some of our representative citizens to come forward and present this controversy in its true light; and not stand by and allow the D.A.R. to be immolated and criticised with impunity and for something they have no power to change. It is erroneous that the D.A.R. take exception to colored people, for such is not the case. We give aid to colored schools and churches and help many colored girls with their education. There is absolutely no race prejudice per se existing in this organization. When the rules in Washington regarding this question are changed, you may be sure the D.A.R. will be quick to conform to the new rules in regard to the use of its buildings. As it is now, we cannot do otherwise."

From the New York Telegram, October 15, 1945
By Eleanor Roosevelt

"In this recent controversy centering again around the granting of the use of the hall owned in the District of Columbia by the Daughters of the American Revolution, for a concert by the gifted artist, Mrs. Hazel Scott, I do not think one can hold the D.A.R. alone responsible. There is an agreement among all theatre owners in the District of Columbia as to how their theatres shall be used. Only the public can make the theatre owners change that agreement."

From the Congressional Record, Washington, D.C.
House of Representatives
Thursday, October 18, 1945

"Mr. Rankin-- Mr. Speaker, if this country has grown great, it has been because of the policy advocated and the fights won by the ancestors of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

"It comes with poor grace from people who are continuously complaining about the treatment accorded racial minorities to rise on this floor and attack the Daughters of the American Revolution for following a policy of segregation that has been in existence in Washington for more than one hundred years.

"The Daughters are doing exactly what is being done in the public schools in the District of Columbia. Why do not some of you people who are attacking the D.A.R. rise on the floor and advocate taxing the schools of the District of Columbia because they separate the races?

"Why do you not rise and advocate taxing every Masonic lodge, and every other fraternal organization in Washington that draws the color line?

"Why do not you advocate taxing every white church in Washington because they do not invite colored preachers, or pander to another race?

"Why do not you add an additional tax on every hotel, every picture show and every restaurant that draws the color line?

"No, you single out the Daughters of the American Revolution, one of the most patriotic organizations on earth, and attempt to browbeat them into submission because they propose to run their own building in their own way.

"You people who are making these attacks are doing the Daughters of the American Revolution a grave injustice, and doing the negroes of the country infinitely more harm than good."

From the New York Tribune
November 6, 1948

"Washington, Nov. 5 (A.P.) The National Theatre was upheld in court today in its refusal to admit negroes to stage productions. The Municipal Court of Appeals affirmed a Municipal Court's dismissal of a $500 damage suit filed by Edward B. Henderson, Falls Rover, Va. He based his suit on a so called civil rights act of 1875, which says persons of every age and color should be admitted to theatres.

"Court of Appeals Judge Brice Clagett rules that the 1875 act twice had been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. He noted the high court had found that Congress in passing the act had exceeded its powers by invading the powers of the States."

NATIONAL SOCIETY, DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION
WASHINGTON, D. C.

STATEMENT: RE CONSTITUTION HALL

(1956)

Constitution Hall, the largest auditorium and a chief cultural center in Washington, D.C., is one of three adjoining buildings erected, owned and maintained by the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Dedicated in 1929, the Hall was built, at cost of approximately $1,500,000, for the SOLE purpose of housing the annual D.A.R. Continental Congress. Because a public auditorium was needed in the Nation's Capital, the Daughters of the American Revolution yielded to insistent requests and opened its Hall for public rentals. As a public service, it is still rented, at very reasonable rates.

These outside bookings are handled entirely by a Managing Director of Constitution Hall, engaged for the purpose by the National Society. Scheduled far ahead, each season's events are published in advance in the October issue of the D.A.R. Magazine.

Months previously, the auditorium had been reserved for other programs on the dates requested for its use by Marian Anderson in February, 1939. This fact was never given due publicity by the press. Instead, newspapers emphasized a policy regulation which had been adopted by the National Board of Management, D.A.R., in 1932, when a "White Artists Only" clause was inserted in rental contracts then used for Constitution Hall in conformity with the laws and customs prevailing at that time in the District of Columbia.

In her annual report to Continental Congress in April, 1939, the President General, N.S.D.A.R., stated then that the D.A.R. was a consistent friend of minority groups and would change its position on the use of Constitution Hall, "when the community at large has worked out its problem."

Later the D.A.R. and Miss Anderson agreed on plans for her to give a benefit concert in Constitution Hall, the auditorium being donated by the National Society for this occasion. But little or no publicity was accorded by the newspapers to this event.

During the Spring of 1953 Miss Anderson was booked and gave a concert in Constitution Hall; another scheduled concert was given by her on March 30, 1954; another on March 20, 1955; and on April 1, 1956. All of these concerts were given in Constitution Hall. She has a concert booked for January 19, 1958.

On June 3, 1946, by our invitation, a benifit program was presented in Constitution Hall by the Tuskegee Choir, of Tuskegee Institute, the entire proceeds of $5,394 going to the United Negro College Fund.

Roland Hayes and the Hampton Institute Choir have sung several times in Constitution Hall. The Howard University Choir has given programs there each year for the past four years.

Dorothy Maynor appeared in a program at Constitution Hall during 1952; William Warfield sang there in 1954.

Another little-known fact that has never been given fair credit is that for many years Constitution Hall was the only private place of its kind in Washington where there was no racial segregation in the audiences. This non-segregation policy has been in force during its entire operation. Persons of all races attend the programs there.

Persons of all races also perform and participate in group presentations from the stage of Constitution Hall. Large classes of students from the Negro schools in the area attend the children's concerts held regularly in the Hall by the National Symphony Orchestra.

Thousands of good citizenship and Junior American Citizens Club awards have long been presented by Daughters of the American Revolution to worthy recipients of all races.

In October, 1953, the National Board of Management, D.A.R., gave three nursing scholarships to young colored women in the District of Columbia; during October, 1954, three more nursing scholarships were awarded by the National Society to young Negro women in Kentucky and the District of Columbia.

. . . . . .

Mr. Big Takes His Leave

Edward R. Murrow, a tiny man who has been a giant around CBS, has finally come to a parting of the ways with the largest television network in the country. Mr. Murrow announced recently that he was taking a year's leave, which is provided for in his contract, but there is no denying that Mr. Murrow and the network were, taken together, too big to operate under the same tent.

In recent years Murrow, who was an excellent foreign correspondent, has taken it upon himself to speak out as an expert in all kinds of domestic affairs—some of which he knew much about and some of which he knew very little about.

The malady affecting Murrow often attacks reporters. The trouble is that reporters cease to be reporters and suddenly become "profound" thinkers. Instead of reporting the news, they begin to give their opinions and arrange their programs to stand for certain policies, theories and ideals.

Mr. Murrow is basically a reporter, and as long as he sticks to reporting the news, without obviously imparting lessons to Washington and the world on how things should be run, he is an excellent one. He is obviously more than that, in his own estimation, and he has probably grown too big for CBS, which is growing pretty big.

Singleton

I cut this from my hometown paper weeks ago. Your fame is widespread. You'll enjoy this as much as I did.

It's very nice to be home again

Lucile

Sixth Grade Class

December 10, 1959

Dear Sixth Grade Class:

Thank you for your very interesting letter of November 24th which was received here in Mr. Murrow's absence. I regret that since Mr. Murrow is on a year's leave of absence and will be traveling abroad for most of that time, he will be unable to reply to your letter.

I am sorry to disappoint you.

Sincerely yours,

Gabrielle Wachsner
Secretary

Sixth Grade Class
Ridge Ranch School
Sherwood Drive
Paramus, New Jersey

Ridge Ranch School
Sherwood Drive
Paramus, New Jersey
November 24, 1959

Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We, the pupils of the sixth grade of the Ridge Ranch School in Paramus, New Jersey, have been discussing the many problems which are in the world today.

We are aware that there are certain forces in the world who wish to only do harm, and that there only road block is the United States of America with the help of its allies.

However, we also realize that the United States must continue to build her strength in order that she may continue her obligations and help keep the world free. It would mean that every American has a share of this job.

We are writing to you because we are certain that you can give us an answer to the following question.

"What are some essential things, young Americans like ourselves can do to build a stronger America.

We would appreciate hearing from you in answer to this question.

Yours truly,
Sixth grade class RBL

Skogholm, CW.

Dear Mr. Ed Murrow,

The undersigned respectfully asks that you will kindly present me with your autograph or — if possible — a signed photo/sketch (please not facsimile).

I should be very thankful.

Most respectfully

Carl Werner Skogholm

CARL WERNER SKOGHOLM
AMAGER BOULEVARD 124
COPENHAGEN S, DENMARK

Skidmore, Howard

December 30, 1958

Dear Mr. Skidmore:

Very many thanks for sending me the very nice letter racks.

It was indeed most thoughtful of you to think of me at Christmas time.

My best wishes to you for a happy new year!

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Howard Skidmore
Director of Public Relations
Terminal Tower
Cleveland, Ohio

mcc

Skornia, Harry J

January 6, 1959

Dear Mr. Skornia:

Many thanks for your letter of December 9th. Please excuse the long delay in replying to it, but I was deluged with correspondence and busy with my year-end show.

It was indeed most thoughtful of you to send me a copy of the statement you prepared. At the moment, I cannot read it to the end, however, I have thumbed through it, and I look forward to reading it as soon as time permits.

Thanks again for taking the time to write me. Best wishes for a happy and healthy new year!

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Harry J. Skornia
National Association of Educational Broadcasters
14 Gregory Hall
Urbana, Illinois

mcc

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTERS

NAEB

14 GREGORY HALL
URBANA, ILLINOIS

Tuesday

December 9, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS News
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I'm sure you've had fan mail on your recent remarks on U. S. TV, as well as on the courageous leadership you're providing on "Small World" and in other respects. May I add my applause? I know some of the risks --- and retaliations.

Because I thought you might be interested in leafing through it, I'm attaching a statement I prepared a year ago. Parts of it have been used in addresses before various national organizations. A shorter version of it has been in type for publication in Saturday Review since last February. Norman Cousins had called it the best statement (though I trust not the best written) he had seen of the situation in which we find ourselves in TV and radio. I trust it will appear soon. The Fund for the Republic Mass Media Committee seems also to have found it useful, even though I know it sprawls a bit. I have all too little time for writing.

My 1947 proposal as referred to on pages 1-3 was for the setting aside of prime time for programs (at that time principally in radio) to treat world problems and raise Americans to the level our leadership position then called for. I guess I was too small a voice to have much effect. I hope you will have better luck -- and I want to register the feeling many of us have: thank heaven for Ed Murrow!

Our best at the holiday season.

Sincerely,

Harry J. Skornia

Harry J. Skornia
Executive Director

HJS/dfc
Enclosure

A CHALLENGE TO AMERICAN TELEVISION AND RADIO

H. J. Skornia

December, 1957

The concern expressed in this article is not a new one. It became increasingly clear and urgent to me in the last years of World War II, and in the early days of the United Nations.

It seemed to me at that time obvious that the United States was thrust forward, in spite of itself, into a position in which the world looked to it for leadership. But from various symptoms --- its attitude toward the U. N.; the extent to which its citizens, leaders, industry and the mass media seemed eager to return to previous insular and "business as usual" attitudes --- it seemed to me that we were in danger of missing an opportunity which might never be offered us again. This was the opportunity, in domestic and international behavior, to provide an example of dynamic democracy as a way of life in a manner that would attract other peoples at a time when new nations were emerging and groping for systems which would best insure their new-found independence and freedoms.

Even though I was not then, and am not now, a professional writer, as this essay will make obvious, I expressed great concern. The concern I felt, that the U. S. in its greatest hour might fail to provide great leadership, without which a disorganized, alien and unfriendly world, practicing political systems we would find alarming, would be likely to result, caused me to sound this "warning" in the only way and through the only channels I then found available.

In its July 30, 1947 issue, weekly Variety magazine carried my proposal under the title "Radio for Peace Blueprint Tossed to Agencies, Networks." The August 16 issue of Billboard magazine picked up the proposal, which was restated under the heading "Kobak Will Give Ad Council Anti-War Co-op Series Plan Involving 4 Webs Plus Indies." For by this time Edgar Kobak, then President of the Mutual Broadcasting System, had discussed the proposal with this writer and other participants at the Public Service Radio Institute held in August of 1947 at Madison, Wisconsin.

The Billboard article said, in part: "Despite the objections, the feeling after the meeting was that radio and advertising, thru' the statements made by Kobak, had at least been committed to a consideration of the plan, and that if they turned down the plan they at least would have to come up with some solid reasons for so doing."

Neither the "plan," nor anything similar to it, was ever adopted. I was never given any "solid reasons," although I would believe that it might well have been found visionary, costly, impractical, based on a false sense of alarm, and frankly too disruptive of "business as usual" procedures to make "easy" implementation possible.

This probably should not have been surprising in view of the intellectual and emotional "climate" which prevailed only ten years ago. For editorials in some of the larger newspapers that summer of 1947 had a field day ridiculing a crazy, visionary "professor" and scientist who proposed that it would some day be possible and useful to build and launch "earth satellites" which might revolve in orbits around the earth, sending back by radio waves scientific data of great interest.

I have no interest in merely restating the plan then outlined, for many of the conditions it was intended to fit into have changed. The dangers I referred to then have, I believe, become greater, and a large number of them are now realities instead of merely uneasy fears. Television has become the principal wireless medium. And many other conditions, international and world as well as domestic, have been altered, requiring expansion and restatement of my earlier proposal.

Briefly stated, the germ of the proposal I made and make again is based on the belief that, in an age when mass media (particularly television and radio with which I am most familiar) have almost inestimable effects and possibilities, they are, without intending to, I'm sure, contributing far less to national and world interests than they might. For the people of our nation need awakening and rallying intellectually and culturally as well as politically if the freedoms which we still say we believe in are to survive.

I address my analysis to the operators of the mass media precisely because, if these freedoms are lost, they stand to lose most in their disappearance.

Unless our mass media meet the inescapable responsibility they have, to provide leadership, and examples of maturity, courage and free and full examination of all our problems, however controversial or "dangerous," the noblest and best of which we are capable will never be achieved. For progress requires change. And mass media are the most available anvils we have on which to hammer out our problems --- shaping them into dynamic forces again.

So much for preliminaries. I do not seek to exaggerate or distort, in the dangers outlined here. If it appears that I have done so, inadvertently, I shall welcome correction. But I would hope that my sincerity will not be challenged. I would not be writing so feelingly, in a vein which I know will antagonize some of the operators of some of the most powerful instruments of retaliation and propaganda in our age, if I were not trying, in my sincere way, to help save, rather than sabotage the basic, necessary freedoms of our democracy. I trust that responsive chords may be struck in the minds of some responsible broadcasters who have themselves, here and there, begun to express equivalent concerns.

If, in imagination, it were possible for someone who believed in, fought for, and understood the principles on which our republic was founded, to return, like a Rip Van Winkle, I believe there would be numerous developments which would seem unbelievable to him in the land he helped create.

I believe he would ask, as he took our pulse in the electronic mass media to which we turn for information, if what he reads and hears as news is really "what is going on" in our nation, or whether it is not more nearly like a police blotter, unlimited subjection to the sordid details of which cannot fail to affect the very intellectual and emotional atmosphere we breathe. I wonder if he would not feel that our economic system, and the uses to which it puts mass media and shapes citizen attitudes and behavior thereby, is not actually at war with the principles of our political system, as will be more fully explained below.

Are the operators of television and radio, particularly, among our mass media not engaging principally in a defense of status quo rather than dynamic conditions and attitudes? And are they not creating a false national sense of security which is at this moment resulting in condtions which, if continued, will lead us only to disaster?

To observe what people seem to be interested in, the uses made of leisure (which contains the only blocks of time and energy which used to be devoted to keeping democracy living and changing to meet changing world conditions), is it not unbelievable to know at the same time that the U.S., its leadership, and freedoms and principles it stands for, are locked in a death struggle for survival? To whom does a democracy have to turn for strength and ideas if not to its people? To what extent, in view of their great potential for promoting and discussing ideas needed for survival, are television and radio meeting this challenge --- this absolute need?

Would our ancestor not find it unbelievable that our great nation seems like a rabbit transfixed, hypnotized, by another nation as if by a reptile --- unable to take other than counter-measures? Imitating, instead of setting our own goals and following our own principles unswervingly?

When Russia launches Sputnik, we, years late, push the button marked "science." Do we not realize that they have also long since pushed buttons labelled "languages," "cultures," "the arts," and "diplomacy" as well, while we devote some twenty hours per week of our precious leisure and energies to programs like "I Love Lucy" and "Rin Tin Tin"? Can we not believe that in a few years developments equal to Sputnik will dramatize how far behind we are in other educational and intellectual areas as well? Have the mass media (which used to have over 20,000 correspondents and reporters abroad, although the number is probably now only one-third that) no responsibility to warn us of such developments in ways we can not fail to comprehend --- to disturb the comfortable as well as to comfort and sedate the disturbed?

The concerns I outline in the following pages are not mine alone. They can be found described, sometimes far better than I can describe them, in scores of books and articles by educators, research scholars, political scientists, social workers and psychiatrists.

(What would you do if you were a psychiatrist whose clinical records inescapably point to the contributions of mass media to increased apathy, hypochondria, and other mental illnesses in an age when mental illness has become more of a national problem than physical illness?)

An American Medical Association publication expresses concern for the "growing callousness to the suffering of others" which seems related to TV viewing of certain programs by certain viewers. The Senate Committee set up to investigate juvenile delinquency reports concerns regarding the atrophy of sympathy and compassion towards those in distress, in this same context.

To all those who in recent years have provided increasing evidence of concern in the problems I outline here, I am deeply indebted.

If the emotions and minds of the public are taking a frightful massaging and battering now, in the name of a free economy and free enterprise, what will happen if a real depression or recession comes? Particularly if color TV, subliminal perception and other "instruments of persuasion" are developed as it appears they soon will be? Imagine the increased shrillness of appeals to buy! Imagine the increased flagellation which listeners would have to take before desperate producers and manufacturers would recognize that the public can't buy more! The resultant human "crack ups" (and I am convinced there are some now) would create an additional burden for "society" (from which mass media like television too often dissociate themselves when confronted by such problems) at a time when the economic crisis would already present almost insurmountable problems.

As Gilbert Seldes has asked, how free a market in entertainment (which is what television has largely become) can we afford before our intellect, social structure, and political inactivity cause us to lose the free system which makes "free enterprise" possible?

I would also ask another serious question. If I am a broadcaster, and claim that listeners and viewers are my loyal family, to what extent do I allow salesmen access to them directly, with conflicting claims? How far can I let this go before they are beaten into a senseless pulp? How far can I go before I may be accused of behaving like a father or husband who encourages the rape of his wife or daughter? The fact that they may come to "enjoy" it still does not relieve him of a moral responsibility.

Are there no lessons in station and network responsibility for commercial and program appeals which advertisers are to be "allowed", over your station, in the operation of the newly emerging type of "good music" station? Many of the latter, which do exercise control, allowing neither exaggerated claims nor "pummeling" of their listeners, have waiting lists of sponsors who are finding that gentlemanly sales appeals, in such a station atmosphere, are also successful.

Since over 50% of all TV operating hours in the U. S. are network programmed, aren't networks the logical starting point for such a re-examination of policy? With the increasing number of college graduates joining the adult viewing and listening "force" each year, and the demand for adult education rising, is it not possible that higher standards might meet with real appreciation of significant numbers of people?

All this is not to denigrate the pleasure given by television and radio to millions of people in the U. S. who are "coping bravely and cheerfully with boring and dismal lives," as someone has put it. I would remark, however, that these lives and people need more enriching than anesthetizing or badgering to buy things they can't afford, if a full service were to be rendered.

I should also like to state unequivocally that I do not maintain or mean to imply that there is any "conspiracy" on the part of "wicked capitalists" to weaken our nation's intellectual, spiritual, political or moral fibre. But in the daily pursuit of "business as usual" many unintentional and unintended effects of their programs are now largely overlooked by sponsors and stations alike in their concentration on market effects. They only seek to exploit man's dollars, the "economic man." But the effects on the "whole man" are no less dramatic. Overlooking them may be fatal both to him, as a pillar of dynamic democracy, and to them if democracy falls.

I would warn that we are not only losing the cold war, the war for men's minds but we could also well lose the next "hot" war if present trends continue.

Besides the more detailed listing of tendencies which are named later, I would mention here only two reasons for industry's apparent unconcern for what it is doing to the "political man" today.

First, the only individual at the operational level of either networks or stations who must meet professional standards of any kind is the engineer. He must have passed objective examinations to qualify him for a license from the Federal Communications Commission. For those who plan, write, produce or otherwise shape these programs there are no educational, moral, ethical or other standards or qualifications, which a social scientist might expect of those most responsible for what happens to viewers or listeners. The delivery boy, to use the analogy, is licensed; the persons who make up the prescriptions or the producers who "package the food" have no standards whatever to meet, either positive or negative, with the exception of the "code" of the industry. I invite careful reading of this code by the reader himself, if he can find it, to ascertain to what extent this is either adequate, observed, or publicized.

Secondly, research has been principally if not wholly market, i.e. economic research. Not how to serve the whole man, but how to get the man's dollar. Had such research not been so restricted in what it was designed or allowed to report, more alarming symptoms would undoubtedly have been registered. But the number of columns on each research card is limited. "Stick to business, young man! No extraneous essays!"

So, one "success" technique has led to another, and with no "friend at court" in the industry, (or even in Washington, where all involved, except the public, have a "lobby") the scars on the minds and emotions of listeners have gone unnoticed, even by themselves. For we live in an age when increasingly we see only what we are told to see. And if "the others" say "all is well," who am I to know how I would have been under other conditions?

Once I've paid my two hundred dollars for my receiver, gotten a TV chair or even a TV room or home, stayed home from the City Council meeting, and gotten "parked" in front of the TV set, it is actually far easier for me to leave the set on than to turn it off (or tune to another station, which is not yet possible in too much of the U. S.), regardless of how much I may dislike the program, or be merely indifferent to it.

I've paid my money, and I'll "watch if it kills me."

While recognizing that neither manufacturers, advertising agencies, broadcasters nor program planners or producers intend or perhaps even wish to lower our tastes, our sensitivities, or our capabilities for fulfilling the role of citizens in a democracy founded on Christian principles, I nevertheless maintain that much of what television and radio label "service" is, by humanizing and dehumanizing standards, in reality disservice to our political system.

They have been doing in ignorance (thinking they were only engaging in legitimate "sales" use of the publicly-owned ether) what totalitarianisms spend millions to do deliberately to their citizens to keep them in line. When others do it deliberately, it is brain-washing or propaganda. What can we call it when unrestricted "free enterprise" uses of mass media do it to us?

Imperceptibly, even though only a few station, network or advertising agency officials have admitted to this uneasy realization, it is becoming obvious to social scientists, educators, and members of the mental and physical health professions that there is a conditioning going on which demands attention. The need is for staff personnel at all levels of program and commercial creation, who are aware of these dangers and trained to take a serious view of the overall social effects of broadcasting.

We are then, not helpless or powerless to change this. Present uses are not "predestined." TV does not rule us. Neither does it rule those who operate it. It was created by men, and is operated by men with consciences and a great stake, if not consciously a consuming interest, in democracy's and free enterprise's survival. Once they realize what they may unwittingly be doing, even if they are not fully convinced of it. I can not but believe that they will begin to show the concern and take the steps required.

The consequences of misuse or abuse of such freedoms as broadcasters and advertisers on TV and radio enjoy today are too great to entrust to luck or time or "pressure groups" to work out. If mass media manipulators recognize the dangers, and apply the brakes to the downhill plunge of "the people" --- their audiences, who will go where they lead them --- we can provide an example for the world which will surprise and dismay our enemies.

Much of the trend outlined in later paragraphs, I know, is due to industrialization and standardization in any civilization, rather than to the presence of villains or persons purposely disloyal to our democratic system. It is not even surprising that our principal users of these media should not be aware of the possible unintended dangerous effects of their efforts, since the United States is the first nation to pass through such a crucible, testing human capacities to adjust as they were never tested before.

Having no comparable phenomenon to look back on elsewhere in the world for guidance and warning signs, it should not surprise us too much that the unrestricted pursuit of "free enterprise" in mass media use might bring with it dangers, as well as pleasant surprises, never clearly foreseen. But since our nation is the first to face this problem, how we solve it, once it is recognized and defined, will be of inestimable significance to other nations just entering upon this type of industrialization. For industrialization will raise such problems of human effects and rights wherever it develops. The political sophistication and experience of many new peoples is far less great than ours. Therefore threats to democracy which in the U. S. can be met in time, may in less experienced nations lead to totalitarianism almost with certainty.

This burden of responsibility is doubly heavy at this time. The U. S. is already a have-not nation in copper, iron and numerous other metallic minerals. It is dangerously close to the brink of shortage in petroleum and water, among others. That our mass media have not adequately warned us of these alarming depletions is one of the shortcomings I shall refer to later. The days of the supremacy of the white race are, I believe, drawing to an end. The "wave of the future" lies in Asia, Africa, and South America --- with newly emerging colored peoples just entering upon that exciting period of industrial development through which we have been passing during the last century. They have, in many cases, unlimited manpower and natural resources, and soon will have modern drugs and techniques with which to assure improved physical conditions, low death rates, and the kind of cocky self-assurance and determination to choose their own system that we had when we were a newly-independent free nation. The challenge to us to provide an example should make us humble. And the emphasis being placed by Russia on preparing her young people by the millions, not only for science, but also with intensive training in the languages and cultures of these people, to meet the opportunities of the future, is not misplaced.

I come now to those specific practices and influences of television and radio particularly on our citizens, which I believe are weakening us rather than strengthening us for the part we must play in the "new world of tomorrow." We shall perhaps never again be able to exercise control in the world to the degree that we have been able to do so since the first World War.

I would repeat that what I list are serious concerns rather than accusations of deliberate irresponsibility. If they contain any distortions, they are unintentional. I seek only a reasonable airing, here and by others, of what to me appear to be pressing dangers.

My first question is this: with a world in turmoil, with the pattern of the future likely to be frozen in place within our generation, should people be encouraged, urged and otherwise exhorted to spend increasingly more time watching television and listening to the radio? Or even as much as they now do? Is the amount of time people spend in this single pursuit something which our nation or even the television and radio industry should boast about, as a sign of our civilization and high standard of living? Is there no parallel with the circuses of Rome or Athens? Could this not also, as it reflects on the time available for and devoted to those things which a democracy must require of its citizens, be interpreted as a sign of decadence? Might it not be subject to this interpretation by other nations as well as our own social and political scientists?

In discussions with representatives of other nations (some of which we have "re-educated" in democratic systems), who are planning television services, this question is often raised: Isn't it dangerous to present the people with the temptation, or even the possibility, of spending all the time they wish in front of a television set? Particularly, viewing mostly"entertainment?" We have taught them, I have been reminded, that in a democracy they cannot leave the responsibilities of "government" to "the others," as they did under Hitler, for example. We have told them that democracy requires time, the study of issues, painful soul-searching on the part of its citizens. And yet, in the United States ——

It is very well to say that people don't have to listen so much. That, in fact they probably shouldn't listen so much. But, if they want to, let them! The fact is, of course, that people are doing only what they are told and urged to do. The urgers use every technique known to psychology, psychiatry or social engineering. Has there ever been an entertainment program which has asked if the intended viewer really has time for entertainment, or whether, if he watches, it may not be at the expense of his responsibility to his PTA, his church, or his other "citizen" roles, including studying or "hard-thinking" regarding political candidates or election issues? No, of course not. "Listen to just this program. Then you may go." But by the next program you are caught in the next web. And so on.

Have the mass media no responsibility to help preserve democracy through encouraging those of its practices and dynamics which might effect the selfish objectives of their most irresponsible sponsors? Is there any short-cut to honest discussion and the lonely thinking that men must engage in when hard decisions are to be made? And was there ever an age which required harder decisions?

While listening to the radio, and to a far greater extent while watching television, I maintain (and others so believe as well), the listener's or viewer's mind is leashed. The mind is kept "following after". If an idea is suggested, which deserves following through, the mind is jerked back from such pursuit (or original thinking) by the thread or plot of the show. "Follow-up" is frustrated by the "need" not to miss the next line, or next program.

How much "leading like a dog on a leash", as someone has described it, can a mind stand before its capacity (or at least its inclination) to soar and explore is seriously reduced? How long is it before you come to count on having "others" think problems through for you --- whether the problems be insurance, politics or the United Nations?

The only defense against "persuaders" is to develop an attitude of "not allowing ourselves to be persuaded." But with so much which Americans do need persuading about, how safe is it to develop this attitude?

I recognize that any television broadcaster is likely to point out that if a citizen doesn't waste his time on television, he may well waste it (the broadcaster is likely to say he "will" waste it), on something else. This is of course true. That wasted time is not the broadcaster's responsibility. Only that time wasted on TV or radio is the broadcaster's concern. And certainly not all viewing or listening by any means, is wasted. Some viewing and listening, if selectively exercised, will help a citizen to be well-informed. To that end why should the industry or station not encourage selective viewing? Whose station is it --- the station owner's (pledged to public service, rather than disservice) or the network's, the agency's, or the sponsor's?

Some nations, recognizing that the operators do have a responsibility to control the amount of television viewing available, just as they have a responsibility to control the availability of narcotics (the narcotic effects of TV will be discussed later), have soberly limited the number of hours that television stations may operate. Certain thoughtful supporters of educational television in this nation, recognizing this problem, have also suggested that, if commercial television will not do so, educational television must warn people of the dangers of the sort of excessive viewing which so many engage in.

I know this is a tough problem. It hits where it hurts. But I feel we must attack it, both to the extent that we should more carefully examine the proportion of television's time devoted to entertainment, and ways in which viewers should be reminded of their necessary loyalty to their nation as well as to television and the balance sheet of sponsors and stations. Are their implied "duties" as consumers always compatible with their duties as co-owners of a democratic system of government?

It is stoutly maintained by most mass media operators that Americans are the "best-informed people in the world." I do not propose to challenge this statement. But I would say that I believe Americans are far less well-informed than radio, television and our other mass media could and should enable them to be.

Because of the defenses which the sheer volume and shrillness of television and radio broadcasts rain upon him require him to erect, I believe the average listener and viewer may hear more but understand less than is generally assumed. A British scholar, Cardinal Demant, has pointed out how these media have forced us, in self-defense, to develop an ability to "tune out," which no previous generations had. We have been conditioned to not hear, even while listening, and not see, even while looking. This may be one of the unique contributions of radio and television to the "adjustment" of our generation to its environment. This situation in an age when we'd better see and hear, if we are to survive, is not a happy one.

In the information field, exposure does not guarantee understanding; and the conditioning brought about by radio and television is, I expect, transferred to some degree to reading as well. Understanding is further complicated by the early recognition of radio that, for an aural medium only, news had to be shortened, edited and simplified to a greater extent than was necessary in newspapers. And when television came along, with an even higher rate card value per minute of time, there was no inclination to abandon this capsulizing technique, so that several "stories" could be covered in the time available. Some "newscasts" might then include the story of a murder, the capture of a robber, the story of an alarming statement out of Moscow and its reply from Washington, a human interest story, and perhaps two or three other items, if time allowed. As an ironic commentary on what is really new, or what is really happening in our nation or the city "described," it would be difficult to imagine a greater caricature if it had been planned by our enemies.

Of course, there is a basic problem here. Albion Ross in his Journey of An American (Bobbs-Merrill) has put it this way: "My life in the Middle East had been taken up with news, a thing that falls into patterns concerned with governments, crises, projects, change. I had barely noted that what was not changing was so great a part of everything. News is a very special distortion. It is either about something changing or something unusual. Life, however, is to a large extent about something not changing and not being unusual. Follow the news diligently enough and you will become stone-blind to the greater part of reality and to most of the values of living." But should television and radio news follow newspaper news formats in reporting only the sensational (or the most sordid of the sensational)? Is there not a thread of throbbing life and progress that might be traced for listeners and viewers who turn to television and radio for news? Might television and radio news not in this respect, at least, be unique?

A more alarming result of this simplification of news on radio and television, so even the "drips" in the audience can't miss the point, is to find a villain or scapegoat for every "unpopular" event. The days when conditions or events caused developments is apparently nearly past, in all but our best newscasts or analyses. The public's understanding of causes and effects is greatly simplified -- but also dangerously distorted --- by this "TV and radio" news technique.

But for this contribution of radio and television to the public's concept of news and events, I can not believe that McCarthyism (which is discussed later in other ramifications as well) could ever have flourished in our nation. Or perhaps continue to flourish in other ways and under other labels.

Television and radio, it is said, bring "events" themselves into our homes. But, just as you can not really "bring a sunrise" into the home, even with color television, so the whole event can never be faithfully reproduced. By TV, viewers on a certain network saw delegates at a national convention take off and throw down their badges, in a gesture of secession affecting their party's unity. They did not see the delegates put these badges back on, after the "TV show" was over and after the cameras had swung away.

No, we do not see "events" by television. We only see that part of the event which the producer and camera men, however conscientious, can pick out and transmit. They are still human, and many of them would admit to the difficulties and errors that beset them.

This is not to accuse television or radio of failure as a reporter. It can never fully transmit an event. The danger in it is that most people are convinced that they have seen the whole event, and base their decisions and attitudes on what they saw rather than on what actually happened. Not being an unduly modest medium in its practitioners, TV is likely to encourage the viewer to believe that "he has seen it all," as you always do on (name your own network or station). Conclusions based on such interpretations or reports are likely to be both stereotyped and inaccurate. And the diversity which always exists when more than one person views a given event, is lost.

Because of the space it would require, I shall not here fully discuss the increasingly disturbing effects of reports, by the mass media, of "public opinion" pre-election polls on people who do not want to "throw their vote away", or other political implications of such reporting as it is now done. I mention only that television, particularly, has raised numerous problems affecting practices based on pre-television traditions, both for politics and the courts. It is my belief that a thorough re-examination of television's news functions, by its practitioners, might now well be in order.

I would, however, ask another question: Is television's and radio's greatest failing, if we are to keep people well-informed, not to be found in what it fails to report even more than in the area of the problems raised above?

I should like, for the moment, to discuss this only from the point of view of the picture of world events which the average citizen secures from radio and television. I am here not referring merely to news programs. While admitting that the average viewer and listener undoubtedly has this picture corrected or rounded out for him somewhat by newspapers and magazines, the fact that TV leaves him less time to read, and the fact that the printed media too are being affected by what we might call

"electronic techniques" of reporting, to meet the competition of TV, do make this question, in my opinion, a valid one.

I believe that what people are not told contributes to a dangerous false sense of security. I believe it is also a violation of our citizens' fundamental rights and needs to know the full truth, if they are to be the ones blamed for decisions: whether for programs on television or the election of political candidates. And I believe what the mass media, because of their interlocking and servile dependence on "serving" principally industry in this nation, "hold back" from the people, is far more serious and dangerous than what our political leaders withhold from our mass media, reprehensible as the latter also is.

For the false assurance "fed back" by the mass media to our leaders, who are like our other citizens in susceptibility to them, forms a dangerous circle of incestuous "back-patting" in the whole, which can not be corrected by occasional "criticism," even by courageous commentators.

We think we know vaguely what is going on in the Arab nations, or North Africa. It is essentially a battleground for foreign interests in conflict, we gather. The fact that its roots are in a civil conflict, essentially, is not really explained to us. This is too complicated, would take too much time, and does not lend itself to the "simplification" I mentioned earlier. We are not told that, in these nations which have become rich, with the discovery of oil, average citizens are no better off than before. That many are starving and half-clothed. Is our "support" not all too frequently support of native potentates exploiting their own people? Do we not support such local rulers, to the shocked amazement of under-privileged little people of other nations who are also seeking to rid themselves of undemocratic rule, whenever it serves our military objectives to support colonialism? Do our present acts not often belie both our history and the constitution which many nations had planned to use as their model?

If the "contribution" made to this conflict by our oil companies, for example, in these nations, were revealed, would mass media really "be in trouble" with oil and automobile interests as some allege? Won't we be in more trouble if, our fibre weakened, our decisions wrong, we become an occupied country as a result of present mistakes? Do TV and radio make sure we know the full story?

"Regimented" science training in the U. S. will never enable us to catch up with Russia. Yet where is this warning to be found in the mass media? Dr. Edward J. Sparling, President of Roosevelt University, has warned us: "Before the Sputniks could be propagated, the top Russian scientists were freed to search for scientific truths wherever they might lead. Politburo members could not dictate what was to be found in the unknown, so they supplied the scientists with the equipment and with funds unlimited for their journeys into the unknown. The Sputniks, then, are not the progeny of the dictators but children of the free, born of scientists free to search for the truth and free to find it."

If we begin to tell our scientists what they must do, and how they must do it, or if we decide to stress one or another subject only, which nation is most free or least free in its education?

Is the fact that Soviet scientists earn 70 to 80 times as the average workman, with professors and teachers earning 5 to 10 times as much as skilled workers, not related to the mass media's treatment, as a whole of educators, intellectuals and scientists in this country? At a time when a "new birth of freedom" is occurring in education in Russia, are we to solve it by panaceas or only partial solutions, just because intellectuals and educators have no "sponsors" in our industrial system, or "pressure groups" to prevent their constant depiction as stooges and comic characters?

Let me be specific in what I think are some of the effects of giving industry, through our present type of unrestricted sponsorship, "control" of what we do or do not see and hear on television and radio and, to a lesser extent, in other mass media. It is not surprising that "he who pays the piper calls the tune." But on this scale, where people's minds and emotions and political attitudes and votes are shaped by them, I believe it can be, and already is, most dangerous.

I believe television, radio, and many of our other mass media are now prisoners of a system of their own creation. The compromises they have had to make with ideas and ideals, in order to attain and now to continue to enjoy, extremely high profit returns on their investments, have created for them a cage in which they have learned to flutter about in such a way, and so noisily, that the cage is often not seen.

But to what extent do the mass media freely air evidence in the area of conservation, or natural resources, for example? A few years ago William S. Paley, of CBS, was Chairman of a National Commission to report to the President on this national problem. The effects of constant automobile model changes, their increasing size, and the increasing grades and amounts of petroleum they use, or waste, elicited great concern in this report. So did scores of other examples of what, in retrospect, we or our children can call only criminal waste. This plundering is based on keeping people buying and replacing fast enough to keep our economy on a steeply rising curve. The fact that inflation accompanies this curve steadily is rationalized for us, though not for the retired and pensioners who suffer from it. And the question is never asked whether this continuing inflation and waste can not, by some stretch of the imagination, have dangerous consequences.

How many readers have ever read, or even heard about, the Paley Commission report? With the percentage of television's income that is received from automobile and gasoline manufacturers, let's not be ridiculous.

Or how about a genuinely adequate airing of concerns about what has become a new "plague" of our age: throat cancer? For the reasons you've not seen this more thoroughly discussed on television, check television's income from tabacco interests.

Or, at a time when the colored peoples of Asia, Africa and other parts of the world are being alienated by the apparent difference between our words and our deeds in the area of race relations and segregation, what moral national leadership is television providing in this area? What positive examination and dramatization of progress and gains, as opposed to losses, (reported only as "news") permeate our programming at a time when this is perhaps the greatest stain we bear in some parts of the world?

I fear that the prosperity of our mass media and our people are often thought of by foreigners, whom we would win to our "freedom", as resulting from our willingness to give up many of our own freedoms, in plain view of all the world: the freedom to know about, from our mass media themselves, everything which might threaten our mental or physical health, or our liberties.

With responsible psychiatrists, like Dr. Frederic Wertham and Dr. Eugene D. Glynn, on the basis of clinical records (not their opinions) warning of the relationship between mental illness and excessive viewing of TV for many of their patients, how much have you seen on TV which might be interpreted as recognition by a responsible medium of a concern or problem it wants to meet, putting national interest ahead of its own?

Or what TV station runs a series to warn people against over-extending themselves in time payment commitments? Yet, do records in this area not indicate that this sort of education might well be in the national interest? Instead, we allow "barkers" to "work over" innocent (i.e. uninformed or unwarned) listeners until many of them get into ruinous conditions, wherein many are forced to use for interest charges money that might be spent for their children's education or other more essential needs. To those who would scoff: the relation of "drop-outs" in school to "time-payments" of parents; and the relation of working-mothers (obligated by time payments) to delinquency, illustrate some of the types of inplications that can validly be drawn from present free enterprise practices.

The "saboteur" of our economy, and this concept is becoming accepted in "society" generally as well as in attitudes of children toward their parents, is the "tightwad" father who wants to use the old car another year, or who believes that surely there are truer indices of success, or love, or happiness, than material possessions. By television commercial and too often usual television program standards, he is out of date.

The person who gets hurt in such a society is the one who would disturb this status quo, or "rock the boat." For, thanks to the power of the mass media in transmitting almost solely industry-oriented value systems, almost all listeners themselves become defenders of this status-quo as the "American way of life," "free enterprise." They find that being plundered is "fun."

Hitler achieved conformism by violence and coercion as well as by persuasion through the mass media. The latter have become powerful enough factors in the lives of Americans today so that persuasion alone does the trick --- however unintentional or unorganized the effects may be.

Increasingly, no basic questions are raised about the structure of our economy, our political or party system. We are living in "the best of all possible worlds." If you're a "boat-rocker" you'll be smeared with all the power of the mass media. But isn't "Don't rock the boat" a poor motto for democracy, which had better remain dynamic if it is to survive? Isn't it the loyal and concerned boat rockers in history who have been responsible for our moving ahead into stronger and stronger positions, rather than the contrary?

If nearly all mental stimulation on television and radio is "conservative," if our entertainment and information are so carefully winnowed for subversive ideas that we lose our capacity for resistance to the germs the "outer world" or our domestic economy, contains, are we really being made stronger or weaker?

So strong have restraints and taboos become, as a result of the surrender of television's taste-making and policy-making responsibility to sponsors, that you are unlikely to find a villain who is Jewish, or left-handed, or Camel-smoking. If the president of the "mother-corporation" is red-headed and stout, the villain on his program certainly won't be red-headed and stout. Not because the producer would necessarily be fired --- but why should he stick his neck out to see? And surely the hero won't perish in an airplane accident, or a Buick, or a Mercury or a Chrysler.

If an important event happens on a night when a super-spectacular is scheduled, perhaps tied-in with the unveiling of the new 1957 cars of the sponsor, with dealers and listeners poised from coast to coast --- how much of a chance do you really think there is for the event, instead of the "show"to be carried? Increasingly, the unfreedom of television's own "controllers" grows. What was possible even a year or so ago with ease becomes increasingly difficult today.

Holidays have been captured by commerce. You used to take only yourself to see Mother on Mother's Day. You still had some importance as a son or daughter. Today only a cheap-skate would go empty-handed. And even Mother, who, being human, has also been conditioned, would think you didn't love her if you didn't provide the proof which industry's standards have established as legitimate. There are more "weeks" in the "business " year in the U. S. than the inventor of the calendar ever foresaw.

Some critics and students say that television or mass media in general, as long as their economic base lies in commerce and industry, can never question man's fate, our political or economic system, our sense of values, or our way of life. I maintain that it must. For unless it does, it will either become a "controlled " system, whose consequences I shudder to contemplate, or it will continue the downward slide of irresponsibility which I have here sought to describe. That way leads to destruction, decadence and slavery.

It is late, but I hope not too late, for television and radio station and network operators to re-seize from sponsors the reins (which they promised they would never surrender in any case), and put the public frequencies to the uses which our free system requires, if it is to survive.

To do this will require as much responsible staffing and as much research into social and human impacts and needs (as opposed to "wants") as is now devoted to "market" research, which now enables industry to get you to buy whether you really need the product, or wanted or intended to or not. Present research is strongly totalitarian, inhumanitarian and undemocratic, unless "democratic" no longer implies an obligation to develop the individual's best, instead of his cheapest, impulses.

Controversy is the whetstone of democracy. "It is a strenuous thing this of living the life of a free people; and we cannot escape the burden of our inheritance." So spoke Woodrow Wilson in 1889. History tells us that every nation that ceased to be dynamic, that began to "cover up" or muzzle critics, as if they were disloyal --- every nation that became too comfortable or materialistic -- has perished, often in a plundering blood-bath. The effects as well as the forms of our democracy need preserving.

The above paragraphs have sought to explore, admittedly in too incomplete a form, the claim that American viewers and listeners are well informed. It sought to suggest to readers, who can find other and probably better illustrations, various problems in which "veto" power is exercised, so the status quo, or the viewer's "enjoyment" will not be disturbed.

I turn now to another question. What are the life-values that are important, as conveyed by television and radio today, in general?

First of all, it would seem that, on the basis of both salary and prestige, the most important people in the U. S. are "show" people. Certainly television has adopted from Hollywood (whose senses of values might be examined in a comparable study), without challenge, a recognition that these people should be paid and imitated more than anyone else: scientists, teachers, workers, etc. In this incestuous inter-promotion of show people and stars, the best programs on TV are likely to be tributes to show-people: Oscar Awards, "The Eddie Duchin (Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor etc. etc.) Story," and so on. "Everyone who amounts to anything"(this "star" for instance) uses A's product.

Who successful people are is related to how they became that way. Years ago Horatio Alger used to teach that success was won by hard-work. But "successful," i.e. wealthy people today, when interviewed (as they interminably are), in the majority of cases will point out that they "got a break," which really put them over. If they did work hard, so unpopular has this procedure become that they will usually hotly deny it. And this is by no means restricted either to show-people or people who have won "64,000.00 Question" type "recognitions." Only a fool now succeeds by hard work. The real way is to "find an angle" or be on enough programs to strike it rich.

More and more, in our sense of values, fatalism, which totalitarian systems purposely develop, is observable. Success (like mass media love) "happens" or "comes" to people. It is not something to be won or earned. This would require using leisure time for something besides watching television, I would assume, and that would be disruptive of our economy.

Easy ways to success in love are offered. "Where there's an Arrow, can a girl be far away"? "If you use _____ (the boys; the girls -- cross out one) will positively mob you." "Yesterday at the intersection of Main and Vine, several hundred young men (all handsome) were crushed to death. ---- The girl towards whom they were all stampeding was wearing (insert "X product")." Sex is the plum. It is not something you're born with; it's something you, too, can put on!

You wish prestige? Easy! Drive up in the proper model Lincoln (Cadillac, Edsel, Imperial) and it's yours. Or use "K," "the world's most expensive" (and probably worthless) perfume. Why drudge your life away to come up the hard way? Take it easy. Fool people. Everyone does these days.

DeTocqueville, the French historian of a century ago, has said that one of the dangers, in a democracy, is that a taste for the easy, the useful --- will predominate over the good, or beautiful. The result is likely to be accomplished mediocrity, emphasis on sleekness and bigness, and the replacement of ability by personality. Mass media (particularly TV) have fully exploited this tendency, perhaps unintentionally, rather than trying to avert this danger, in the value systems taught. This is more fully discussed below in the discussion of the "other directedness" which is also cultivated by TV as it was never cultivated before.

If we are encouraged to study languages (and we will rarely find such encouragement on TV, unless sponsored by a commercial school), it is not so we will understand other peoples and their cultures and motivations in order that we may respect them and so they will respect us, or to help build one world. It is likely to be so we won't get "gypped" in buying trinkets when we go abroad; or so we may get a job with a U. S. corporation abroad --- which provides prestige (through envy) and success (high salaries resulting from "developing" other nation's resources).

We don't know our neighbors, but we familiarly talk of Bing, Rita, Frank, Elvis, good old Ed, and even "good old Plato," since the familiarity taught by our media makes everyone "one of the boys," reducing the "differences" and emphasing the similarities "between us all." The prestige and dignity of world authorities are quickly reduced to our own level by television and radio particularly.

Since, in our values, everything is expected to be useful (including friendship, so we'll "get the breaks"), we emphasize gadgetry instead of ideals, practical engineering instead of "abstract" science. (A Russian scientist has been quoted as admitting that our car fins are better than theirs).

Since we see no way in which weak or small foreign nations can be useful to us, thousands of visitors from these nations find our condescension and proud ignorance of them the most powerful impressions they carry away from our nation and their contacts with our mass media. And when they do see themselves referred to, they are pictured as quaint curios of another age, whose senses of values and "homely virtues" are out-of-date in an atomic age.

Our attitudes as well as our senses of values have also been undergoing an imperceptible revolution during the past few years. I would call it a revolution rather than an evolution because of the power and rapidity with which television and other mass media have spread and promoted them.

Let us consider artists today. The "pure" artist is generally portrayed as long-haired, maladjusted, introverted, weakly, sissy and likely a homo-sexual. It's not a career we urge our children into. (Before the days of television we used to warn our children against "show business," but that is now a career we are re-examining in terms of "useful" returns.) We don't treat the real artist much worse than we ever did, perhaps. But we treat the commercial artist so much better that few can resist.

Where are the American "composers" of yesterday? Either writing jingles for cigarettes, beer, automobiles and refrigerators --- or trying for the Hit Parade, whose successes are thrown away in a few weeks like empty milk cartons, once the fever passes.

In such an environment, few artists indeed are able to create what they believe in or stand for. If they want to live decently or enjoy respect, they will hitch their star realistically to "product praise," in the chorus raised to the "good things of life" which America stands for: the products of American manufacturers.

A recent survey into melodies and "tunes" which people remember turned up fifteen beer jingles and thirteen for cigarettes, to mention only a few. Much of this composer talent is first-class, as listeners and viewers to such jingles will attest. The tragedy is not merely that creativity is "directed." It is that it is directed always into materialistic channels. For most of the great ideas of our struggle for progress are traceable to odd-balls and geniuses who were able to exist without such prostitution of their art, and take flights of fancy unrelated to materialistic influences.

In mass-produced mass media, of course, the identity of creators is also swallowed up. It's the "Marlboro Song" --- the brand name or one of the stable of artists who put it over who is remembered. And in the field of drama or documentaries, it's "staff work" you see, a compromise in which the creator or what he stands for is rarely visible. Most of his "status-quo-disturbing" ideas are either cut out or made bland enough to insure sponsor-safety. ("No protests were received to this program; it was an unqualified success"). Soon the good artist learns not to try to put in any "disturbing" suggestions. He adjusts to the "climate of the mass media."

Some foreign visitors, not meaning to be critical, have nonetheless asked: "Is there nothing better to praise in America than materialistic products and sentimental misleading concepts of love?" Where are the Walt Whitmans of today's America? Certainly not on television! If you would see America's real greatness -- of ideas or ideals -- praised in any way commensurate with the praise of luxuries and gadgets, don't expect to find it on television or radio...at least not often.

Our attitude towards law and its enforcement has also greatly changed. You can now tell the bad guy from the good guy principally by who wins, not by what either side stands for. The police are often as brutally depicted as criminals. But they're better trained and better organized. And they win in the end.

Of course the regular police (professionals) are usually "dopes." But the "private eyes" (amateurs) save America nightly --- often by unlawful means and in violation of human and constitutional rights, whenever "necessary." This was of course McCarthy's practice, which I earlier stated we had had conditioning by the mass media to accept.

Books about the Capones are little different from those about other heroes of our nation. For the clever criminal, like the clever private eye, is admired; he is "sponsored" by industry in a reversal of logic which I find difficult to understand. Is such lawlessness really of benefit to business?

I'm sure the reader can think of other evidences of a growing lack of respect for law and order: boasts of "getting away with" speeding, or having someone to "kill" traffic tickets, "telling the cop off" as Mickey Spillane's hero Mike Hammer would do, etc. We would not wish to overestimate here the disrespect for law which is spread by large numbers of programs. We would ask only if any such disrespect should be transmitted by a powerful medium like television or radio, in the public interest, or even in industry's interest?

Related to television's effects on our attitude towards law are its political effects. Although we would not presume to give a complete or full evaluation here, some symptoms which might lead to concern are becoming visible.

In the case of performers in general, on television, a tendency has been noted for viewers, who are self-admittedly usually not expert in the skill in which the performer is supposed to be a star, to be uncritical in judging what he does, judging instead on how "sincere" he is, his personality, and (for quiz-contestants etc.) how hard he tries. How "the others" react also conditions his attitude greatly. If the performer has a warm personality, is sincere and "tries", in other words, viewers are inclined to like him.

It appears that a similar reaction occurs (since it is in the familiar TV environment) to political candidates. If you're warm and sincere, you're good for the job. If you happen not to project, you will be adjudged a "cold fish", rather than one to be trusted, however honorable, intelligent or qualified you may be. In other words, it is easier to be qualified on a single basis (warmth of personality or "sincerity"), or disqualified on a single basis (moustache, "un-American" accent, "too high-brow") than was the case before the days of television.

If a popular leader makes a few mistakes, don't all the professionals? In fact professionals often endear themselves by apparent "boners" which prove "they're human too." Competence loses, and personality or "popularity" gains, as a basis of decision for or against, on the basis of present evidence, it would seem.

It is also unlikely, in view of the taboos which now exist in the medium, whether anyone who is too disturbing, original or advanced in his thinking could ever become well enough known to become a major candidate, because of the "dangers" his appearance would bring to stations and networks, if he discussed the sort of basic problems outlined earlier. In this framework it is at least problematical in my mind whether, in our age, a Lincoln could ever become a serious candidate.

In this situation leadership and popularity become confused as well. A leader who finds that people "go for him" must be unusual indeed if he does not like this popularity, and respond to it. And once you have as enormous and personally responsive a following as TV brings with it, would you not hesitate to do anything to lose it? This becomes an important consideration in the case of decisions which should be made without regard to their popularity --- for the national interest, for instance.

Admittedly great decisions will still be made by responsible or great leaders, in spite of the likelihood that TV's present base of operation is conducive to "hoarding" popularity rather than using it as a springboard for courageous decisions. But in the case of myriad small decisions, on which large decisions always rest, why endanger one's popularity for what is a small issue anyway?

How many great "minds," as opposed to "personalities" are likely to win election to major offices in an age of television and in what is increasingly becoming an "entertainment-centered" medium in its value systems? Are there at least not serious questions here that relate to the "status-quo" preserving tendency of TV? And what politically responsible steps is television taking to make sure that the good mind will have some chance of success in competition with the warm smile in such a contest?

How adequately, also, does the practice of charging for political time during campaigns meet the needs for "equal access"? The questions on this raised by the campaign preceding the November 1956 election were not raised by irresponsible individuals. They were raised by responsible Senators, Congressmen, politicians, and political scientists, among others.

We read also of a husband and wife public relations team in California, who promote candidates for public office. It is reported they have been successful in seventy out of seventy-four cases, or in 90% of their efforts. Is there any evidence to prove that, if the opponents of the successful candidates had retained these promoters instead, these opponents might not have been elected? Are our elected officials, now that television is here, to be sold like soap? Will only monied candidates or parties now be likely to succeed? How does this tie in with the need for keeping an avenue open for radical, liberal or new ideas and candidates if democracy is not to overlook some ideas which might strengthen it?

Public opinion polls, now delivered immediately by television and radio, as compared with the slower earlier media more conducive to analysis, also raise some serious implications. Most people, except for those strongly tied to one or the other party or candidate, like to be on the winning side. "Why throw your vote away?" "The people obviously want" candidate X.

In such a situation, in which "you" frequently feel that obviously "the others" know more about it anyway than you do (an impression which is also reenforced by the mass media, particularly newspapers) you're likely to either "come around" by the time your ballot is cast, or stay home and watch. For it seems that there's a pretty good show going on without you, and television has trained you eminently to be a spectator instead of a participant.

Another danger in current practices, it seems to me, grows out of "get out the vote" campaigns for which TV and radio rightly take considerable credit. How about some campaigns to urge people not to vote until they have studied issues and candidates? Are such practices not even more urgently needed? Or are we promoting irresponsible decision-making?

In fact, of course, the citizen seems to feel quite frustrated about politics and foreign affairs from the picture given by television. It seems able to explain product virtues better than ideas or issues, all of which become fairly homogenized. For neither the stations nor their sponsors are expert in this. Consequently the citizen becomes increasingly reliant on "others" to figure it out: the government, business, labor unions or his "association." He'll "go along" with what they have decided. The need for finding a new TV formula for free political discussion and the clarification of issues is, I believe, apparent. Otherwise we shall be a democracy in none only. The impossibility of airing basic issues, such as conservation, in a system in which media operators have in essence surrendered content or "tone" control to industries, which must use natural resources for their products, is by now an obvious danger.

The attitude found generally in television programs as related to the intellectual has been alluded to earlier. However it deserves brief, separate identification. What is the picture you have of teachers, scientists, or the "studious child" from television? Isn't the teacher likely to be an angular spinster or an impractical idealist who lets his or her family starve? Isn't the professor usually absent-minded and "queer"? Isn't the broadly or deeply intelligent professional person generally poked fun of? He nearly always comes off second best in TV "duels" with amateurs or kids. That such quiz "shows" are "rigged" to poke "friendly fun," or build up "good personalities" does not alter the effect. Even when Mr. Smith goes to Washington, the superiority of the amateur over the professional is obvious.

"Egg-heads" are a product of a mass media age. We heroize the clever, but the too intelligent person only bores us. Facts on television are traditionally kept simple and bland. Viewing should not be an "effort." But intelligent people and intelligent treatment of problems require effort from their listeners. Furthermore the intellectual is the source of virtually the only dissent found in our nation to present uses of television, radio and the other mass media. Why shouldn't his name be mud?

My question would be: are we certain that we don't need to encourage such intellectuals to participate in the mass media? Do we not need to encourage a race of intellectuals in view of the present state of the world and democracy? Do we not already have too little intelligent help from intelligent people in our society, in planning socially responsible media uses?

The intellectual and individualist find it tough going in our present television age. Facts which he might quote in an argument are answered by what last night's commentator said. In the society of yesterday he could find holes to which to retreat and fire. Today television is filling in most of those holes by its sheer weight and volume as a taste-maker and attitude-former. Before this type of individual becomes wholly extinct, perhaps even television leaders should give some thought as to whether our nation can really do without him. If not, should they not create some niches for him?

Our attitude towards happiness has also, I believe, greatly changed, at least as it is reflected in television. Have you noticed the tendency to find most "happiness" which is portrayed on television traceable either to money or some material object: a new insurance policy, new car, new television set, or something else "I've always wanted?" Is this really happiness? The viewer who questions this is likely to come to admit that, since others seem to find satisfaction, pleasure and happiness in these objects, maybe his idea of happiness is too far-fetched. So that becomes happiness in the product-centered medium of television.

Another lesson for happiness is found in "adjustment." The happy person "goes along." He's not always raising unpopular questions. If you would be happy, be like an 8-ball, willing to go wherever life would push you -- well-adjusted to the inevitable as pictured in the mass media, too sensible to quarrel with "those who know," not "knocking yourself out" or "sticking your neck out." No rough edges to snag on the environment.

Happy people, too, are having fun --- always having pleasure. No hint that happiness can far more often than television admits, be a quiet outgrowth of a job well done, whether rewarded or recognized or not --- or may come from love, respect, or at least self-respect. Does happiness not really come from a sense of one's own worthiness as an individual --- regardless of status, residence, car or worldly possessions? Doesn't it come from respect for our own character, including those respects in which we are different from others?

Isn't the definition of happiness which most often is shown actually dangerous? Doesn't life impose on each of us certain obligations, commensurate with our talents? If people don't get excited or in an "inner uproar," as someone has called it, about some things, do they really ever achieve anything? And isn't the satisfaction from getting a gift, or the pleasure of sex, or the peace and quiet portrayed so frequently on television more like the "joy" of animals, or vegetating, or death, or vacation, than like real happiness which democratic human beings deserve?

I do not believe that happiness consists in satisfying one desire for a material possession until another comes along, as another always will. I don't believe it is synonomous with amused or pleased. And, as our Bill of Rights recognized, I do not believe it is ever fully achieved --- we are only guaranteed the right of the "pursuit of happiness." I do not believe our forefathers meant by this merely pursuit of physical pleasure, notoriety or commodities.

Nor do I believe that happiness is really possible to one conditioned to believe that all is predestined, and that our present system, and nothing better, is inevitable for us and our children. Fatalism and happiness are irreconcilable in the kind of society we need.

David Riesman, in The Lonely Crowd, some eight years ago called attention to the growth of "other-directedness." He may have coined the phrase. He explains the tendency in "other-directed" individuals to behave as if radar-controlled rather than as if gyroscope-controlled. At a conference table, the "other-directed" will canvass the group before replying or committing himself. To be different is to be indecent, and unwanted. And who wants to be unwanted?

The message of television, particularly in its commercials, is based almost wholly on other-directedness as an appeal. Be like the distinguished man in the Mercury. Drink the beverage the distinguished --- movie stars, TV stars, and everyone who amounts to anything --- drink. Be at least as good to your wife as neighbor Jones (who has thrown out the old dishwasher and air conditioner and gotten truly modern ones), so you won't be disgraced. Think what "the others" will think if you --- and on and on.

The message of TV in an age of dictatorship by industrial control is: "adjust." Industries themselves have begun more and more to weed out the person who doesn't mesh or adjust well -- regardless of his gifts. As one corporation film says: "No geniuses at work here ---" "Adjustment" to mass media appeals means acquiring facility in exercising your role --- nay your duties -- as a consumer.

The "hero" of TV and radio audiences may be the TV or movie star and the disc jockey. But the hero of the sponsors is the person who buys everything. He knows that it is a duty to "free enterprise" economy to spend, not save. Whether he needs a product or not, if he's not to look to "the others" like a saboteur of our economic system, he must buy, buy, buy! "The others," as portrayed on TV, all do.

If the craving he has is not satisfied by "things," he must be wrong. For in the struggle between the "individualist" and the economic and behavioral conventions found throughout commercial television, the individual is always wrong. In the struggle between the "individual," as a refuge for whom our democracy was allegedly created, and the "culture" portrayed in advertising-financed mass media, conformism is winning with barely a struggle. He who is not satisfied with trivial and comfortable ideas is obviously out of step.

You can tell whether you're a good conformist by asking yourself to what extent you are content to be like everyone else, as opposed to demanding more of yourself than "the others" seem to.

Ortega y Gasset saw industrialization changing democracy (in which qualified, elected leaders bear the responsibilities for policy-making decisions, advised by specialists and experts,)into what he calls "hyper-democracy" in which the nation's decisions are "born in the cafe". Everyone, however uninformed or ill-qualified, is called upon to "vote," in one way or another, on everything from fluoridation to which types of airplane our Air Force should use. "The cafe" he feared is on the way out, replaced in America by the television screen, kept illuminated "free" by the grace of product-makers. But the larger tendency, to ask increasingly less-informed people to decide between increasingly vague, complicated and confusing alternatives, remains.

Boredom is another problem, in the attitude-creation arena of television, which deserves discussion. With the volume and stridency of the bombardment to which each citizen is subjected in his consumer role, only the most violent voices and colors can now break through. As color television becomes more widespread, this blatancy will have reached its climax, unless the dangers are recognized.

Growing boredom with television is now being attacked with increased clanging and banging --- with increased motherly promises that if you buy and do this and that, you will be unbored like the others. See how happy they are with their new(coat, cosmetic, freezer, beverage, home, car)?

Days go slowly. But years (of opportunity) race dizzily by. We are becoming bored and immunized not only to hearing and seeing, but also to believing. Normal voices for years have warned of Russian scientific and educational progress, and of the dangers of losing Asia, Africa or the Middle East. Nothing less than Sputnik or outright war is piercing enough to break through. Then we put our finger in the biggest hole in the dike, but can't hear the ominous trickle from other holes. Since each sponsor has his own TV program, since industrialists should not be expected to be historians or social scientists, and since the networks have seen no need for such control by them, where is there an ear assigned to listening for failing pulses and weak voices calling for help? As the power of their media becomes increasingly recognized, I believe TV networks, at least, must begin to assume more of such responsibility. For no one else is in as pivotal a position as they, to assume it.

Exposure to floods of non-selective information, all at maximum stridency, whether selling cigarettes or cosmetics, does two things. It narcotizes and creates an inattentive boredom which is dangerous to democracy. And it leaves no "higher-keying" or distinctive format for real emergencies or the vitally necessary. Hearing Wolf! Wolf! cried day in and day out, how is the viewer and listener to recognize or concentrate on those things which may seal his fate?

It would seem that one solution must be to reset our "sales tone" at a lower key, so the SOS can be heard when necessary, and so we can hear the groans and birth pains which herald a new world, in which we must play a new role.

In the early days of wireless in this country, commercial broadcasters and emergency service radio operators finally had to appeal to the federal government to clear up the garbling, which was becoming dangerous. A similar garbling, not in frequencies but in programming , this time, would seem to be prevailing today. Only if adequate "planning" by those responsible for TV operation (the stations and networks) is not forthcoming promptly should federal regulation be called upon. Unfortunately the term "planning" has come to have subversive implications, as if it threatened, instead of sometimes protecting, freedoms. This attitude may well be fatal if industrial messages alone are not to be allowed to fill every hole which the mass media can create in the American mind.

Such a reorientation, when and if undertaken, should not be blamed for a decrease in TV viewership. For I believe the signs of the times indicate that this is almost inevitably bound to decline anyway. It appears that considerable numbers of people are already beginning to turn to educational television and radio stations, FM "good music and drama" stations, Hi Fi and other such sources of programs, from a sense of boredom and confusion which results from sheer commercial super-saturation. It would seem that no better time could be found for the television industry seriously to take the lead in developing more sound attitudes towards use of their media

However, let us return to the listing and brief examination of those undesirable attitudes in the American public which seem to be promoted by the mass media.

A serious one among these many is the sense of frustration, which so many citizens seem to have. They are concerned. They are informed (within the limitations earlier discussed). But events are unaffected. The situation gets worse. The decadence of our world leadership becomes more of a permanent possibility.

We have come to confuse "knowing about things" with "doing something." By the time we are urged to do several hundred things a day, and view them on television, there is little time actually to do any of them. But we do worry about them, because we or someone should do something about scores of these problems, if our "drifting" is not to continue. This is one type of frustration.

Another has been implied earlier: that which results from being perpetually shown, and urged to buy, items which you cannot afford. What is the effect of such appeals on people's satisfaction with the life they must lead? Or on people insecure enough to steal what they see proffered so irresistibly?

Children who play the piano or do anything well are frustrated by being compared consciously or unconsciously, with the "pros" on TV. A pretty girl used to be admired, instead of compared, to her disadvantage, with Rita, Marilyn or a Petty girl.

Reality and irreality become confused. The cartoon mother assures her screaming child, at the circus, that they will rush home in time to see "I Love Lucy" on TV. But she can't help feeling frustrated about how well she is filling her Mother role, in view of the many family and disciplinary problems she encounters, in an age of television.

As a result of our frustrations we seek escape. In an age of hydrogen bombs, Sputniks, and periodic outbreaks of war around the globe, who wouldn't rather let the government and "the others" worry about all this? Who wouldn't rather be a child again ---- or at least be able to imagine you're a child, by "losing yourself" in TV entertainment, or comics, or drinking? But should television encourage such escapism instead of challenging it, at least more frequently than it now does? Should TV not invite viewers to question the callous indifference or even the modest pride with which they view new lethal weapons, designed for no purpose except destruction of our fellow men --- whether in enemy nations or innocent nations which may be caught in the middle? Should dehumanization be not only tolerated but sponsored by industry-financed programming? How far can we go in cultivating insensibility before Americans can't tell the difference, anyway, between living in freedom and living in slavery?

Should the warnings which the mass media can provide be hidden amidst the ads? Should they be mixed with the "mass culture," i.e. entertainment, so that like it, they will be thrown away like an empty paper sack, once the listener "knows about" them? Or, since someone should have some responsibility for effects on survival and humanity, could a full-stop not sometimes be afforded, in which ways of implementing these concerns can be thoughtfully discussed? Of course the stations and networks have no people qualified to do this. But the U. S. and its universities and other agencies have. It TV has enough money to ferret out the best "show talent," is it not equal to the task of ferreting out the best minds of our nation and age for this task?

Our attitude towards power is another attitude which might give a Rip Van Winkle some serious concerns. In the last ten years America has become power-happy and power-wasteful. This is an age when three quarters of the people of the earth lack power with which to develop their nations. Many have neither soap nor food.

Our cars are several times as powerful as transportation purposes require, and many times as wasteful of tires, steel and gasoline. They have to be to pass on curves other cars, equally over-powered, in a race that means death to nearly 50,000 people each year.

Homes, to be comfortable, are switched automatically from air-conditioning to heating within a tolerance of two degrees. Millions of kilowatts of light are thrown skyward in what, to many foreign visitors, seems an effort to paint the evening skies a garish hue. Telephones and other appliances appear in every room, so mother may be relieved of work, and have plenty of time to visit the psychiatrist to get advice on how to keep from going mad because of all the time she now has on her hands.

As individuals, as well as as a nation, we like power for lavish power's sake. When we controlled atomic power, we hoarded it. Yet power over "the others," which we have never learned to use modestly, is one of the most written about and sung about of all the "gifts" promised us in the mass media: by gasolines, cars, shaving lotions, cosmetics, paper back "success" books, and drugs. Is unlimited power safe in any hands, however irresponsible and unskilled they may be?

Some writers have suggested that the U. S., as an economic nation, is "female-oriented." What is the attitude promoted regarding women by the mass media? The appeal to the woman in the family as the spender is obvious in automobile body designs, interiors, and more recently exterior colors. The American car, as compared to the airplane, has changed hardly at all in its motor and transmission designs during the past twenty years. Status quo has been good enough for the important parts. Appearance and gadgets are what count. This tendency is apparent in super-market design, and product-packaging, as well.

I would doubt, however, if any of these were serious enough considerations to justify concern.

Slightly more serious is the extent to which artists, whose only recourse for patronage is usually to women, must become feminine in their appeals. As a result, it begins to appear to men that artists themselves are effeminate, prissy and otherwise suspect. This does affect our national concept of the importance of art and the artist to a culture. Unfortunately this stereotype of the artist, as described earlier, is the one generally conveyed on television and the mass media; greater responsibility could help correct it.

The most serious aspect of this problem, however, is the extent to which the physically lush female has become a universal siren and common denominator in promoting any product, from cigarettes to religion. The message seems to be "a pretty girl can do no wrong"/ as someone has said. Pretty girls have become the symbol of charm, loveliness, patience, excitement and popularity.

And, as we look more carefully, we find that the most attractive of these lovely girls is the one "who's been around." She knows how to "use men." She's "pretty cute" in the use of tactics that, in others' hands, would be considered only fiendish. As in the problem of attitudes toward the law, behavior and acts are no longer judged objectively as right or wrong. If you're a pretty girl, very nearly anything goes. No wonder teachers and professors, and later on, husbands, have problems with attractive girls and women. For if you're unwilling to be wound around a pretty girl's finger, you're certainly not a patriotic "mass man."

Love and sex, of course, permeate all advertising basically, particularly on television. Not (usually) the kind of love that is built on patience, understanding and trust, however. This is a magic, "soul-splitting" bolt, that many young people go all through life without finding, and therefore frustrated. Love is generally idealized and simplified (perfume can "cause" it, for instance) in a sometimes fatally misleading way. Many young adolescents commit suicide when they are disappointed in their search for this "mass-media" type of love.

This picture of love tells young people how to feel and how to win. Are the writers and interpreters of the popular music and popular drama which teach the meaning of love the best authorities on the subject? With teen-agers glued to the radio and TV many hours a week, at a time when their whole sense of values, their personality patterns, are being formed, are the originators of the messages to which these young people turn for guidance, not concerned with any serious obligations in this area? Or qualified to teach good value patterns? Is the exploitative procedure now used, designed by adults who are not specialists in psychology or morality, the ones the media can turn freely loose on children's minds? I think this is a serious question at a time in an adolescent's life when "other -directedness" and example are more powerfully effective than at any other age.

The attitudes of television towards privacy and human dignity are also very interesting. We have come to have an interesting double-standard in this country. If an enterprising amateur photographer or "Peeping Tom" is caught outside a dormitory or home he goes to jail. But if you have a sponsor, it's quite all right to transform millions of viewers into "Peeping Toms" and eavesdroppers who probe the most intimate details of our fellow-countrymen's lives.

It is very well to say "if the fools want to, let them; what affair is it of ours?" Outside television "fools who want to" are generally jailed for indecent exposure. I wonder if more national harm results from the latter than from the former?

Is the lesson being taught not really that, if you're willing to pay for it, instead of steal it, a person's privacy may be violated? Or is it that if you let enough people "in on it," this makes it "ok"? This writer finds both somewhat brutalizing.

I believe the denigration of private human dignity is a disservice, regardless of how popular the program is. I can think of hundreds of other indecent spectacles which would draw crowds, too. But I do not believe they should be on television.

One of the types of programs which most brutally belittles human dignity (in case you believed that I had reference only to "This Is Your Life," "Strike it Rich," "Truth or Consequences," or even "Person to Person") is the soap opera. Wholesale trivialization of emotion, and the exploitation of idle and sometimes neurotic listeners by the monotonous massaging of the tear and endocrine glands, might be acceptable if done under the supervision of responsible psychologists and doctors. Flagrantly practiced by salesmen, with broad "laissez-faire" authorization from wireless mass media licensees, is another thing.

Many respondents, questioned as to what they get out of soap operas, reply "lessons in living," or "suggestions how to meet problems." How qualified are the writers and producers to teach lessons in good living? People can demonstrate crime or prostitution techniques also, and other people would undoubtedly "learn" from them. But are we to allow people with no qualifications to "teach" in this way, on the most powerful mass media in our nation, even if they deny that they are teaching, or deny any responsibility for possible conclusions which might be drawn from their examples?

This brings me to an attitude on the part of broadcasters with which I would like to take particular issue: the statement that "we give the people what they want."

In sports, far more people hunt and fish than box, play or watch football, baseball or basketball. We still get the latter. Broadcasting does select what it gives; it serves the interests which are easiest and most profitable to serve. "Spectatoritis," however fatal it may be to democracy, is easier for these media to handle. So whether the people want it or not, they get it. If it is poured on them steadily, like smog, they even come to accept it. They are then tallied up as getting what they want.

Serial drama, crossword puzzles, comics, quiz shows, and scores of other things are not what the people "wanted." They are techniques, formats and media that were manufactured in New York and Hollywood --- for sale. They did not grow from the roots of America. They are accepted as a result of promotion, of being kept available to the people over long periods at favorable times for their kind of program, and because they make money. Comparable promotion and effort would put over programs with higher values as well. Broadcasting has developed many interests and formats which never existed before. The people will like what they are encouraged or forced to like. A serious effort by the media to reveal an expectation that people whose ballot governs one of the greatest nations in the world should also be interested in serious things --- that the Networks think these are some of their most important offerings --- would go far in promoting programs of more positive value to America and the world.

"The people" may be willing to accept any idiocy if it is accepted (or rather not positively rejected) by enough people. But to use this sort of a yardstick for responsible service would seem to neglect certain things for which our way of life is supposed to stand.

As a result of present market research procedures which decide what to do next year on the basis of studies of what the people liked last year (it takes time to assemble and digest the results, and next year's programs are planned well in advance), programs to meet this year's needs or even "wants" of the public are unlikely to be tried. They too often have the choice only of selecting which of last year's successes bore them least, not a choice between new, forward-looking, or original ideas and programs. In an age when everything else is future-oriented, broadcast programs are based largely on formulas that proved safe last year. If people liked Westerns last year, you'll get more still next year.

And thus revamped, after desperately seeking any new recipes that "just might" work, we plod on. Each year brings the same mush: strained, homogenized, reassuring, undisturbing. The bland not only lead but follow the bland. The need for knowledge, understanding and a new respect for intellectualism deserves better. The radio and TV industries, which have by this technique condemned themselves to the status quo both in economic system and program ideas, also deserve better.

Once market research outlines the strategy, the entire resources of sponsors, advertising agencies, and networks and stations, are put at their disposal. The people, the network's "loyal following," are not consulted. Obstacles are swept aside, including protests on behalf of privacy, decency, habit-formation, or effects on children.

It is reported that one marketing expert, foiled in his attempt to sell more tea in the U. S., has found the answer: Americans are confused about the Boston Tea Party. He therefore has suggested that this episode in our children's U. S. history books might well be rewritten --- to make clear that it was the British, not the tea, which the Colonists detested. It is not beyond the power of advertising pressures to bring about whatever such adjustments are necessary in any of our attitudes, if sales are at stake.

In the already long list of negative attitudes and lessons found in television particularly, among the mass media, we come to some of those basically emotional concerns about which psychiatrists, particularly, are raising questions.

If each industrial user is responsible only for his program, and wants it, above all others, to have sales impact; and if networks and stations are only vehicles or delivery boys, who say, or seem to indicate, that they have no great obligation for the psychiatric and value judgement effects of these programs, and few or no specialists in these areas, who is to be responsible? The advertisers are organized. The networks are huge organizations. Only the listener has no voice in these decisions. He takes this programming as inevitable: like rain and taxes. He does not know it can be changed. Nor would he know how, if asked. Someone must speak up.

Someone has. Based, as stated before, on increasingly disturbing and voluminous records of mental illness, criminal and divorce records, problem-children and delinquency, some challenges and questions have been raised. Being intellectuals, the askers of these questions are usually labelled "cranks" by mass media operators who find them disturbing as hornets. Fortunately for themselves mass media controllers can control whether or not such people are to be "heard" with any chance of reaching a significant audience, but this is unfortunate for democracy.

I believe a fair and frank invitation for a ventilation of the problems such men raise would be in the immediate public interest and, in the long run, in the interest of the media themselves, if they are to command respect as well as remain free.

Who takes care that the impact or bite of a murder mystery, for example, isn't too viscera-twisting for the good of many in the audience? How do we know that its harmful effects may not be greater than those of many drugs and narcotics we do control? How many blood-vessels, emotions, sensitivities and minds are being adversely affected or weakened by such programs? How much of a wringing do we have the right to give people's visceras before it can be considered sadism on a national scale? Let's not reply with pat answers, based on vague assumptions. Let's find out, as responsibly as scientific tools and procedures allow us, objectively, as if we had the national interest at heart.

With mental illness becoming a serious problem among the young as well as the old, let's not exchange only easy questions and answers in this area. We have heard that programs of violence, or programs which teach crime techniques have no "takers" except among disturbed or insecure children. How about the host of (perhaps largely adult) programs that create disturbed or insecure children? Not any one program but the whole philosophy of programming requires honest examination.

Is the United States not respectful of the UN and UNESCO-sponsored Declaration of the Rights of the Child (The Declaration of Geneva) which states, in part: "The child must be cared for with due respect for the family as an entity --- must be given ... means... for its development materially, morally and spiritually --- must be protected against every form of exploitation"? How does television's use of the child to get him to "give his parents a hard time" unless they buy a certain brand --- or a myriad other well known TV program techniques, square with this? How does our open defiance of the most elemental declarations of humanity make us appear before the rest of the world? Do we really love children, or only pay lip service to them?

We could, by honesty and open discussion, gradually get that little discussion which television can't prevent, on a more enlightened and less hysterical plane. Some parents condemn television because their children don't read so much. Read what? Comics? Let us be intelligent. Let us remind parents that they, not TV, are in the last analysis responsible for how much TV their children watch, and what programs they watch. Perhaps this is a starting-point for a new approach which will enable networks and stations to get parents and children to patronize more good and fewer poor programs, if they (the networks, principally) really want to make such an improvement.

Prison records show that some criminals feel that imprisonment in prison is more endurable than conformism and imprisonment in an "other-directed" society, seemingly full of contradictions, and contradictory urgings which confuse them. How much bombardment "radiation" can even those of us who are "normal" endure, with many of the messages not even meant for us? Hitting men with ads for ladies cosmetics, or the man who has just bought a new car with an ad which in essence says he was a fool to buy that one? How do you escape such things without developing inattention to such a high degree that we miss what we should hear?

Gun powder, atomic developments, medicine --- all have indicated that great care and responsibility must be developed in their users and distributors. Is the socially narcotizing potential of TV (which is used as a narcotic in many psychiatric clinics) not sufficient to call for responsible concern and control? Do we have the right to shout at people, and violate every standard of courtesy in their homes, simply because we come to them over public airways instead of public highways? Is electronic "assault" not becoming more of a menace than "personal assault" to some helpless people?

The effect of "example" is strong. How do "TV people" behave --- in programs as well as during commercials? That is the lesson which many are learning. It affects them more than what they learn at school. Yet let our schools become this irresponsible!

These then are some of the areas in which I believe television has abdicated, or never fulfilled, its responsibility as an instrument which, in its effects, is public.

If I would criticize, I would also suggest. I would like respectfully to suggest some areas in which television might provide useful services in programming. These supplement the suggestions made and implied earlier, in the problem-by-problem listing.

While we have been enjoying prosperity, a quiet change has come over our nation. We have, as we have stated, become a have-not nation in many resources. In addition to the material resources we have depleted, I believe we have deadened and annihilated many moral and spiritual ones. Our political apathy has become alarming. Our educational progress, and respect for intellectual efforts, qualities and freedoms have deteriorated dangerously. Nations who looked to us eagerly for friendship ten years ago have turned away in dismay: snubbed, ignored, rebuked or scolded -- when all they asked was understanding. In many respects we are no longer the same nation we were ten or twenty years ago.

I believe the people should be told this soberly, calmly, firmly. It can not be done in any one program. It will require continuing humility and sustained effort, not restricted to a few programs.

I believe that armed force has lost its force as an instrument of national and world policy. Who would wish even to win an atomic war? Who believes that another war will bring peace? The realm of ideas is now the one in which nations must compete.

I believe our age of greatest leadership was not when we rattled sabres most loudly, but when we were rich in ideas, and in support of the fulfillment of the individual, wherever men were found. I believe it was not Caesar's conquests that made Rome strong, but the desire she instilled in the world of that day to emulate her --- even to become Roman citizens.

Just as I believe, with James Warburg, that we can survive only by learning to live humbly in and with a world that has passed, perhaps forever, out of our domination and control, so I believe we must get out of military uniform and posture if we would exert leadership in a world hungry for peace. We must also get out of only salesman's habits and garb in our mass media, if we would have equivalent effects at home.

I believe mass media, particularly TV, created an atmosphere in which McCarthyism could flourish ---- ignoring the deepest motivations of human decency, and impatience with "due process of law." I believe it could equally create an atmosphere of world maturity which could "feed back" to our national leadership. For, in this age of mass media, I believe this feed-back from TV viewers, and other consumers of mass media ideas, has taken over, whether it wished to or not, part of the guidance and decision function that used to be exerted only through the ballot. Our "ballot," in effect, is cast several times each week: in every item we vote for by buying it; by every indecent act we tolerate without protesting or preventing it.

The knowledge we all need is readily available. It only needs to be organized and distributed. This can be done only if those really responsible for television and radio, its owners and operators, re-seize their social and public responsibilities for enlightenment and education as well as entertainment. No good citizen, or mass media operator, has the right to give up simply because the task may be difficult and costly. Loss of our liberties would be more so.

I believe people should be urged by the mass media to listen to people they don't agree with, as a citizen responsibility -- so each man may hear from others than his "fans", and so each may know what many others are being told, and what they believe. Woodrow Wilson observed, in 1908: "The wisest thing to do with a fool is to encourage him to hire a hall ---." I believe we have repressed examination of the nature of the enemy, and self-examination of our own system, far too much.

By keeping to a minimum discussion of those things which might arouse or antagonize, we have also kept to a minimum the striking of sparks, from the minds of Americans, which would be most useful today. Wilson also said: "I not only use all brains I have, but all I can borrow."

Controversy and free discussion, in responsibly controlled form, should be encouraged, not repressed. What should we have discussion about? About many of the things earlier mentioned, from the state of our natural resources, to the fairness of our tariff laws. By such discussion we shall not only discover whether television and radio are bigger than any single economic pressure group in the U. S., but also their integrity, their maturity, and the value they put on the human beings who give them hours of loyal following.

Does the broadcasting industry really feel that it could not survive honest self-examination and self-explanation? Do people and institutions become weaker, or stronger, under responsible criticism? Democracy must each year be self-correcting to meet new strains. Is this any less true of broadcasting? It is a necessary service to this nation, the world and humanity, as well as to our economy. Can it serve only one master? Has it really no faith in the loyalty of viewers and listeners, and their ability and willingness to respond to higher and nobler motives, as well as they respond to low motives when only the latter predominate or are shown them?

Could the Code of the industry not really be openly published and discussed, to enable millions of minds to contribute to its enrichment, refinement, and enforcement, guided by responsible advisors --- medical, educational, and others? Or is the broadcasting code to be above such criticism, hidden as if it were a shameful document, to be praised only to the ignorant?

What should we have free discussion about? About segregation and automobile design, and highway funds as compared to school funds. About fair advertising standards and the relative merits of exaggeration and modest honesty in commercials. About problems of "other-directedness" and juvenile delinquency and what is happening to America's sense of values. This would be mature programming. It would demonstrate a courage that would rally the support of many who now attack.

What should we discuss? Russian relations, for example. Are we not obligated, as a great nation, to seize every opportunity to discuss every proposal, piecemeal if necessary, which might bring a gradual relaxation of tension? Are there new approaches which might be used? Should we internationalize (or put under U.N. control) the Panama Canal as an example for Suez? What do we have to lose in an age where one bomb could disable it anyway, and it's already too narrow for our super-carriers?

Do we want universal disarmament and world peace? Then let us think and talk this out. Can this be had without world law? To what extent would or could we give up our national sovereignty for world policing and world government? States rights problems of our own U. S. should provide some clues and useful experiences.

How unreasonable is India? Does our own early history and "touchiness" as a nation have some useful analogies to offer?

How harmful to world peace have unilateral programs of the U. S., outside the U. N., really been? How about our interventions in Greece, China, Turkey? How about our economic and military aid programs? How about our other regional pacts? What are they? Do all except Americans have the right to know about them?

In an age of the emergence of the colored peoples, what kind of an example is given the world by two white giants threatening each other, and engaging in an arms race? How useful, or fatal, will be the effects of our continuing emphasis on close ties only with the "white nations" of Europe, and frequent support of their colonial policies over colored races?

How unreasonable were the requests made by Morocco, or Algeria, of France? A free press? Freedom of Assembly? A freely elected government? What else? What is the problem?

When the nation which hopes to be the world's leader must be world-minded, how much of what television offers is meeting this need? I am not talking about discussion on discussion programs only on Sunday afternoon. Such gestures do not even adequately keep the tradition alive. We should discuss, not superficially or just to "give an impression," but because such knowledge can save us from fatal mistakes. To what extent was our ignorance of China and Asia responsible for losing China to Communism? Can we learn all we need to know about such things in discussion and news programs only?

For a people so generous in world relief as individuals (through CARE, the Red Cross etc), why are we such tightwads when we do it through our government? What would happen if we administered relief on the basis of need alone? Or through the U. N.?

What would be the results of an energetic, rather than half-hearted, People-to-People program (not just a campaign) through our mass media, sparked by TV and our networks, on a gigantic scale? If we can't start with Russia, let's start with others. In an age of growing world mass media control of attitudes, the relations of peoples can be more important than the relations of governments .

What interests (can we not discuss them?) cause us to support in the Arab lands some of the most cruel native rulers on earth?

What about Egypt? And Israel? To what extent did our helping Egypt alienate France, our helping England and France alienate Egypt, our helping the Arabs alienate Israel, our helping Israel alienate the Arabs, etc? Is such a self-reversing policy tenable? Our foreign policy is probably the one thing most Americans know least about, of all our responsibilities to the world. Let's discuss it.

The basic aspects of both domestic and foreign policy could be made understandable by television and radio, by full and free debate by qualified authorities.

We need to become informed participants, not just "passengers" in the most dynamic awakening the human race has so far witnessed. We need to provide examples and ideas, more than arms or threats.

We still have the resources and tradition to build the finest culture, and provide the finest leadership, that the world has seen. We've squandered much of our heritage in selfish and materialistic ways. The world knows this. By the maturity of our behavior from now on we can win back their confidence, and provide an island of stability, faith and confidence in a shrinking and shaking world.

In an age of mass media, to whom do we turn, if not to the mass media? Will they not lose more than all the rest of us if freedom is lost?

To those who state that TV and radio have, and should have, no policy-making role in our nation, I would say that, however unconsciously and unintentionally this role has been exercised, it has been played, even if it is denied. Radio and TV are and have been taste-makers and attitude-makers. By allowing commerce as a motive to permeate virtually all programming, by not having exercised careful editorial responsibility --- surrendering it piece-meal, to each sponsor separately, so it is never seen as a whole --- radio and television have exercised and continue to exercise negative policy-making influences on both our leaders and our citizens.

I believe broadcasters must take a new look at the extent to which the absence of control by them has meant "no control," and the extent, claimed in this statement, that this vacuum, left by a laissez-faire government agency, has been filled --- though not as responsibly or democratically as we would wish.

This balance can be redressed by giving responsible authorities in the social, political, behavioral and natural sciences, as well as responsible educators and civic leaders at least an equal role with industry in analyzing what tastes and attitudes it is safe to spread or "teach" by television and radio.

We have no quarrel with the use of these media to tell consumers about the availability and excellence of the products now advertised. Advertising is a useful service, to which the free economy and standard of living of the U. S. owes much. We would, however, hope, that important types of emphasis be saved for crucial issues, rather than squandered promiscuously in "Wolf! Wolf!" fashion principally for product purchase urging. The ability to "skip" such appeals in the printed media is vastly different from that which applies to television.

We have no quarrel with entertainment as one valid role for TV and radio. In all ages of man, entertainment has filled an important need and role. We would only quarrel with making entertainment so much more readily available, in prime times, that it becomes almost the sole --- or even the principal --- role of television and radio in an age of world crisis. Neither is this to deny that U. S. television has done a few fine things. It is precisely because it has proved its potential that we ask for far more.

Before proceeding with television, many nations imposed a "freeze" during which profound investigation was carried out into the likely political, social, moral and spiritual consequences which would result from many of the possible alternative systems which might be adopted. It was apparent that television would have many effects and powers which radio did not have. Therefore, to turn television over to the same operators who had provided radio service, with no additional investigation or controls, was unthinkable.

Only in the United States was such an investigation deemed "unnecessary." The "freeze" imposed in the U. S. was, typically, essentially a frequency examination and allocation freeze. It was consistent with the philosophy that engineers and transmitters must be licensed, but that the creators of the service shall not be harassed by any effective national restraints or even coordination at the program level. Smug laissez-faire, and continuance of the status quo, were good enough for the nation whose model the rest of the world was invited to follow.

One of the few positive steps taken by the FCC during this critical period was reservation of certain frequencies for educational television. Even here the FCC now periodically warns education that if it doesn't move faster (as if education were not already harassed by enough problems) frequencies will be withdrawn for this public service and turned over for more of the type of service we now "enjoy." The Commission is prodded periodically, in this attitude, by trade organs of the industry. Unless educational radio and TV are allowed to develop along lines which do insist on social responsibility in programmers, as they have begun, even this alternative service, however small it still is, will be lost. I feel we could ill afford such a loss.

In England the Commission charged with this investigation, the Beveridge Commission, was given power, resources and prestige equivalent to that given to the Hoover Commission in the U. S. The most careful consideration was given to already observable tendencies of television by the best authorities available: doctors, psychologists, educators, economists, political and social scientists, and others. Many of these men visited the U. S. and carefully studied the American system at work. In most cases, as can be found in the Beveridge Commission reports available in many U. S. libraries, they went away shaking their heads over concerns we seemed to pay no attention to. Mental health effects were, and have continued to be, among the most important problems to be kept in mind by Britain, whose prestige, resources and strengths had been deeply sapped by a sobering war. No guesswork or wasteful squandering of intellectual resources could be afforded in the most powerful of the new electronic media. Out of the Beveridge Commission's objective and careful analysis (discussed at length in Parliament) came a challenge to the BBC monopoly in television, and the co-existence of commercial and non-commercial television, though in radio no commercial system was created.

In Canada a Royal Commission was created to examine similar problems. Should Canada's TV service become commercial? How was Canada to meet the problem of its geographical proximity to the U. S.? For eighty percent of Canada's population lives close enough to the U. S. to turn to U. S. stations and programs if Canadian programs are not adequately responsive to Canadian needs and tastes.

Quoting from the report of this Commission (known as the Fowler Commission, after its Chairman, R. M. Fowler, one of the keenest minds in Canada): "The natural pressures are against us --- The forces of economics are against us too --- But this is one we had better work at, for it is really important if we are to keep a Canadian identity and culture; if there is, in fact, to be a Canadian force in the world. And that may be important to many people---both inside and outside Canada."

Is such a self-appraisal not in order in the U. S., by the TV industry itself, at least? Or is "fait-accompli-ism" once again to prevail, regardless of what it may do to America's potential for world leadership and its ultimate survival?

Are these unreasonable questions to ask in a nation founded on Christian principles?---Is this too much to ask in a nation allegedly founded to promote full development of the potential of every individual precisely because his informed participation is essential to democracy's dynamism and survival?

After a decade of Roman Holiday, giving the people "what they want": entertainment without limit, is it not time to wake up and behave as a mature nation should --- rather than like a nation of luxury-oriented product-worshiping spoiled children? Our dignity, power and prestige as a nation are at stake. "Education" can neither do it alone, nor in the face of daily contradictions by television and radio of those lessons and senses of values which must be practiced if we are to survive. A "mobilization" in the mass media is called for on a scale never before seen.

Is this too much to ask in the greatest nation in the world? This question is asked humbly but urgently. What will be the answer this time?

H. J. Skornia
December, 1957

evaluation of Mr. Dulles is that he is first of all a rather intelligent and honest man, but he is not a very wise man. For example, his handling of Aswam Dam situation. Further, from certain private information, I conclude that he is indeed a very poor administrator. This has obviously not helped the world situation very much. I believe this at least as strongly as you do, but on very different ground, that he has been relatively ineffective as Secretary of State. If the gaining of small advantages by your side over our side is what you wish, then Mr. Dulles has certainly been a great help to you. Indeed, one of the major behavior patterns of both contenders in the cold war to this date is their almost exclusive attention to attempting to gain advantage one over the other with the result that each such relative apparent gain has actually produced damage to everybody.

As to President Eisenhower, he is an honorable person who is an ex-general. I believe that his settling of the Korean War on that particular basis was done largely for political motives, and that if we had taken all of Korea as General Mac Arthur had recommended, not only the U.S., but the whole world would be a great deal better off. Although his first term was probably a very good thing for the United States, since he gave the Republican administration some chance of showing what it could do, his second term has been, in my opinion, almost a disaster, not only for ourselves, but for your native land and all the other countries of the world.

I might insert parenthetically, that I prefered the egghead and still prefer him. The apparent, almost total, occupation of this administration with what is known as a balanced budget is not very appropriate at this stage in world history.

The President's repeated statement that he is willing to meet with you anywhere, at any time, but only if there was a reasonable chance of success, I completely agree with. However, I am very curious as to what he means by reasonable. For myself, I would say that if such a meeting would decrease the probability of the destruction of the human race by as much as even a hundredth of a percent, this is a "reasonable" chance. I imagine that you, a human being, must feel enormous frustration in your inability to establish contact in a reasonable way with the present administration. I know that one of the reasons why some of our people are so wary of having a meeting with you is their belief that you will lie, and will not carry out your treatly obligations. Whether or not this is true, seems to me to be irrelevant, since a man's beliefs determine his actions. I am sure that the President and Mr. Dulles also feel somewhat frustrated too. I suspect, also, they are terrified of the diplomatic and propagandistic skills of the "Russian Bear." In fact, in some ways they behave like people with deep inferiority complexes; perhaps they act even as though they feel that you will steal the fillings out of their back teeth. A similar inferiority complex seems to possess the Russian leadership. As an example, a high energy accelerator was built in Russia which is larger than has been in construction in any part of the world. The information that such an enterprise was under way was not released for many years, even though it could not have any security significance whatsoever. At least in the United States and Britian and other countries we talked of our machine construction and don't mind too much even if we have a few failures. Similar comments might be made in relation to the Sputnik and our own efforts and failuresin this corresponding field.

I must say that I am personally very happy that you successfully launched the first artificial earth satellite as it may enable you to overcome this apparent complex. Indeed, if one considers the enormous technical, scientific and social advances that have taken place in Russia in the last forty years, advances that have taken place in spite of the Hitlerite invasion, of Stalin, and of the enormously lower level at which you started, the Russian Government and the Russian people have nothing to be ashamed of whatsoever, but have much to be proud of. I can only hope that these successes will enable you to overcome your complex rapidly.

I should like to appeal to you Mr. Kruschev (you must be intelligent and are probably wiser than some of our leaders) not to push so hard for small advantages against which we will almost certainly react violently, and possibly use force. The present Berlin crisis, although not one of the smallest, could easily be such an event. The Western powers feel, and I must say I agree with them on this, that we cannot leave Berlin under the threat of an ultimatum and must use force to maintain our position there. Why hurry? After all, Mr. Kruschev there will be a new administration in this country in less than two years, and I hope another one four years after that, etc. When one consider the long future available to us if only we don't blow the world to peices, I think you must agree that a delay of a few months, ayear, ten years, are not important. After all, human beings may even have, given the chance, the opportunity to occupy peacefully not only this planet and some of the other solar systems around the sun, but perhaps many other solar systems not yet inhabited by other intelligent races. At this time, no man has the knowledge or the wisdon to foresee what the future will bring. We can only dimly anticipate possible events and techniques that may be used and at the moment it seems that the most probable of these events is the utter annihilation of the human race or its reduction to such a state of savagry that it may never have another chance.

I appeal to you because I believe that a sincere man could indeed act as you have in both the revolts in Berlin and in Hungary, simply because you believe so strongly that what you call the communist form must triumph and thus feel that not to do so would weaken your position in the world so as to defeat what you apparently believe will be the ultimate triumph of communism.

Another terrible danger confronting the world is the relative ease with which maniacs at least have in the past been able to obtain control of powerful nations; such people may indeed push the panic button and everything will be lost.

In viewof the apparently tragic failure of conventional diplomacy, and even of your somewhat less conventional approach, I believe that a rank amateur at the business such as myself might be able to produce some small change in this situation. Specifically, I have in mind the organization of an operation similar to the IGY but devoted to the far more important problem of establishing, insofar as we are able within our own human natures, ways of controlling the maniacs and the like. This body would also study the racial, religious, political, and social differences between the nations, or at least make a start in this direction so that we would know, much more clearly than we now do, exactly where the various protaganists and neutralist stand. Such an organization must certainly invite representative of the Pope who, indeed, has influence in certain places, the social scientists, psychiatrists, psychologists, physical and biological scientists, doctors, philosophers, historians, and perhaps even poets, but surely not diplomats, at least not in the initial stages. I believe that these people must be selected first with respect to their intelligence, honesty, character, and dedication to humanity, and in addition they should have great intestinal fortitude for what they may face when they return to their native lands if they state truthfully what they may have come to believe. Each nation should select its personnel without restriction as to whom and how many they send. Even dissident groups should be admitted, if they can get there. These people must be from all lands, of all races and religions. They must be essentially uninstructed as to what they will discuss, how they will approach problems, and should surely be given free access if this is possible to all the nations of the world in order to study the social problems of the world. It would also be desirable if reports of agreements and disagreements were published in all nations and all languages. Such an organization could be set up under the auspices of the United Nations or possibly under a neutralist nation such as India.

I am writing this to you as an American citizen to the leader of a most powerful nation, which is opposing much of what our nation desires, and because I doubt that any letter sent to our administration by me would receive much attention or consideration. For myself, in writing this long letter to you, I have released some of my inner tension by the knowledge that I have done what I could. The most that I may reasonably hope for is that this communication may raise slightly the probability that there will be future generations to solve their problems.

Although we must pay due consideration to the lessons of history, we must not allow the dead hands of the past, of Christ, Mohammed and Budha of Washington and Jefferson; of Marx and Lenin, to bo becloud our thinking and emotions that we are not able to solve the problems of today which are so much more difficult than theirs. I also hope no one will Mac Carthyise this message.

I wish to thank you in advance for whatever consideration you may give this missive of mine.

Sincerely,

Hartland S. Snyder
Senior Scientist
Brookhaven National Laboratory

Skreen, Chet

January 22, 1958

Dear Mr. Skreen:

Thank you for your letter.

Your idea for a television show may perhaps have merit, but I am sorry to say that the pressure of my own present broadcasting schedule prevents me from taking an interest in any additional programs.

If you care to pursue your idea further with the network, I suggest that you contact Mr. Irving Gitlin, Director of Public Affairs for CBS.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Chet Skreen
1827 Monterey Drive
Renton, Washington

mcc

The Seattle Times

SEATTLE 11, WASHINGTON

FAIRVIEW AVENUE NORTH AND JOHN STREET
TELEPHONE MAIN 0300

December 31, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow

C. B. S.-Television

New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

You unquestionably don't recall me but at the time of your return from Korea in 1953, I was one of a group of newspaper reporters who interviewed you when you were hospitalized briefly at Renton Hospital, south of Seattle. I am a feature writer on The Seattle Times.

My reason for writing you on this occasion is to solicit your advice about an idea I have which I think could be turned into a first-rate television program.

According to most industry spokesmen, program ideas are distinctly in short supply in the medium. My idea, I feel, would provide a highly literate program (a la Murrow-Friendly productions) and similarly have a widespread appeal. It also could be produced at a relatively low budget as costs are considered in television.

Would you be so kind as to inform me by return mail on the customary procedure to follow in submitting a program idea to the networks and/or ad agencies for consideration?

Also in this connection, I would appreciate knowing:

1--If accepted as the basis for a series, what remuneration might be expected?

2--Would there be any possibility of my personally becoming associated with the program in an advisory or production capacity?

3--Is there any assurance that an idea, once submitted, wouldn't be pirated for someone else's benefit?

The Seattle Times

SEATTLE 11, WASHINGTON

FAIRVIEW AVENUE NORTH AND JOHN STREET
TELEPHONE MAIN 0300

Before closing, I would like to say how much your Marian Anderson report was enjoyed here last night. To my mind this was, by all odds, the finest television program of the year. It will be a long time before America has an ambassador of good will who can match the stature and quiet dignity of the incomparable Miss Anderson. Keep up the brilliant programming.

Thanks for whatever assistance you may see fit to offer in this matter and with kindest regards, and in warm admiration, I remain,

Chet Skreen

Chet Skreen

1827 Monterey Drive

Renton, Wash.

Sloan, L B

THE NATIONAL CYCLOPEDIA OF AMERICAN BIOGRAPHY
THE FOREMOST BIOGRAPHICAL AUTHORITY OF THE UNITED STATES
101 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 3, N.Y.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

JAMES T. WHITE & CO.
PUBLISHERS
(Founded in 1873)

F

January 26, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Several weeks ago we sent to you a preliminary draft of your biography, which is scheduled for publication in the forthcoming volume of this Cyclopedia.

If our communication did not reach you, we would be happy to forward you a duplicate of the article. If, however, your reply has been delayed, will you please notify us at your early convenience when we may expect the return of the manuscript.

Sincerely yours,

L. B. Sloan

L. B. Sloan

LBS:dp

Sly, Ted

March 11, 1958

Dear Mr. Sly:

I have your letter of February 21st and regret very much to have to tell you that I am unable to grant you the interview you request since my crowded radio and television schedule makes it impossible for me to give interviews that are not directly connected with my programs.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Ted Sly
173 Linden Avenue
Middletown, New York

mcc

Ted Sly
173 Linden Ave.
Middletown, New York

interview

February 21, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Ave.
N.Y. C. 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I have a symbol which I believe can be used by ~~be~~the free world in its struggle against totalitarianism of both the left and right. I have had many letters (Including: Arthur Larson, Senator Monroney, "Bill"Mauldin and Herb Block of the Washington Post) all in favor. But nothing more happens!

The Nazis and Communists had and have symbols, yet all we had was "V" for Victory during the war, not ~~m~~ of great lasting meaning. We need something the people behind the Iron Curtain can quickly chalk on the walls and sidewalks to give the Reds a constant reminder that the people see thru their lies.

Unfortunately I am not an artist, so I can only describe. It is a combination of two letters (Which are translatable into most foreign languages) "C" and "L" meaning " Constitutional Liberty". It is drawn so that the "C" protects the "L", much more can be read into it which would take too much explanation for a letter. For instance Blue could be used in opposition to the Red of Communism and Black of Nazism, also blue is the color of the U.N.

Here is a chance to promote Democracy, instead of always having to be on the defensive. I need help. Iam a high school history teacher and, if you are interested, would appreciate an interview at your convenience to discuss this and several other measures which can be used to help defend our Democracy.

"C"

Yours truly,

Ted Sly

Smead, Elmer E.

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE
∴ Department of Government ∴
HANOVER · NEW HAMPSHIRE

August 6, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Thank you very much for your permission to quote you as described in my letter.

I appreciate very much your interest in the book. It is now in galley proof and, according to the contract, must be published during the "summer of 1958." The title is "Freedom of Speech by Radio and Television" and the publisher is Public Affairs Press, Washington, D. C. I have already written them about your interest in the book.

Sincerely yours,
Elmer E. Smead
Elmer E. Smead
Professor of Government

EES/BM

July 31, 1958

Professor Elmer E. Smead
Department of Government
Dartmouth College
Hanover, New Hampshire.

Dear Professor Smead:

Sorry about the lost letter. Of course you have my permission to use the quotation. I am sure the statement was accurate at the time it was written.

I should be grateful if you would tell me the name and publication date of your book, so that I may order a copy.

Sincerely yours,

EEM:skh

July 24, 1958

Professor Elmer E. Smead
Department of Government
Dartmouth College
Hanover
New Hampshire

Dear Professor Smead:

Thank you for your letter of July 23. I am very sorry you received no reply to your first letter. After looking vainly through our files for it, I can only think that it somehow went astray.

Mr. Murrow is away on vacation at present and is not scheduled to return to the office until the autumn. I will hold your letter until then, and ask him to attend to your request immediately.

Very truly yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Edward R. Murrow

skh

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE
Department of Government
HANOVER · NEW HAMPSHIRE

July23, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Enclosed is a copy of a letter I wrote you on April 3, asking for permission to quote from a letter you wrote to the New York Times on January 26, 1947.

I find in looking over my files that the letter has not been answered and my manuscript has already gone to the printers.

I hope that you will help me to keep the record straight by sending me your permission. I assure you that your response to this effect will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

Elmer E. Smead

EES/BM

Elmer E. Smead
Professor of Government

C O P Y

April 3, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I would like permission to quote the following passage from a letter written by you to Jack Gould, of the New York Times, in a book I am writing on governmental regulation of radio and television programs. The passage states CBS policy on news sponsorship and was published in the Times, January 26, 1947, Sec. X, p. 11. The Times has informed me that I must write you for permission.

> "This network takes full responsibility for broadcasts of news and analysis transmitted over its facilities. The individual broadcasters are members of Columbia's staff, are paid by us and responsible only to us. We set aside periods of network time for news and analysis which are sold only to clients who will sponsor them as they are developed by CBS. Under no circumstances will we sell time for news and permit the sponsor to select a broadcaster who is not wholly acceptable to us to influence the content of the broadcast."

I assure you that your consent will be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

Elmer E. Smead
Professor of Government

EES/BM

B. G. SMITH

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERS
and Precision Instrument Makers

Tel. : BUSHEY HEATH 1886

168, ~~80~~ HIGH ROAD, BUSHEY HEATH
HERTFORDSHIRE

Smith, B. G.

Mr. Edward Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting Corporation,
485, Madison Avenue,
New York, U. S. A.

Our Ref. BGS/RL. | Your Ref. Mr. Murrow. | Date May 27 1959.

~~Copy of three sheets enclosed herewith~~.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I have good reason to believe that I have found the cause of the large number of deaths from Cancer of the Lung, which is attributed to Tobacco Smoking. I gave this information in a confidential report to the Tobacco Manufacturers' Standing Committee on May I last, and this morning I learnt that my papers had only yesterday been sent to the head of the Research team for consideration. This is nearly a month after I had passed on my Theory. In addition, the thesis has a direct bearing on Cancer generally, but it seems to me, that unless you are a medical man, no one is going to listen to a small'boy' like me. For comparison as to my intellectual standing, I would say this:- I am not a degree man myself, but in our family, out of Five adult males, there are , I - B.Sc.(London), I - B.Sc.(London) Ist Class, I - B.A. (Cambs,) Ist Class, the last coming over to Princeton in June for a further three years study. I believe that vested interests will prevent the publication of any news detrimental to sales interests, thus my rather unorthodox approach to you.

As a working principal of a specialist business, I am very busy, and as you must get many queers like myself writing you on numerous occasions, please forgive and forget if you cannot pursue this further. Awaiting your valued reply,

Yours sincerely,

B G Smith.

(Mr. ~~J.B.~~ G. SMITH. (55 years)

Confidential report to Mr. C.H. James, confirming conversation of May I 1959, with Mr. B. G. SMITH, by telephone.

The fundamental cause of Cancer is destruction of anti- bodies in cells, thus allowing the growth of Cancer cells at a greater rate than they can be destroyed by the remaining anti-bodies. This Cancer can be destroyed by radio active treatment, and conversely, healthy cells can also be destroyed by radio active treatment, either deliberately, or as an incident in the process of active human life and living.
In the case of Lung cancer, which can be asribed to Tobacco smoking, the fundamental cause must be the retention in the respiratory tract of radio active material, carried in suspension in the Tobacco smoke. This radio active material is first absorbed by the Tobacco plant from the atmosphere, since in all known cases, Tobacco plants are grown in the open. The quantities are extremely small, but since the life of Carbon I4 for instance is measured in hundreds if not thousand of years, the emission of radio active rays is constant for all practical purposes for the period of one human life which is being considered.
The noticeable increase in cases of Lung cancer in Britain as compared with that of the U.S.A., has been caused by the Dollar shortage in the war years, when for shipping space saving and other reasons, more of the Tobacco midrib was used in the manufacture of Tobacco, thus giving a more concentrated dose of radio active material. This has resulted in heavy smokers, aged about 40 - 50 years having a high mortality rate.
Our WAR casualty rate of men who smoked in the first world war, was so great that whatever the condition of Tobacco in the first world war, the long term incidence of deaths from Lung cancer, gave no real lead to the possible link in the incidence factor.
Carbon is one of the substances that becomes more easily radio active hence a retention of carbon particles in a smoker's lungs, will of course result in serious damage to the protective elements of the body.

Copyright reserved. Reproduction as a whole or in part forbidden, unless authorised in writing by Mr. B. G. SMITH, B G Smith.

As to persons who do not smoke getting Cancer, this is of course quite easy to connect, because they have to breath the atmosphere, in enclosed places, where carbon particles are present this is absorbed as witness of specimens of Lungs preserved in Hospitals, where heavy impregna tion of carbon is shown. Thus if radio active material is taken in at any time, the inevitable radiation commences, by virtue of the glutinous nature of the mucous membrane which retains these particles.

where Cancer takes place in the Breasts, or with males in the prostate gland, usually in or part middle age,(with exceptions), this can be caused by the radio active material, present in the bone marrow being sent to the mammary glands or testicles as part of the normal function of living, but if as life goes more slowly, the replacement of the milk or semen dries up or slows down, assuming that the radio active material is not absorbed, then it can commence the destruction of the protective mechanism of the prostate gland or of the mammary gland.

Radio active material is of course taken in with food, but where the normal functions obtain, this retention is not of sufficient length to cause damage unless passed into the bone marrow.

Pipe smokers who normally do not inhale, would inevitably be liable to Cancer of the stomach or intestines, because they absorb in their spittle, some of the radio active material from the Tobacco, but it is more rare for them to contract Lung cancer.

The level at which motor cars, lorries etc., discharge their products of combustion, i.e. at between 2 - 4 feet, warm and rising into the atmosphere, inevitably force passers by to inhale these carbon waste particles, and especially with diesel lorries, whose pumps are not what they should be in lots of cases, the damage can be very serious. It is known that radio active fall out is on the increase, and also the emission of automotive exhaust waste products must increase with the large number of extra cars on the roads. Hence a large number of Cancer cases must inevitably result.

Copyright reserved. Reproduction as a whole or in part forbidden, unless authorised in writing by Mr. B. G. SMITH, B G Smith

My conclusions are as follows:-
Tobacco smoking can be made safer by manufacturers growing the raw tobacco under conditions where radio active materials falling from the open atmosphere cannot be taken up by the plants, and that the mid rib of the leaf is not retained, but cut out before using the leaf remainder.
That all motor vehicles or all vehicles discharging exhaust fumes, must have a device that traps the solid wastes such as carbon, sulphur etc., into the open atmosphere.
That this too must apply to all persons with chimneys to their houses, shops etc.,ppwer stations.
(On this latter point I believe that Ford Motor company of U.S.A., are trying to find a catalyst, which will absorb the obnoxious fumes given out by vehicles, so far as I am aware at present without result.).
The mechanism of the structure of the Cancer cell or organism should be investigated, if such is possible with a view to making a vaccine to give immunity, or if the action of Cancer is such as to allow the size of body cells to increase with resultant destruction to the infected person, then of course, this is something on which your research team could well undertake.
Owing to the affinity of Carbon for radio active materials, it is essential that all man made carbon is kept to a minimum. The incidence of Cancer to the industries of woollen manufactures, ascribed to dust come back to the same point, that it is radio active dust on the fleeces that give rise to such rates of the disease occurring.
I do hope this will give your Committee a new angle to pursue,

with every good wish,
Yours very sincerely,

B. G. SMITH.

Copyright reserved. Reproduction as a whole or in part forbidden, unless authorised in writing by Mr. B. G. SMITH, BGSmith

Smith, Benjamin

May 19, 1959

Mr. Benjamin E. Smith
102 Schwegmann Building
5200 Gentilly Road
New Orleans 22, La.

Dear Mr. Smith:

Thank you for your thoughtful and penetrating letter of May 12.

For the past several years, I have had no control or influence in regard to CBS News, other than the programs on which I personally appear. I am therefore referring your letter to Mr. John Day, our current Director of News.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

cc: John Day

Smith, Lawrence

LOCUST 4-0250

LAWRENCE M. C. SMITH
1707 BENJAMIN FRANKLIN PARKWAY
PHILADELPHIA 3, PA.

don't ans. - fine!

May 1, 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Legislation now pending in the House of Representatives is of vital concern to the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO. An amendment has been introduced to permit the National Commission to receive and use private funds, an authority the Commission has sought for the last six years. This legislation is needed if the National Commission is to increase its effectiveness as the enclosed letter of transmittal by Dr. Richards sets forth in more detail.

The legislation in the form of the amendment to the Mutual Security Act of 1958 was sponsored in the Committee on Foreign Affairs by Congressman A. S. J. Carnahan, Democrat of Missouri, and Congressman Walter H. Judd, Republican of Minnesota. For this reason, we have excellent expectations of this amendment being reported out. The act should be considered on the floor of the House in a few days. Mrs. Heffelfinger and I, with help from Mrs. Alexander, Ray Murphy and Leon Obermayer have been working in support of the amendment but we felt that you, also, should know of its status.

It is possible that discussion on the other more important parts may minimize any opposition to this amendment, and I feel that any campaign of group letters to Congress would not be useful. On the other hand, I would urge you to get in touch with any members of Congress you may know personally so that they may be prepared to support this amendment in case it is attacked on the floor.

Won't you kindly let me know if you have any ideas or have taken any action about this matter.

Sincerely yours,

Lawrence Smith

Lawrence M. C. Smith

Attachment

U. S. NATIONAL COMMISSION FOR UNESCO

(United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization)

SUGGESTED LANGUAGE FOR THE AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC LAW 565

"(e) Section 5 of the Act of July 30, 1946, providing for membership and participation by the United States in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (22 U.S.C. 287q) is amended by the addition of the following sentences at the end thereof:

'The National Commission is further authorized to receive and accept services and gifts or bequests of money or materials to carry out any of the educational, scientific or cultural purposes of the National Commission as set forth in this Act and in the Constitution of the Organization. Any money so received shall be held by the Secretary of State and shall be subject to disbursement through the disbursement facilities of the Treasury Department as the terms of the gift or bequest may require and shall remain available for expenditure by grant or otherwise until expended, provided that no such gift or bequest may be accepted or disbursed if the terms thereof are inconsistent with the purposes of the National Commission as set forth in this Act and in the Constitution of the Organization. In no event shall the National Commission accept gifts or bequests in excess of $200,000 the aggregrate in any one year. Gifts or bequests provided for herein shall, for the purposes of Federal income, estate and gift taxes, be deeped to be a gift to or for the United States. The National Commission and Secretary of State shall sunmit to Congress annual reports of receipts and expenditures of funds and bequests received and disbursed pursuant to the provisions of this section.'"

April 18, 1958

Dear Dr. Morgan:

I have attached hereto suggested language for an amendment to Public Law 565 which would permit the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO to receive gifts of funds, materials and services from private sources. It has been proposed that the amendment might be included with others of a similar character in Section 9 of the Mutual Security legislation presently being discussed by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

The question as to whether an amendment of this kind was needed was brought before the meeting of the National Commission for UNESCO last November. The Commission's reaction was unanimous that authority to receive gifts from private sources would increase its ability to carry out the responsibility entrusted to it by the Congress and enable it to function more effectively.

I would like at this time to summarize for you the purposes we, on the Commission, feel would be accomplished by this amendment and why it is justified. At the outset, it should be emphasized that funds thus raised would be primarily for the use of the U. S. National Commission in the United States. It should also be made clear that appropriations are not available for the projects we wish to undertake.

A number of developments in recent years have affected the role of the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO. The program of the international organization has emerged from the experimental phase. It has matured. Consequently, the U. S. National Commission is under a steadily increasing burden to carry out its role in such a way that the desired U. S. leadership in the program may be achieved. The Soviet Union's joining of UNESCO in 1954

The Honorable
Thomas E. Morgan,
Acting Chairman, Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

has further expanded the Commission's responsibilities. The nature of the activities for which funds from private sources might be used is indicated by the following examples:

1. Domestic action on UNESCO "major project" to promote mutual understanding between Asia and the West. Several years ago, the National Commission sponsored a highly successful visit of ten unofficial leaders from as many nations of South and Southeast Asia. The visitors participated in public meetings and roundtable discussions with community leaders in six American cities. Other exchanges of this kind are needed. Additionally, in the Asian-American context, the Commission convened a Conference in San Francisco last November as required by the statute. The meeting was focused on what the American citizen could do to promote Asian and American understanding. It was a stimulating and highly successful Conference. However, the necessary follow-up has been lacking, primarily because the Commission has not the financial resources needed to instigate action.

2. Assistance to organized groups wishing to conduct discussions of problems that are the concern of the U. S. and UNESCO as well. The pilot program of Citizen Consultations could usefully be expanded.

3. The development of plans and machinery to assist in the international distribution of educational films suitable for television.

4. Exchanges between the U. S. National Commission and the Commissions of other nations. Several years ago, the Australian National Commission collected and sent to the U. S. National Commission an exhibit of aboriginal arts and crafts which was shown in a number of American cities. The exhibit attracted much favorable comment. Lacking the means, the U. S. Commission was unable to reciprocate.

Because the Commission is not presently authorized to receive gifts, no private sources are now known to be planning a contribution. However, from time to time, organizations and individuals have evinced an interest in making donations provided there was a simple and direct means of doing so.

There is no need to emphasize here the growing importance of cultural relations and cultural diplomacy. The Commission is convinced that the most effective participation possible in the international organization is clearly in the national interest. Its members recognize that, in addition to the public funds appropriated to insure that the U. S. role in the cultural field is properly executed, it is completely consistent with the established American pattern of action on cultural matters that support from private organizations and private funds be enlisted in this effort. Moreover, the employment of private resources in this field will extend the effectiveness of the application of appropriated funds. My colleagues believe that the improvement of international understanding is an undertaking suitable to government and to private enterprise as well.

I speak for the entire Commission in expressing the earnest hope that this proposal will receive your sympathetic consideration.

With every good wish,

Sincerely yours,

John R. Richards
Chairman

Smith, Maurice &
Cara Davis

March 19, 1958

Dear Mr. & Mrs. Smith:

I have your nice letter of March 16th.

Your idea for a television show may perhaps have merit, but I am sorry to say that the pressure of my broadcasting schedule prevents me from taking an interest in any additional programs.

If you care to pursue your idea further with the network, I suggest that you contact Mr. Irving Gitlin, Director of Public Affairs programs.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. & Mrs. Maurice H. Smith
Brunswick Pike
Princeton RD 3, New Jersey

mcc
enc.

Brunswick Pike
Princeton RD 3, New Jersey
16 March 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
WCBS-TV CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Sugg for a TV show

Sir:

We respectfully suggest that a television interview between you and Dr. W. Taylor Thom, Jr., would bring before your large audience a positive idea for action toward peace at a time when such action is of great and immediate international concern.

In brief, Dr. Thom proposes a series of federations of nations, based on natural boundaries and natural-resource and economic groupings, similar to the highly successful Benelux union. His paper and the other articles and maps enclosed contain detailed, point-by-point reasons for the groupings, results to be expected from their establishment predicated on experience, methods for making them effective, and suggestions for aids to the summit meetings expected in the near future in setting up proposals to effect such federations.

It will be noted from the enclosed documents that Dr. Thom's analyses are fully informed, scientifically and historically; and we trust that it will appear to you, as it does to us, that their wide dissemination and interpretation is urgent. We do not presume to add comments upon the qualifications of their author, which are summarized in the enclosed documents and in Who's Who in America and in American Men of Science.

Dr. Thom, who is at present at a peace conference in Ohio, is aware that we are writing this letter.

Should you wish to communicate with us directly, our telephone numbers are:

Business: Walnut 1-8000, Extension 222

Residence: Walnut 4-0825.

Sincerely yours,

Maurice H. Smith

Maurice H. Smith, Assistant to the Director
The Forrestal Research Center
Princeton University

Cara Davis Smith

Cara Davis Smith, Chairman
Committee on Human Relations
Princeton Monthly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends at Stony Brook

Smith, Palmer

March 10, 1959

Dear Mr. Smith:

Thank you for your letter of February 16th stating your idea for a television program.

Unfortunately, I must tell you that I have no control over any programs at CBS, other than the ones which I am, at present, producing.

If you care to pursue your ideas, I suggest you contact our Director of Public Affairs programs for CBS, Mr. Irving Gitlin.

Sincerely,

Mr. Palmer Smith
218 Broadway North
Seattle 2, Washington

PALMER SMITH
ATTORNEY AT LAW
218 BROADWAY NORTH
ON BROADWAY NEAR EAST JOHN STREET
SEATTLE 2, WASHINGTON
EAst 4-0322

February 16, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I would very much like to see C.B.S., which has the facilities, do an hour-long program auditing the successes and failures of our day-to-day foreign mission operations in Southeast Asia, the Near East and Africa.

This suggestion is stimulated by a reading of "The Ugly American," which is slickly written, over-simplified; but, despite this, makes some very sound fundamental criticisms.

Could not C.B.S. obtain frank appraisals, not too much muted by Asian politics, of both our failures and successes abroad in these countries. "As Others See Us" is something of this sort, but it does not deal specifically with the foreign service.

Very sincerely yours,

Palmer Smith

PS:es

Smith, Paul

February 9, 1959

Dear Mr. Smith:

Thank you for your nice letter of January 20th and your kind comments on THE BUSINESS OF SEX.

The program brought forth a considerable volume of mail, most of it favorable.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Paul H. Smith
WTTR
Carroll County Broadcasting Corporation
Westminister, Maryland

mcc

1470 KC

1000 WATTS

WTTR

CARROLL COUNTY BROADCASTING CORP.

WESTMINSTER, MARYLAND

TILDEN 8-5511

January 20, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS-Radio
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow;

On behalf of the staff members of this station, and various individuals to whom we have contacted today... may I express our appreciation for the broadcast of THE BUSINESS OF SEX. We all believe that subsequent broadcasts on "subjects involving a degree of controversy" are in order, and the manner in which the material was presented, has proven RADIO to be a mature news and special events medium, far out-ranking the printed media...not necessarily the big"juke-box" some unprincipled station owners have transformed their operations.

Also, may I thank you personally for various hints in presenting news (which I do quite frequently at this station).

Although our station is an independent operation, we do not hesitate to recommend to our listeners various programs, which we believe to be of general interest. (We can do this because we are sunrise to sunset station).

Again, thank you for a very enjoyable, informative program, and we'll be listening for others.

Very truly yours,
Paul H Smith
Paul H. Smith
Salesman-Announcer

Smith, Roy V.

WEED TELEVISION CORPORATION

Television Station Representatives

*New York * Chicago * Boston * Detroit * Atlanta * Hollywood * San Francisco * Des Moines*

579 FIFTH AVENUE * NEW YORK 17, N.Y.

November 24, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

I thought you would be interested in this. We certainly are proud to be carrying these shows.

It is always a pleasure to be of service.

Kindest personal regards.

Sincerely yours,

WEED TELEVISION CORPORATION

Roy

Roy V. Smith

RVS:fl

2506 Turnagain Blvd. West

Anchorage, Alaska
November 17, 1958

Manager
KTVA Television Studio
McKinley Apartment Building
Anchorage, Alaska

Dear Sir:

We wish to express our pleasure at the high quality of several of your programs this season, especially "Small World" and "Person to Person". It is very stimulating to have entertainment of this caliber available and you are to be congratulated for your discrimination in selecting it for the people of Anchorage.

Very truly yours,

Willetta B. Matsen
(Mrs. Robert Matsen)

Smith, Roy

September 19, 1958

Dear Roy:

I am delighted that PERSON TO PERSON will be shown in Alaska. If anything goes wrong with the setup, don't hesitate to let me know.

I have fond hopes of going up there to do a little fishing next summer, but who knows? Thanks again for your letter.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

Mr. Roy Smith
WEED Television Corporation
579 Fifth Avenue
New York 17, N.Y.

WEED TELEVISION CORPORATION

Television Station Representatives

New York * Chicago * Boston * Detroit * Atlanta * Hollywood * San Francisco * Des Moines * Dallas

579 FIFTH AVENUE * NEW YORK 17, N.Y.

September 15, 1958

Mr. Edward Murrow
CBS Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

On behalf of Augie Hiebert of National Television in Alaska we certainly want to thank you for releasing PERSON TO PERSON for kinescope use. We told Bob Wood we wanted this show on his program service Plan, and we want to carry it even though the sponsors did not order it, with the commercials deleted and public service announcements inserted.

As you know, Alaskans are extremely interested in you and in your programs due to your staunch fight for statehood. You were one of our most ardent supporters in Alaska, and the Alaskans are extremely anxious to see your program.

In case there are any hitches I hope you will see that this program does get to Alaska. It could be easily routed from Hawaii where the kinescope was originally ordered.

Once again, thanks for Augie, myself, etc.

It is always a pleasure to be of service.

Kindest personla regards.

Sincerely yours,

Roy

Roy Smith

RVS:fl

CC Bob Wood

Frank Howlett - Lennon & Newell

Smith, Vera Canode

February 27, 1959

Dear Miss Smith:

Many thanks for your very nice letter. Please excuse the delay in replying to it. However, lately I have become completely deluged with correspondence, and I am just back from a vacation.

It was most thoughtful of you to send me the news clip. I do indeed appreciate it.

Sincerely,

Miss Vera Canode Smith
1412 Hyde Park Boulevard
Houston, Texas

(Mrs) Vera Canode Smith
1412 Hyde Park Blvd.
Houston 6, Texas
Telephone -JA-2-6432.

January 31, 1959.

Truth etc.

Mr Edward R. Murrow
CBS -Television Network
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York.

Dear Mr Morrow:

Remembering very vividly your national braodcast during the uncovering of the Texas Land Scandal by the editor of a small town newspaper in Cuero, Texas, I believe it was, I am now approaching you with some enclosed data that I am of the opinion will likewise interst you.

A world-wide scandal in the petroleum industry seems to be looming which will probably stem from the steps of the Texas State Capitol building in Austin, Texas.

From there it could reach up to the skyscraper offices of certain oil tycoons in New York City and elsewhere. From there far across the seas into the inner sanctums of prime ministers, potentates and kings in far away places.

With the twilight of the natural resources gods visibly in sight as cheap power from the atomic energy and cosmic ray methods are further developed by our scientists and engineers, it is sure that the world of people will welcome the release from bondage from the oil and gold monopoly held over us for nearly one hundred years. (1842)

Enclosed with this letter is a copy of December 30th The Houstonian which carries an article of mine and a repeat of another published Nov. 11. There will be others. The first of those will be a repeat from a national magazine over the subject given "Hot Oil - The Billion Dollar Racket." A one woman war against bootleg oil, A Billion Dollar Racket."

The editor and publisher of this Houstonian has been threatened several times with death if he publishes any more of these articles. Enclosed is clipping from last weeks Houston Press. Also there appears in later issues o this Houstonian articles on the subject by editor, Nat Terrence.

If you are interested, and I feel sure you will be, may I suggest that you send someone down here to get all the facts and please have them see me, as well as Editor Terence.

Yours very truly,

Vera Canode Smith

Vera Canode Smith

P.S. The oil industry was opened in or about 1900 in Texas - 58 years
The monopoly in our money system began about 1914. 48 years.
But before that there was a constant debasement of our currencies in one way or another and a battle for freedom from foreign domination.

THE HOUSTONIAN

"THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE"

O, Justice when expelled from other habitations, make this thy dwelling place!

VOL. 25, NO. 51 | TUESDAY, DEC. 30, 1958 | $2 PER YEAR BY MAIL

VERA CANODE SMITH WRITES AGAIN ABOUT HER LOST OIL WELLS OBTAINED BY BOB SMITH

By VERA CANODE SMITH

On November 11, 1958, you published some remarks I had written to you regarding Mr. R. E. (Bob) Smith and the Smith oil properties in Kilgore, Texas.

At first glance when I saw that headline over the article I was shocked at the sharp words but then I recalled that a good newspaperman or editor will do all he can to make attractive to the readers his publication and this is just what you did and with probably very good effect.

As I review in my mind again the events briefly described in that former letter to you, as published, in which the method was told of how Mr. R. E. (Bob) Smith obtained possession of those two Victor Smith oil wells, the word "fence" came to my mind and I looked up the word in the dictionary. One definition says: "One who receives stolen goods."

Now it comes to me that surely Mr. Smith and his attorney were not unaware that those two wells did not just grow to maturity, like Topsy, or in this case into production without someone having done the financing, obtaining of the land and then the equipment for drilling, etc., with which to produce those two fine wells.

Also let me inform you that it was I who worked to get the pipeline connections when no other independent in that area had such. This came about through the kindness and sympathy of Mr. Jack Pew of the Sun Oil Company who naturally had good connections for such. This made those wells much more valuable and desirable. Mr. Pew did not charge one cent for his gracious gesture to help me.

Mr. R. E. Smith told me himself after he got title to those properties he purchased surrounding land and drilled the 11 other wells, and this naturally gives his excess proration quotas for the daily oil runs, just in case he observes the so-called "proration law." But I cannot help but smile sardonically knowing as I do so much about "hot" oil in that east Texas field.

You see I had planned to run the oil after the pipeline connections were installed so I could pay off the men who had worked so hard to bring in those two valuable wells. One poor man asked for two dollars with which to bury his dead baby. I do not yet know how much less percentage the men had to take when the long delayed pay-off day came. It is likely many had left the field and some the country without ever getting paid.

Proration by the Texas Railroad Commission was a rich man's tool and the tool of some of the majors, not that of the little independent, many of whom were war veterans who had lost their toe-hold on life as they were sent to military service all over the world and came back to face many closed doors.

As I continue to ponder the case of the Smith oil wells I cannot help but compare this deal with that of the Texas Veterans Land Scandal which resulted in the former land commissioner, Bascum Giles, going to prison for a time.

I have gone through much struggle to regain those properties but as quoted in a recent magazine article concerning how the Rockerfellers, after the Standard Oil interests were run out of Texas in 1911, scattered their forces through much the same method as was used to get control of the Smith properties, and Judge Landis of New York made the remark—"YOU CAN'T CONVICT A MILLION DOLLARS." According to your figures in THE HOUSTONIAN, you are saying R. E. (Bob) Smith is worth $600,000,000.

I had better stop here but I could go on for many more pages which would bring into the picture other prominent Texans who likely would prefer not to be known in this deal. No, Mr. R. E. (Bob) Smith did not steal those properties, but he and his attorney must have stood by while it was being done.

(Elsewhere in this paper we are reprinting the first article written by Mrs. Vera Canode Smith against Bob Smith.)

ADVERTISING IN THE HOUSTONIAN WILL BRING YOU RESULTS JUST ASK ANY OF OUR ADVERTISERS IF THAT ISN'T SO.

R. E. SMITH

"Mayor" R. E. (Bob) Smith is not only Houston's political boss, but he has extended his czaristic control into the county and state government.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

M. GABRIEL NAHAS, JR.

Attorney M. Gabriel Nahas, Jr., observes his 44th birthday Jan. 4.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

ROY OAKES

City Controller Roy B. Oakes observes his 59th birthday Jan. 1.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

R. J. LINDLEY

District Clerk Richard J. Lindley observes his 56th birthday Jan. 6.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

W. GAIL REEVES

W. Gail Reeves, former city councilman, observes his 53rd birthday Jan. 5.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

F. M. LAW

F. M. Law, an official of the First City National Bank and one of our leading civic leaders, observes his 82nd birthday Jan. 3.

MRS. SMITH EXPOSES BOB SMITH

"MR. SMITH DID NOT STEAL—"

By VERA CANODE SMITH

(Reprinted from our issue of Nov. 11, 1958)

Thanks for sending me the several late issues of THE HOUSTONIAN. I have always enjoyed reading your paper. You don't always do it, but you can write beautifully when you want to. I guess sometimes you just don't try, but I know you have much skill in your profession. Perhaps you feel your efforts are not always appreciated, but I have always appreciated your ability to write and place before the people the deep truths you know.

In these two issues of THE HOUSTONIAN dated October 7th and 14th I note you state the current political power of Mr. R. E. (Bob) Smith of Houston.

Of course, I guess most everyone knows about this and as for me I am not too much concerned about it. Power is one thing but ruthlessness with it is quite another matter. It will take great wisdom to execute power that is constructive and so we shall see, as time goes on, how Mr. R. E. Smith progresses with his power.

I am not a native Houstonian, but I am of the opinion that it will certainly require a great mind or great minds now to lead a great people, such as are the people of Houston, for they are an informed people, such as are no other people of this nation. Little minds, full of jealousy and envy, could not get the job done, and this city needs so many things done materially such as streets, roads, lighting, etc. I think the work will progress better than it has ever done before. Let us hope so.

You enclosed with the papers a little note in which you said you understood Mr. Smith (R. E. Bob) had mistreated me. Well, that is too long a story to tell you in a short letter. He has not personally mistreated me in the strict sense of the word.

But he could make restitution to me now, for past grievences now that he knows who he has hurt most, by his obtaining two receivership wells he now has which are located right in the heart of Kilgore, Texas.

In other receiverships, except oil wells, the properties are usually returned to the original owners once the indebtedness has been paid off, except, that is the owners of land as related in the Texas land scandals, such as sent Bascum Giles to prison.

Briefly, Mr. Smith obtained two valuable oil wells some time ago that were once the property of my husband Victor Smith and myself, brought into high production with money from my own dear mother's estate, plus the "blood, sweat and tears" of my war veteran husband, plus my own good credit, which of course, I don't have now. I will take that back for in Houston I owe much money to banks and merchants and friends.

There were no shareholders in those two oil wells, only an exorbitant indebtedness due to inferior drilling equipment which caused delays in bringing in at least one of the wells. A long story. However, those two wells

(continued on page 7)

Subscription Blank

Date 1958
(Please fill in date)

THE HOUSTONIAN
2005 Mason Street,
Houston 6, Texas.

Enclosed is two dollars ($2), for which please mail me THE HOUSTONIAN for one year.

(Two years for $3); (Three years for $4);
(Five years for $5); (Twenty-five years or life for $25)

Name .....

Address .....

Zone Number .....Phone Number .....

Occupation .....

THE HOUSTONIAN IS NOW 24 YEARS OLD

These Are Lawyers We'll Recommend

The purpose of this column is to name and recommend the good and ethical lawyers of Houston.

Those lawyers whom we consider to be shysters are never mentioned among the lawyers we recommend.

Fifty attorneys are recommended this week. There will be another 50 next week.

(If any lawyers who are paid subscribers are omitted from the following list when their names should appear in alphabetical order, it is an oversight on our part, and we would appreciate their notifying us of that omission).

Ralph Abercia.
John B. Abercrombie.
Ben L. Adams, Jr.
Joe L. Allbritton.
Harry P. Allen.
R. G. Allen, Jr.
Harold Allison.
Judge James V. Allred.
A. E. Amerman, Jr.
Dillon Anderson.
Errol Anderson.
Wiley N. Anderson.
Jesse Andrews.
U. Stanley Ardoin.
Lawrence Arnim.
Ed Arnold.
Theodore Arter.
Ed. S. Atkinson.
M. J. Atlas.
W. D. Avra.
Jack K. Ayer.
Kenneth H. Aynesworth, Jr.
A. D. Azios.
Hector R. Azios.

J. S. Bailey, Jr.
Forrest F. Baird.
James A. Baker, Jr.
Rep. Robert W. Baker.
W. Kendall Baker.
George E. Baldry, Jr.
Ballard & Carroll.
W. V. Ballew, Jr.
Overton B. Banks.
Bannon & Bannon.
V. A. Barraco.
Garth Bates.
Stanley Beard.
Charles W. Bell.
Edwin S. Bell.
Judge Spurgeon E. Bell.
Judge W. E. Bell.
E. N. Bender.
C. W. Bennett, Jr.
F. Fox Benton.
Benton, Baker, Burris & Zwiener.
H. J. Bernard.
E. A. Berry, Jr.
Thomas E. Berry.
Weldon H. Berry.
Bierwirth & Rosenbaum.

(The above names are taken from our paid subscription list. We invite attorneys who are not regular readers to clip the subscription blank on the front page and become subscribers so they can read this newspaper every week. We also invite the above named attorneys to mail us their photographs and biographical sketches, if we don't already have them. Many thanks.)

★

RALPH ABERCIA

R. G. ALLEN

JESSE ANDREWS

LAWRENCE E. ARNIM

HECTOR AZIOS

J. S. BAILEY, JR.

ROBERT W. BAKER

GARTH BATES

WALTER E. BOYD

J. S. BRACEWELL

MAIL IN YOUR RENEWALS NOW

All subscribers who receive subscription statements should mail their remittances in immediately in order to be sure to remain on the subscription lists and continue getting their papers every week.

THE HOUSTONIAN is now in the process of eliminating all delinquent readers. We are not phoning any of them to get their okey to continue receiving the paper. We are just mailing them a statement and letting it go at that.

Since it takes time to go over a subscription list, we have adopted a procedure of eliminating two delinquent names for every renewal we receive, and so again we suggest you mail your remittance in immediately, if you want to continue getting the paper, to make sure your name isn't among those cut off.

Right now the biggest source of income THE HOUSTONIAN has is the money received from subscriptions, both renewals and new ones.

That, plus regular advertising, legal notices and extra copies, is what pays the expenses of publishing THE HOUSTONIAN and furnishing a living for its editor.

The fact that people are now especially interested in reading THE HOUSTONIAN is proven by the large number of renewals and new subscriptions we are receiving. And some of them are even coming from people who might not approve of some of the things we are printing, but they want to read it just the same.

THE HOUSTONIAN has long claimed that some of the finest people of Houston are readers of this newspaper.

For instance, here are some of the renewals and new subscripitons that came in last week.

Again we urge you to mail in your renewal immediately if you want to stay on the subscription list and read THE HOUSTONIAN every week.

VERA CANODE SMITH——

(continued from page 1)

were and are of great value, else Mr. Smith and his attorney, a Mr. Sauer of Houston, would not have worked three years to obtain title to them.

First, there were chosen two dummy purchasers of the wells through a Dallas bank.

They ran the oil until the indebtedness was paid off and then came the cash purchase made by Mr. Smith through the Dallas bank. One well was purchased for $18,500 and the other for $22,500. I have the records and the name of the dummy purchasers which came to me direct from the mouth of Mr. Sauer himself.

Since Mr. R. E. (Bob) Smith obtained those two wells which are only one block apart in Kilgore, about three blocks from the post office there, he has drilled 11 more wells around them. He told me that himself. So there are 13 oil wells right in the center of the most lush field in the East Texas oil field.

As I said before, Mr. Smith did not steal those properties, but with the aid of friendly courts, the Texas Railroad Commission, and a skilled and probably very well paid legal counsel, he got them.

I might mention too, that the district judge into whose court the wells went through, was a cousin of Clint Murchison of Dallas who knows all about HOT OIL IN TEXAS. Mr. R. E. (Bob) Smith and Clint Murchison and Sid Richardson all have fabulous incomes while I have nothing.

I once asked Mr. Smith to give me the oil runs from just one of those wells, the J. A. Knowls well where we lived in a little house Victor built which was our only home at the time. I asked him for the runs during my lifetime without transfer of the properties, but instead he referred me to his attorney Mr. Sauer, who explained how they got title to the properties. Mr. Knowles was quite willing for me to gain and tried to help me.

There are many prominent people in Texas who know about this deal, and those who have not profited by it, give me their sympathy, but I can't eat that nor pay my debts made here since I came to Houston, where I found Mr. Smith by the merest accident. I didn't know who got the properties for a long time, and my husband had disappeared. A long sad story, believe me.

If you wonder what led me to write so much about POLITICS, well, it is because I learned when fighting to retain or recover those oil wells, THAT ALL ROADS LEAD TO POLITICS. You would be surprised what I learned.

★

Advertise in The Houstonian.

BOB'S PRAYER

GOD BLESS ME AND MY WIFE, ROY HOFHEINZ AND HIS WIFE, LEWIS CUTRER AND HIS WIFE, BLESS WE SIX AND NO MORE. AMEN

A BOUQUET OF STINKWEEDS

TO

POLITICAL BOSSES

BOB SMITH

(HES"S GOT THE MONEY)

AND

ROY HOFHEINZ

(HE'S GOT THE BRAINS)

AND

Mayor Lewis Cutrer

(HE'S JUST THE PUPPET)

(Pd. Political Adv.)

ADVERTISE IN THE HOUSTONIAN

Smythe, Ada

February 11, 1959

Dear Mrs. Smythe:

I have your letter of February 6th concerning the application made by Mr. and Mrs. William R. Downs for admission of their son, William to your school.

I have known Mr. Downs for at least seventeen years. We worked as colleagues together in London during the war, where I very soon became aware of Mr. Downs' complete integrity. My family has maintained a close friendship with Mr. and Mrs. Downs during all these years, and we regard them as excellent parents, whose children are being provided with the best possible preparation for taking their place in the world, although, naturally I know more of the parents than I do of the child.

I think I may fairly say that you would find William Downs, Jr., a satisfactory and desirable pupil in your school.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Ada Smythe
London School
Bethesda
Washington 14, D. C.

mcc

LANDON SCHOOL
BETHESDA
WASHINGTON 14, D.C.

February 6, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS Incorporated
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Mr. and Mrs. William R. Downs have made application to this school for admission of their son, William.

They have given us your name as a reference and we should greatly appreciate a note from you concerning them. We shall, of course, treat this information as strictly confidential.

Enclosed is a self-addressed envelope for your convenience.

Sincerely yours,

(Mrs.) Ada Smythe

Ada Smythe

Enclosure

Smythe, Dallas W.

September 10, 1958

Mr. Dallas W. Smythe
Institute of Communications Research
The University of Illinois
Urbana, Illinois.

Dear Mr. Smythe:

Mr. Murrow has asked me to thank you very much for your letter of September 8. He has read your article with great interest, but unfortunately his heavy schedule does not permit him the time to make the comment that you invite. I am therefore returning the article to you enclosed.

Very truly yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

enc.

INSTITUTE OF COMMUNICATIONS RESEARCH

THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS + URBANA

September 8, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Several years ago I served as Consultant to the Royal Commission on Broadcasting in Canada. This year and after the report was submitted, I tried to write up what I conceived to be the significance of this event for us in the United States.

In its present form, the enclosed article has been rejected by Harper's, The New York Times, Weekly Magazine, The Reporter, and Scientific American. I write to you because Bob Fowler, the Chairman of that commission, after reading my article told me that you had privately expressed views similar in certain respects to mine on the occasion of his visit to New York two years ago. Would I be presuming too much if I asked you to look over my piece and to tell me what needs to be done to it to make it acceptable to the American magazines for the intellectuals? My correspondence with them has been singularly unhelpful in this regard. I will deeply appreciate any attention you can give to it.

Cordially,

Dallas W. Smythe

Dallas W. Smythe
Acting Director

DWS:cw
Encl

Snowden, R. B.

November 24, 1958

Mr. R.B. Snowden
Cotton Exchange Building
Memphis, Tennessee

Dear Mr. Snowden:

Thank you for your letter of 10th November. I will certainly consider your suggestion of Governor Faubus for some subsequent program. I have seen him on television and he handles himself very well.

I was in fact aware that there had already occurred a very considerable degree of desegregation in Arkansas.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

R. B. SNOWDEN
COTTON EXCHANGE BUILDING
MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE

November 10, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

You will perhaps recall my letters of October 17th and the 28th complimenting you on the great speech you made in Chicago.

In this connection, because you are advocating the presentation of truth and understanding to the public, I wonder if you would be interested in presenting to the public Governor Faubus in a thoroughgoing interview.

I nominated him for the Freedoms Foundation award on the basis that no man in modern history has created as much discussion on the subject of states' rights and constitutional government as he himself has done. In my opening paragraph presenting him for the nomination, I used this language: "Regardless of the merits or demerits of enforced integration, there stands one American who has contributed more than any other man to the widespread interest in, and study of, constitutional government, and the rights of sovereign states.....".

In my letter of transmittal of the nominating brochure, I wrote Mr. Wells, President of Freedoms Foundation in Valley Forge, as per the enclosed copy, October 29th.

Under separate cover I am taking the liberty of sending you a rough copy of the nominating brochure. There are certain facts therein which will whet your imagination. Governor Faubus is a much maligned and much misunderstood man, but it is my belief that he can take good care of himself before the public in any televised interview, regardless of the stiffness of the questions.

Very sincerely yours,

R. B. Snowden

R. B. Snowden

rbs/h

P.S. One fact which is not in the brochure, which is little known, is this: Prior to Little Rock (September 1957) Governor Faubus had admitted more integration in the State of Arkansas in actual numbers of children than all the other Southern states put together.

Snowden, R. B.

October 29, 1958

Mr. Kenneth D. Wells
Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge
Valley Forge, Pennsylvania

Dear Mr. Wells:

Under separate cover, by special delivery, we are forwarding to you our nominating brochure on Governor Faubus, and it should reach you before November 1st.

Mr. Combs, the gentleman whom we asked to prepare this brochure, visited Little Rock at least three times in assembling this data. He tells us that there are on file some three million pieces of correspondence from 31 countries in the world (not behind the Iron Curtain) which have reached the Governor since September 1957 -- an almost incredible number.

We are nominating the Governor purely on the basis that he has stirred the people of this Nation and the world into an appreciation of States Rights', Constitutional government and freedom more than any other man of several generations.

I enclose to you a copy of my foreword which appears in the brochure.

Very sincerely yours,

R. B. Snowden

rbs/h
enclosure

Snyder, Hartland

21 South Howell's Point Road
Bellport, L.I., New York

February 19, 1959

re Khrushchev

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Enclosed you will find a preliminary draft of a letter which I intend to send to Khruschev. The fact that it is being sent to him is essentially a gimmick to obtain publicity. I trust that you will read, at least, a few paragraphs of the letter before filing it.

I am sending a number of copies of this draft to competent professional people in the publicity and news fields in the hope of obtaining free editorial advice as to format, composition, reduction in length, improving the order of presentation, and so forth. It will also, I hope, give a greater chance of wide spread publicity for the final product.

I do not, of course, know what the result of this effort will be. It may be equivalent only to casting a gram of sand into the sea, or a conceivably mountain range therein.

It is my intention to send the letter to Khruschev with copies to Eisenhower, Hammarskjold, John XXIII, Nehru and others. A press release will then follow in a week or two.

Your name was suggested to me by Joseph Mc Carthy, a freelance writer, of Blue Point, L.I., New York.

I trust that you will give me the help which I need.

Sincerely yours,

Hartland S. Snyder

Hartland Snyder
Senior Scientist
Brookhaven National Laboratory

Dear Sir:

I am writing this letter to you as one desperate individual to the leader of one of the most powerful nations in the world and that is possibly in the military sense, the most powerful. I am writing as an individual because I know that only an individual could write a letter such as this, and also because I believe that I have a certain competency which may make my self-selection for this task peculiarly appropriate. In any event, such things can only be judged by the ultimate result, and this represents my attempt to do something about the world's present horrible situation. There are a couple of experiences which I should mention in relationship to both the atom bomb and the H-bomb, in order that you can readily understand some of the reasons for my great distress over the present situation.

To start with, immediately after the public announcement by President Truman of the explosion of the A-bomb, I became very curious as to the actual method of assembly of the bomb. I made a few back-of-the-envelope calculations and realized how difficult this problem really was. One day while washing dishes and contemplating this problem, I hit upon an idea, which was clearly an exceedingly good way of making a bomb, perhaps even the best. Out of personal curiosity as to whether such a technique had been used, and also to see whether I should or should not write to the appropriate authorities, I decided to check upon the correctness of my ideas.

After a seminar at the University of Chicago and during a dinner at the Quadrangle Club with S. Goudsmit and L. Szilard, whom I knew were familiar with the actual techniques used, I proposed my idea to them. I received dead silence from these gentlemen as a result of my disclosure. Later, while we were in our cups, I accused them of giving away national defense secrets, at which Goudsmit said, "We told you exactly nothing." I said, "I am sorry, gentlemen. It is obvious that the idea is so cute and novel you would have reacted quite strongly to it if you'd never heard of it before. At this point, Szilard exploded and said, "It proves that you cannot even listen to somebody discuss secrets without giving away information?"

A similar experience occurred to me in relation to the H-bomb. As soon as I knew the most important fact, that such things can be built, I began thinking about how it was accomplished. In this case, also, I had found a scheme which I thought was good, and I wished to verify if it were the one used. As there was soon to be a conference at Los Alamos on controlled thermonuclear problems at which both Edward Teller and I were to attend, I decided to wait and approach him with this idea. One evening, after a drink or two , I approached Edward Teller, and described my scheme to him. His reaction was: "Hartland, don't calculate, don't think about it, don't do anything about it: it's exactly what we did." I know of other examples in the U. S. in which similar reinvention has been done, and apparently it has been done in the Soviet Union and England as well.

Although I have always been interested in political affairs, I have never before permitted this interest to interfere with my scientific work, I have decided that now is the time for me to make an attempt to alter the world's precarious situation by throwing some light on certain facets of our present problems.

The plan of this letter is to show by examples, something of the nature of the problems facing the world of today, to draw certain conclusions, and to suggest a possible scheme for the nations of the earth to start to dig their way out of the present horrible morass.

I think I should now give a short thumbnail sketch of my life and works so that you will perhaps begin to understand why I feel that a letter written by me might be effective.

I was born in Salt Lake City, Utah in 1913. My father was a civil engineer, my mother an ex-long distance telephone operator. I spent my youth there. I went to the University of Utah in the same city because I had to work in gas stations and the like to get enough money for this purpose, as these were during the depression years in the world. I graduated from the University of Utah with a B.S. in physics. After leaving college because of lack of money, and not quite good enough grades to get scholarships, I was able, however, to get a job in the WPA because of connections of my father. I also made a blunder or two and got fired. Also the boss of the division didn't like me. After this I worked as an assayer in mines in southern Utah and in Nevada. In any event, I then entered graduate school at the University of California and became a student under the tutelege of Professor J. Robert Oppenheimer.

(During those years I married my first life). I have also written, both by myself and in collaboration with other people, a number of papers, some of which I believe have some intrinsic merit. Upon graduation from the University of California with a Ph.D. in physics, I received an appointment as an instructor in physics at Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois. The war years intervened and although I remained on the staff teaching a course or two, I also was doing some work on infra-red communications systems for the U. S. Navy, and then I worked first as a consultant and finally as the technical director of a bomb sight development project at the Victor Adding Machine Company. Incidentally, I have been told that the bomb sight which was used to bomb Hiroshima was a Norden bomb sight which was modified for this purpose by the group which I directed.

I also divorced my first wife during these years, married my second wife and have three nice, but somewhat obstreporous children. After the war,

I decided to leave the University. I had several offers but ultimately selected Brookhaven National Laboratory as the best place for my future development, even though the salary offered was the lowest of all.

During my first few years at Brookhaven, I devoted myself almost exclusively to problems in theoretical physics. My stay at Brookhaven was interrupted by a year at Princeton which I treated as a sort of sabbatical and taught only one course, and had many pleasant hours of talk and discussion with other physicists at the University and at the Institute for Advanced Study. Realizing the importance to the Brookhaven Laboratory of the development of high energy accelerators, of which the Cosmotron was the first one constructed here, I decided on my return from Princeton to see what could be done to lower the cost of such machines. In collaboration with M. Stanley Livingston and Ernest D. Courant and others, I am a co-inventor of the strong-focusing principle, which can be applied not only to the synchrotrons but which has many other applications in the field of physics and elsewhere. There are now being developed and built in Europe, Russia and the United States machines which are based on these principles; also there have been many beautiful developments in this field which were inspired by this work.

In addition to the work of the synchrotron, I have been acting for many years as a consultant with Oak Ridge National Laboratory on controlled thermonuclear problems. I have played a considerable role in the development of the machine they call the DCX at Oak Ridge and which is in principle very similar to what you call "OGRE" in Russia. I understand from my friends, particularly John Luce and Ed Shipley, who were at Geneva at the Geneva Conference, that the DCX produced an enormous impression on the Soviet scientists. This brings me, in brief, up to date as to my life and professional competence.

As I was raised in Salt Lake City (that is a gentile among Mormons) I am well aware of pressures and tensions that are exerted by a strongly organized group upon their neighbors. For example, when my brothers and I buried our mother in Salt Lake City many years after we had left there, during a visit to a nice lady who had lived next door to us during all of our youth, said, "We tried so hard to convert you to the true faith." Similar pressures are also exerted by other strongly organized groups, political, religious and social on neighboring peoples. I have become, as a result of these experiences, as ardently opposed to militant aetheism as I am to ardent theism. I feel that there are other experiences which have a great deal to do with the fact that I am writing this letter. A few weeks before President Eisenhower had his attack I also had a coronary attack of a much more severe nature than his. I recognized from the medical symptons of the deep shock I was in at the time I reached the hospital and also from the expressions on the faces of the various people present that my chances of survival were less than fifty percent at that time. I was not afraid. I have had a total of five coronary attacks which have put me in the hospital for a very long period during which time I have thought about many problems. During the early days of my stay in the hospital I was not permitted visitors so I converted the orderlies and the nurses and the doctors into visitors. I also read enormously to keep occupied: novels, detective stories, science fictions, pornographic literature, history, although none of my normal work was permitted me during hospitalization. I also became, in spite of everything I was doing, bored. I thought about the problem for a while and decided that the study of the Russian language, because of the enormous advances in science in the Soviet Union in recent years, would prove to be a very valuable occupation. I have continued reading Russian on a somewhat sporadic basis, and I am now able to read the language quite well; in fact, I am even reading both classical and modern Soviet novels and short stories.

I had an immense amount of time to contemplate other problems such as the state of the world situation and what might be done to improve it, ways of defending the United States against a possible attack by the Soviet Union and possible ways in which ships that could reach other solar systems and planets might be constructed. Of course, these space ships wouldn't look in detail like the sort of thing you see in science fiction because they are much more limited by knowledge as to the known laws of nature. Among other things, I thought about ships based on the obvious use of fission power, also thermonuclear power, and also sailing by virtue of the sun's radiation pressure. There are many problems involved in a solar-powered machine, one of which is the problem of keeping a very large surface of a mirror, of say 100 miles in diameter, expanded, and I feel very ashamed that I had not thought of the possibility of rotating this mirror and using centrifugal force to keep it in place, (a possibility pointed out by Dick Garwin of Los Alamos).

I was also considering the long-range problems of energy sources for the earth, and there seem at the moment only three which are likely to be successful, and which will probably take enormous effort to accomplish. Recently, during a visit to Oak Ridge, Alvin Weinberg, the director, asked me how much the United States should spend on the problem of controlled thermonuclear reactors, and I answered without hesitation, "The United States should be willing to spend one billion dollars before reconsidering the problem." Alvin Weinberg, who is interested in the burning of the mountains instead of the seas, feels that we are spending too much money on the thermonuclear and not enough on the fission problems. He may well be correct.

The third possible energy source is the development of some form of device to utilize in some form or other the energy of the sunlight falling upon the earth. I also think that enormous effort, and maybe it is being done, should be put in on this possibility.

I believe that this is enough discussion of the technical matters, although there are many others which could be gone into in detail. I believe that I should now turn my attention to the political, the social and racial, and the religious aspects of the problems which face the world today, which are indeed much more difficult to solve than the technical ones.

One of the recent events which makes me believe that this letter is timely is the visit of Mr. Mikoyan to the United States. I wrote Mr. Mikoyan a short note in Russian expressing my thanks for his coming to this country and congratulating him on what appeared to be his successful approach. The selection of a man of his personality seems about as good as it could have been, considering the political climate in the world. It appears that the essential purpose of his visit was to attempt to make some contact both with the government of the United States and the people of the United States, so that some form of accommodation can be reached between us. Perhaps even the Berlin crises was provoked with this in mind. I only hope that this was your motive. Otherwise, it looks like another stupidity to me.

It is a truism that people act on their beliefs whether or not these beliefs have correspondence to reality. When these beliefs differ sufficiently, even though they could obviously not have any relationship to reality, disastrous consequences can occur and indeed in the past have occurred many times.

I listened with great interest to the interview that Mr. Mikoyan had on the American program, "Meet The Press." I was immensely impressed with his ability to parry questions, a considerable percentage of which were in the "are you still beating your grandmother?" class. I wish to select an example from these questions which were given to Mr. Mikoyan to show the enormous differences which exist between the beliefs of different individuals and religious groups. The question arose as to the invasion of Hungary, by Soviet forces, in contrast with the invasion of Lebanon by American forces. The correspondent who asked him this question essentially brought up the point as to why 20,000 Hungarians were killed in the Russian invasion whereas no Lebanese were killed in the American invasion. Mr. Mikoyan's answer was very coy. He said, in effect, "Well, after all, the Hungarians shot at us and we had to shoot back, whereas the Lebanese did not shoot at the Americans." Almost anyone could ask the question as to why there was such a difference, and one might give an answer of the following nature: it is evident that Hungarians have had a great deal of experience with Russian occupation and they really wanted you out of the countey and didn't know any way to achieve this except to shoot at you, whereas the Lebanese, looking at past American history, knew that we would leave soon in any event, and it wasn't necessary to shoot. Ofrcourse, Mr. Mikoyan gave quite a different reason as to why we left Lebanon. According to him, we were forced out. Counter, counter arguments could be given. This sort of approach can continue on ad infinitum and ad nauseum. Such ways of discussing things clearly will get neight nation anywhere, and it is to be desired that some course be discovered whereby belief in one another's sincere intentions may be established.

This leads to the problem: that of having faith in one another's good intentions even though we do not agree with the specific beliefs of the other. I think it quite possible that many of the recent maneuvers of the Soviet Union have their basis in your desire to establish satisfactory relations, not only with our government, but with all of the Western governments. I believe this if for no other reason than that, and it must be quite clear to you, the development of weapons of terrific destructive power, together with the means of delivery, make almost hopeless any real solution of the world's problems, unless there is some appropriate set of agreements reached between the various countries of the world, which are at least reasonably satisfactory to everyone.

In order to obtain agreement one should, among other things, stop charater assassinations. I was unhappy with the attempts on the part of certain parts of the American press to present you as a drunkard and a buffoon. I can hardly believe that you could reach your present position if this were true.

On the other hand, I have been reading modern Russian Soviet novels in which similar pictures are drawn of Western leaders. I have, in this case, specifically in mind a novel entitled, "Secrets of the War," which was written in 1957 by an author named Korolkov. In this novel, men such as Dulles, Churchill, Roosevelt, were depicted as though they had the same vile character as Hitler. Such character assassinations can, in either country, do really nothing but harm, even in those cases where they might be true. I do think that few people think this is true about you, but many do believe it about Stalin, including myself.

Another example of similar character assassination, which was certainly in bad taste, or worse, even though there might have been some truth in what was presented, was the recent play produced by NBC, CBS "The Death of Stalin," or "The Night That Stalin Died." This was a bad enough thing to do but your reaction was worse. I have a similar attitude toward the Pasternak situation and I feel sure that this is a rather general attitude present in the Western world.

It is clear that there is a serious lack of understanding as to the true motives and characters of the peoples of both the East and the West on the part of each.

Many years ago I heard a lecture by Mrs. E. Roosevelt in which she described some of her conversations with Soviet delegates to the United Nations. About the only thing that standsout clearly about this leoture is one statement she made to a Russian delegate to whom she said: "Sir, I don't see how an intelligent man like you can sit here and lie to me, staring me in the face, when I know you're lying." I believe that I can give a possible answer to Mrs. Roosevelt's deep concern. An otherwise sincere man can do such a thing when he believes that the consequences of telling the truth would be much more serious than the lie itself. For example, he may have such strong beliefs in the political value of one system over the other that he feels completely justified in utilizing such a lying technique and his conscience is at rest.

I believe that this lying technique is not only self-defeating, but is leading toward universal destruction. Far too much of this sort of thing has gone on between nations of the world, and is one of the important sources for the lack of trust between nations.

Most Americans believe that the Soviet Union has not lived up to the spirit, or even the words of some of its treaties. You, of course, have denied this, and therefore I am convinced that you are lying in this instance and that you know it. You may feel yourself to be justified by the exigencies of the situation and I believe you may be right in a few instances. In any event, even if you truly believe that you have lived up to your treaties, there has been something drastically wrong in the way in which you handle affairs with us.

I consider that most men act from the best of motives, namely the good of their country, their families, and ultimately for the good of humanity. I also believe that you, President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles and almost all of the political leaders in the world have this same motivation to a greater or lesser extent. I am indeed possibly as unhappy as you ought to be with the performance of our present administration in the field of foreign affairs. I suspect it is the incompetence of this administration which has hurt us more than it has hurt you, although it has certainly hurt both of us very seriously. I do not in any sense mean to attack the character or the intelligence or the integrity of these men, but I certainly do not feel that they have been very wise. This should be of as deep concern to the other nations of the world as to ours because we may all be destroyed togerher, as was predicted in the Book of Reverlations. As someone recently quoted to me, "We may be both equally right, but we most certainly will both be equally dead."

I should like now to introduce some technical material to point up another serious problem of which I am sure you are aware, namely that with the passage of the years more and more nations will have weapons of total destruction, and adequate means of delivery.

The two stories about my experiences in re-inventing the A-Bomb and the H -Bomb were related to illustrate that such re-invention has obviously been done by other people, as in the U.S.S.R. and Great Britian, and still more people in the world can clearly di this and indeed intend to unless the situation improves.

With respect to the bomb testing programs which are carried out by both of our nations, and by the British, and certainly, if nothing is done, will be carried out by other nations, I should like to make a few remarks. In the first place, your original announcement that you would not continue testing gave you an enormous propaganda victory over our side. I believe as a technical man, that I can understand many of the reasons that must have been advanced by the weapons development people and the military here as to why we could not stop our own testing program. Many of these are undoubtedly military top secret and I cannot discuss them, even though I have no specific information on these points. I suspect that you resumed the testing of weapons because your own people would also advance essentially the same arguments. There is, of course, from our point of view, the fact that, from the time you announced the cessation of testing and resumption of testing, the time involved was about the time it would take for the preparation of a series of tests. I must admit that our own government would probably have done the same thing under similar circumstances.

There is an additional problem which I believe has not been previously pointed out, and that is that nations could develop quite effective weapons without any testing, so that amere cessation of tests would not accomplish too much, although it would be a valuable first step. Of course, the development of weapons without explicit testing of designs must then proceed from proper physical measurements, and from making adequate mathematical calculations. All weapons are originally designed this way and there have been very few failures.

It is clear that about the only thing that testing does is to change the time scale in the achieving of such weapons but since I would like to see mankind exist for a few more billion years at least, a few years more or less in the development of weapons makes little difference.

It is evident that quite a large number of nations could, even if testing were banned, produce both atomic and hydrogen weapons of high efficiency in the course of, say, twenty-five years. A list of such nations is France, Germany, Italy, India, Sweden, Switzerland, Argentina, Brazil, Red China, Japan, and as time goes on, many more.

In my opinion the development of delivery systems will probably be more difficult for these nations than the development of the weapons themselves. Unfortunately, a large number of suitcases might do the job, and we soon wouldn't even know whose.

However, I believe that all the countries which now possess these weapons will be quite careful in their evaluation of any incident that might result in the explosion of one of these devices, either accidentally or otherwise. I dread to think about what might happen if a man such as Hitler or Peron had control of such devices. These names were chosen because the men are either dead or out of power, but there are others, and there will be more, unless something effective is done.

It is well to turn here to racial and religious problems. During the period of treatment for my last heart attack I was confined in a Catholic hospital in Washington, D. C. While there I made some effort to find out something about Catholic doctrine about which at this time I was very ignorant and still am.

During this confinement of mine I appreciated for the first time the deep contentment that such religious beliefs can give to people. I also managed to get in a talk with a priest at which we discussed the obvious problem of birth control and in which I tried to find out why the Catholics were so opposed to it.

His answer was that according to Catholic doctrine, during the act of the joining of the sperm and the ova, God also puts a soul into the resulting fertilized egg. We discussed a number of other things but I wish to use this only as an illustration.

I, as an agnostic, scarcely subscribe to this doctrine. I pointed out to the Father that if the present exponential rate of human population continues, within a few thousand years there would have to be a solid wall of human flesh travelling away from the earth at the velocity of light, and after that even this would not suffice. This looks a little difficult to achieve although no one knows what the future advancements of science might do, and indeed maybe God will provide! I made the somewhat sarcastic remark that perhaps the only solution was continence as far as the Catholics were concerned. Another minor point, the good Father was willing to admit that Catholic and other religious beliefs are based on faith. I pointed out to him that this was true about all the physical and biological sciences, and indeed all human knowledge.

Wtih respect to racial problemes, my most significant experience occurred while a colored nurse was walking me up and down the halls, and I noticed the predominance of white people in my section while in other sections they were essentially colored, I asked if the hospital had a policy of segregating the races. She said it did not, but that usually neither the Negroes nor the white desired to be together in common wards, but if there were individuals who didn't mind they would be put together. While discussing questions of racial intolerance, she told me that many Southern white persons literally cringe when a Negro touches them. She said that "the hospital, of course, tried not to have the Negroes tend such persons, but the patients did not realize that all their food was prepared by Negroes and they might well gag if they realized this fact." This points up the serious problem of the racial strife as it exists in the United States today, and indeed something of the nature of the human beast. I must say that I feel quite bitter toward the government of the Soviet Union for the manner in which it exploits our racial suffering for petty political gains.

Concerning the various sociological and political and economic problems of the world today, I believe that it is desirable to have many different types of social and economic systems operating in order that we have the opportunity to test out those features of each which are best for the ultimate happiness of the human race. I feel reasonably sure that if we are given sufficient time each will borrow from the other those features which are most successful; after all, everybody likes to succeed. You apparently wish to call this process "peaceful competition." What, in reality, is the difference what we call anything if we can only really understand what the other man is talking about, so we may trust one another.

We in America, during the last forty years, have undergone an enormous social and economic revolution quite comparable to that which has taken place in Russia in the same time. In the days of my youth oppressive capitalism was undoubtedly a problem. Today, our economic probelms are much more closely associated with the desire for power on the part of certain unscrupulous labor leaders, and racketeers, and not nearly so much with the management of various enterprises. I do not consider that the system in Russia is either economically socialistic or communistic, even though you insist upon using these words. It is, rather, a form of state capitalism.

I prefer our deomocracy since it readily enables not only the peaceful, but even pleasant change of governments. As to the political form in Russia, at best it is an oligarchy or at the worst a dictatorship, but not a democracy in the sense I understand the word demonracy. In economic affairs, our two nations are in practice behaving much more alike than they did in the past. It is to be hoped that this is the result of doing things in a better way. There are also many indications that even politically our ways of doing things are becoming more alike.

From the days of Stalin to your own control, many enormous changes have taken place in both the political and economic fields in Russia. Perhaps an indication of this is in your denunciation of Stalin for deeds which the Western world had long been aware of and indeed revolted by. I hope that this is a strong indication as to your desire to liberalize the political situation in Russia. However, the impact of this denunciation was much greater than you anticipated on other countries in the communist camp, with the result that some groups attempted what I regarded as an untimely revolt. True, their provacations may have been great, and their desire to move toward the direction of the Western ideals incited them to unwise acts in view of the power situation in the world. The Russian press has, for example, treated the Hungarian revolt as though it were incited by the American government. I do not believe this because I believe there does not exist any agency within our government which is competent enough to incite any revolt anywhere.

The changes which have been taking place in the religious, social, and political lives of the peoples and nations is the inevitable result of the accumulation of experience by the human race, and its attempt to better itself. Indeed, the differences between our systems are not nearly as great as might be guessed from the differences in the words which we use. You use words to describe your system as communistic or socialistic, whereas many Americans say we have a capitalistic society. Actually, of course, you do not have a communistic society, and we have a very strongly modified capitalistic society. The laws of this country are such that government restrictions upon private enterprise might almost be described as leading to a form of state capitalism. Politically, there has been a steady concentration of power in the hands of the executive department of our government, whereas in Russia, which was once under a very strict dictatorship, the power is becoming more diffuse, and in this respect we are becoming more alike.

With respect to Mr. Dulles, I know that there are very severe castigations of his character in the Soviet press, journal and books. My own

A.T.R.C. Snyder, Vic L.

VIC L. SNYDER

GENERAL INSURANCE AND REAL ESTATE

319 1-2 SOUTH MAIN STREET
FINDLAY, OHIO

BUSINESS PHONE GA 2-0383
RESIDENCE PHONE GA 2-5479

1-26-59

MR. EDWARD R. MURROW
485 MADISON AVE.
NEW YORK, N. Y.

DEAR MR. MURROW:

I HAVE LISTENED AND WATCHED YOU OVER T.V. AND THE RADIO THAT I ALMOST ADDRESSED YOU AS DEAR ED.. I KNOW HOW BUSY YOU ARE AND WILL JUST SAY THANKS FOR YOUR EFFORT. A LITTLE GIRL AT O'MALLEYS BOOK STORE IN NEW YORK GAVE ME A TIP WHERE THE BOOK I WAS SEEKING COULD BE FOUND. I HAVE SINCE SENT MY MONEY AND AM LOOKING FORWARD TO RECEVING THE BOOK. I HOPE SOME DAY I CAN WRITE YOU ABOUT MY CASE WHICH HAS BEEN IN THE COURTS TWO YEARS AND IN WHICH I AM FIGHTING THE NEW DESPOTISM AS OUTLINED IN THE BOOK SO ENTITLED AND WRITTEN BY LORD CHIEF JUSTICE HEWART OF ENGLAND. THANKS AGAIN.

YOURS SINCERELY,
VIC L. SNYDER

Snyder, Vic L.

January 20, 1959

Dear Mr. Snyder:

I have your recent letter.

To answer your question, I would suggest contacting any of the leading publishing houses, such as, Doubleday, Knopfs, etc. Your New York Public Library in Findlay might even be able to help you.

I am sorry that I cannot give you any more information as to where a copy might be bought.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Vic L. Snyder
319 1-2 South Main Street
Findlay, Ohio

mcc

VIC L. SNYDER

GENERAL INSURANCE AND REAL ESTATE

319 1-2 SOUTH MAIN STREET
FINDLAY, OHIO

BUSINESS PHONE GA 2-0383
RESIDENCE PHONE GA 2-5479

1-6-59

MR. EDWARD MURROW
NATIONAL BROADCASTING CO
NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

DEAR MR. MURROW:

IN 1929 A BOOK ENTITLED "THE NEW DESPOTISM" WAS WRITTEN AND PUBLISHED BY THE GREATLY LAMENTED LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND. THE PUBLISHING HOUSE, THE COSMOPOLITAN BOOK CORP., OF NEW YORK CITY, HAS SINCE CHANGED HANDS AND THE BOOK WENT OUT OF CIRCULATION. I HAVE SEARCHED EVERYWHERE FOR A COPY OF THIS BOOK. WILL GLADLY PUT UP DEPOSIT FOR USE OF THIS BOOK. AFTER LISTENING TO YOUR MANY DISCUSSIONS I THOUGHT THAT THROUGH YOUR CONTACTS YOU MAY BE ABLE TO DIRECT ME TO A PARTY HAVING A COPY.

WHEN I HAVE CONCLUDED MY FIGHT IN THE COURTS ON THE MATTER OF "UNAUTHORIZED PRACTICE OF LAW" I WILL GLADLY FURNISH YOU WITH ANY INFORMATION THEREON. THE PROCEDURE OF THE BAR ASSOCIATIONS STARTED AT THE TURNING OF THE CENTURY AND I HAVE EXCERPTS FROM THIS GREAT BOOK MENTIONED ABOVE BUT WOULD LIKE TO READ THE BOOK ITSELF.

THANKING YOU FOR ANY ASSISTANCE YOU MAY BE ABLE TO GIVE ME.

YOURS SINCERELY,

VIC L. SNYDER

Vic L. Snyder

SOLOMON - MAN AND MYTH

No ruler of ancient Israel captured the imagination of succeeding generations in so spectacular a fashion, as did King Solomon. The combination of virtues and other characteristics attributed to him is so rare, that his name has become the byword of a variety of qualities. The Bible records him as the wisest ruler on earth (I Kings, ~~V,12~~ X,7); a wise judge (I Kings, III,16ff); a brilliant master of quiz (I Kings, X,1); a poet of love songs (Song of Songs I,1); a cynic (Ecc.,I,1); a great lover (I Kings XI,1ff); a shrewd merchant (I Kings X, 28ff.,); a great seafarer (IX, 26 ff); a wise administrator (I Kings, IV,7); one of the greatest builders (I Kings, VI); a clever diplomat (I Kings, X); and above all, a great lover of peace, who managed to co-exist with the great empires beside him.

What evidence do we have - apart from the scriptures - to support these Solomonic qualities and achievements? It should be emphasized at the outset that no evidence exists which answers such questions as: was Solomon tall? Was he good looking? Indeed, Solomon is not even mentioned in the hitherto discovered annals and records of the Holy Land and the neighbouring states. This is not surprising, for such mention has usually taken place in the record of battles by the scribes of the victors, where they have gone to great pains to describe in detail the power and the glory of the king who has been vanquished. Solomon was not vanquished. During his reign, the M.E. was in a state of decline. No great ruler of a neighbouring state waged war against him, and none could therefore use him as the subject of recorded military history as for example, the later annals of the Assyrian and Egyptian kings, which made frequent mention of the kings of Israel and Judah whom they had conquered.

And yet, paradoxical as it may be, there are few monarchs of ancient Israel whose deeds can be corroborated - and better understood - by the spade of the archaeologist than Solomon. The evidence is both direct and indirect.

We may not be able to help those who yearn to discover whether Solomon looked like Yul Brinner or whether the Queen of Sheba was the Lollobridgida of her times. But to all who may be content with answers to less Holywood-like questions, we have a wealth of evidence. Let us follow his activities according to the Biblical narrative:

[VIDEO] VIDEO]

§ 1 - Coronation

(I Kings, I, 38) - "So Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benajah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites and the Pelethites, went down, and caused Solomon to ride upon king David's mule, and brought him to Gihon."

The Gihon fountain exists to this day in the Valley of Kidron in Jerusalem, Jordan.

§ 2 - Altars

(I Kings, I, 50) - "And Adonijah feared because of Solomon, and arose, and went, and caught hold on the horns of the altar."

Several altars with horns, from Solomon's times, were discovered in Megiddo (Israel); one can be seen in the museum of Antiquities, Jerusalem, Israel.

§ 3 - Alliance of Marriage

(I Kings, III, 1) - "And Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter, and brought her into the city of David, until he had made an end of building his own house, and the house of the Lord, and the wall of Jerusalem round about."

Sculptures of the Pharaoh, most probably Sa-Amon, of the XXI Dynasty, and of Egyptian women of the period, exist in the Cairo Museum. The only other case in history in which a Pharaoh is known to have given his daughter to a foreign king, is Niqmad, king of Ugarit (XIV cent., B.C.). The scene of this marriage is depicted on a vase found in Ugarit (Syria), now in the Louvre.

§ 4 - Gibeon - sacrifices

(I Kings, III, 4,5) - "And the king went to Gibeon to sacrifice there; for that was the great high place; a thousand burnt offerings did Solomon offer upon that altar. In Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night; and God said, Ask what I shall give thee."

Gibeon has recently been excavated by Professor Pritchard on behalf of the University of Pennsylvania, and can be photographed on the spot. (Gibeon, today el-Jib, in Jordan, north of Jerusalem).

§ 5 - Peace

(I Kings, IV, 25) - "And Judah and Israel dwelt safely, every man under his vine and under his fig tree, from Dan even to Beer-Sheba, all the days of Solomon."

Scenes of Dan and Beersheba today, with their ancient mounds (in Israel).

§ 6 - Cedars of the Lebanon

(I Kings, IV, 33, 34) - "And he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things and of fishes. And there came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth, which had heard of his wisdom."

Photos of the Cedars of the Lebanon; the "hyssop that springeth out of the wall" can be seen in the Biblical botanical museum of the Hebrew university.

§ 7 - The barter trader

(I Kings V) - "And Hiram king of Tyre sent his servants unto Solomon; for he had heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father; for Hiram was ever a lover of David. (2) And Solomon sent to Hiram saying, (3) Thou knowest how that David my father could not build an house unto the name of the Lord his God for the wars which were about him on every side, until the Lord put them under the soles of his feet. (4) But now the Lord my God hath given me rest on every side, so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurent. (5) And, behold, I purpose to build an house unto the name of the Lord my God, as the Lord spake unto David my father, saying, Thy son, whom I will set upon they throne in they room, he shall build an house unto my name. (6) Now therefore command thou that they hew me cedar trees out of Lebanon; and my servants shall be with thy servants; and unto thee will I give hire for they servants according to all that thou shalt appoint; for thou knowest that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the Sidonians. (7) And it came to pass when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, that he rejoiced greatly, and said, Blessed be the Lord this day, which hath given unto David a wise son over this great people. (8) And Hiram sent to Solomon saying, I have considered the things which thou sentest to me for; and I will do all thy desire concerning timber of cedar, and concerning timber of fir. (9) my servants shall bring them down from Lebanon unto the sea in floats unto the place that thou shalt appoint me, and will cause them to be discharged there, and thou shalt receive them; and thou shalt accomplish my desire,in giving food for my household. (10) So Hiram gave Solomon cedar trees and fir trees according to all his desire. (11) And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand measures of wheat for food to his household; and twenty measures of pure oil; thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year. (12) And the Lord gave Solomon wisdom as he promised him; and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon; and they two made a league together. (13) And King Solomon raised a levy out of all Israel; and the levy was thirty thousand men. (14) And he sent them to Lebanon, ten thousand a month by courses; a month they were in Lebanon, and two months at home; and Adoniram was over the levy. (15) And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens, and fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains. (16) Beside the chief of Solomon's officers which were over the work, three thousand and three hundred, which ruled over the people that wrought in the work. (17) And the king commanded, and they brought great stones, costly stones, and hewed stones, to lay the foundations of the house. (18) And Solomon's builders and Hiram's builders did hew them, and the stonesquarers; so they prepared timber and stones to build the house."

Verse 6: 1) a relief in a Temple of Karnak (Egypt) showing Lebanese hewing cedars for King Sethi I (Ca. 1300 B.C.)

" 9: 2) A beautiful relief in the Louvre - from the palace of Sargon in Khorsabad - showing how logs of cedars are being conveyed "by sea in floats".

§ 8 - The Temple

(I Kings, VI) - "... "

Nothing remains. The site is known to be under the Harem esh-Sherif in the Old City of Jerusalem, The Biblical description however, enables us to reconstruct the plans along general lines. Only two similar temples are known.

a) in Tell Tayanat, in the Alexandretta region of Turkey. (and in the Museum of Antioch).

b) in Hazor. The temple is visible and can be photographed.

On the basis of the description and finds, a model was built by Prof. Paul Garber (formerly at Agnes Scott College, Decatur, Ga.); it is a beautiful model (scale 3/8" to a cubit; the cubit was about 0,5 meters), and can be opened so that the inside can be seen. Details can be obtained from Prof. Garber or from his partner, E.G. Rowland, 609 Michigan Ave., Troy, Ohio. For details mentioned in the Biblical description many archaeological examples exist; some are described in the "Biblical Archaeologist", Vol. XIV, Feb., 1951, No.1 (published by the American Schools of Oriental Research (Drawer 93 A, Yale Station, New Haven, Conn.)

Some examples :

a) "Window of narrow lights (VI, 4); Depicted on ivories found at Samaria (British Museum, London); Rockefeller Museum, Jerusalem; Ivories from Nimrud (Baghdad Museum; British Museum).

b) "stone made ready before it was brought thither" (VI,7) - Many stones of Solomon's times, just like these, can be photographed at Megiddo, in Israel.

c) "the cherubs" (VI, 23-28) - not the way cherubs were drawn (rosy cheeked babies) by the great Renaissance artists (pictures in Louvre and other great museums). Cherubs as conceived in ancient times, were winged lions with a human face, and are depicted on ivories to be seen in the British Museum, the Louvre, and the Rockefeller Museum, Jerusalem).

d) Ornamentation (VI, 29) on ivories as above. More examples if needed.

§ 9 - Solomon's smelting operations and copper mines

(I Kings, VII, 46) - "In the plain of Jordan did the king cast them, in the clay ground between Succoth and Zarthan."
The following can be photographed:

(a) The valley of Succoth near the Jordan.
(b) Solomon's mines near Elath.
(c) The refinery - model with Prof. N. Cluck of Cincinnati.
(d) The copper mines of today in Timnah, near Elath.

§ 10 - The Bible as guide book for archaeologists.

(I Kings, IX, 15) - "And this is the reason of the levy which king Solomon raised; for to build the house of the Lord, and his own house, and Millo and the wall of Jerusalem and Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer."

Solomon's gates at Hazor, Megiddo and Gezer. The story of their identification with the help of the above short verse; showing the 100% reliability of the Biblical narrative. The archaeologist as a detective. Photos of Megiddo, Gezer and Hazor, with maps and models (the latter exist in the Museum at Megiddo, in Israel). The results of excavations showing an office of architects and military engineers and all three cities and fortifications built according to a single master plan.

§ 11 - Solomon the seafarer and trader

(I Kings, IX 26-28; X,22) "And king Solomon made a navy of ships in Ezion Geber, which is beside Eloth, on the shore of the Red Sea, in the land of Edom. (27) And Hiram sent in the navy his servants, shipmen that had knowledge of the sea, with the servants of Solomon (28) And they came to Ophir and fetched from thence gold, four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to King Solomon. (X,22) For the king had at sea a navy of Tharshish with the navy of Hiram; once in three years came the navy of Tharshish, bringing gold, and silver, ivory and apes and peacocks."

a. Ezion Geber - Elath - photos of the site.
b. Ophir - perhaps the Egyptian Punt, near the African coast.
c. Reliefs from the famous Temple at Deir el Bahari, in Egypt, from the times of Queen Hatshepsut, showing ships - coming from Punt - loaded with exactly the same goods enumerated in the Bible; elephants' tusks, apes, gold, etc.
d. Gold of Ophir (X,11) - a docket scratched on a sherd, found near Tel-Aviv (now in the antiquities Museum, Jerusalem, Israel), bearing an inscription in the old Hebrew script: "gold of Ophir, 30 shekels".
e. Models of ships of Solomon's times - the historical navigation Museum, Haifa.

§ 12 - Solomon and the Queen of Sheba

(I Kings, X, 1-2) "And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord, she came to prove him with hard questions. (2) And she came to Jerusalem with a very great train, with camels that bare spices, and very much gold, and precious stones; and when she was come to Solomon, she ~~commended~~ communed with him of all that was in her heart".

a. Photographs to be made in the Land of Sheba, Yemen; photos of objects from this land in Museum in the U.S. (Johns Hopkins, Baltimore; contact Prof. W.F.Albright).
b. Camel riders of Solomon's times; relief from Tell Halaf (Syria) in the Waters Art Gallery, Baltimore).
c. Camels in the Negev, etc.
d. (X,2~~0~~19,15) Spices - photos of the trade of spices in Yemen; markets of Cairo, Damascus, etc.

§ 13 - The Throne of Solomon

(I Kings, X, 18, 19 ff.) "Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with the best gold. (19) The throne had six steps, and the top throne was round behind; and there wase stays on either side on the place of the seat, and two lions stood beside the stays..."

a. Similar throne with lions; the Sarcophagus of King Ahiram of Tyre; now in the archaeological museum in Beirut.
b. a king of Megiddo on his throne - an ivory relief at the Rockefeller museum, Jerusalem, Jordan.

§ 14 - Solomon the charioteer and the horse trader.

(I Kings, X, 26) "And Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen; and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he bestowed in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jerusalem. (X,28, Albright's translation) And Solomon's horses were exported from Egypt and from Cilicia (in Asia Minor where fine horses were bred). The merchants of the king procured them from Cilicia at the current price; and a chariot was exported from Egypt at the rate of six hundred shekels of silver and a horse (from Silicia) at the rate of a hundred fifty. And thus (at this rate) they delivered them by their agency to all the kings of the Hittites and all the kings of Aram".

a. "Solomon's stables" at Megiddo - photos on the spot and of models in Jerusalem (a discussion: are they Solomon's or not?)
b. Reliefs of horses and chariots of Solomon's times, Hittites and Aramaeans, from Tell Halaf, Seinjirli, Carchemish and other places at the following museums: The British Museum, Louvre, Ankara, Istanbul.

§ 15 - Script and Calendar.

The famous agricultural calendar of Solomon's times found in Gezer and now in the Istanbul Museum.

.....

The above material is arranged according to the order of its appearance in the scriptures; it can be arranged of course, in many other ways.

.....

Suggestions for a programme:

1. What we know of Solomon from the Bible.
2. The Evidence.
3. What mean these stones? - a discussion between experts:
   Prof. W.F. Albright of Johns Hopkins (or Prof.G.E.Wright of Harvard Divinity School), Mr. Richard Barnett, curator of Near Eastern archaeology in the British Museum; Prof. A. Parrot, director of the Near Eastern Section, Louvre; Y. Yadin?.

.....

Suggestions for further programmes:

1. Moses.
2. St. Paul
3. The Dead Sea Scrolls.
4. The Battle of Armageddeon (from Thutmoses III, Joshua, Deborrah, King Joshia, down to Lord Allenby, the Israeli Arab war, and the Battle of Armageddeon at the "End of the Days".
5. The story of the alpha beth.
6. Interview with Biblical characters: The monuments of Egyptian, Assyrian and Babylonian kings, mentioned in the Bible.

.....

Soloveytchik, Geo.

April 22, 1958

Dear George:

I am sorry that I was not available when you telephoned, but I am sorry to say that is the way my schedule goes these days.

I, too, regret that it has not been possible for us to meet during your stay in New York and hope that we can catch up with each other at some future time.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. George Soloveytchik
Great Northern Hotel
118 West 57 Street
New York, New York

mec

FROM GEORGE SOLOVEYTCHIK

Sunday, 13 April 1958

GREAT NORTHERN HOTEL
COCKTAIL LOUNGE • RESTAURANT • GRILL
118 WEST 57th STREET, NEW YORK 19, N. Y.
Telephone CIRCLE 7-1900
CABLE ADDRESS "NORTHHOTEL"

Dear Ed,

I called you at 4 p.m. on Friday - as suggested by you. But once again I failed to get beyond your secretary - this was the third or fourth unsuccessful attempt since arriving here five months ago.

On the 28th of April I leave for Europe and shall be at the Connaught from mid-June to mid August.

It saddens me to have to leave the U.S. without our traditional exchange of views.

All the best.

Sincerely George Soloveytchik

Frank Sommers

CBS TELEVISION NETWORK

Office Communication

to: Edward R. Murrow

July 29, 1959.

from: Frank W. Somers, AEIC, TUTO. EXT 525

f

Sir:

In connection with your recently reported Naval affiliation, may I take this opportunity to offer my congragulations. If at any time I can be of assistance in a technical capacity please let me know.

6

Frank W. Somers
CDR- USNR-R

Sonino, Max.
F

May 20, 1959

Mr. Max Sonino
453 West 21st Street
New York 11, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Sonino:

Thank you for your letter of May 11 and its enclosure.

As I explained to you during our most pleasant conversation, I have nothing to do with programming on the network and therefore cannot make decisions in that area. I am therefore sending your proposal to our Director of Public Affairs, Irving Gitlin, who will I am sure give it his prompt and sympathetic consideration, and he will no doubt communicate directly with you.

Please convey my sincere regards to Mrs. Sonino.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

Sonino, Max & Gillmore, Ruth

CEIVED
1959 MAY -7 AM 9:42
C B S TELETYPE ROOM N

WU002 DL PD

NEWYORK NY MAY 7 751A

EDWARD R MURROW CBS

THERE WAS NO ONE MORE DESERVING OF THE EMMY YOU RECEIVED PLUS THE ADMIRATION AND GRATITUDE OF THE AMERICAN PUBLIC STOP WE ARE MOST HAPPY FOR YOU OUR SINCERE CONGRATULATIONS

RUTH GILLMORE AND MAX SONINO

825A..

Douglas Sorenson

September 9, 1959

Mr. Douglas Sorenson
Wisconsin Agriculturist
1125 Sixth Street
Racine, Wisconsin

Dear Mr. Sorenson:

It was most thoughtful of you to send Mr. Murrow a copy of the WISCONSIN AGRICULTURIST, and I shall keep it here for him to look at as soon as he returns from his world travels. Thank you so much for writing to him as you did.

Sincerely yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

AMERICA'S DAIRYLAND
WISCONSIN
Agriculturist
SERVING WISCONSIN FARM FAMILIES 110 YEARS • 1125 Sixth St., Racine, Wisconsin

August 10, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS News Correspondent
Pawling, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Now that you have gone into temporary "retirement," I'm sure you will be flooded with letters from people like me who feel you have more time to read.

I think it's a wonderful idea to take a leave of absence while you are still in the prime of your career. Although we already miss your voice on radio at 6:45 every evening, we are glad to know that you are relaxing and will come back next summer with refreshing views and ideas.

I have been an Ed Murrow admirer since I first heard your voice in the early World War II days reporting from London.

Today Mrs. Sorenson and I are faithful listeners to your timely and accurate analyses of the world news picture as well as your interesting comments on American social customs. We especially enjoyed your commentary on the "liberation of the male neck and knee."

Although I haven't freed my knees by wearing Bermuda shorts, my neck has been liberated from the necktie.

My open-throated sport shirt has become my trademark and the wearing of a tie always incites a comment by my office staff.

Since agriculture is my business and your sideline, I thought you might be interested in seeing our publication. We are the leading farm paper in this state with 200,000 subscribers.

We are rather proud to be the official voice of Wisconsin farmers. We think we feel the pulse of the farm population, especially through our opinion polls. We have had rather high accuracy in our political polls which are popular at election times. We are one of the oldest samplers of farm opinion, dating back to the early 40's.

WISCONSIN AGRICULTURIST
Racine, Wisconsin

I hope you may glance at our publication when you get time. Our very best wishes for a relaxing vacation and a pleasant journey wherever you travel during the next year.

Sincerely,

Douglas Sorenson

Douglas Sorenson
Managing Editor

DS/ps

Enc.

Soustelle, Jacques

RÉPUBLIQUE FRANÇAISE

LIBERTÉ - ÉGALITÉ - FRATERNITÉ

JS/MH.

MINISTÈRE DE L'INFORMATION

LE MINISTRE

PARIS, LE December 19th.58

36, AVENUE DE FRIEDLAND (8e)

WAG. 88-55

Dear Mr Murrow :

Thank you very much for your kind letter of November 18 and the enclosed check.

I have seen the film recently and I think you made a really good job for which I send you my congratulations.

Yours sincerely,

Jacques Soustelle

(Jacques Soustelle)

Mr Ed. R. MURROW
485, Madison Avenue
New-York, N.Y.
(U.S.A.)

Spalding, Eugenia

Sorry - No Time, etc.

7

Apartment 96
106 Morningside Drive
New York 27, New York
March 28, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Vice President, C.B.S.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am about to revise my book Professional Nursing: Trends and Relationships.

Because I think it is important to get your point of view, I am wondering if you would be willing to review the enclosed material. I do not intend for you to spend any great amount of time on this but wonder if you would be willing to read it and make comments, on the blank pages, which might occur to you.

If you have suggestions on references and problems you believe are important for students to consider in this area, I should be glad to have those also.

If you do not have time to do this, I shall certainly understand. In that case just enclose the material in the attached envelope and return to me.

If you are willing to do this I should appreciate it if you could send me, when you return the material, information on how you would desire to have your name and title listed under acknowledgments. A 3x5 card is enclosed for you to use for this purpose.

Sincerely,

Eugenia K. Spalding

(Mrs.) Eugenia K. Spalding
Professor of Nursing Education
Teachers College
Columbia University

Ret'd material.

EKS:kec

Spargur, Ronn
A.T.D.C.

SINGEL 386 AMSTERDAM C, THE NETHERLANDS
PH. 48271 CABLE: INTCOUNCIL, AMSTERDAM

801 HADDON AVENUE, COLLINGSWOOD, N. J., U.S.A.
PH. CO. 5-4248 CABLE: INTCOUNCIL, COLLINGSWOOD

OFFICE OF PUBLIC RELATIONS:

January 27, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

In your note of January 22nd there was enclosed a summary of a suggested television series, "Television Examines the Press." If I may, I should like to make a few comments and observations.

Frankly, I think such a series is long overdue. As your summary notes, it should not be sponsored from a revenge motive stimulated by the field day newspaper critics have had with the stage, movies, and television. It should be developed with the idea in mind of offering fresh, provocative television viewing and performing at the same time a valuable service to the press.

I am inclined to think the press is in the situation today of the person in the old cliche who "could not see the forest for the trees." Other than profession-sponsored criticism (which is not always the objective force it tries to be), newspapers, critically, have been left to the occasional rousings of public sentiment against some unusually slanted bit of journalistic prose. This is not a healthy situation. There needs to be some other system of checks and balances established to keep newsmen on their toes and alert to the well-rounded coverage of news expected from a free press.

Perhaps a program of the nature you suggest could supply a constructive critical set of checks and balances. At the same time, a tendency to play personalities would have to be studiously avoided if an honest service is to be performed. Approached in the proper manner, I think the press would welcome a program of this type. And I think the reading, thinking public would applaud such an effort as it attempts to encourage the complete, undistorted reporting of the many-faceted news of today.

Sincerely yours,

Ronn Spargur
Director of Public Relations

RS:n

PRESIDENT:
Dr. Carl McIntire
Collingswood, N. J.

FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT:
Dr. Robert T. Hetcham
Chicago, Ill.

TREASURER:
Rev. Raymond F. Hamilton
Chicago, Ill.

ASSOCIATE GENERAL SEC'Y:
Burgomaster A. Warnaar, Jr.
Amsterdam, The Netherlands

SECRETARY FOR EUROPE:
Ds. J. C. Maris
Amsterdam, The Netherlands

VICE-PRESIDENTS:

Dr. Albert B. Dodd
Tamsui, Formosa

Dr. David Hedegard
Mjolby, Sweden

Rev. W. H. Guiton
Courbevoie, Seine, France

Rev. Francisco A. Pereira
Sao Paulo, Brazil

Rev. Baudilio Saavedra Burgos
Chillan, Chile

Dr. H. C. Slade
Toronto, Canada

Rev. Antonio F. Ormeo
Manila, Philippines

Dr. Harland J. O'Dell
Canton, Ohio

Rev. Timothy Tow Siang Hui
Singapore, Malaya

Prof. J. J. van der Schuit
Utrecht, The Netherlands

Rev. W. J. Grier
Belfast, N. Ireland

Mr. E. C. Eicher
Beirut, Lebanon

Dr. Israel F. Gueiros
Recife, Brazil

January 22, 1959

Dear Mr. Spargur:

Many thanks for your very nice letter and calendar.

It was indeed most thoughtful of you to remember me at Christmas time.

Here's wishing you a happy new year!

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Ronn Spargur
Director of Public Relations
International Council of Christian Churches
801 Haddon Avenue
Collingswood, New Jersey

mcc

SINGEL 386 AMSTERDAM C, THE NETHERLANDS
PH. 48271 CABLE: INTCOUNCIL, AMSTERDAM

801 HADDON AVENUE, COLLINGSWOOD, N. J., U.S.A.
PH. CO. 5-4248 CABLE: INTCOUNCIL, COLLINGSWOOD

OFFICE OF PUBLIC RELATIONS:

Tuf

December 22, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS News
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

At this Holiday Season we wish to thank you for receiving and considering our news during the past year. We appreciate your fair appraisal of our news and your good use of it when possible.

We are enclosing our five-year calendar and hope you will find it useful and a reminder of the International Council and its world-wide activities.

May we wish for you and yours the most pleasant Christmas Season in your experience.

Sincerely yours,

Ronn Spargur

Ronn Spargur
Director of Public Relations

RS:n

Enclosure

PRESIDENT:
Dr. Carl McIntire
Collingswood, N. J.

FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT:
Dr. Robert T. Ketcham
Chicago, Ill.

TREASURER:
Rev. Raymond F. Hamilton
Chicago, Ill.

ASSOCIATE GENERAL SEC'Y:
Burgomaster A. Warnaar, Jr.
Amsterdam, The Netherlands

SECRETARY FOR EUROPE:
Ds. J. C. Maris
Amsterdam, The Netherlands

VICE-PRESIDENTS:

Dr. Albert B. Dodd
Tamsui, Formosa

Dr. David Hedegard
Mjolby, Sweden

Rev. W. H. Guiton
Courbevoie, Seine, France

Rev. Francisco A. Pereira
Sao Paulo, Brazil

Rev. Baudilio Saavedra Burgos
Chillan, Chile

Dr. H. C. Slade
Toronto, Canada

Rev. Antonio F. Ormeo
Manila, Philippines

Dr. Harland J. O'Dell
Canton, Ohio

Rev. Timothy Tow Siang Hui
Singapore, Malaya

Prof. J. J. van der Schuit
Utrecht, The Netherlands

Rev. W. J. Grier
Belfast, N. Ireland

Mr. E. C. Eicher
Beirut, Lebanon

Dr. Israel F. Gueiros
Recife, Brazil

Spargur, Ronn

September 25, 1958

Dear Mr. Spargur:

Thank you for your nice letter of September 19th telling me about the Fourth Plenary Congress of the International Council of Christian Churches.

It was very nice of you to take the time to write me about it. I appreciate your thoughtfulness.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Ronn Spargur
The International Council of Christian Churches
15 Park Row
New York, New York

mcc

THE International Council OF CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

International Headquarters: SINGEL 386, AMSTERDAM C., THE NETHERLANDS · Telephone 48271 · Cable Address: INTCOUNCIL AMSTERDAM
United States Headquarters: 15 PARK ROW, NEW YORK 38, N. Y. · Telephone Colls 5-4248 · Cable Address: INTCOUNCIL COLLINGSWOOD

President
REV. CARL McINTIRE, D.D.
Pastor, Bible Presbyterian Church
Collingswood, N. J., U. S. A.

First Vice President
REV. KENNETH R. KINNEY, D.D.
Pastor, First Baptist Church
Johnson City, N. Y., U. S. A.

Vice-Presidents
PROF. J. J. van der SCHUIT
Theological Seminary of the Christian Reformed Churches
Apeldoorn, The Netherlands

REV. H. C. SLADE, D.D.
Pastor, Jarvis Street Baptist Church
Toronto, Canada

REV. W. O. H. GARMAN, D.D.
Pastor, Callender Memorial Church
Wilkinsburg, Pa., U. S. A.

REV. W. H. GUITON
Editor, Le Cri d'Alarme
Courbevoie, Seine, France

PROF. DAVID HEDEGARD, TH.D.
President, Bible League of Sweden
Tuddarp, Motala, Sweden

REV. FRANCISCO A. PEREIRA, JR.
Conservative Presbyterian Church
Sao Paulo, Brazil, S.A.

REV. BAUDILIO SAAVEDRA
National Presbyterian Church
Chillan, Chile, S. A.

REV. A. B. DODD, D.D.
Independent Board for Presbyterian Foreign Missions Formosa Mission
Mackay Crescent, Tamsui, Formosa

REV. ANTONIO F. ORMEO
Pastor, Bethel Baptist Church
Malaybalay, The Philippines

REV. W. J. GRIER
Pastor, Botanic Ave., Evangelical Church
Belfast, North Ireland

REV. BOON MARK GITTISARN
Pastor, Independent Thai Church of Bangkok
Bangkok, Thailand

Associate General Secretary
MR. A. WARNAAR, JR.
Amsterdam C, The Netherlands

Secretary for Europe
DS. J. C. MARIS
Amsterdam C, The Netherlands

Treasurer
REV. RAYMOND F. HAMILTON
Pastor, Belden Avenue Baptist Church
2309 N. Halsted Street
Chicago 14, Illinois, U. S. A.

19 September 1958

Edward R. Murrow
CBS News
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Ave.
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Enclosed for your information is a complete set of releases from the Fourth Plenary Congress of the International Council of Christian Churches. The Congress was held at the Hotel Quitandinha, Rio-Petropolis, Brazil, August 12 to 21, this year.

While the Congress was accorded the greatest press, radio and television coverage ever given a Protestant meeting in Brazil, or South America for that matter, reports about the Congress in the American press were slim. This is not the fault of the bureau men in Brazil. Lou Stein, UPI; Tom Clark, AP; Ted Sulzc, NY Times, Jane Bragan, Reuters and Hank Johnston, TIME, received our material and used it. I saw the daily releases that went on the wire, taken from this material. What happened after the information reached the States cannot be determined. But it is apparant that little of it was placed on the national wires.

This is somewhat strange when it is recalled that the London Daily Express wired Brazil for special coverage of the Congress and that numerous European and Australian sources asked constantly for information. Why the Congress and its work and implications was ignored in the United States with its reputation for a "fair" press, is a mystery.

Here, for your files, is a picture of what went on in Brazil where representatives from 63 Protestant denominations gathered in an international convention.

Sincerely yours,

Ronn Spargur
Director of Public Relations

RS:n

Sparling, Ed.

May 28, 1958

Dear Dr. Sparling:

Very many thanks for your cordial letter of May 20th and for sending me the brochure of the plans to restore the famous Adler-Sullivan building and the Auditorium Theatre.

The plans are handsome and impressive, and I am grateful to you for letting me have a glimpse of them.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Dr. Edward J. Sparling
Roosevelt University
430 South Michigan Avenue
Chicago 5, Illinois

mcc

ROOSEVELT
UNIVERSITY
430 SOUTH MICHIGAN AVENUE
CHICAGO 5, ILLINOIS

OFFICE OF THE
PRESIDENT

TELEPHONE
WAbash 2-3580

May 20, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Because of your interest in Roosevelt University I thought you would like to see the enclosed brochure which has been a year in the making and is just off press. It shows our long range plans to restore the famous Adler-Sullivan building in which Roosevelt University makes its home, and to restore the Auditorium Theatre which should long since have been made available for the furtherance of the cultural life of the Chicago community, the midwest and indeed the nation.

When the timing is ripe we would appreciate being able to call upon you for advice as to how the television networks might best make use of the theater for outstanding educational and cultural programming. Our ultimate interest in having this beautiful theater useful once again as a center for the performing arts is to promote the best in education and culture at the lowest possible cost for the largest number of people.

Your own vision and standards made me confident that you would like to peruse this booklet and to know of our long-range objectives.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Edward J. Sparling

Edward J. Sparling
President

Sparling, Edw J

ROOSEVELT UNIVERSITY
430 SOUTH MICHIGAN AVENUE
CHICAGO 5, ILLINOIS • WABASH 2-3580

February 11, 1958

don't reply to

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Roosevelt University came into being twelve years ago. Since that time more than 35,000 men and women have enrolled and over 7,000 have been awarded degrees.

The accompanying booklet tells a story that could not have been told until now. While we have been confident of the success of our undertaking, we needed the measures of faculty competence, institutional policies, quality of graduates, and contribution to community life that only a decade of time could provide.

We are pleased to make this brochure available to you.

Cordially yours,

Edward J. Sparling

Edward J. Sparling
President

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Spence, Sylvia

Sylvia Spence Associates AWARD CONSULTANTS AND MANAGERS

Suite 515
527 Lexington Avenue
New York 17, N. Y.
PLaza 5-2584

October 6, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Thank you for your good letter.

Yes, I do have some ideas on the subject of an Elmer Davis Award. I can also get some financial support for the project if needed.

Will your schedule permit you to lunch with me one day soon? Would you want to bring along any of the other members of the committee?

Why don't you have your secretary call me and we can set a date at your convenience.

Sincerely yours,

Sylvia Spence

Sylvia Spence

February 5, 1958

Dear Miss Spence:

Thanks very much for your gracious note.

I am afraid I took a rather circuitous route in trying to say what I wanted to say, but it's good that you approved.

Thanks again for writing.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Sylvia Spence
Suite 515
527 Lexington Avenue
New York 17, New York

fc

Sylvia Spence Associates AWARD CONSULTANTS AND MANAGERS

Suite 515
527 Lexington Avenue
New York 17, N. Y.
PLaza 5-2584

January 17, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS-TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It was a delight to see you win another award last night at the Sylvania dinner! But I know this is old hat to you. I was much more intrigued with your brief speech of acceptance. My congratulations to you on having the courage of your convictions. I sat at a table with Thompson people; I think they're still sitting there with their mouths hanging open.

With kindest personal regards to you and Mr. Friendly.

Sincerely yours,

Sylvia Spence

Sylvia Spence

Sprenger, Rev. W. E.

October 22, 1958

The Rev. William E. Sprenger
New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society
38 Bleecker Street
New York 12, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Sprenger:

Thank you for your letter of October 20 and the enclosures. This is interesting material but, now that SEE IT NOW has gone off the air, I no longer dispose of airtime in which to undertake programs of this nature. I have therefore passed your letter to Mr. Sig Mickelson, our Vice-President in charge of News and Public Affairs, in the hope that he may be able to find a use for it.

Yours sincerely,

ERM:skh

Sprouse, John

March 9, 1959

Dear Mrs. Sprouse:

Thank you for sending me the article that appeared in the Greensboro Daily News.

I appreciate your kind thought.

Sincerely,

Mrs. John Sprouse
1828 Willora St.
Greensboro, North Carolina

SOUTHERN BELL TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY

TMf

Greensboro, N. C.
Feb. 11, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Co.
New York, New York

Dear Sir:

Attached you will find a copy of an article that appeared in the Greensboro Daily News, Greensboro, N. C.

Yours very truly,
Mrs John Sprouse
Mrs. John Sprouse
1828 Willora St.
Greensboro, N. C.

Enclosure

MONDAY MOANIN'

Knights Of Bath Puzzle People

By W. RHODES WEAVER
Daily News Staff Writer

It takes a long time for some stories to come to light. This one, comin' from Kay King Kimbrough, is about an incident durin' Greensboro's water shortage in the fall of 1954.

Folks were rationed to 15 gallons of water per day.

Out in one of the residential sections where houses are bigger, a neighbor noticed two men come up the drive, clothin' over their arms. She knew her neighbors were away.

torney and law book editor, is the grandson of Stephen A. Douglas of the Lincoln-Douglas debates.

There's due to be a downtown book shop window with log cabin, rail fence and red soil from the farm where Lincoln was born, furnished by Horace Johnson, who represents a national life insurance firm. And there's to be a TV program at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Speakin' of TV, we enjoyed meetin' Marc Connelly, the "Happy Birth-aversary!" Don't try to say it three times fast!

C. K. Fitzgerald of Whitsett offers this formula for reachin' the moon: "Take soap ad claims, mix with headaches and antiacid remedies, which cure everything, except sleeping sickness; rub in some excess TV commercials, especially the re-run film type. Reduce to atoms, and you should have enough power to send a man to the moon and back."

Mark your calendar. March

Spry, Graham

April 2, 1959

Mr. Graham Spry
28 Chester Street
Belgrave Square
London S.W. 1.

Dear Mr. Spry:

I hope you will have had a better journey back to England than you must have had on your way to New York in the QUEEN ELIZABETH. I am writing to let you know that Mr. Murrow was in Europe on assignment at the time of your brief visit to New York. He will be sorry to have missed you, and I hope you will not be discouraged from contacting him again on your next visit.

Sincerely yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

GRAHAM SPRY

TELEPHONE:- SLOANE 0641.

CABLES:- GRASPRY, LONDON.

28, CHESTER STREET,

BELGRAVE SQUARE,

LONDON, S.W. 1.

13th March, 1959.
ref: S/RL.

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.,
485 Madison Avenue,
NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

May I refer you to our correspondence in Nov/Dec. last year?

I shall be in New York from the arrival of the QUEEN ELIZABETH on March 31st until the night of April 1st. If you have a moment to spare I would much appreciate the opportunity of calling on you.

If possible I may ask to appear before a parliamentary committee on broadcasting in Ottawa now being set up. It would certainly be useful to me to hear some of your views on the television situation in the United States and how far any of the changes you proposed in your address in Chicago have any chance of being introduced.

I shall be at the New Weston Hotel, 50th and Madison, and if you are in town could meet your convenience at any time.

Yours sincerely,

Graham Spry

Graham Spry.

GS/emh.

PL 3.4800

ypc -

December 16, 1958

Mr. Graham Spry
28 Chester Street
Belgrave Square
London S.W. 1.

Dear Mr. Spry:

Thank you for your kind words about the Chicago speech. It was something I had had on my mind for some time.

I do indeed remember you from our wartime days. When you are next in New York, it would be pleasant to renew our acquaintance.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

GRAHAM SPRY

TELEPHONE:- SLOANE 0641.

CABLES:- GRASPRY, LONDON.

28, CHESTER STREET,
BELGRAVE SQUARE,
LONDON, S.W. 1.

1st December, 1958
S/RL

mcc

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am most obliged for the copy of your Speech to the News Directors' Convention in Chicago which is even more striking than "The Times" report on November 17th suggested.

I divide my time between North America and Britain and what startles me is how tolerant the public is of poor popular programmes. Your Address hits the nail exactly on the head.

I used to meet you occasionally during the War (I was on the Staff of Sir Stafford Cripps), and during last summer I was in Ottawa as a Canadian interesting myself in government policy towards the Canadian Broadcasting structure. My general views were similar to those of Mr. Fowler's Royal Commission which I know you helped very greatly when they were in New York. Our new set-up in Canada is an interesting one, but whether they will be able to resist the pressure of advertisers remains to be seen. I personally think they will.

Thank you again for the copy of your Address.

Yours sincerely,

Graham Spry

Graham Spry

gs-dt

Stabler, Sydney

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION
TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

1201

SYMBOLS

DL=Day Letter

NL=Night Letter

LT=International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

(40)

NA329 PD=HY HYATTSVILLE MD 3 958PME=

EDWARD R MURROW, DLR=

KL=

1959 FEB 3 PM 10 43

I AGREE WITH YOU WE SHOULD GIVE CONSTRUCTIVE THOUGHT TO TV, WHICH IS OUR BEST MEANS OF COMMUNICATIONS WOULD YOU KINDLY CALL ME WHEN YOU HAVE THE OPPORTUNITY AT EMERSON 31800 3428 CONNECTICUT AVENUE WASHINGTON DC=

SYDNEY STABLER=

Ignore.

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

Stafford, Mrs. M.

August 27, 1958

Mrs. Myrtle M. Stafford
414 Holcomb Street
Springdale, Arkansas

Dear Mrs. Stafford:

Thank you for your letter of August 22, which has arrived here during Mr. Murrow's vacation.

I think that you have probably got all the information from your library researches that we could give you, as these volumes contain very accurate information. However, I can certainly provide you with something that the library cannot, in the shape of a picture of Mr. Murrow, and I send it with our good wishes.

Very truly yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

enc. 1

Springdale, Arkansas
August 22, 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow.-Have been assigned the first program in our PEO chapter for Tuesday, Sept.2 on "My Favorite TV Personality" and I have chosen you.

Spent part of the morning in our local library jotting down notes from the biography in the "Current Biography" by the H.W.Wilson Company but it was issued in 1953. Though I found interesting and pertinent facts about you-I do so want something about you of much more recent date. So-o-o I thot of writing you and asking for something-and perhaps a picture-am I not the daring one?

Well at the age of 75(will be 76 come Nov.13) one can afford to be and since you COULD be my son as far as age is concerned(my older daughter born in 1908) I can afford to be daring.

also

Installed my TV set in December, 1954 and what fun I had learning channels etc and rather stumbled onto "Person to Person" and it has been a "must" ever since except when impossible to watch same. Many of them have been extremely interesting and YOUR part always so of course.

Some disillusioning-"fer instance"-at least to me-The Duchess of Windsor(IS there a d in that word?). I had more or less admired her til them, but her nervousness or-shall we call it "jumpiness" kinda irritated me-had thought her slow and calm-if you know what I mean. The Duke was quite okay.

I believe you will continue it soon and am wondering whom we shall see-you may be sure I'll be watching.

So if you can give me any helps at this late hour, gratitude will indeed be part of my name along with the signature below. Airmail stamp enclosed to speed the helps to me.

Very sincerely and appreciatively yours,

(Mrs. Jno. P.) Myrtle M. Stafford
414 Holcomb St

Been widow since Sept. 1933 - have 2 daughters and one son,

Stoutenberg, Ellen

August 20, 1958

Dear Miss Stoutenberg:

I have your kind letter of August 11th and regret to have to tell you that it will not be possible for me to participate in your series of programs called "Search for Peace".

Unfortunately, I find my existing schedule so heavy that it is impossible for me to undertake anything in addition.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Ellen Stoutenberg
WIP
35 South Ninth Street
Philadelphia 7, Pennsylvania

mcc

PHILADELPHIA'S PIONEER VOICE

WIP/610 ON YOUR DIAL

PENNSYLVANIA BROADCASTING COMPANY • 35 SOUTH NINTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA 7, PA. • WALNUT 2-68

August 11, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

WIP has initiated a series of programs called "Search for Peace" featuring commentaries by informed people on critical problems now facing the world today. The series, now in its fourth month, will continue for a year. A program folder for the month of August is enclosed.

"Search for Peace" has two purposes: to bring to the widest possible audience an opportunity for growth and understanding, and to encourage other commercial radio stations to participate more actively in educational and public service programming.

To this end, we have arranged for the Junior Leagues and World Affairs Councils of America to offer the "Search for Peace" series, without charge and without credit to this station, to radio stations in 250 cities.

We would like to bring your broad knowledge and experience to "Search for Peace" series. Commentaries may be of whatever length or viewpoint the individuals deem important to the subject of peace. If you will help us in this project, we will be happy to tape record such a commentary at a time and place convenient to you.

May we hear from you?

Sincerely,

Ellen Stoutenberg

Ellen Stoutenberg
Assistant Program Director

ES/b
Encl.

Search for Peace

"There is no ill which may not be dissipated like the dark, if you let in a stronger light upon it. If the light we use is but a paltry and narrow taper, most objects will cast a shadow wider than themselves."

Thoreau

August, 1958

World peace will never come because we wish for it, nor will we come upon it accidentally. It must be sought, fervently and purposefully, as we must actively seek anything which is worthwhile.

In the belief that finding peace is the noblest of all purposes, Radio Station WIP has opened its microphones not only to the world's distinguished citizens but to those people who have earnest thoughts on peace and who have not, until now, had a medium of expression.

If only one idea in our Search for Peace is heard by one thinking person who acts upon it, our purpose will be accomplished.

Bernard Gimbel Jr

Search for Peace

Program Schedule for August, 1958

Station WIP

Saturday, August 2 ..... 6:15 PM
MARTIN NIEMOELLER (Part I)
World Renowned Lutheran Churchman

Sunday, August 3 ..... 7:30 PM
GEORGE F. KENNAN (Lecture VI)
Former U. S. Ambassador to Russia

Monday, August 4 ..... 10:00 PM
DR. JOHN LUKACS
Professor of History, La Salle College

Saturday, August 9 ..... 6:10 PM
ROBERT STRAUSZ-HUPE
Foreign Policy Institute Director—Univ. of Pa.

Sunday, August 10 ..... 7:30 PM
EUGENE LYONS
Senior Editor—Reader's Digest

Thursday, August 14 ..... 10:30 PM
GEORGE F. KENNAN
Reith Series Press Conference

Saturday, August 16 ..... 6:15 PM
H. E. DANIEL CHAPMAN
Ambassador to U. S. from Ghana

Sunday, August 17 ..... 7:30 PM
NORMAN COUSINS
Editor—Saturday Review

Mon., Aug. 18, thru Fri., Aug. 22 .... 8:00 PM
THE ROCKEFELLER REPORT
"Education and the Future of America"

Saturday, August 23 ..... 6:15 PM
ROBERT F. HURLEIGH
Chief Washington Correspondent—Mutual Broadcasting System

Sunday, August 24 ..... 7:35 PM
MARTIN NIEMOELLER (Part II)

Wednesday, August 27 ..... 10:45 PM
ELIZABETH HELLER
Director—Share Your Birthday Foundation

Saturday, August 30 ..... 6:15 PM
HUGH MOORE
President of The Hugh Moore Fund

Sunday, August 31 ..... 7:30 PM
OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN II

610 on your AM radio dial
93.3 on your FM radio dial

WIP/610 WIP-FM/93.3

These are some of the informed people who have been heard on

Search for Peace

ANTHONY DREXEL BIDDLE
EUGENE CARSON BLAKE
PEARL BUCK
CLIFFORD CASE
NORMAN COUSINS
THOMAS K. FINLETTER
C. SCOTT FLETCHER
OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN II
PAUL HOFFMAN
GEORGE F. KENNAN
WALTER LIPPMANN
MARTIN NIEMOELLER
DREW PEARSON
LESTER PEARSON
SIR LESLIE PLUMMER
BERTRAND RUSSELL
HARRY SCHWARTZ
ROBERT STRAUSZ-HUPE
ARNOLD TOYNBEE
JESSAMYN WEST

We invite your comments on this program series.

Write to: "Search for Peace"
Radio Station WIP
35 S. 9th Street
Philadelphia 7, Pa.

"Nothing can bring peace but yourself; nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principles."

Emerson

World peace will never come because we simply wish for it, nor will we come upon it accidentally. It must be sought, fervently and purposefully, as we must actively seek anything which is worthwhile.

In the belief that finding peace is the noblest of all purposes, Radio Station WIP has opened its microphones not only to the world's distinguished citizens but to those people who have earnest thoughts on peace and who have not, until now, had a medium of expression.

If only one idea in our Search for Peace is heard by one thinking person who acts upon it, our purpose will be accomplished.

Bernard Gimbel Jr

Search for Peace

Program Schedule for

June, 1958

Station WIP

Sunday, June 1 ..... 7:30 PM
HARRY SCHWARTZ
Russian Authority – New York Times

Wednesday, June 4 ..... 10:45 PM
WALTER LIPPMANN
Noted Political Analyst

Saturday, June 7 ..... 6:15 PM
PAUL G. HOFFMAN
White House Advisor

Sunday, June 8 ..... 7:35 PM
ARNOLD J. TOYNBEE
Leading Contemporary Historian

Monday, June 9 ..... 10:00 PM
"THE STALIN MYTH" (Part 1)
A dramatization of Isaac Deutscher's "Stalin – A Political Biography."

Saturday, June 14 ..... 7:45 PM
GAYLORD P. HARNWELL
President of the University of Pennsylvania

Sunday, June 15 ..... 7:30 PM
THOMAS FINLETTER
Former Secretary of the Air Force

Monday, June 16 ..... 10:00 PM
"THE STALIN MYTH" (Part 2)

Saturday, June 21 ..... 6:15 PM
SIR LESLIE PLUMMER
Member of English Parliament

Sunday, June 22 ..... 7:35 PM
OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN II

Monday, June 23 ..... 10:00 PM
"THE STALIN MYTH" (Part 3)

Saturday, June 28 ..... 6:15 PM
JOSEPH S. CLARK
U. S. Senator from Pennsylvania

Sunday, June 29 ..... 7:35 PM
ROBERT L. JOHNSON
President of Temple University

610 on your AM radio dial
93.3 on your FM radio dial

WIP/610 WIP-FM/93.3

We invite your comments on this program series.

Write to:

"Search for Peace"
Radio Station WIP
35 S. 9th Street
Philadelphia 7, Pa.

Search for Peace

"Nothing can bring peace but yourself; nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principles."

Emerson

World peace will never come because we wish for it, nor will we come upon it accidentally. It must be sought, fervently and purposefully, as we must actively seek anything which is worthwhile.

In the belief that finding peace is the noblest of all purposes, Radio Station WIP has opened its microphones,not only to the world's distinguished citizens,but to those people who have earnest thoughts on peace and who have not, until now, had a medium of expression.

If only one idea in our Search for Peace is heard by one thinking person who acts upon it, our purpose will be accomplished.

Bernard Gimbel Jr

Search for Peace

Program Schedule for July, 1958

Station WIP

Wednesday, July 2.....10:30 PM
GEORGE F. KENNAN
Former U.S. Ambassador to U.S.S.R. — BBC Lectures (Part I)

Thursday, July 3.....10:30 PM
JOHN FOSTER DULLES
New Hampshire World Affairs Council Address

Friday, July 4.....10:00 PM
SEARCH FOR PEACE
State Department Documentary—Narrated by Cecil B. DeMille

Saturday, July 5.....6:10 PM
ARNOLD J. TOYNBEE (Part II)
Leading Contemporary Historian

Monday, July 7.....10:30 PM
GEORGE F. KENNAN
Reith Series of BBC Lectures—(Part II)

Wednesday, July 9.....10:30 PM
GEORGE F. KENNAN
Reith Series of BBC Lectures—(Part III)

Saturday, July 12.....6:10 PM
EDWARD MARTIN
U.S. Senator from Pennsylvania

Sunday, July 13.....7:30 PM
JESSAMYN WEST
Authoress, "Friendly Persuasion"—Interviewed by Taylor Grant

Wednesday, July 16.....10:30 PM
GEORGE F. KENNAN
Reith Series of BBC Lectures—(Part IV)

Saturday, July 19.....6:15 PM
ROBERT F. HURLEIGH
Chief Washington Correspondent—Mutual Broadcasting System

Sunday, July 20.....1:30 PM
REX STOUT
Noted American Author

Monday, July 21.....10:30 PM
GEORGE F. KENNAN
Reith Series of BBC Lectures—(Part V)

Saturday, July 26.....6:15 PM
GEORGE S. ALLEN
Director—U.S. Information Agency

Sunday, July 27.....7:30 PM
PEARL BUCK
Nobel Prize Authoress

Monday, July 28.....10:30 PM
GEORGE F. KENNAN
Reith Series of BBC Lectures—(Part VI)

610 on your AM radio dial
93.3 on your FM radio dial

WIP/610 WIP-FM/93.3

We invite your comments on this program series.

Write to:

"Search for Peace"
Radio Station WIP
35 S. 9th Street
Philadelphia 7, Pa.

Search for Peace

WIP

Stark, Milton

January 15, 1959

Dear Mr. Stark:

Thank you for your letter of January 12th.

I fear that once again we shall have to postpone our meeting. This impossible schedule of mine appears to have me thoroughly tied up until the end of January. I am hoping that February will be a little easier and shall communicate with you as soon as possible.

Congratulations on the Citation awarded you by the Governor. I am sure that it is richly deserved.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Milton Stark
Stark Films
Howard & Centre Streets
Baltimore 1, Maryland

mcc

STARK FILMS

MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS SINCE 1920

Jan.12 1959

HOWARD & CENTRE STS.
BALTIMORE 1, MARYLAND
LEXINGTON 9-3391

Mr.Edward R.Murrow,
485 Madison Ave.,
New York 22 N.Y.

Dear Mr.Murrow:-

May I see you,in New York, say, within the next two weeks ?

I shall appreciate hearing from you,if you can squeeze in the time in your busy schedule. But I really believe I have something extremely novel to talk about.

Sincerely yours

Milton Stark

STARK-FILMS

MS-rm.

P.S. I am proud of the Citation just awarded me by the Governor. Photostatic copy of,transmittal letter is enclosed.....

Stark, Milton
A.T.F.C.

THEODORE R. McKELDIN
GOVERNOR

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT

ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND

CITATION

Milton Stark's extraordinary knowledge of and devotion to his City and his State have given integrity and unusual qualities of life to his art.

His highly admirable films bespeak his pride in such notable Maryland features as the United States Naval Academy in Annapolis and the great Port of Baltimore.

The humaneness which is so prominent in his nature is reflected in his unusual documentary on the dangers of addiction to habit-forming drugs--a widely used film in Medical Schools throughout the world, produced at the University of Maryland.

His sense of public service stands out in his "Girl with a Lamp"--now used in the recruitment of student nurses throughout the nation.

To him, a photographic assignment in the public interest is a task of dedication.

Maryland is a better State and a better-known State because of the work of Milton Stark, and it is in recognition of this that he is awarded the accompanying Certificate of Appreciation.

By the Governor

Staub, Ralph

RALPH STAUB
11670 SUNSET BOULEVARD
WEST LOS ANGELES 49, CALIFORNIA

March 6,1958

Ignore

Mr.Edward R.Murrow
C B S Television
485 Madison Ave.
New York 22,N.Y.

Dear Mr.Murrow:

Since 1940 I have been Producing,Directing and photographing "SCREEN SNAPSHOTS" for Columbia Pictures.

On March 31 I will be available and at that time will have completed my 17 year stint.

No doubt you are familiar with SCREEN SNAPSHOTS, the Fan Magazine of the Screen.Stars at home,at work and at play.From 1926 to 1933(boy,sounds like I'm a thousand) I also produced Snapshots.My record reads from RUDOLPH VALENTINO TO JERRY LEWIS.

I know about every Star,Producer,Director and Writer in our industry.I never miss one of your shows and know that you have used quite a number of Hollywood personalities.

If I could fit in to your Hollywood division,I would be happy to hear from you.

A few of my references; Bob Hope,Bing Crosby,Louella Parsons,William Holden,Glenn Ford,Jerry Lewis,Buddy Adler Jerry Wald,Bill Goetz,Jack Warner and Robert Sparks of CBS.

Kindest regards.

Most sincerely,

Ralph Staub

Ralph

RALPH STAUB

PRODUCED and DIRECTED

802 One and Two-Reel

SHORT SUBJECTS

DIRECTED FEATURE PICTURES

Dramas - Westerns - Comedies - Musicals

FOR

Columbia - Warners - Universal - Republic

Three Academy Nominations for Best Short Subject

MEMBER

SCREEN DIRECTORS' GUILD OF AMERICA

SCREEN PRODUCERS' GUILD

INTERNATIONAL PHOTOGRAPHERS LOCAL 659

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CINEMATOGRAPHERS.

CRESTVIEW

1-9116

GRANITE

2-8386

STEVE BRODY
PRESIDENT

ARTHUR FREED
VICE-PRESIDENT

RONALD REAGAN
SECRETARY

CY BAER
TREASURER

MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY COUNCIL, INC.

357 North Canon Drive, Beverly Hills, California • Telephone CRestview 5-5381

December 1, 1952

ART ARTHUR
EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

Executive Committee and Member Organizations

ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS
Y. FRANK FREEMAN

HOLLYWOOD A.F.L. FILM COUNCIL
ROY M. BREWER

INDEPENDENT MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION
I. E. CHADWICK

INDEPENDENT OFFICE WORKERS
CY BAER

SCREEN ACTORS' GUILD
RONALD REAGAN

SCREEN PRODUCERS' GUILD
SOL C. SIEGEL

SCREEN STORY ANALYSTS' GUILD
KAY LENARD

SCREEN WRITERS' GUILD
MARY McCALL, JR.

SOCIETY OF INDEPENDENT MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS
GUNTHER R. LESSING

SOCIETY OF MOTION PICTURE ART DIRECTORS
ARTHUR LONERGAN

UNIT PRODUCTION MANAGERS' GUILD
JOSEPH BEHM

MPIC
MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY COUNCIL INC.

Dear Mr. Staub:

The Motion Picture Industry Council, representing virtually all of the major management, guild and union groups of Hollywood, has joined unanimously in a resolution expressing Hollywood's commendation to Ralph Staub for "his many valuable services in properly portraying Hollywood to the general public over the past thirty years."

In many areas of Hollywood from time to time over the years numerous individuals and organizations have had occasion to note the contributions made by your "Screen Snapshots" toward presenting sympathetically, accurately and, above all, entertainingly the unfolding story of Hollywood's home life, its public and patriotic services and numerous other aspects of the screen and its people which seldom find their way into the headlines.

In discussion within the MPIC, this widespread feeling of appreciation was crystallized into the sentiment recorded by the membership at our meeting on the evening of September 17, 1952.

It is the feeling of the MPIC that recognition comes much too infrequently to those who quietly and unostentatiously serve this industry without seeking or desiring expressions of appreciation. For that very reason, it seems most appropriate that you should have this unsolicited testimonial from the MPIC in behalf of the following member-organizations whose delegates joined with one voice in this expression:

Association of Motion Picture Producers
Hollywood A.F.L. Film Council
Independent Motion Picture Producers Association
Independent Office Workers
Screen Actors' Guild
Screen Producers' Guild
Screen Story Analysts' Guild
Screen Writers' Guild
Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers
Society of Motion Picture Art Directors
Unit Production Managers' Guild

Sincerely yours,

Art Arthur,
Executive Secretary

Mr. Ralph Staub
"Screen Snapshots"
c/o Columbia Pictures
1438 No. Gower
Hollywood 28, California

"A MAN WHO LOVES HOLLYWOOD"

Hollywood history has been written in may ways. It has been spread across the pages of the nation's press in bold black type -- both its misdeeds and its achievements. It has been charted in the ups and downs of the financial pages. It has been veneered and polished in the slick folios of the magazines.

But there's an unofficial history of twenty-five years of Hollywood's span, stored away in a stack of round tin cans.

It comprises several hundred miles of film. It is the life work of a man named Ralph Staub, who for a quarter of a century has been compiling the record.

It is a story behind the story of Hollywood, warm, human, filled with nostalgia and laughs and a few tears. It is Hollywood itself, as it lives, works and carries on from generation to generation behind the facade of fame.

Staub didn't set out to record the growth of a city or an industry. There isn't a single picture of a factory -- there isn't a foot of sound track of a mayor's speech.

He has been recording a kind of history that has nothing to do with the building of studios or with the uprooting of palm trees to make way for Progress. Staub's history is personal. It is a pictorial record of the people who are -- or who were -- Hollywood.

When Ralph Staub set out to film his series of short subjects he had an idea in mind. He believed public interest in motion pictures went beyond the films folks paid to see. He believed audiences were interested in the people they saw on the screen -- in the way those people lived, how they dressed, their problems, the way they spent their leisure time, how they fitted into their own community. He has never had reason to change his viewpoint.

It was, and is, his opinion that people the world over are curious about each other. He has been around this country a good deal. He has learned first hand that there is a word -- spoken in North Dakota or Washington or New Hampshire -- that makes sure-fire conversation. The word is Hollywood. He has learned that in the case of Hollywood familiarity does not breed comtempt but does increase boxoffice grosses.

Staub has never let Hollywood down. He has demonstrated by his own success that the best news about Hollywood is good news. In his entire film file there is not a foot of negative devoted to scandal. His concern is to bring to the millions of movie-goers the opportunity to be on friendly basis with the people who make up the glamour legend of motion pictures.

Like the best of the screen magazines, Staub has shown the stars in their homes, with their families, going about the daily business of living. He knows them as few people in the motion picture industry know them. To borrow a phrase from a screen magazine's well-read department, "He was there." He was there to photograph Dug Fairbanks, Sr., after a day on the set of "The Iron Mask." He was there when young Doug came home from the Navy. He was there when a blonde girl danced the Charleston at a Hollywood party and gave her name as Jane Peters. He was there when the same girl under the name of Carole Lombard took off on a bond-selling mission from which she never returned. He was there when Al Jolson put his knee prints in the cement in the forecourt of Grauman's Chinese Theatre. He was at the train when a newcomer named Lupe Valez arrived in Hollywood. He turned his camera on Alan Ladd peeling onions in an Army camp, on Jane Wyman receiving the Gold Medal Award from Photoplay. He has covered Hollywood's weddings, its christenings, its community activities.

He has been for twenty-five years an Ambassador from Hollywood to the World.

For these twenty-five years he has been giving picture audiences what they wanted to know about Hollywood.

As producer-director-camerman of "Screen Snapshots" fame, he has operated on the theory that people everywhere consider Hollywood a part of their own lives -- that they look upon Hollywood as America's own -- a city to point to with pride, to gossip about endlessly and to become part of their own dream of success.

Staub has made 777 short subjects. He has been three times nominated for Academy Awards.

By his success he has proved that audiences never tire of the Hollywood story; that the more the public knows about players the greater is the public's response at the boxoffice. Ralph Staub's -- those glimpses at stars without scripts, these capsule accounts of film personalities -- are, if you like, animated screen magazines. Like the screen magazines, they feed the healthy curiosity about, and add to the understanding of, Hollywood and its people.

Ralph Staub is a man who likes his home town and the people in it. He is qualified to tell its story. He has known it well from its first ramshackle buildings to its newest sound stage, from its earliest stars to its newest, eager young contract players. He loves Hollywood.

* * *

Steenbock, Stanley

June 12, 1959

Mr. Stanley R. Steenbock
2214 North Josie Avenue
Long Beach 15, California

Dear Mr. Steenbock:

Thank you very much for your letter of June 9th.

Your good wishes in connection with my upcoming leave are appreciated.

To answer your question, you should be able to contact Mr. Marble by addressing your letter to Station WGAM in Portland, Maine.

Again, thank you for writing.

Sincerely yours,

2214 North Josie Avenue
Long Beach, 15, California
June 9, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I have been planning to write you for several months concerning the void that I feel your sabbatical is going to cause in the radio news field and, at the same time, wish you a year of fruitful contemplation, illuminating travel, and rewarding relaxation.

Being a former radio news reporter myself I can well understand the pressures and frightful tensions which must surround you on the New York scene, particularly with your television commitments.

I am sure that you realize how often one has the shining intention to do this sort of thing...and then, because of day to day stresses and strains, lets this resolution slip uncomplainingly into that cluttered miscellaneous file somewhere in the unfathomnable crevices of the mind.

Your show last night rescued this oft voiced resolve for me. I was especially glad to hear Harry Marble once again as I remember him very well and have often wondered what calamity had befallen him.

Judging from your brief conversation with him last evening, a similar catastrophe should overtake us all.

I wonder if it would be too much trouble for you to advise me of the station where he now works as news director? I should like to drop him a line with a few more questions on Maine living...benefits and hazards thereof.

As a Murrow devotee dating back to the Munich days, may I again express the profound admiration that I have for you as a reporter and interpreter of news. Along with millions of others I shall await your return impatiently.

Very truly yours,

Stanley R. Steenbock

Stanley R. Steenbock

P. S. I was charmed by your recent discussion of men's summer fashions. In declaration of my own independence and resistence to conformity, I bought a pith helmet. Of course, here in Los Angeles it hasn't created much of a stir....the sight of a public relations man wearing a pith helmet is mild indeed compared to some of our uniquely attired Hollywood personalities. Perhaps shorts would help?

Steffens, Marvin

Redwood City Tribune

34TH YEAR No. 226 — 2 SECTIONS — REDWOOD CITY, CALIFORNIA, THURSDAY EVENING, JANUARY 15, 1959 — 26 PAGES — 5c Per Copy $1.30 Per Month

Cuban Leader Warns U.S.

Belmont's KGEI Is Different

By JIM MONROE
Tribune Staff Writer

"La Vos de la Amistad."

That short phrase — "The Voice of Friendship"—is the familiar signal to thousands of people below the border that radio station KGEI is broadcasting.

Tribune Special

And from the amount of mail received at the station, it's apparent that the audience is considerable.

KGEI, which uses San Francisco as the city with which it is identified because of its familiarity, is located in Belmont on Quarry Road east of Bayshore Freeway.

What makes KGEI different from other short wave broadcasting stations? The answer is simple. It's commercial.

Most short wave stations are operated to promote a particular doctrine — "The Voice of Freedom" in Europe run by the U. S. government is a prime example.

KGEI's 50,000 watt operation is keyed to the free enterprise system. Its backers hope it will be a successful, money-making venture.

Open only since October of last year, KGEI is seeking accounts of businesses which distribute their products at least to South America, if not on a worldwide scale.

(See Belmont, Pg. 6, Col. 1)

PROGRAM RECORDED—While announcer Jorge Escalante queries Mexican consul general Adolfo Dominguez (background), traffic co-ordinator Richard W. Jones makes a tape of the interview for broadcast at a later time. —Tribune Photo was hard to make a case because Moran and other had trouble witn "buys."

So he rented a two-bedr house in Redwood City and himself up as a full time nik. He grew a beard and ed a pair of orange-s shoes that put him in solid.

And he became, to new friends, a marijuana idler. Moran warned him t he had too much "stuff" explain readily, so he was t to pass the word to a sele w that he was selling in Eas lo Alto.

The house was r d two months ago, and cases against the 15 who w timately arrested de rapidly. It was a risky busin though. Oliffe and Moran were in daily contact, either by

(See Marijuana, Pg. 2, Col. 1)

Weather

LOCAL CONDITIONS: (Today, noon)—High 57, low 39; wind, calm; sky, clear. Yesterday — high 62, low 40; wind, calm; sky, cloudy; relative humidity, 86 per cent.

FORECAST: Cloudy tonight and tomorrow, continued mild temperatures. Low tonight 45, high tomorrow 63. Gentle winds. Visibility 2 miles in morning, 7 miles in afternoon. Frost this morning.

JIM MONROE
Tribune Staff Writer

"La Vos de la Amistad."

That short phrase — "The Voice of Friendship"—is the familiar signal to thousands of people below the border that radio station KGEI is broadcasting.

Tribune Special

And from the amount of mail received at the station, it's apparent that the audience is considerable.

KGEI, which uses San Francisco as the city with which it is identified because of its familiarity, is located in Belmont on Quarry Road east of Bayshore Freeway.

What makes KGEI differ broadcasting stations? The answer is simple. It's commercial.

Most short wave stations are operated to promote a particular doctrine — "The Voice of Freedom" in Europe run by the U. S. government is a prime example.

KGEI's 50,000 watt operation is keyed to the free enterprise system. Its backers hope it will be a successful, money-making venture.

Open only since October of last year, KGEI is seeking accounts of businesses which distribute their products at least to South America, if not on a worldwide scale.

(See Belmont, Pg. 6, Col. 1)

PROGRAM RECORDED—While announcer Jorge Escalante queries Mexican consul general Adolfo Dominguez (background), traffic co-ordinator Richard W. Jones makes a tape of the interview for broadcast at a later time. —Tribune Photo of Oct. 3 at the intersection of Buckingham and Marlborough Avenues, south of Redwood City.

Prosecuting Attorney Brian Rowson, during final arguments yesterday, said Miramontes was pushing the old truck too fast. The truck, owned by Thomas F. Helwig, was being steered by James O. Brough, 20-year-old sailor. Brough testified during the trial that he didn't know the truck was without brakes and horn.

Defense Attorney James Dennis claimed a disagreement over speed of the truck, and argued that Brough and his passenger, 8-year-old Tommy Helwig, were confused because the truck was rattling and the fact that a car being pushed seems to be going faster than when moving under its own power.

Miramontes testified that he thought the body of the elderly pedestrian was building paper or some debris lying on the road. That is why he didn't stop and render aid, he claimed.

Three Indicted

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—The Federal Grand Jury indicted three West Coast Chinese businessmen Wednesday as members of a syndicate that smuggled 100 million dollars worth of heroin into the United States.

were set up with an eye to precedent for the entire tract.

Price is the only landowner who is ready to act at the moment. Biggest parcel is owned by Peninsula Celebrations Association, which plans to sell a 32-acre piece east of the freeway to get financing for a 6,000 to 10,000 seat concert hall project on its 33-acre parcel west of the freeway.

Cherokee Meet Scots Tomorrow: See Sports Pages

Interest is always high when athletic teams from Sequoia and Carlmont High Schools meet.

Interest is particularly high for tomorrow's clash between the Cherokees and Scots varsity basketball teams. Both outfits have defeated the pre-season favorite for the South Peninsula Athletic League crown.

You will find complete details of tomorrow's contest on the sports pages of your Tribune today.

For the most complete coverage of any sports event, read the Tribune sports pages.

to sign aboard the freighter M. M. Dant, a States Steamship Co. vessel operating between the West Coast and the Orient.

The dispute centered around the rate of pay for an electrician on the Dant.

Gen. Marshall Suffers Stroke

PINEHURST, N. C. (AP)—Gen. George C. Marshall, 78, suffered a mild stroke at his home here early today and was taken to Womack General Hospital at nearby Ft. Bragg.

Gen. Marshall has been in poor health and confined to his bed for several months.

Colonel G. M. Powell, chief surgeon at the hospital, said the general's condition was satisfactory, that he was resting comfortably, and there had been no complications from the stroke.

Judge Cited

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP)—U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. today ordered Circuit Judge George C. Wallace cited for criminal contempt of court for failure to comply with an order to produce voter registration records to the Civil Rights Commission.

Plenty of Free Parking for Shoppers Tonight—Stores Open 'til 9

Belmont Station's Fan Mail Co

(Continued From Page One)

Radio advertising of a public relations nature from large firms or groups seeking to promote their ideas will be carried by the station.

KGEI's commercial operation is solidly hinged to another, and perhaps far more important, end product.

The independent station is a splendid example of America's free enterprise system and can offer vivid proof in itself of how capitalism works.

"We weave in American ideals in our programming," said Marvin Steffins of San Carlos, young (29) and enterprising manager of KGEI.

"A government - sponsored broadcast many times lacks the ability to tell people of another country about ourselves," he added. "All our announcers are natives of South or Central American countries. People below the border find it easier to believe one of their own."

Since KGEI does broadcast into other countries, and therefore would exert some influence, it is quite natural that the U.S. government would take an interest. Steffins admittted that Pentagon suggestions are taken into consideration in the programming, but government suggestions are subtle rather than forceful.

"Our station and personnel were screened quite thoroughly by the government before we were allowed to broadcast," Steffins said. This, of course, prohibits any radical elements from infiltrating the station and thus using it to forward its ideals.

"KGEI is most assuredly not communistic, we are not fronting for any religious group. We are non-sectarian and non-political," Steffins declared.

The station's programming is basically musical, featuring semi-classical, show tunes, and music of South American nations.

National and international news is reported . . . a review of American business is given . . . letters from listeners are read . . . Bible readings . . . a children's program . . . the popular "Champions of Liberty" featuring heros of South American countries . . . all are features of the programming.

—Tribune Photo

CONTROL PANEL—Chief Engineer Don Smith checks control points on the master control panel during transmission of a program to South American listeners. The station, beginning Jan. 1 went on a four-hour a day schedule.

Of particular importance to the station, and its listeners, are interviews with students from Latin American nations studying in the Bay Area. They are asked to give their impressions of the school, the locale, the way of life here or any particular circumstance that happens to appeal to them.

Equally important are interviews with diplomats and consuls from Latin American legations who are assigned to offices in the Bay Area. The views they present are answers to queries to those asked of students.

KGEI has been in operation since 1939 when it was built by General Electric for the Golden Gate International Exposition. It was moved to its present location near Belmont after the exposition.

In 1942, the Office of War Information, as a wartime safeguard, took over all short wave stations including KGEI.

After the war, the station was leased to the United States Information Agency (USIA) until that organization's activities were reduced in 1953. General Electric again took over and continued until late 1956 when programming stopped.

KGEI Radio Station, Incorporated, purchased the station from GE and began its operation in October, 1958.

Although the main beam from its transmitters is aimed in a V-shaped area toward South America, KGEI's mail reveals that it is heard all over the world.

POINT ONE — Adolfo Domi
general of Mexico for the Bay
a point in his talk transmitte

Letters have been received from listeners in New Zealand, Australia, Alaska, Canada, Cape Town, South Africa, England, Finland, France, Denmark, Spain, Japan and from Mauritius, a small island off the coast of Southern Africa.

A prize possession of the station is a recording of part of one day's broadcast made by a 23-year-old Japanese short wave enthusiast who is studying Spanish.

K
MORE
th

FOR

Comes from Far Points in World

—Tribune Photo

Dominguez, consul ne Bay Area, makes smitted over short wave radio station KGEI. Listening intently is announcer Jorge Escalante, one of the native South Americans on the staff.

—Tribune Photo

MANAGER — Marvin Steffins, personable, young (29) manager of radio station KGEI is a San Carlos resident. He and his wife have four children, two born in Uruguay, one in Costa Rica and one in San Carlos.

ceived
aland,
ada,
, Eng-
Den-
from d off rica.
f the f part made nese who is

He recorded the program and sent the tape to the station along with his comments —in Spanish.

Steffins, a linguist as are most of the station's 10 employes, said that the young Japanese's accent when speaking Spanish is hardly distinguishable.

The station, as of the first of the year, went on an expanded program schedule which begins at 3 p.m. (PST) and continues until 7 p.m. Those hours give it the prime broadcasting time for the majority of its South American listeners who are in several time zones.

KGEI presently operates on the 16 meter band at 17.795 megacycles. It may change its frequency five megacycles at various times during the year because of unusual weather or conflict with other short wave radio stations.

KGEI was conflicting with Radio Poland until it changed on Jan. 1. Radio Moscow and stations in Red China also beam programs into South America.

With that competition, it is small wonder that KGEI can be valued so highly as an influencing agent. It's approach to selling itself is different than government tactics.

It must sell itself to provide a livelihood for its employes. At the same time it must protect its integrity in doing business and yet being "an American voice," as Steffins put it.

The station's staff and management have plans for the future to expand operations to include the Far East.

Such an expansion hinges on the success of the business and South American public acceptance of their present operation.

It could also mean even more to forwarding of the American principles.

KGEI coverage includes e than 8 million radio homes* throughout Latin America!

FOREIGN COMMERCE WEEKLY 4/1/57 - 8,310,270 Short Wave Receivers in Latin America.

U. S. Business Speaks For Itself Over Radio KGEI

BELMONT, Jan. 24.—United States business interests are subtly slipping into the field of foreign relations with their own international radio station here.

There is nothing of a philanthropic nature in the move.

It is a cold, hard business enterprise calculated to return a profit.

It employs the same tools and techniques that have built the U. S. economy to a position second to none in the world.

It is aimed at Latin America, where more than $9,000,000,000 from this country has been invested in private enterprise.

It is this investment plus the rapidly growing commercial market in that part of the world that the station owners hope to protect and expand.

TO OFFSET RUSS

To do this, they believe, they must meet and beat the intensified propaganda campaign Russia is waging there.

And, they feel, no one is in a better position to meet and beat the Soviet efforts than the representatives of free enterprise themselves.

Operating under a federal license, KGEI, a 50,000-watt station, broadcasts from 3 p. m. to 7 p. m. daily.

The programs are carefully planned by a specially selected 10-man staff.

They feature good music, stock market reports, news and dramatic portrayals pointing up the traditions of freedom.

U. S. PRODUCTS

These programs will be sponsored by commercials extolling the virtues of U. S. products and services.

"I believe we can present a real service to American business and at the same time do much to meet the challenge by totalitarian forces that are struggling for the hearts and minds of men, women and children around the world," Marvin R. Steffins Jr., station vice president, declared.

He explained that surveys have shown there are 8,000,000 shortwave sets in Latin America.

He added that a major portion of listener letters received by the station since October 23, 1958, when it began operation under the present management, are typewritten on letterhead stationery.

"This indicates to us we are reaching a large segment of the opinion formers in Latin America," he said.

"It is the purpose of KGEI to make the truth known and to give a basic explanation of what we believe — that wherever free men are theatened they must be able to explain the specific advantages of the free way of life."

Hendrick Van Dyke, KGEI operations manager, at left, at listener letter with Marvin R. Steffins Jr., KGEI vice president. Pins in map indicate listener area.

FIRST OPERATION

KGEI first began operating in February, 1939, from the Golden Gate International Exposition on Treasure Island as the first international shortwave station west of the Mississippi.

Financed by the General Electric Corporation, it moved to Belmont, was taken over by the United States Information Agency, which operated it until 1956, when it was turned back to GE.

It was subsequently purchased by private business interests.

APRIL 13, 1959

THIRTY-FIVE CENTS

28TH YEAR

BRO CASTING

THE BUSINI N AND RADIO

Overhaul of option tim

Theatre movie stars f'

FCC radio processir

Over 1,000 Class I'

PAUL BERLIN
KNUZ, Houston

Shortwave KGEI wins overseas audience

A listener file of 11,000 letters attests to the growing popularity in Latin America and the Caribbean area of KGEI Belmont, Calif., an international shortwave station which has been on the air about four months and has an effective radiated power of 1,200 kw.

KGEI is a commercial outlet which beams musical, cultural, educational and informative programs in Spanish and English to Latin America. The station says several sponsors, who have goods or goodwill to sell in Latin America, have bought time on the station. Among these is Standard Oil Co. of California which airs its Chevron School on KGEI.

It's estimated there are about 8 million shortwave sets in Central and South America and the Caribbean. KGEI presently is on a limited schedule of four hours a day.

Radio Station KGEI Inc., a group of businessmen, bought the station from General Electric Corp. and reactivated it, receiving an FCC license last November. It is currently on 17.8 mc, but frequencies change from season to season because of atmospheric conditions.

Operating head of the station is Marvin R. Steffins Jr., vice president, who has lived a number of years in various Latin American countries. KGEI calls itself "The Voice of Friendship," claiming its commercial operation inspires confidence in listeners in contrast to the propagandistic nature of programming by many other shortwave stations. As a private enterprise, KGEI has a role in propagating the "free way" and promoting goodwill and better understanding among the peoples of the Americas, Mr. Steffins says.

KGEI programs include music, national and international news, reviews of American business, Bible readings and a program for children.

KGEI was first put into operation by GE in 1939, was taken over along with other shortwave outlets by the Office of War Information in 1942 and was leased to the U. S. Information Agency after World War II. GE took over again in 1953 and discontinued programming in 1956. WRUL Boston is the only other commercial shortwave station in the country.

New ch. 9 contestant

The Toronto board of education and other educational and cultural groups in the Toronto area have started planning to apply for the ch. 9 allocation.

INTERNATIONAL

The Canadian government is expected soon to permit second television stations in present one-station cities. There are a number of groups known to be planning to apply for the allocation, including Toronto radio stations CFRB, CKEY and CKFH. Entry of the educational group is expected to complicate the decision by the Board of Broadcast Governors, as ch. 9 is the only vhf allocation still available for Toronto. There are also three uhf allocations for Toronto, but as yet there are only uhf satellite stations in operation in Canada.

A Mexican answer to hot competition

In Mexico City 29 am and 8 fm stations vie for listeners from among some four million inhabitants.

One organization's answer to this maze of competition is multiple ownership, a luxury unattainable in U.S. cities. Known as "Formula RM," the combine embraces five stations, each catering to a different section of the population. Their only trait in common, beyond ownership, is nearly total reliance on recorded music.

One of the RM stations programs for teenagers. The emphasis is on "top 40" American popular music. Also provided is information about school activities, sometimes delivered by students themselves.

Then there's "Radio Mil" (referring to its 1000 kc) over which popular music of all nations is played, interspersed with recorded comedy segments.

E. G. Salas, general director and owner of Formula RM, said that American recording companies use this station as a testing ground for a record's potential popularity in the area.

"Radio Feminina," operated entirely for and by women, plays "romantic music all day." It features a "Stork Club" for expectant mothers to whom it makes available low-cost medical attention through a clinic which co-operates in return for air time.

The "masses" are reached through "Radio Sinfonola," which means juke-box. Here telephone requests are

Canadian tv count

The Canadian Bureau of Statistics said Monday (April 6) that nearly 70% of the country's million households had the end of last year figure was ab (96%) op tion in May

ities. Their discussions assure hile convention.

Write Bill Stewart, Coordinator ring Storz Stations, 820 Kilpatrick aha 2, Nebraska. Give name, ad- n or company affiliation, type of room, e rate. (Rates in hotels of Bal Har- at $10 daily, single or double.)

Honorary Chairman
The Honorable Dwight D. Eisenhower
President of the United States

Honorary Co-Chairman
The Honorable Richard J. Daley
Mayor of the City of Chicago

Honorary Committee
The Honorable Paul H. Douglas
United States Senate
The Honorable Everett McKinley Dirksen
United States Senate
The Honorable William G. Stratton
Governor, State of Illinois
The Honorable Harold W. Handley
Governor, State of Indiana
The Honorable Herschel C. Loveless
Governor, State of Iowa
The Honorable G. Mennen Williams
Governor, State of Michigan
The Honorable James T. Blair, Jr.
Governor, State of Missouri
The Honorable Vernon W. Thomson
Governor, State of Wisconsin
The Honorable Avery Brundage
President, International Olympic Committee
The Honorable Kenneth L. Wilson
President, United States Olympic Committee

Chicago Organizing Committee
Edward W. Krause, Vice Chairman
Michael J. McDermott
Alderman Ralph J. Metcalfe
Vice Chairmen, Sports
Albert J. Herman
Chairman, Baseball
Ray Meyer
Lyle M. Foster
Co-Chairmen, Basketball (Men)
Dorothy Morgan
Chairman, Basketball (Women)
Paul J. Staff
Chairman, Boxing
Keith Kingbay
Chairman, Cycling
Robert Tieken
Chairman, Equestrian
Paul Butler
Chairman, Equestrian Polo
Alvar Hermanson
Chairman, Fencing
Paul Fina
Chairman, Gymnastics
Pat Connors
Chairman, Modern Pentathlon
Richard W. Canman
Chairman, Rowing
David J. Moore
Chairman, Shooting
Jim Wareham
Chairman, Skeet
Joseph Triner
Chairman, Soccer
Dr. Harold W. Henning
Chairman, Swimming (Men)
George V. Iverson
Chairman, Swimming (Women)
Richard F. Stonesifer
Chairman, Tennis
Edward M. Haydon
Chairman, Track and Field (Men)
Betty Robinson Schwartz
Miss Lucile Wilson
Co-Chairmen, Track and Field (Women)
Merton Kennedy
Edward P. Lauten
Co-Chairmen, Volleyball (Men)
Miss Dorothy Boyce
Chairman, Volleyball (Women)
Vernon Tittle
Chairman, Water Polo
Michael Zuke
Chairman, Weightlifting
Sumner G. Webb
Chairman, Wrestling
Herbert P. Williams
Chairman, Yachting
Irwin Tucker
Robert Quinn
Co-Chairmen, Housing and Feeding
Howard L. Willett, Jr.
Chairman, Transportation

Chicago Citizens Committee
Co-Chairmen
James S. Kemper
William A. Lee
Arnold Maremont
John L. McCaffrey
General Robert E. Wood
Colonel Henry Crown, Secretary
Robert E. Strauss, Treasurer

Festival of The Americas
Arnold Maremont, Chairman

Sports Medicine Congress
Dr. T. R. Van Dellen, Chairman

Jack Reilly, Executive Director

PAN AMERICAN GAMES, INCORPORATED

(Not for Profit Corporation)

23rd Floor, 310 South Michigan Ave. 4
CHICAGO 4 ILLINOIS UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

April 21, 1959

Mr. Marvin R. Steffins, Jr.
Vice President
Radio Station KGEI, Inc.
San Francisco, California

Dear Mr. Steffins:

This will confirm the arrangements made between you and James S. Kearns, Director of Publicity for the Pan American Games, relative to your plans for coverage of the Games in Chicago August 27 through September 7, 1959.

Station KGEI will be privileged to cover, by direct or delayed radio broadcast, any and all phases of the Pan American Games.

Working credentials will be issued to those members of your organization's staff whose presence on the scene will be necessary for you to do a complete job. It is our understanding that your requirements with reference to space and mechanical facilities will be made known to Mr. Kearns who is in complete charge of such matters.

We are delighted to know that Station KGEI will be carrying the Games to Latin America, and the entire Organizing Committee heartily endorses your efforts in this respect.

Very truly yours,

Jack Reilly
Jack Reilly
Executive Director

JA:jlb

THIRD PAN AMERICAN ESPIRITO SPORT 19 CHICAGO ORGANIZING COMMITTEE

3RD Pan American Games chicago 1959
August 27-September 7

"THE VOICE OF FRIENDSHIP"
PROGRAM SCHEDULE

APRIL 1959

INTERNATIONAL BROADCAST STATION KGEI

DIRECCION: P.O. BOX 15, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A.
FRECUENCIA: 17795 KILOCICLOS EN LA BANDA DE 16 METROS

HORA/TIME (GMT)	San Francisco	LUNES Monday	MARTES Tuesday	MIERCOLES Wednesday	JUEVES Thursday	VIERNES Friday
2400	4:00PM	WORLD IN BRIEF	WORLD IN BRIEF	WORLD IN BRIEF	WORLD IN BRIEF	WORLD IN BRIEF	WOR
0010	4:10	AMERICAN BUSINESS COVERAGE	AMERICAN BUSINESS COVERAGE	AMERICAN BUSINESS COVERAGE	AMERICAN BUSINESS COVERAGE	AMERICAN BUSINESS COVERAGE	I
0015	4:15	FAITH OF OUR FATHERS	FAITH OF OUR FATHERS	FAITH OF OUR FATHERS	FAITH OF OUR FATHERS	FAITH OF OUR FATHERS	BRO
0030	4:30	KGEI FEATURES	KGEI FEATURES	KGEI FEATURES	KGEI FEATURES	KGEI FEATURES	F
0045	4:45	WORLD NEWS ROUNDUP	WORLD NEWS ROUNDUP	WORLD NEWS ROUNDUP	WORLD NEWS ROUNDUP	WORLD NEWS ROUNDUP	WO R
0100	5:00	NATIONAL MUSIC CAMP	MUSICAL ENCORE	NATIONAL MUSIC CAMP	CHEVRON SCHOOL BROADCAST	NATIONAL MUSIC CAMP	I
0130	5:30	CONCIERTO MINIATURA I	DELICIAS DEL PENTAGRAMA I	JOYAS DEL TECLADO I	MUSICA CLASICA I	SERENATA INTERNACIONAL I	V
0155	5:55	BOLETIN COMERCIAL	BOLETIN COMERCIAL	BOLETIN COMERCIAL	BOLETIN COMERCIAL	BOLETIN COMERCIAL	D
0200	6:00	NOTICIAS	NOTICIAS	NOTICIAS	NOTICIAS	NOTICIAS	I
0205	6:05	VENTANA DE AMISTAD	VENTANA DE AMISTAD	VENTANA DE AMISTAD	VENTANA DE AMISTAD	VENTANA DE AMISTAD	V DE
0215	6:15	PALADINES DE LA LIBERTAD	PALADINES DE LA LIBERTAD	PALADINES DE LA LIBERTAD	PALADINES DE LA LIBERTAD	PALADINES DE LA LIBERTAD	PAL LA
0230	6:30	CONCIERTO MINIATURA II	DELICIAS DEL PENTAGRAMA II	JOYAS DEL TECLADO II	MUSICA CLASICA II	SERENATA INTERNACIONAL II	VO DIA
0300	7:00	NOTICIAS	NOTICIAS	NOTICIAS	NOTICIAS	NOTICIAS	N
0305	7:05	VENTANA DE AMISTAD	VENTANA DE AMISTAD	VENTANA DE AMISTAD	VENTANA DE AMISTAD	VENTANA DE AMISTAD
0315	7:15	BEN HUR	BEN HUR	BEN HUR	BEN HUR	REVISTA RADIAL PANAMERICANA	INTER
0330	7:30	VIAJE MUSICAL	LOS ESTUDIANTES CONTESTAN	VIAJE MUSICAL	POR LOS SENDERUS		PI
0345	7:45	LA BIBLIA ABIERTA	LA BIBLIA ABIERTA	LA BIBLIA ABIERTA	LA BIBLIA ABIERTA	LA BIBLIA ABIERTA	LA A
0400	8:00	NEWS HEADLINES	NEWS HEADLINES	NEWS HEADLINES	NEWS HEADLINES	NEWS HEADLINES	HE

LOS PROGRAMAS DE KGEI SON OFRECIDOS CON EL PROPOSITO DE ESTIMULAR LOS IDEALES DE PAZ Y LAS HACIENDO PROMOCION DE LA BUENA VOLUNTAD, EL MEJOR ENTENDIMIENTO, Y LA MAS SINCERA AMISTAD E

"LA VOZ DE AMISTAD"
HORARIO DE PROGRAMAS

ABRIL 1959

SABADO Saturday	Time (GMT)	DOMINGO Sunday
WORLD IN BRIEF	2300	NEWS
WEEKLY BUSINESS REVIEW	2305	MUSIC YOU WANT
BROKEN BREAD	2330
KGEI FEATURES	2400	WORLD IN BRIEF
WORLD NEWS ROUNDUP	0015	THIS WEEK AT THE U. N.
MUSICAL ENCORE	0030	HOUR OF DECISION
VOCES DE DIAMANTE I	0100	WORLD NEWS ROUNDUP
	0115	BIBLE HOUR
NOTICIAS	0130	WORLD'S GREAT MUSIC
VENTANA DE AMISTAD	0200	NEWS
PALADINES DE LA LIBERTAD	0205	SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT
VOCES DE DIAMANTE II	0230
NOTICIAS	0300	NEWS
CLUB NTERAMERICANO	0305	MELODIAS DEL ALMA
	0315	CELAJES
KGEI PRESENTA	0330	MUSICA SACRA
LA BIBLIA ABIERTA	0345	BIBLIA ABIERTA
NEWS HEADLINES	0400	NEWS

LAS TRADICIONES DE LIBERTAD.
AD ENTRE LOS PUEBLOS DEL MUNDO.

ANTENA RECEPTORA DE ONDA CORTA

PUNTO 1. Cable de cobre, con preferencia esmaltado.

PUNTO 2. Limpiar los cables, enrollarlos apretadamente, y solderlos si es posible. Si las conexiones no pueden ser soldadas, envolverlas con cinta adhesiva, para impedir que les llegue la humedad.

PUNTO 3. El cable de bajada (lead-in) de cualquier longitud, puede hacerse con el cable doble, recubierto de plástico, empleado en televisión, que tiene forma de cinta. Sin embargo, puede emplearse un cable o un alambre ordinario con cubierta de plástico o caucho.

ARRIBA SE MUESTRA UNA ANTENA RECEPTORA SIMPLE, PARA SER EMPLEADA CON UN RECEPTOR DE ONDA CORTA. SE SEÑALAN LOS SIGUIENTES PUNTOS EN RELACION CON LA ANTENA.

1. Este tipo de antena es más eficaz en el caso de que el receptor tenga dos terminales de antena, como muestra el esquema. Si el receptor posee solamente un terminal de antena, únase uno de los cables de bajada, al terminal de antena, y el otro cable de bajada al terminal de tierra. De esta manera la antena dará resultados satisfactorios.
2. Esta antena no elimina la debilitación (fading) ni los ruidos atmosféricos. Sin embargo cuando está debidamente instalada, produce señales más intensas y ayuda en la reducción de interferencias producidas por equipos eléctricos de diversas clases.
3. La antena debe ser colocada de manera que el cable de cobre siga la dirección nordeste-suroeste.
4. La antena debe ser colocada a la mayor altura posible. Sin embargo, dará ya bastante mejoramiento en la recepción aunque la altura sea solamente de tres metros.
5. Si no se dispone de aisladores hechos en fábrica, se pueden hacer éstos de madera, - de pedazos de unos 10 centímetros de largo. En éste caso, deben ser hervidos en parafina para hacerlos impermeables al agua.
6. De ésta manera la antena dara los mejores resultados en la banda de 16 metros, y será también buena en las bandas de 19, 25, y 31 metros.

NUESTRO HORARIO DE PROGRAMAS ESTA SUJETO A VARIACION
SE PUEDE SOLICITAR EL CORRESPONDIENTE CADA MES.

Robert Stein

November 4, 1959

Dear Mr. Stein:

Thank you for your cordial letter of October 27th which was received in Mr. Murrow's absence since he is spending his year's leave abroad.

I regret that there is no possibility of his undertaking any writing during the course of his sabbatical as he plans to spend the time reading, listening, and learning. I am sorry to have to say no on his behalf.

Sincerely yours,

Gabrielle Wachsner
Secretary

Mr. Robert Stein, Editor
Redbook Magazine
230 Park Avenue
New York 17, New York

REDBOOK MAGAZINE
McCALL CORPORATION
230 PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK 17, N.Y.
MURRAY HILL 6-4600

OFFICE OF EDITOR

October 27, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow:

As you may know, Redbook is a magazine addressed to young men and women in their twenties and thirties; it is currently being read by more than 3,000,000 of them. We have been concerned about the responsibilities and shortcomings of television for some time, as the enclosed articles will show.

The current uproar over quiz programs strikes us, as it must you, as only a superficial discussion of the entire subject. In the course of your sabbatical year, I wonder if you would be interested in expressing your feelings about television to the young people who read our magazine. For the most part they seem to be rather helplessly disturbed over the medium's abuses and shortcomings, and it would be extremely useful to give them the benefit of your experience and thinking, particularly in the area of how they can express their own dissatisfactions and exert an influence for better television programming. It might also be helpful to give them a realistic idea of just what the limitations of such a mass medium have to be.

If writing such an article interests you, I would appreciate your letting me know.

Sincerely,

Robert Stein

Robert Stein
Editor

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Pawling
New York

RS/s

REDBOOK - OCTOBER 1957

How Much TV Should

Parents who use TV as an electronic baby sitter may be harming their children. Here is what they must know—and do—about one of the major influences on youngsters' lives

BY ROBERT GORMAN
ILLUSTRATED BY RAY PROHASKA

As the father of three young boys, Earl Jacobs is no stranger to roughhouse. But he has his limits.

"I arrived home one evening," he recalls, "and found my two older kids brawling in the front yard. They're only six and eight, but they were going at each other like a pair of commandos."

Earl pulled the boys apart. Pinky, the younger, kept flailing his arms and struggling to get free. "Let me at the varmint!" he cried. "I'll tear his eyes out!"

That was when Earl decided something had to be done. He talked the matter over with his wife. They quickly agreed that Pinky's violent language—if not the violence itself—had its origin in the TV shoot-'em-ups to which the child was addicted.

While they were about it, Earl and Caroline discussed some other signs that seemed to point toward TV-bred tensions. Tim, not quite five, was a fitful sleeper; one night he had awakened screaming that he was being chased by gangsters. Earl, Jr., the oldest boy, had no hobbies or active interests; he dawdled about going to bed or finishing his chores. And on Pinky's scorecard they noted the fact that he was a chronic nail-biter.

The remedy seemed as obvious as the cause. For two weeks the Jacobses imposed a total TV blackout. When they felt the atmosphere in the house had improved, they allowed the set to go on again for limited—and carefully selected—viewing.

The Jacobses' suspicion of television may not have been completely justified, but it is shared by many young couples whose children have lived with 21-inch screens for as far back as they can remember. These parents of the first real "TV generation" have a special interest in television's effects on their offspring.

The average small child exposes himself to TV's entertainment, excitement and incidental instruction for Children See?

25 to 30 hours a week. Since there is no way to stretch the day, parents are led to wonder whether television is an adequate replacement for lost sleep, group play, study time, creative hobbies, family activities or even the idle periods of day-dreaming, imagining and self-dependence that were the lot of the pre-TV child. Indeed, many critics maintain that television does active harm by overstimulating children, teaching them that violence is a normal way of life and causing what one psychiatrist has called "emotional indigestion."

Defenders of the medium say that it broadens the horizons of children and brings them information, culture and experiences they could not get in any other way. They contend that it stimulates new interests and activities. And far from encouraging bad ideas, they say, television promotes virtuous concepts and helps children distinguish right from wrong.

If there is a good deal of evidence to show that most parents are at least mildly suspicious of television, it is equally clear that they don't do much about it. According to a Gallup poll, for example, 70 per cent of American adults believe television contributes to juvenile crime. Repeated surveys show that a majority of parents thinks their children watch too much television, and disapprove of some of the shows they see. And yet Xavier University researchers found that an "appalling percentage"—more than half the parents in a Cincinnati test group—made no effort to guide or limit their children's viewing.

Why this strange mixture of concern and indifference? Why does a mother (Continued on page 110)

How Good Are Children's Programs?

BY IRMA SIMONTON BLACK

Writer of REDBOOK's feature, "Your Child"

Almost any educator would prefer that children's lives be filled with real experiences, rather than have them become passive onlookers. But modern children do watch television, and a parent's job is to help the child find imaginative, informative programs. Following is my appraisal of network programs that are popular with young children:

LET'S TAKE A TRIP—The closest thing to stimulating first-hand experience that television offers. Two children visit factories, businesses, harbors and other interesting places.

ZOO PARADE—The program's affectionate approach to animals will help the child who is timid about them in the flesh and provide fun for the child who loves them.

DISNEYLAND—At its best, an excellent show for children of six or older. But its lurid spots are as bad as some of the worst blood-and-thunder shows. Very young children's watching should be supervised.

MICKEY MOUSE CLUB—A variety show that, in general, is well done, but its many commercials and frequently changed acts may confuse a preschool child.

DING DONG SCHOOL—The relaxed pace and emphasis on creative activities, such as drawing and clay modeling, make this a constructive experience for the very young.

LASSIE—Not objectionable despite stereotyped plots and heavy moralizing. FURY does a somewhat similar job with a horse. MY FRIEND FLICKA and RIN-TIN-TIN overemphasize the cops-and-robbers elements.

SUSAN'S SHOW—Susan herself is an attractive little girl, but her extremely fanciful props may bewilder young children.

SUPERMAN—Dramatizing and glorifying the authoritarian figure, this TV show does not help the healthy growth of democratic ideals. Some children have actually injured themselves trying to emulate Superman's feats.

WESTERNS—Far too much crime and violence for growing children. Typical examples: THE LONE RANGER, DEATH VALLEY DAYS, BUFFALO BILL, JR., WILD BILL HICKOK. Viewing should be restricted.

CARTOONS—Too many are marked by confusion and bad taste. Others play up frightening characterizations—wolf with fangs bared, cat suddenly growing huge and fierce—that make some of the Disney films unsuitable for young children. Furthermore, an addiction to cartoon flights of fancy keeps a child from using his own imagination and gives him a false idea of what being "imaginative" really is.

this up-front view, too?" That evening in Salt Lake City he mentioned the idea to a railroad official. The pair talked into the night.

Next day Osborn journeyed on to the Coast and was further thrilled by the splendor of Feather River canyon and the scenery across California to the Golden Gate. Now Osborn knew what to create—a rolling penthouse view of the West! Some 1,500 sketches later, GM designers created the revolutionary "Train of Tomorrow." From this design, the Burlington, Rio Grande and Western Pacific railroads built and put into joint operation the first transcontinental Vista-Dome train—the California Zephyr.

The Zephyr has been a sellout since its first run in 1949. Taking 12 hours longer, the rugged route over the Rockies used to be a travel handicap. But now the dome cars make an asset of this extra time. The Zephyr runs near capacity and in the black the year around. Southern Californians going East often travel 500 miles north to board the Zephyr at San Francisco.

Other railroads have adopted the dome idea. The Great Northern run through Glacier National Park and across the Cascades to the shores of Puget Sound has 40% more passengers since introducing dome cars. Passenger traffic is up on other scenic routes, other comfortable trains, many with sight-seeing dome cars.

Outstanding perhaps is the run of the Union Pacific's City of Portland from Chicago through the Columbia River Gorge—for sights, too, of smoke-hung logging camps in great forests. Civil War battlefields, lakes and wild mountain scenery are visual rewards on the Nashville-Atlanta route of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad. Then there's the Baltimore and Ohio Washington-Pittsburgh run via Harper's Ferry, the famed New River Canyon trip of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad between White Sulphur Springs and Charleston, W. Va., and the Milwaukee Road's Olympian Hiawatha run from Chicago through the land of the Sioux and the Shoshones and along the Lewis and Clark route into the Cascades to Seattle.

There are still others—the Northern Pacific route from the Twin Cities to the West Coast beside 1,406 miles of rivers and past 28 mountain ranges, the Southern Pacific's Shasta Daylight between Portland and San Francisco through dark pine and fir forests, past Klamath Lake and snow-capped Mount Shasta, and S.P.'s Coast Daylight from San Francisco to Los Angeles through flowered valleys and past tumbling Pacific surf.

But there's only one California Zephyr ride. Still in my Vista-Dome seat, I watched the string of silver cars thread westward in the late afternoon. We said good-by to the shimmering Colorado, slipped through the cathedral-like portals of Utah's Castle Gate and zigzagged up the snowy Wasatch Range, thence down to Great Salt Lake Valley.

The Zephyrette came around taking dinner reservations. While you dine, the Zephyrette can fix the baby's formula. This versatile hostess also reminds passengers to change from Mountain to Pacific time. She is also ready to assist in more dire emergencies. Once the loudspeaker announced, "If the lady who lost her foundation garment will report to the Zephyrette, it will be returned immediately!"

At 7 o'clock, we sat down to a de luxe dinner at comparatively thrifty prices. For the Zephyr is luxury travel for everybody. President and Mrs. Eisenhower have ridden it. So did a family of East German DP's—starved so long that they feared to taste the "over-rich" Zephyr fare. For them, Zephyrette Rodna Walls jumped off the train at Denver to shop hurriedly for pumpernickel and bologna!

The fares, too, are modest. A reclining coach seat for the 1,500-mile run from Denver to San Francisco is only $33.43—under 2½ cents a mile. That's less than it would cost by car and one-third below the lowest rate by air. And no other method of transportation can offer the train's wonderful combination of sure weather-free speed, plus we're-right-there view and move-about comfort while somebody else drives. Even including first-class fares and Pullman supplement, a family of four can make this run in two connecting private bedrooms at a family fare total of $180.90.

Engineer Denman had long since been relieved at the throttle of our great Diesel. The veteran of 52 years of railroading—he hired out as an engine wiper with the Rio Grande in 1905—got off at Bond to pick up the eastbound Zephyr. Now, in the tiny cab above the throbbing engines, lit only by the glow of gauges and indicator lights, the skilled hand of Western Pacific engineer Dennis McKenna held the Zephyr at her unchanging speed, pounding hour after hour toward the Pacific, a roaring streak of light through the darkening forest. Behind those bright windows, people were living everyday lives—bathing the children and popping them into bed, working at business to be conducted the next day, having a last nightcap in the plush club car or still sitting in the dim-lit dome cars, feeling somehow a part of the moonlit landscape rushing past.

I couldn't tear myself away from that view. Even in bed, with the lights turned out and the blind raised, I watched as the Zephyr stretched out for the long straight run across the Nevada desert, watched until the day's varied excitements teamed with the soft mattress to close weary eyes.

But I was up early to get my first glimpse of California's famed Feather River Canyon and the Mother Lode country. Once again we hugged a dizzy ledge above cascading waters. More breathtaking tunnels. More deer bounding away from our streamliner. More glimpses of . . . "was that a ghost town, an abandoned mining camp?" We twisted with the beautiful serpentine Feather for 118 miles, down to the valley where James Marshall started America's first great gold rush and prospectors still pan the golden sands.

Leaving the snow-capped Sierras behind, the Zephyr streaked between orange groves and rice paddies, crossed California's lushly fertile Central Valley, crested the gentler Coastal Range and, 50 hours out of Chicago, glided into Oakland terminal.

Like the Corn Belt passenger who spoke to me just out of Denver, I, too, "hated to come back to this world." Happily there were other scenic railroad runs for me—and for you—to try, scores of places where I could ride the rails to beauty. . . . THE END who lovingly guides her small child in every other activity let him spend a third of his waking day in unsupervised televiewing? At least part of the answer can be traced to television's obvious "usefulness."

TV for Children

(Continued from page 55)

Said a youngish grandmother who is bringing up her daughter's two children, "I don't know how I ever raised my own without television. They were always underfoot when I was busiest. Now TV keeps the babies quiet."

You don't have to be "against" television to agree with virtually all child experts that this ever-handy pacifier, bribe and baby sitter is being shamefully exploited in millions of homes.

How can you tell when sensible use of television turns into abuse? There is no easy formula, but there is a test question that can help you set up guide rules of your own. Does your child's viewing serve his needs—or yours? This is not always an easy question to answer. In this most studied, measured, quizzed and counted industry of all time, scientific research has drawn a blank. Virtually nothing can be proved about television's broad impact on children.

This is not for want of trying. For the past three years the Council on Mental Health of the American Medical Association has been co-ordinating research projects through several universities. The final report is not yet in, but several Council members have told me that it will probably be inconclusive. According to Dr. Richard Plunkett, Council secretary, it appears that the research groups "are not going to be able to make any positive statement, one way or the other, concerning the bad or good effects of television programs on children."

Despite the absence of conclusive findings, however, most parents will agree that television does influence a child's personality, growth, development, ideas and behavior. The signs are all around us.

"I've become pretty good at catching table lamps before they hit the ground," one father comments wryly. "Since my two kids started watching Popeye cartoons, they go twisting through the house like a pair of high-powered corkscrews."

Other parents are enthusiastic about the things their children learn from the magic screen. "My four-year-old daughter surprised me with a lovely birthday card," a young mother reports proudly. "Television not only showed her how to make it, but is also teaching her to be thoughtful of her parents."

Whether or not television is good for children, it is clear that kids are good for television. Last year, advertisers spent well over $100,000,000 on telecasts aimed at the child "market." This huge sum was divided—very unevenly—between a relatively small number of "service" programs designed for children and the "entertainment" shows that get most of their attention.

What kind of programs do our children watch? The answer contains no surprises. Investigators in Ann Arbor, Michigan, found that Westerns were the overwhelming viewing choice of boys in the first six grades; first-grade girls seemed to prefer gentler fare, but by the second school year they, too, were riding with Gene Autry, the Lone Ranger and the endless stream of old horse operas from Hollywood's archives. An Indiana University study sampled the preferences of first to fourth graders in Indianapolis schools and concluded that "cartoon programs and Westerns rate outstandingly over other types."

The popularity of Westerns—and crime shows—has given rise to television's longest and most impassioned controversy. What effect do stories of action, violence and suspense have on young viewers?

Most authorities who have spoken out on the subject have expressed a strong distaste for these favored programs. One vigorously critical group, the National Association for Better Radio and Television, maintains there is "overwhelming evidence" that crime programs—which bulk very large during children's viewing hours—contribute to antisocial attitudes and behavior and also have a bad influence on physical health.

An editorial published a few years ago in the Journal of the American Medical Association cites a pretelevision study of children's reactions to movie horrors and radio crime. In a test group of 200 children, doctors found that nervousness, fear, poor eating habits, sleeping disturbances, nail-biting and similar reactions were two to five times as common among crime-story fans as among those not habitually exposed. While emphasizing the need for more research, the AMA editorial concluded that the manner in which crime "is brought before the eyes and ears of American children indicates a complete disregard of mental, physical and social consequences."

These experts find a clear relationship between what children watch and how they act. But it is by no means clear in just what way the two areas are related.

One view is that a child's choice of entertainment is more a symptom of his mental or emotional condition than a cause. Children of lowest I.Q. are commonly found among the most avid televiewers. According to one team of investigators, action and violence programs are more popular among children with "weak social relations" than among those who get along well with other youngsters. Another researcher observed that "the children who spend the most time watching TV are the children who are most severely punished by their parents, whose parents are not particularly affectionate toward them and who are subject to many restrictions on their freedom of action.

Many of the psychiatrists most critical of TV violence readily agree that it is not a basic cause of emotional trouble. They point out, however, that crime and action stories may give a disturbed child a little extra shove—as it did when one seven-year-old hurled a vase at his TV screen in an effort to stop a sneaky villain from ambushing his hero.

Although television's effect on troubled youngsters is cause for concern, most authorities seem satisfied that the medium is no threat to the well-adjusted child. The common observation expressed at a conference of 50 psychiatrists was that children use fantasy "as a vehicle of experience in working out reality values. Emotionally healthy children can readily assimilate . . . portrayals of crime and render them innocuous."

Broadcasters do not dispute their legal and moral obligation to uphold socially accepted values and to avoid "bad" or "harmful" influences. But they sometimes disagree with critics over just what is "bad" for children.

Several church and parent groups, for example, insist that crime stories are never acceptable. Commercial telecasters say privately that this attitude is unrealistic. In its program code, the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters (NARTB) declares that "the education of children involves giving them a sense of the world at large. Crime, violence and sex are part of the world they will be called upon to meet, and a certain amount of proper presentation of such is helpful in orienting the child to his social surroundings."

The NARTB code has been categorized by some observers as a public-relations technique for warding off criticism. Although it is subscribed to by the three major networks, some 300 stations and companies producing most of the new films made for television, the code has by no means solved the problems of inferior children's shows. One reason is that it is not very strictly enforced. Another lies in the broadly phrased provisions themselves.

The fact that crime is never permitted to "pay" on television, for example, is not reassuring to many child psychologists. As Dr. Charlotte Buhler has pointed out, "These children identify themselves with the criminal, and generally miss the point of 'Crime Doesn't Pay' which the sponsors profess to be the sole purpose of these programs. In actuality these children are intrigued by the techniques they see the criminals use, but visualize themselves as more intelligent than these criminals and as outsmarting the law-enforcing agents."

Nevertheless, the pressures that have been brought to bear on TV producers by troubled parents, teachers and psychologists have had some effect in recent years. In contemporary TV drama—as you may have noticed—cowboy heroes speak acceptable English. They use only upright means to bring about the undoing of villains. Unlike their movie forerunners, they rarely conquer enemies in noisy, bloody battle.

There is still a fair amount of action, but fights are fewer, shorter and less savage, and weapons are less frequently used. Another notable difference between old and new Westerns is that a modern hero rarely sets foot inside a saloon.

Interpretations of any code can vary,

Friendly extra on your western trip

She's Northern Pacific's Stewardess-Nurse, your helpful hostess aboard the Vista-Dome North Coast Limited. This is the train that takes you to and from the Pacific Northwest—the train with four Vista-Domes, newest-type lightweight chair cars and all-room Pullmans, Traveller's Rest buffet-lounge and superb dining car food. For free "Northwest Adventure" booklet, write G. W. Rodine, 337 Northern Pacific Ry., St. Paul 1, Minn.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY

CHICAGO • TWIN CITIES
NORTH PACIFIC COAST
(Convenient California Connections)

VISTA-DOME
NORTH COAST LIMITED

of course, and few broadcasters would deny that their self-regulating rules have often been violated in both letter and spirit. Old-time movies, widely shown on television, have been the worst offenders. But even these have come in for laundering.

Among the things your children probably will not see on television these days are such easily imitated "instructions" as techniques of shoplifting, fights with switch-blade knives, cruelty to animals or ingenious tortures.

Parents who want their offspring to grow up free of needless fears and prejudices can be grateful for some of television's other omissions. Standard comedy routines that may have helped to color your own earliest ideas—like scenes of torture in a doctor's office, or a dentist's pulling out all the wrong teeth—have been sliced out of dozens of old cartoons. Allegedly funny bits about children running riot in schoolrooms, passages that might encourage superstitious belief and those that ridicule mental illness or physical deformity have also ended up on the cutting-room floor. Even more important, derogatory stereotypes of minority groups have virtually disappeared.

The objectionable things children cannot see on the air constitute one measure of the responsibility broadcasters show toward their youngest viewers. But the industry must also be judged by the good things children cannot see. The sad fact is that programs tailored for children are few in number and getting fewer. A survey of Los Angeles viewing—duplicating a similar study made in New York—revealed that, of the 60 programs seen most often by children, only 13 had been created mainly for them.

Puzzlement on this subject runs deep in the industry for many reasons. Some of them are illustrated by NBC's spectacular flip-flop. Early in 1955, the network named Dr. Frances Horwich—better known to millions of children and parents as Miss Frances of Ding Dong School—as its Supervisor of Children's Programs. Dr. Horwich worked with other producers and writers in a way that had network spokesmen bubbling over a new "logical approach" to children. "What age group is the program directed toward?" asked a staff memorandum circulated only a few months ago. "What will it give to children that they can derive from neither home nor school? How does it fit into their total experience?"

Revealingly, the memo went on to express what many intelligent broadcasters really think of the standard fare they offer children. The new approach, it said, "won't put an end to the rampaging gas-bag of an extrovert who roars on the scene with a package of old cartoons and a likely sponsor, smugly convinced that all children are deaf imbeciles, but it paves the way for his burial."

As prophecy, these brave words leave something to be desired. The "rampaging gas-bags"—and their film clips—are still with us. But NBC no longer has a children's program supervisor! Nor does it curently have a single weekday show designed specifically for small children.

One of the few things on which educators seem agreed is that TV programs designed to teach must be aimed at fairly narrow age spans. Last year a consultant committee of the Educational Television and Radio Center recommended three groupings for simultaneous viewing—young children, 3 to 7 years; juvenile, 8 to 11 years; adolescent, 12 to 16 years.

But the youngsters themselves seem to prefer adult material. The durable Lone Ranger, who has been upholding law and order on radio and television for more than a quarter of a century, is generally classed as a children's entertainer. Yet according to Television Quarterly, "more than half his audience is adult." The Robin Hood series attracts three times as many viewers over 18 as under 11.

The result? Since broadcasters can attract children as a by-product audience, they have little incentive to create age-bracketed service programs. Indeed, the overwhelming majority of "good" children's shows are commercial failures. A West Coast organization that appraises children's television gave its "excellent" rating last year to 17 offerings. Of these, only seven were commercially sponsored. At least one of the fortunate seven has since gone off the air, and three others were actually family or all-age shows.

The major reason for this unfortunate gap in programing is that the Nation's children make up a small, specialized audience. The audience gets even smaller and more specialized when programs are aimed at narrow age or interest groups. But commercial television, says Edward Stanley, NBC's Manager of Public Service Programs, has to "hold the interest and attention of the truly mass audience or go out of business."

According to Lester Rand, president of Youth Research Institute, less and less effort "is being spent on trying to offer anything original or uplifting for childhood consumption." In spite of generally rising program budgets, the outlook is for a continuing decline in both the number and quality of children's shows.

Until children's programs disappear altogether from a medium that has grown too large for "special" audiences, the prospect is that youngsters' viewing hours will continue to be dominated by routine melodramas, cartoons, tasteless action movies, variety shows and similar entertainment cut to familiar molds.

In partial compensation, broadcasters will probably sandwich in more moral teaching along with painless fragments of history, science and biography. Increasing numbers of "family" programs will blend popular showmanship with instruction for the junior set.

Whatever our opinions of TV's products, the medium's attraction for children is a fact of life with which parents have to deal. And although we may not be able to pinpoint scientific proof of its effects, we must assume that television has some power to help or harm our children.

The present best guess of experts is that television is no danger to children as long as viewing is moderate and balanced. If they pick their programs with some care, they can even learn something. But children need to be guided.

Far too many parents overlook this simple, vital fact. If they neglect to help their children, no one will do it for them.

Broadcasters "firmly believe" says NARTB President Harold E. Fellows, "that the primary responsibility for encouraging the young to select good programs lies with their parents." How can you meet this responsibility, which the commercial broadcasters themselves will not bear? An important first step is to watch some shows along with your child and determine the ones he prefers. Encourage him to tune in on those you think are in good taste and to pass up the others.

Set an example by your own viewing habits. Parents who watch anything that happens to be on for hours at a time can hardly expect a small boy or girl to be selective.

"When our oldest child was smaller," a young mother told me wistfully, "we used to read stories to her at bedtime. Our youngest, who's now four, thinks story time is a kind of punishment. He'd rather watch TV."

Obviously there will be times when you will want to let your child himself decide what and when to watch. But until you feel he is old enough to exercise some discrimination, basic decisions are up to you. It will often happen that the shows you would like him to see are not telecast at the most convenient times—and vice versa. To get the most out of your set, you may have to rearrange your schedule or find other things for him to do during those hours when television would serve only as a time-filler.

Some psychologists feel that children get more out of television when they share their viewing experiences with others. If you can arrange it, let your youngster do some of his watching with friends or members of the family.

The most valuable by-product of this kind of supervision is that it can help you fit television into the total pattern of your child's activities. By taking account of his televiewing, you can make certain that it supplements—but does not replace—other important experiences.

A few weeks ago I was visiting a young couple when their five-year-old burst into the house. "Tommy won't let me play," he sobbed. "He says I'm a sissy."

"Well, go watch television," snapped his mother. "Can't you see I'm busy?"

To broadcasters this attitude is part of a riddle for which they have no answer. "We have to fill our program schedule," said one station executive plaintively, "but how much should little kids watch, anyway?"

That is one question you will have to answer for yourself and your children. Another question is the one Socrates asked some 2,400 years ago. "Shall we carelessly allow children to hear any casual tales which may be devised by casual persons and to receive in their minds ideas for the most part the very opposite of those which we should wish them to have when they are grown up?"

Contrary to the popular belief, television has not made child-rearing any easier. It is a temptation—both to child and parent—that has created many new difficulties which cannot be solved by any "right" formula. Rearing children conscientiously is still a full-time job. Any parent can make a mistake in answering the question, "What shall I permit my child to watch on television?" The real danger exists for those who never even ask it. ... THE END

WHAT YOU CAN'T SEE ON TV

BY WILLIAM PETERS

Is it "good taste" or sheer cowardice that keeps valuable programs off your screen? Here are the facts on television's quiet but deadening censorship—and how you can help overcome it

Last December, when station WGN-TV in Chicago suddenly canceled its television première of the motion picture, "Martin Luther," there was an immediate and nearly unanimous outcry against what was variously described as outright censorship, a craven bowing to pressure and sheer stupidity. From the heat generated both in and out of the television industry, one who had not been following its activities closely might have thought this an isolated case of suppression in an area of relative freedom.

It was not. That same month, when fighting broke out at a professional football game between the Chicago Bears and the Detroit Lions, CBS cameramen, in response to an unwritten understanding with the game's promoters, aimed their cameras away from the mob scene, onto the stands. In March, 1956, NBC abruptly canceled an installment of "Medic" which included a 90-second sequence showing the Cesarean delivery of a baby—a sequence described by the network as "unsuitable for family viewing."

In February, 1957, CBS canceled a regular five-minute program of news analysis by its chief Washington correspondent, Eric Sevareid, because the script allegedly reflected Sevareid's opinion. That same day Edward R. Murrow, another CBS newscaster, allegedly injected his opinion into a news program on the same issue—the State Department's refusal to allow American reporters into China—and was reprimanded for it. Although these two incidents involved radio broadcasts, both Murrow and Sevareid appear regularly on CBS television, and the principle involved is the same for both media.

A few weeks after these two respected reporters had run into trouble, CBS announced that it was canceling plans to present a TV play entitled, "The Commentator," which was to have dealt with the issue of whether a news commentator and a network should editorialize.

At about the same time, Father Thurston N. Davis, a Jesuit priest and editor-in-chief of the highly regarded Catholic magazine, America, was denied clearance for a script prepared for CBS radio's "Church of the Air." The script, later published in America, dealt with three areas of tension between Catholics and Protestants—birth control, censorship and parochial schools. The official CBS explanation: "The style and general approach of [the] sermon did not fit in with the program, which is inspirational and devotional in nature." This incident prompted the executive director of the National Council of Catholic Men to call on CBS to permit discussion of "important moral and religious issue of our time."

These examples of programs you have been prevented from seeing and hearing have been well publicized. But they are only examples. Every day large areas of information and entertainment are being blacked out for America's TV viewers. The causes of the blackout range from the timidity of network executives and advertising agencies to the economic interests of sports promoters, from the stubbornness of politicians to sponsors who quake at the outcries of small but vocal pressure groups. Whatever the causes, however, the net effect is that the American people are being deprived of programs which could afford them great value and pleasure.

What can you do about it? A great deal. It is important to remember that the executives who run the nation's TV stations are not merely private businessmen. They are licensed by and responsible to the Federal Communications Commission. They have been entrusted by the nation with an extremely valuable and influential medium of communication and are obligated, under the law, to use the public airwaves in the public interest. This is a report on how and where they are failing to live up to this obligation. When people understand that what they can and cannot see is frequently determined by small but active pressure groups, perhaps they will raise their own voices in a demand to get what they've been missing.

What is "good taste"?

A good deal of what is actually censorship or precensorship is justified by the industry on the grounds of its "family audience," "good taste" or "the public interest," and one must grant that few viewers want pornography brought into their living rooms. The difficulty is that "good taste" can be stretched to cover a lot of ground—including an aversion to controversy.

But "good taste" aside, there are other, less openly admitted, reasons for the censorship practiced by stations, networks, sponsors and their advertising agencies. Basically, they involve an attitude expressed succinctly by newspaper columnist and TV master of ceremonies Ed Sullivan in a 1950 column. "Advertising agencies, held responsible by sponsors for correct exercise of discretion in programming, want no controversy of any kind." Combined with an endless battle among sponsors and networks for the largest possible audiences, this attitude explains not only much that is not seen on television, but also much that is. ("Lassie" and "I Love Lucy" are often mentioned in television circles as ideals toward which other programs should aim precisely (Continued on page 80) because both are immensely popular and at the same time completely uncontroversial.)

What You Can't See on TV

(Continued from page 29)

Each network has its own official censor, euphemistically called a director of continuity acceptance. Stockton Helffrich, who holds this job at NBC, is probably representative of the more enlightened element in this little-known trade. "We are censors," Helffrich admits, "but we are also umpires. Our job is to screen both commercials and scripts not only for violations of good taste, but for free advertising plugs, things which play on superstition, racial, religious and national stereotypes, scientific inaccuracies and the like."

Helffrich is proud of the fact that his office has often resisted pressure groups, worked with writers preparing scripts on controversial subjects and taken the side of the writer and producer, though not always with success, against overcautious sponsors and advertising agencies. He admits, however, that sponsors, except on news and public affairs shows, do have the right to insist on script changes—a situation which sets radio and television apart from other mass media, such as newspapers and magazines. A random sampling of items from the monthly reports which Helffrich sends to his counterparts among NBC's affiliate stations indicates the sort of thing with which a network censor is concerned:

Changed (to something milder): "Just another Hollywood party girl playing easy-to-get at midnight suppers."

Banned: The showing of a toilet.

Cut (from Shakespeare's "Richard III"): The smothering of the little princes.

Cautioned against (after complaints from leather-jacket and blue-jean interests): Too many villains and too few heroes in leather jackets and blue jeans.

Allowed (by actual count over one year): Eight uses of the word "damn"; ten uses of the word "hell."

But the more serious excesses of television censorship by the industry itself do not come from such offices as Mr. Helffrich's or even from the code of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters. This voluntary code, like those of each of the networks, is employed as a very general rule of thumb, not as absolute law.

The "Martin Luther" incident reveals how some of the forces responsible for the censorship excesses work. "Martin Luther," produced by Lutheran Church Productions, Inc., was released to theaters throughout the country in May, 1953. A critical and box-office success, it played at motion picture theaters for two years with few incidents and little protest. The Catholic Legion of Decency classified it separately, as follows: This picture offers a sympathetic and approving representation of the life and times of Martin Luther, the 16th Century figure of religious controversy. It contains theological historical references and interpretations which are unacceptable to Catholics.

In 1956 WGN-TV agreed to give the picture its world television première. A sponsor was found, and the showing was scheduled for December 21st. Robert E. A. Lee, executive secretary of Lutheran Church Productions, Inc., recalls that "soon after the scheduling was announced, we heard directly from the station that it was feeling pressure against showing it."

Lee learned that the station was expecting a visit on the subject from a representative of the Chancery Office of the Roman Catholic archdiocese of Chicago. An appointment had been made for December 14th. On December 19th, two days before the scheduled showing, WGN-TV canceled the film. Ward L. Quaal, the station's vice president and general manager, announced that WGN-TV did not want to be a party "to the development of any misunderstanding or ill will among persons of the Christian faith in the Chicago area."

An Action Committee for Freedom of Religious Expression, encompassing leading Protestant church groups, was formed, and its leaders labeled the cancellation "de facto censorship" and an admission on the station's part that "it is vulnerable to pressures which we are convinced, on the the basis of our discussions with WGN, have been mobilized by the Roman Catholic Church to secure the banning of this film." Monsignor E. M. Burke, chancellor of the Chicago archdiocese, protested "We have not made any representations to WGN-TV in any way. As far as the 1,800,000 Catholics here are concerned, it was an individual matter if they saw fit to protest against a film they consider historically inaccurate, if not downright insulting."

In New York, Robert E. A. Lee said, "This last-minute reversal of the station's carefully considered program judgment can only be interpreted as surrendering to pressure from sources that seemingly want to suppress certain pages of history. Efforts at thought control, wherever they are exerted, are un-American and are to be deplored."

WGN-TV's embarrassment became WISN-TV's triumph, for on March 8th this Milwaukee TV station, reproducing as nearly as possible the Chicago arrangements, gave "Martin Luther" its television première without incident. On April 23rd Chicagoans finally had an opportunity to see the film over WBKB-TV.

The "Martin Luther" incident points up two characteristics which run through most of the television industry today: a basic and largely unwarranted timidity toward anything remotely controversial and a surprising receptiveness to pressure. Jack Gould, TV critic for The New York Times, deplores this timidity but says that it is difficult to pin down. "Almost every time I write that something has never been on television, I get letters giving me dates, times and stations to prove me wrong. Since no one can possibly know what every local station is doing every day, you have to be careful about flat statements."

But the fact that a single station somewhere once handled a so-called tough subject does not disprove the point that there are many such subjects which have not been given time and treatment equal to their importance in the world today. No one, for example, would deny that there are religious programs on television. Yet the Rev. Everett C. Parker, director of the Office of Communication of the Congregational Christian Churches, testifying in June, 1956, before a Senate committee, was able to say, "The National Broadcasting Company originates 4,860 minutes of network television each week. Thirty minutes of this time, .62 per cent, are devoted to religion. Furthermore, this 30 minutes is divided between Protestants, Roman Catholics and Jews in varying proportions. The net effect for Protestants is that, during 24 weeks in the year, not a single minute on the NBC network is devoted to Protestant Christianity.

"The Columbia Broadcasting System," he continued, "maintains two 30-minute religious programs, both aired in the early hours of Sunday morning . . . Protestantism at present is faring somewhat better . . . over CBS than on NBC. It is absent from the CBS network only 23 weeks. Of course, in both cases the Roman Catholics and Jews receive even less time. . . . The American Broadcasting Company currently offers no noncommercial religious programs on its network, although I understand the program featuring Dean James Pike of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine may be restored in the fall." It was. A recent check with Dr. Parker revealed that, with this exception, the situation is still the same.

Jay Nelson Tuck, the New York Post's TV critic, says that "one of the great problems of television stems from its constant attempt to capture the largest possible audience. I believe there are many smaller audiences and that, when you consistently strive for the masses, you are likely to lose the smaller audiences."

TV drama reflects the problem in its most extreme form. To list all of the subjects which are never—or almost never—dealt with honestly in TV drama would be exhausting, but some of the more ob-

The Golden Scalpel

BY MAXWELL MALTZ, M.D.

He could not escape his past when a girl's courage challenged his future as a doctor. Turn to page 101

vious areas are racial and religious discrimination, civil rights, sectarian religion, irreligion and religious controversy, divorce, suicide, homosexuality and labor-management relations. There are also many specific subjects which are, for all practical purposes, untouchable—the loyalty-security question, lynching, interracial and interreligious marriage, mercy killing, bullfighting, pacifism, birth control, the use of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution which forbids compelling a person to be witness against himself, and many others.

Some of these subjects have been treated in documentaries, although hardly to the extent that they occupy our minds and our newspapers. More have been subjects of discussion or debate, although, again, with carefully reviewed scripts. And, of course, most have been handled as straight news. But for dramatic shows they are virtually taboo subjects; on the rare occasions when they do appear, they have been watered down in advance.

In a recent article in the magazine Commentary, Henry Popkin, professor of English at Brandeis University, writes, "The favorite strategy of the popular arts is to sound a little liberal and then quickly drop the subject. Some equally vague liberals in the audience are stirred without becoming sweaty and excited, and, just as important, no one is offended."

This "new liberalism," Professor Popkin writes, "takes its stand for persecuted minorities. True to the new spirit of caution, however, they are usually distant, abstract minorities . . . a recent television play exposed the persecution of a man who chose to wear a beard. We are assured that this story is based on an actual incident."

"Six Television Plays," a book by popular TV dramatist Reginald Rose, contains scripts of six hour-long plays, all of which have been produced. It also contains a brief author's commentary on each. In his comments on "Thunder on Sycamore Street," which appeared on the program, "Studio One," Rose remarks, "Originally, 'Thunder on Sycamore Street' was conceived as the story of a Negro who moves into a white community. This was unpalatable to the networks since many of their stations are situated in Southern states and it was felt that viewers might be appalled at the sight of a Negro as the beleaguered hero of a television drama. . . . The selection of an ex-convict as the protagonist was the obvious choice since this could offend no known organized pressure groups. (I might add here that, in Act II of 'Thunder on Sycamore Street,' there is a derogatory reference to melted cheese sandwiches, which I sincerely hope did not offend lovers of same.)"

Referring to another play of his, Rose comments, "'Crime in the Streets' was turned down by the sponsors or advertising agencies of three major networks for precisely the same reason. It dealt sympathetically with juvenile delinquency at a time when juvenile delinquents were considered to be eminently unpopular. . . . The claim was made by one network that 'Crime in the Streets' was too violent a show for the public to swallow. This is strange to hear when we can see every day that the networks are not afraid to dose the public with violence and murder as long as there is no reference to 'controversial' social problems."

Rod Serling, another well-known television writer, has not been immune to censorship problems. His play, "Noon on Doomsday," was based originally on the Emmett Till case, the kidnaping and murder of a Negro youth in Mississippi. To assure that Southern viewers would find no cause for objection, the Negro question was eliminated; no Negroes appeared in the play; the locale was changed to a New England town; and in a last, desperate effort to preclude identification of the carefully disguised problem in the play with the real problem of Negro-white relations in the United States, a scene in which a character was to drink a Coca-Cola was eliminated because it was felt that "Coca-Cola is a Southern drink."

Perhaps the outstanding example of avoiding the whole question of race relations is a play called "Minority of One," in which the entire subject was precisely race relations. To remove the subject would have reduced the script to blank pages. The job of making such a play "fit for television" obviously called for great ingenuity. On this score, at least, the medium was not found wanting. Between August, 1955, when its author, Kristin Hunter, won a $1,500 prize as a runner-up in a script competition sponsored by the Fund for the Republic, and February, 1956, when "Minority of One" was produced on the CBS religious program, "Lamp Unto My Feet," virtually everything about the play was changed.

From a half-hour documentary about desegregation in Camden, N. J., it became a 15-minute drama without specific locale. From a story based on a factual situation about a white girl forced against her will to attend an otherwise all-Negro school, it became a fictional story about the white daughter of a French woman and an American man who entered an all-Negro school against the wishes (or better judgment) of its Negro teachers. From a story in which a violently anti-Negro white girl, spurred on by her bitterly bigoted parents, is slowly won over by the Negro children in her class, it became the story of a completely unprejudiced French girl who, in the space of a day, completely wins over a group of prejudiced Negro children!

In one sense, however, the appearance on television of "Minority of One," mangled though it was, was noteworthy. For of 19 prize-winning scripts in the Fund for the Republic's competition—all devoted to some aspect of civil liberties—it alone has ever been produced. And this despite the fact that all were offered free of charge to networks, advertising agencies, producers and individual stations.

Were the other 18 scripts just not good enough? The three top-money winners were all written by professional writers, one of them Jo Sinclair, author of the 1946 Harper Prize novel, "Wasteland." Three of the six judges were highly respected and experienced individuals in the television industry itself—Julien Bryan, a documentary film producer; Elmer Davis, the well-known writer and commentator, and Eric Sevareid, chief of the CBS Washington news staff.

Enjoy Paris glamour in your deodorant! Evening in Paris stick glides on smooth and dry, keeps underarms dry and delicately fragrant. Rely on it for 24-hour protection. New convenient push-up tube.

EVENING IN PARIS DEODORANT STICK

BOURJOIS • CREATED IN FRANCE • MADE IN U.S.A.

Beach Dressing

with Comfort and Flair

The bathing suits shown on cover and pages 68-69 may be seen at the following stores:

Cover — By Rose Marie Reid

ARIZONA

Tucson .....Steinfeld's

CALIFORNIA

Los Angeles .....The May Co.
Crenshaw .....The May Co.
Wilshire .....The May Co.
Lakewood .....The May Co.
Valley .....The May Co.
Palo Alto .....The Emporium
(Stanford Shopping Center)
San Diego .....The Marston Co.
San Francisco .....The Emporium
Stonestown Shopping Center..The Emporium

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Washington, D. C.....Garfinckel's

MARYLAND

Baltimore .....Hochschild Kohn & Co.
Belvedere Shopping Center
Hochschild Kohn & Co.
Eastpoint Shopping Center
Hochschild Kohn & Co.
Edmonds Village ....Hochschild Kohn & Co.

MINNESOTA

Minneapolis .....The Dayton Co.
Southdale Shopping Center ..The Dayton Co.

NEW JERSEY

Newark .....Hahne & Company

NEW YORK

New York City .....Macy's
Flatbush .....Macy's
Jamaica .....Macy's
Parkchester .....Macy's
Roosevelt Field .....Macy's
White Plains .....Macy's

OREGON

Portland .....Lipman Wolfe & Co.

PENNSYLVANIA

Pittsburgh .....Jonasson's

UTAH

Salt Lake City.....Z C M I Dept. Store

VIRGINIA

Falls Church .....Garfinckel's
(7 Corners Shopping Center)

WASHINGTON

Seattle ..... Best's Apparel, Inc.

Page 68 — Mother's suit and jacket by Jantzen
Daughter's suit by Jantzen

NEW JERSEY

Hackensack .....Arnold Constable & Co.
New Brunswick.....Arnold Constable & Co.
Trenton .....Arnold Constable & Co.

NEW YORK

New York City .....Arnold Constable & Co.
Hempstead ..... Arnold Constable & Co.
Manhasset ..... Arnold Constable & Co.
New Rochelle ..... Arnold Constable & Co.

OREGON

Portland .....Meier & Frank Co.

TENNESSEE

Nashville .....The Harvey Co.

Page 68 — Mother's suit and jacket by Jantzen

ALABAMA

Mobile .....L. Hammel Dry Goods Co.

ILLINOIS

Chicago ..... Carson Pirie Scott & Co.
Evergreen Plaza Shopping Center
Carson Pirie Scott & Co.
Hillside Shopping Center
Carson Pirie Scott & Co.
Wilmette (Edens Plaza)
Carson Pirie Scott & Co.

INDIANA

Hammond ..... Carson Pirie Scott & Co.
(Woodmar Shopping Center)

IOWA

Ames ..... Younker Bros.
Des Moines .....Younker Bros.
Fort Dodge .....Younker Bros.
Iowa City ..... Younker Bros.
Marshalltown ..... Younker Bros.
Mason City .....Younker Bros.
Ottumwa .....Younker Bros.

NEBRASKA

Omaha (The Center) .....Younker Bros.

Page 69 — Beach costumes by Catalina

CALIFORNIA

Los Angeles .....Silverwood's
San Francisco .....Macy's

DELAWARE

Wilmington ..... Oppenheim Collins

NEW JERSEY

East Orange .....Oppenheim Collins
Hackensack ..... Oppenheim Collins
Haddonfield ..... Oppenheim Collins
Morristown .....Oppenheim Collins

NEW YORK

Buffalo .....Oppenheim Collins
Thruway Plaza Shopping Center
Oppenheim Collins
New York City.....Oppenheim Collins
Cross County Shopping Center
Oppenheim Collins
Garden City .....Oppenheim Collins
Hicksville .....Oppenheim Collins
Huntington ..... Oppenheim Collins

OREGON

Portland ..... Meier & Frank Co.

PENNSYLVANIA

Philadelphia .....Oppenheim Collins
Willow Grove .....Oppenheim Collins

If the case against the fainthearted producers of TV drama is devastating, the situation in documentary programs is not much better. Impressed by Edward R. Murrow's "See It Now" excursions into such subjects as the Clinton, Tennessee, school integration incident, the Milo Radulovich security-risk case and Senator McCarthy, many viewers have a vague feeling that here, in the area of documentaries, they have been getting something of substance. Yet the mere fact that, within the television world and without, these three programs put on by one individual are continually cited as examples of courage in documentaries indicates how little there has been to place beside them. The Radulovich show, still being exploited as evidence in television's defense, appeared back in 1953.

Even "See It Now" has at times come up against the threat of censorship, although Murrow's conviction that honesty and courage make for good television fare has usually won out in the end. An interesting illustration was the CBS network's insistence that the Clinton production, which featured a long sequence of race-baiter John Kasper giving voice to his opinions on Negroes, be shown to station managers on a closed circuit so that Southern affiliates would have a chance to decide whether to carry it locally. Murrow reportedly met this plan with the statement that the film would not be changed in any case. But the pleasant surprise to the fearful at the network was not only that no station refused to carry the show, but eight stations which were not CBS affiliates saw it and asked to carry it.

There is little doubt that Murrow, his network and his sponsors deserve considerable credit for "See It Now." Why is more like it not being done? Most people in the industry know the answer. As John H. Secondari, chief of ABC's Washington news bureau and a writer of TV plays, puts it, "There is an immense amount of censorship in broadcasting, and, strangely enough, almost all of it is self-imposed. Writers, producers and others simply stay away from controversy out of fear of audience response and pressure groups. The advertising agencies, whose reputations with all their clients are at stake every time they put something on television, are the most sensitive link."

Controversy is not the only area which frightens off sponsors. The list of subjects rarely seen on TV screens because they are supposedly of interest to only a small audience is almost endless. In addition to religion, it includes serious music; classical drama; musical, dramatic and literary criticism; poetry; philosophy; modern dance; art—to name but a few of the more obvious ones. It is true that many of these subjects—and other rarities on commercial television—are now being dealt with on the nation's 23 educational channels. But if you do not happen to live within range of an educational station —and most of us do not—you can consider yourself largely out of luck.

It is in the area of news that television has allowed itself the greatest freedom from censorship. Although the three networks differ in the policies governing their reporters, all generally insist that news broadcasters be employees of the network and that sponsors have no control over news scripts.

CBS, aiming at objectivity, states its position in the words of William S. Paley, chairman of its board of directors. "In news programs there is to be no opinion or slanting. The news reporting must be straight and objective. In news analysis there is to be elucidation, illumination and explanation of the facts and situation, but without bias or editorialization."

ABC, skeptical of the possibility of objectivity when dealing with human beings, utilizes what John Daly, director of news, describes as a spectrum of opinion. "We hire people with a background to interpret the news," he says, "and we give them wide latitude to comment and to draw conclusions from the facts. At the same time, we try to maintain an equitable balance of broad opinion on public questions, and on almost any question we will have a group of four to six of our newsmen in the center, with liberals on one side and conservatives on the other." NBC seems, in practice, to have adopted a more rigid (and safer) policy than either of these—to avoid analysis and interpretation altogether, merely reporting the hard facts of the news.

But if TV news has resisted censorship more successfully than other areas of programming, it is nevertheless true that, for a medium with the exciting possibility of taking its viewers directly to the scene as news is being made, there is actually very little news on television. In New York City, for example, the local station which carries the greatest amount of straight news gives its viewers an average of only 64 minutes daily.

Not all of the news events you can't see on television can be blamed on the industry itself, however. Some result from laws laid down by promoters who sell the rights to televise their offerings and hence can either withhold them completely or dictate the terms under which they can be televised. This kind of arrangement explains the "local blackout" of sports events and also why baseball "rhubarbs," football injuries and free-for-alls are shunned by TV cameramen. It also explains why Kansas City viewers have never seen a televised baseball game during the regular season and why Chicago viewers have yet to see one of their two professional football teams.

The baselessness of the promoters' fear that local televising will invariably hurt box office receipts is demonstrated by the CBS experience this year in televising National Hockey League games on consecutive Saturday afternoons. The second week's telecast of a home game of the New York Rangers was followed, the next day, by the first complete sellout audience of the year at Madison Square Garden. The Rangers have been selling out on Sunday nights ever since. Interestingly, hockey promoters, unlike their counterparts in football, insist that the cameras follow every fistfight to its finish!

Another important area often closed to TV cameras is that of city, state and national legislative bodies and committees at work. You cannot see the U. S. Senate or House of Representatives on television. Although resolutions permitting the televising of their sessions have been introduced in both houses, opposition is so great that the subject has never even come up for a vote. A number of committee hearings on the other hand—for example the widely-viewed Army-McCarthy dispute—have been televised both live and on film. The prevailing Senate rule leaves the final decision on TV coverage to committee chairmen. The same privilege was allowed in the House by former Republican Speaker Joseph Martin, but Democratic Speaker Sam Rayburn has consistently ruled against radio or TV coverage of committee hearings.

The radio and TV industry, which has fought hard for equal access with other news media to legislative sessions and committee meetings, has had more success with state legislatures and city councils than with Congress. A recent survey of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters showed that 17 states have granted radio and television access to legislative sessions and committee hearings. Access to city councils has followed a similar pattern.

In their efforts to cover court proceedings, radio and television have faced a more difficult obstacle in the form of the American Bar Association's advisory "Canons of Judicial Ethics." Canon 35 states that "the broadcasting or televising of court proceedings is calculated to detract from the essential dignity of the proceedings, distract the witness . . . degrade the court, and create misconceptions . . . in the mind of the public and should not be permitted."

Canon 35 notwithstanding, radio and television have won some significant skirmishes in this area. Not long ago, Waco, Texas, became the scene of the first live television coverage of a murder trial, and more recently, the murder trial of John Gilbert Graham, the Denver airplane bomber, was televised on film.

What can you do about the many-sided censorship now afflicting U. S. television? How can you demand more adult programs, more honesty and less timidity in dealing with important, if controversial, themes? The answer is inherent in the system. If pressure against controversy can keep it off your screen, pressure for controversy can put it back on. Pressure for good programs can bolster faltering courage within the industry.

A letter to Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn and your Congressman and Senators can help in the fight to open Congress to further television coverage. A letter to your state legislators, city councilmen and local judges can do the same in those areas.

One man in a position of influence in television suggests that letters to sponsors, local stations and networks about specific programs can be much more effective if a copy goes to your local newspaper's television critic. He may print parts of it and thus give your ideas wider circulation.

Make no mistake about it—10 or 20 letters on the same subject at the same time often result in a flurry of activity at the biggest network. For this is an insecure industry, a fearful industry, an industry which pays hundreds of thousands of dollars to rating companies to find out how many people like what it is doing. You can tell its executives how well you like what they are doing for just three cents.

You may even get what you ask for. . . . THE END

REDBOOK - MARCH 1958

A Fair Trial for Pay-TV

"Pay-as-you-see" television may soon be introduced to America on a large scale. This month the Federal Communications Commission is due to begin ruling on applications from stations throughout the country to test one of the several pay-TV systems. The systems differ technically, but from the point of view of a set owner, they have this in common: you pay for the programs you see. The cost might range from 25 cents for an old movie to several dollars for a Broadway musical, with a minimum monthly charge. For the first time television viewers will be asked to buy their home entertainment directly from the people who produce it.

Why should anyone who is now getting television entertainment free be willing to pay for it? The answer to this question depends on which side in the eight-year fight over pay-TV is stating its case.

Proponents might reply: "Commercial television, aimed primarily at selling products, must try to reach the largest possible audience; programs are reduced to a level where even the least informed, least sensitive person will enjoy them. Pay-TV, on the other hand, will be exclusively interested in selling entertainment, not merchandise; its operators, like theatrical producers, will be able to make a profit with an audience of thousands rather than millions and will, therefore, be able to exhibit higher quality programs—Broadway plays, opera, ballet, serious discussion, imaginative children's shows. A relatively small audience would make it feasible to present new feature films and major sports attractions. Many people will be glad to pay for these productions at home, just as they pay for them now at the box office."

To this opponents of pay-TV—notably the large networks—might reply: "As businessmen, the pay-TV backers will not be satisfied with an audience of thousands; they will not resist the temptation to try for an audience of millions. Far from offering material which present-day TV does not offer, they will only duplicate the shows which already exist. The networks will ultimately be forced to charge for their shows, too, in order to get the money to compete for top talent. Thus, set owners will find themselves paying for exactly the same programs that were formerly brought to them free by sponsors."

Only a trial of pay-TV can demonstrate which of these views is the more realistic. By any conception of free, competitive enterprise, pay-TV should have such a trial. Many viewers, growing increasingly weary of evenings filled with Westerns, quiz shows, routine plays and cut-to-pattern musical programs, are looking hopefully toward the new system to inject fresh ideas into U. S. television.

REDBOOK therefore recommends a fair trial for pay-TV; bills now pending in Congress would ban it without such a trial. Under present FCC regulations, tests of various pay-TV methods will run for three years. No method may be tried out in more than three cities, and each of the trial cities must have at least four first-quality commercial TV outlets. This is meant to assure that, during the testing period, every viewer will still have an opportunity to tune in on a variety of free shows.

It is still uncertain whether any of the pay-TV promoters are planning to include commercial announcements in their programs. Since one of the most winning promises of pay-TV is the elimination of commercials and of sponsors' control over programing, the FCC should not, in our view, approve for trial any system which proposes to accept advertising. Furthermore, the FCC should be on guard against indirect forms of sponsorship—such as a company's offering its customers a token which would later be redeemed as payment for watching a given show.

Viewers who will be asked to support pay-TV are entitled to the assurance that it will not become just a variation on sponsored TV, that its promoters will make an effort to supplement and enrich the present TV fare—rather than merely ask the public to pay for what it is now getting free.

—THE EDITORS

Princeton
WA 1-2261
Steiner, George

80 COLLEGE ROAD
PRINCETON
NEW JERSEY

May 22, 1958

Mr.Edward R.Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

Dear Mr.Murrow:

When last we met, you were so kind as to suggest that I get in touch with you toward the end of May.

I have just returned from a fascinating trip to Mexico on behalf of The Economist and my plans for next year are now definite. Starting in September, I shall be based in Austria and propose to make a number of long journeys to Prague, Warsaw and, I hope, Budapest. Perhaps some of these might accord with your own projects and those of your overseas staff. In any event, I would be most grateful for the chance of seeing you again.

I will take the liberty of getting in touch with your office to find out when I would least inconvenience you.

Yours sincerely,
G. Steiner
George Steiner

Wed.
June 11
E. R.
M.

TO Mr. Murrow

FROM Miss Cecchini

Monday
March 3rd.

Re: Your 3:00 appointment today.

~~upcoming~~ Steiner
George

February 25, 1958

Dear Mr. Steiner:

This is just a note to tell you that I will be happy to talk with you.

Please call my office to set up an appointment.

Sincerely yours,

Monday
3:00
March

Mr. George Steiner
80 College Road
Princeton, New Jersey

fc

TO Mr. Murrow

FROM Mrs. Crissan Feb. 17

Ralph Colin called you about Mr. Steiner. Said he talked to you about Mr. Steiner about a year ago and would like you to see him.

80 COLLEGE ROAD
PRINCETON
NEW JERSEY

yes

February 10, 1958

Mr.Edward R.Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

Dear Mr.Murrow:

I take the liberty of writing you to inquire whether you might be able to spare me a few moments of your time.

After serving several years as a member of the editorial staff of The Economist in London, I was invited by Dr.Oppenheimer to become a member of the Institute for Advanced Study. I took up residence there in October 1956, completed a book, and am now leaving the Institute.

I am looking for possibilities of renewing and broadening my professional experience in broadcasting and in the analysis and gathering of foreign news.

I would value the chance of meeting you and asking for your guidance.

Respectfully yours,
George Steiner
George Steiner

THE INSTITUTE FOR ADVANCED STUDY

PRINCETON, NEW JERSEY

SCHOOL OF HISTORICAL STUDIES

Curriculum vitae: George Steiner

Born: April 23, 1929

Citizen: U.S.A.

Degrees: Bachelier ès Lettres (Paris)
Bachelor of Arts (University of Chicago)
Master of Arts (Harvard)
Doctor of Philosophy (Oxford)

Distinctions: Bell Prize (Harvard), Rhodes Scholar (Balliol College), Chancellor's Essay Prize (Oxford), O'Henry Award (New York, 1957).

Languages: Complete fluency in French and German; reading knowledge of Italian.

Professional career: Member of the editorial staff of The Economist (1952-1953 and 1954-1956).
Regular guest on the French and German programmes of the BBC during that period.
Member of the Institute for Advanced Study, September 1956-1958.

Publications on foreign affairs in Harper's, Life, Encounter, the Sunday supplement of the New York Times etc.

Lecturer for the Council on Foreign Relations (1957 -

References: Dr.J.Robert Oppenheimer
Prof. Archibald MacLeish (Harvard)
Mr. J. Fischer (editor, Harper's)
Mr. Donald Tyerman (editor, The Economist)

Steiner, Mrs Robt

The First Church of Christ

(Congregational)

EAST HADDAM, CONNECTICUT

Rev. Roy Gilmour Pavy, D.D., Minister

February 12, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow,

May I express my thanks to you on behalf of the women of The First Church of Christ, Congregational for the gift which I have received for our post office booth at the Summer Fair.

As it will be sold unopened I cannot thank you specifically for for the gift but I thank you for helping to make our summer fair a success.

Sincerely,

Lee Anne S. Steiner (Mrs. Robert H.)

President, Colonial Guild Auxiliary
First Church of Christ, Congregational
East Haddam, Conn.

Mrs. Robert Steiner
East Haddam
Conn.

Sterling, J. E. Wallace

January 16, 1959

Dear Wallace:

Thanks for the kind words about the year-end roundup. But I would be even more grateful to you if you would let me buy you lunch next time you are in this miserable city.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

Dr. J.E. Wallace Sterling
Stanford University
Palo Alto, California

J. E. WALLACE STERLING

January 6, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

Just a note, a little bit belated, to tell you how much I enjoyed your yearend's roundup. I have been listening to this show for a number of years, but this is the first time I have seen it on television. To say that I enjoyed it is to make an understatement. So congratulations!

One of these days when I am in New York, I may intrude on your altogether too busy life just for the pleasure of saying hello.

All best wishes.

Yours,

Wally

J. E. Wallace Sterling

Stern, Ernest

January 9, 1958

Dear Mr. Stern:

Thank you for sending me a copy of your letter to Gene DePoris.

We are all very proud of the Marian Anderson show, and I have been delighted to see the enthusiastic response both by mail and in print.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Ernest E. Stern
American Broadcasting System
Press Information
Hollywood 27, California

mec

AMERICAN BROADCASTING COMPANY
HOLLYWOOD 27, CALIFORNIA

COPY

January 2, 1958

Mr. Gene DePoris
CBS Television Network
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Gene:

I almost called you long distance last Friday evening, which would have been 1:00 AM, Saturday, your time, since I was so enthralled with the "See It Now" presentation of "Lady From Philadelphia." It was even more gratifying at the conclusion of the program when the credits rolled, to see your name as the "reporter" for this particular program.

It made me proud to be a part of the industry -- which unfortunately doesn't happen too often.

Congratulations to you and the entire staff for this outstanding program.

Thought you might be interested in the enclosed column from the Mirror-News.

All good wishes to you and yours in the New Year and drop a line when you find the time.

Best regards.

Cordially,

Ernest E. Stern
Director of TV Network
Press Information

EES:km

cc: Mr. Ed Murrow

Stern, Etella

Madison Square Hotel
Thirty Seven Madison Avenue
NEW YORK 10, N. Y.
TELEPHONE: LEXINGTON 2-6880 526

ETELLA NATASHA STERN

April 2, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am positive that you would welcome at a certain hour, when most tired, an unusual and quick-effective way of relaxing instantly. This is possible through a scientific massage. I am a former medicine student, having been taught in one of the foremost salons in Vienna.

I have been a few years in the States only. I do have the American licence as well. I should be most greatful to be able to count you among my clientele.

I am looking forward to hear from you and thank you anticipatory.

Sincerely

E Stern

Stern, Mrs R. L.

December 15, 1958

Mrs. Robert Lewis Stern
1322 Magnolia Avenue
Norfolk 8, Va.

Dear Mrs. Stern:

Thank you very much for your gracious letter of December 5. Programs such as the one we are trying to do in Norfolk are exceedingly difficult, and I can only hope that, when we finish the editing, you will feel that we have succeeded in some measure in conveying to the rest of the country the situation as it actually exists.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

MRS. ROBERT LEWIS STERN
1322 MAGNOLIA AVENUE
NORFOLK 8, VIRGINIA

5 December 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

For over a fortnight Mr. Morse and Mr. Barnett from your staff have been working with many people in our town trying to get a complete picture of education in Norfolk, so that we and others can comprehend it more fully. These two men have done an extraordinary job of pictorial reporting and I'd like you to know how grateful I as a parent and as a teacher at one of the closed schools am for the coverage of the enormous number of people who have played a part in our predicament - either in trying to solve or to complicate the problems involved in the closing of our schools.

Both of these gentlemen have worked unstintingly to meet the various personalities who have created and tempered the climate that now prevails in Norfolk. They have constantly sought to cover all angles of our situation for Mr. Friendly to evaluate.

It distresses our family greatly to learn that "See it Now" has gone out of existence. We hope that "The Lost Class of '59" will inaugurate a series of equally high caliber.

Norfolk is a wonderful city which we know can either return to the Dark Ages or move ahead to a cultural and educational Renaissance. We are grateful to you for your efforts and hopeful that they will be helpful in setting our goals in the latter direction so that we shall soon stand with North Carolina, Maryland, and West Virginia in this struggle for human freedom.

Again congratulations to your fine staff and best wishes to you for the continuance of such outstanding public service programs as "See it Now."

Very truly yours,

Helen Stern

Stevens file

ROBERT T. STEVENS
STEVENS BUILDING
BROADWAY AT 41ST STREET
NEW YORK 36

January 18, 1958

Dear Ed:

Just a line to express my appreciation to you as host for the very pleasant evening the five of us spent together at the Century Club on January 13th. I enjoyed greatly the opportunity of visiting with the other men and especially of discussing with you some phases of the present situation regarding the military in Washington.

With many thanks for your hospitality and highest personal regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,

Bob

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Stevenson, Bill

April 28, 1959

Dear Bill:

Many thanks for your letter of April 22nd and for sending me the book containing full text of the addresses made on the occasion of Oberlin's 125th Anniversary Convocation.

It was most thoughtful of you, and I greatly appreciate it.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Bill Stevenson
Oberlin College
Oberlin, Ohio

mc

OBERLIN COLLEGE
OBERLIN, OHIO

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

V.C. Thanks

April 22, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Ed:

On the occasion of its 125th Anniversary Convocation last October, Oberlin was privileged to present several speakers who have made outstanding contributions to the field of higher education.

In the hope that you will be interested in reading their remarks, I am pleased to send you, under separate cover, a book containing the full text of the addresses.

May I call to your special attention the addresses of Frank W. Abrams, past Chairman, Standard Oil Company of New Jersey; Henry T. Heald, President, The Ford Foundation; and John W. Gardner, President, Carnegie Corporation of New York. They are, I believe, of more than passing significance.

Sincerely yours,

Bill Stringer

Stevenson, H M

December 18, 1959

Dear Mr. Stevenson:

Thank you for your letter of November 22nd which was received here while Mr. Murrow is traveling abroad.

I regret to have to tell you that there are no openings on Mr. Murrow's staff at this time and very little likelihood of any appearing in the next few months. However, we shall be glad to keep your letter on hand and let you know if anything opens up.

Very sincerely yours,

Gabrielle Wachsner
Secretary

Mr. Hugh M. Stevenson Jr.
3317½ Berkeley Avenue
Los Angeles 26, California

November 22/1959
Los Angeles 26, Calif.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I would like to help you cover the 1960 Democratic convention.

My name is Hugh M. Stevenson and I am 35 years of age. I have five years of college and 12 years of newspaper and radio experience, including 5½ years daily experience as writer-photographer covering all beats.

At the present time, I am employed parttime with the Rodgers-McDonald Publishing Co. as writer-photographer for a group of community papers, The News-Advertiser Group. The other days and all the nights are spent freelancing features, pictures and publicity campaigns.

During my newspaper career, I have been a general-assignment reporter-photographer and have covered city, county, federal and police beats. I am an excellent feature story writer and have covered amusements, reviews of plays and musical events and sports. I also was rewrite man.

I report and write all types of news--fast and can dig up facts. I write clear, accurate and interesting stories and can adjust to any situation. I own three cameras--Nikon, Hexagon and Ikoflex--and can either handle camera chores or work with a photographer.

In 1956, I handled the state-wide campaign for Tom Moore, candidate for attorney general in Texas. Shortly after moving to California that year, I was in charge of the campaign for Emery Petty, candidate for congress. I continued my political activity during the 1958 campaign. As an active participant in these races, I know the personalities involved state-wide and nationally and am familiar with the local convention arrangements and geography.

Additional information and references will be furnished upon request.

I will be looking forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Hugh M. Stevenson Jr.

Hugh M. Stevenson Jr.
3317½ Berkeley Avenue
Los Angeles 26, Calif.

Stewart, Bernadine

May 29, 1959

Dear Miss Stewart:

I have your letter of May 21st.

You are hereby granted permission to run a series of excerpts from THIS I BELIEVE in your monthly publication for patients and employees.

We would appreciate your giving full credit to the writer and the book itself.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Bernadine Stewart
Mental Health Institute
Cherokee, Iowa

mc

Mental Health Institute

Cherokee, Iowa

WILLARD C. BRINEGAR, M. D., Superintendent
FANNY T. GINZBERG, M. D., Assistant Superintendent
J. T. MAY, M. D., Clinical Director

HUBERT A. CARBONE, M. D.
DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION
DANIEL J. SHEEHAN, M. D.
CHIEF OF INTERNAL MEDICINE
H. M. BACHHUBER, M. D.
BERNICE BROWN, M. D.
JACK C. CHESNUTT, M. D.
LLOYD L. DOWNING, M. D.
THOMAS GONIOR, M. D.
GEORGE HAJWORONSKY, M. D.
ENGRACIA A. HERNANDEZ, M. D.
SPEROS MENTIS, M. D.
C. W. POWELL, M. D.
ALFRED SAND, M. D.
WALTER TURKE, M. D.
ARIF YUKSEL, M. D.
AHMAD ZARWI, M. D.

BOARD OF CONTROL OF STATE INSTITUTIONS
MEMBERS
ROBERT C. LAPPEN - CHAIRMAN
GEORGE W. CALLENIUS
JOHN R. HANSEN

J. O. CROMWELL, M. D.
DIRECTOR OF MENTAL INSTITUTIONS

May 21, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Simon and Schuster, Inc.
Rockefeller Center
630 Fifth Avenue
New York 20, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We are interested in running a series of excerpts from "This I Believe" in our monthly publication for patients and employees. This is an occupational therapy project, and there is no profit realized. We have a mailing list of about 65, exchanging papers with other institutions and organizations.

Would it be necessary to have special permission to run such a series if we were to give full credit to the writer and the book itself?

We would appreciate hearing from you.

Yours very truly,

Bernadine Stewart

Bernadine Stewart
Occupational Therapy Dept.

BS/se

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE SUPERINTENDENT—IF CONCERNING A PATIENT GIVE NAME IN FULL TELEPHONE CALLS ARE UNSATISFACTORY: MORE DEFINITE INFORMATION CAN BE GIVEN BY LETTER

Stewart, Helen

PUBLIC RELATIONS

PUBLICITY

DRAMATIZED PHOTOGRAPHY

Helen M. Stewart

5008 COLLEGE VIEW AVENUE
LOS ANGELES 41, CALIFORNIA
CLINTON 6-8348

8687 WILSHIRE BOULEVARD
BEVERLY HILLS, CALIFORNIA
OLYMPIA 2-3316

February 13 1958

Dear Ed Murrow:

The enclosed clip and brochure about the first visit to the West of one of this thousand-year-old Order in India may interest you. It strikes me as being network material.

This is not a pay account with me. The "disciples" at Self-Realization Headquarters here handled Radio and TV with an assist from me but there was not professional coordination, or you would have been wired.

His Holiness is speaking in So. Cal from Feb. 11 through Feb, 23, according to a schedule which I have and if you contact ignore

Mrs. Louise Butler
phone: CApitol 5-0550
Self-Realization Hdqrs
3880 San Raphael Ave, Los Angeles 65

in case your crew is interested, she will refer you to the proper channel. Two small local TV spots, only for the Yogi.

NO

As of Feb. 12, there were no network committments on the schedule.

It is impossible to describe the effect this personage had on the reporters, many of whom were city-side, at the Press conference here. A stillness and Peace came over the group unlike anything in my experience. The voice is quite good and His English is formal, but excellent.

Trusting this suggestion holds something of interest to you, I am

Cordially yours,

Helen

Helen M. Stewart

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

His Holiness Jagatguru Shankaracharya, Spiritual Head of Hindu India, Visiting America February-March, 1958

This is the first time in the history of the thousand-year-old monastic Shankaracharya Order that one of its leaders will have visited the West.

His Holiness Jagatguru ("world teacher") Sri Shankaracharya Bharati Krishna Tirth of Puri, the ecclesiastical head of Hindu India and the apostolic successor of the first Shankaracharya (eighth century; India's greatest philosopher), will travel to all parts of America during February and March, 1958.

He will arrive in Los Angeles on February 4th. His mail headquarters during February and March is c/o Self-Realization Fellowship, Inc., 3880 San Rafael Avenue, Los Angeles 65, California, a nonsectarian organization founded in 1920 by the late Paramhansa Yogananda.

His Holiness will deliver addresses at many universities, several of which will bestow on him honorary doctorate degrees. The Jagatguru will also speak on radio and TV and will give talks before numerous religious, cultural, and educational groups.

Because of His Holiness' spiritual authority over millions of Hindus, the Government of India consults the Jagatguru on all policies relating to spiritual rules and Hindu religious matters.

His Holiness is Founder-President of the World Reconstruction Association (Vishwa Punarnirmana Sangha), Nagpur, whose aim is the furtherance of world peace and universal brotherhood. Administrators of this Association include the Jagatguru; Sir S. Radhakrishnan, Vice-President of India; B. P. Sinha, Judge of the Supreme Court, Nagpur; Sir Chintaman Deshmukh, former Governor of the Reserve Bank of India and former Finance Minister of the Government of India; Dr. S. D. Kitchlew, Moslem leader; Dr. Narendra Deo, ex-Vice-Chancellor of Banaras University; R. B. Pal, ex-Justice of the Calcutta High Court and of the International Tribunal; and A. D. Mani, president of All-India News and Editors' Association.

Two administrators of the World Reconstruction Association will accompany His Holiness on the tour of America — Mr. C. M. Trivedi and his wife. She is the niece of Chandulal Trivedi, Deputy Chairman Planning Commission, Government of India, and former Governor of the States of Punjab and Orissa.

A saintly personage of vast learning and a gifted speaker in English, His Holiness is also an outstanding mathematician. He has pursued original researches in Vedic mathematics and has formulated rules for simplifying many processes of modern mathematics. A number of noted educators in India consider the mathematical discoveries of the Jagatguru to be "epoch-making."

In America His Holiness will give discourses on practical methods for world peace; on the Vedas, sacred texts of India; on Karma Yoga (service to the world through right action and selfless work); and on the basic unity of all religions. He will also speak on his revolutionary methods for simplification of mathematics before groups of mathematicians, physicists, and teachers.

There will be no fee for his talks. Universities, societies, and groups that wish to make arrangements for the Jagatguru to speak for them will please write or telegraph:

Mrs. Pauline Glick,
Self-Realization Fellowship,
3880 San Rafael Avenue,
Los Angeles 65, California

Telephones: CApitol 5-0550
CApitol 1-0297 (evenings)

The President of India, Dr. Rajendra Prasad (in white) and Military Secretary Major Yadunath Singh offering fruit to His Holiness at headquarters of World Reconstruction Association, Nagpur, India.

His Holiness (center) standing while the National Band of India plays the national anthem, Jana Gana Mana. At his side is Sir Chintaman Deshmukh, former Governor of the Reserve Bank of India and former Finance Minister of the Government of India.

The Vice-President of India, Sir S. Radhakrishnan (extreme right, wearing white turban) discusses problems of national reconstruction with His Holiness (left, in white).

His Holiness (in center on dais) surrounded by Dr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya, Governor of the State of Madhya Pradesh, and all the State Ministers; on the occasion of the founding by His Holiness in 1953 of the World Reconstruction Association. Its object is the furtherance of world peace and universal brotherhood.

Stilgoe, R.

June 10, 1959

Mr. R. Stilgoe
New South Wales Government Offices
56 Strand
London W.C. 2

Dear Mr. Stilgoe:

As Mr. Murrow is away at present, I am answering your letter to him of June 4. I am afraid you are once again going to be unlucky. Mr. Murrow is starting a year's leave of absence on July 1 and in September he expects to be in Scandinavia.

Sincerely yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS 'ALICUJUS RAND, LONDON.'

NEW SOUTH WALES GOVERNMENT OFFICES,
56, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

BY AIRMAIL.

4th June, 1959.

In reply please quote

Dear Sir,

A mutual friend, Noel F. Allan, who apparently was friendly with you when you were in Warsaw in 1949, asked me before I left Australia two years ago, to visit you and convey his compliments. Noel, as I understand it, was working for the English Electric Co. on the electrification of the Polish Railways.

I visited your office one Monday morning in April '57 but unfortunately you were not available and it is only since then that I have found out how busy you must be in your career. It is however still my desire to contact you and hope that you would be able to see me at some time during my forthcoming visit to New York, where I will probably be from the 24th to 26th September, inclusive.

If you can see your way clear to agreeing to such a visit I would appreciate your writing to the above address, or to our New South Wales Government office in New York, which is located at Canada House, 680 Fifth Avenue.

Yours faithfully
R Stilgoe.

Mr. Edward Murrow,
Colombia Broadcasting System,
NEW YORK. U.S.A.

David Stillman

August 20, 1959

Dear Mr. Stillman:

Thank you for your letter of August 4th. I appreciate your suggestion that I participate in the Wernher Von Braun story, I AIM AT THE STARS and regret that I must decline because of contractual and other commitments.

With all good wishes and kind regards.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. David B. Stillman
Stillman & Stillman
41 East 42nd Street
New York 17, New York

gw

STILLMAN & STILLMAN
ATTORNEYS AT LAW

LOUIS B. STILLMAN
DAVID B. STILLMAN

SIDNEY H. LEVIN
EMANUEL D. FINKELMAN
VICTOR LEHMAN

TELEPHONE MURRAY HILL 7-6284
CABLE ADDRESS: "STILLAW"

41 EAST 42ND STREET
NEW YORK 17, N.Y.

August 4, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

RE: "I AIM AT THE STARS"
(WERNHER VON BRAUN STORY)

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am the attorney for Morningside Productions Inc. which is producing the above picture.

I understand that Mr. Walter Wisman, who is associated with Dr. Von Braun and who has been acting in concert with Dr. Von Braun with respect to the technical aspects of the picture, requested you to make a brief appearance in the picture; that when my name was brought up you suggested that I communicate with you.

The following is the sequence and dialogue of your appearance:

"INT. VON BRAUN HOUSE - NIGHT

256 MEDIUM FULL SHOT
As Maria is putting on the baby's coat, Wernher is watching Murrow over TV.

ANNOUNCER'S VOICE
And now, Edward R. Murrow...

MURROW

...Good evening, ladies and gentlemen... Tonight, I must speak to you about a most serious problem -- the incredible scientific progress made by Russia. I hope that the Congressional Committee dealing with this matter will hold open hearings -- because the people of the United States have a right to know the truth...

Wernher nods almost imperceptibly as he listens.

DISSOLVE THROUGH TO:"

The picture is scheduled to start October 5th but, of course, your sequence can be photographed and recorded at your convenience and I hope this can fit your schedule.

It has been some time since we have seen each other; as a matter of fact, if I recall, it was shortly before Mike's untimely demise and I look forward to seeing you again.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

David B. Stillman

DBS:AC

DAVID B. STILLMAN

St John, Robert MR

June 26, 1958

Dear Bob:

I am delighted you are doing the Ben Gurion biography. I shall certainly look forward to reading it.

You certainly have my permission to use anything that you think is worth quoting. To answer your questions: (1) The Egypt-Israeli show ran ninety minutes. (2) Playing time of actual Ben-Gurion interview on I CAN HEAR IT NOW record is forty-seven minutes. (3) The Ben-Gurion interview as actually aired, ran seven minutes and 24 seconds.

I also did another interview with Ben Gurion at the time of the Suez crisis. It might or might not be of interest to you. In any event, here is a copy of it.

Nothing would please me more than to stop off to see you in Switzerland, and I might do that very thing if Lebanon hots up any more.

Good luck with the book.

As ever yours,

Mr. Robert St. John
3 Dunraven Street
London, W.1, England

fc

JUNE 23, 1958.

Robert St.John
3 Dunraven street
London, W.1.

Dear Ed:

I am doing a biography on Ben-Gurion which Doubleday is soon to publish. I have recently been in Israel doing research, then to New York, then Washington, and now here. I am working today on the chapter headed 1956, so you can see it is finally about done.

I have just this minute finished three or four pages on your historic bdcst.with the old boy at Sde Boker. (I was in Israel at that time....we glimpsed each other in a hotel lobby, remember ? ....and I could get no V.I.P. treatment because it was all being layed on for you !)

The pages I have just written are mostly human interest stuff based on stories Mike Arnon (now in Washington) and Moshe Pearlman told me.

However, one day between lectures in Chicago last winter I sat all afternoon in the public library with earphones listening to the I Can Hear It Now record, and I took down a few quotes I would like to use in the book, with full credit, of course.. several of your questions and his answers which belong in a biography because they fill in certain historical gaps. MAY I HAVE YOR PERMISSION ?

And one other favor . Could your secretary send me the answer to each of these questions:

LENGTH IN MINUTES OF THE BG-NASSER SHOW.....(90 ?) 28.

LENGTH IN MINUTES OF ACTUAL BG INTERVIEW..... 43 mins
(as recorded on I Can Hear It Now disk)

LENGTH IN MINUTES OF BG INTERVIEW AS ACTUALLY AIRED.....7:24

(You may have these figures right in your head.)

I hope to send the manuscript off to Doubleday in two weeks. Then I will go back to my home base, which is a suburb of Geneva called COPPET, in case you are ever in that direction and need a drink. (Actual mail address is Au Coin du Château, Coppet, Vaud, Suisse.)

I was getting my passport renewed at the Am. Embassy here the other day and the Consul mentioned hearing some of my broadcasts from London during the war, then he asked if I ever saw you. As I was leaving the bldg. his secretary, or some woman who was in the office, elderly, came running after me and said: "If you ever do see Mr. Morrow tell him to remember me to his wife. We used to work together in the Eagle Club. She was a lovely one !" Then she fled , without even giving me her name, and I had no time to chase her and ask. SO....regards to your wife from an unnamed old Eagle Club associate.

I will greatly appreciate an airmail answer, Ed .

Shalom !

Stock, Kurt W.

May 12, 1959

Dear Mr. Stock:

Thank you for your recent letter.

Unfortunately, I shall not be able to grant you the request for an interview. My calender is really all filled up these days with things I must do, and people I must see before leaving on my year's sabbatical.

I am sorry.

Sincerely,

Mr. Kurt W. Stock
760 Jepson Street
Niagara Falls, Ontario
Canada

NIAGARA FALLS, ONT. MAY 6th 1959

Hello Mr. Murrow!
I presume you have a very busy schedule and many activities. However I still like to ask you would you give me the honor for a personal conversation. As far as I know you have great interest in foreign countries and I happened to be a prisoner of World War II in Sibiria (Russia) for four years. After my release I served three years in the police force of West-Berlin (Germany)
Now I'm a canadian citizen.
If you could find the time to see me I'll be in New York between May the 18th till the 28th on my vacation.

NO

Yours very truly

Kurt W. Stock

KURT W. STOCK
760 JEPSON ST.
NIAGARA FALLS, ONT.
CANADA

Stoddart, M.W.

February 11, 1959

Dear Mr. Stoddart:

Many thanks for your letter offering to supply me with material for one of my programs.

It was most kind of you to consider me in connection with using the material. However, I must tell you that I have no control over any programs other than those which I am producing at present.

Again, thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Mr. M. W. Stoddart
21 West Street
New York 6, New York

mcc

Can use material

Room 1905
21 West Street
New York 6, New York
Tel.: HAnover 2-0930

Mr. Ed Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Television audiences, radio listeners and the reading public have for years listened to the purported "inside dope" dispensed by traveling VIP's. They have told us what life is really like in all the countries of the world and particularly in Russia. Truth is, I guess, that these people have been given the visiting-dignitary type of look at the places they visited, and none of them has seen any more than he was permitted to see.

A friend of mine visited Moscow and environs this past year, and, because of his being simply an ordinary citizen, apparently had great access to the picture of ordinary Russians and their way of living. His stories, at any rate, are most interesting. Furthermore, this fellow, a businessman, was at one time in show-business and has appeared on television in the past. I believe the story of his trip would be of great public interest, and I believe the type of program you produce could use it to advantage.

If you are interested, I would be delighted to have that gentleman contact you.

Yours very truly,

M. W. Stoddart

M. W. STODDART

~6
c. 8 ~
c. etc.

Stolt, Richard G.

January 22, 1959

Dear Mr. Stolt:

I have your nice letter.

It was most kind of you to send me a complimentary copy of your booklet, "The Western Economy and its Future as seen by Soviet Economists" and I still haven't had an opportunity to sit down and read it but shall do so as soon as possible.

Your kind comments about my broadcasts are deeply appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Richard G. Stolt
International Film & Publications Co.
5065 Notre-Dame-De-Grace Avenue
Montreal, Canada

mcc

International Film & Publications Company

5065 NOTRE-DAME-DE-GRACE AVENUE
MONTREAL, CANADA

DISTRIBUTORS OF
FOREIGN FEATURE & SHORT FILMS
IMPORTERS OF BOOKS & PERIODICALS

TELEPHONE: HU. 8-2696
CABLES: INTERFILM, MTL
CODES: WESTERN UNION

Mr.Edward R.Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Ave.
New York,N.Y.
USA

Dec.31st,1958

Dear Mr.Murrow:

Please find enclosed a complimentary copy of our booklet

" The Western Economy and its Future as seen by Soviet Economists"

We have prepared this study to give in condensed form the views of our opponents regarding the state of our economy and related problems.Since a certain time lag occurs in gathering and translating our material,the articles and studies presented are about 3 to 6 month old.Since they are of more fundamental nature,the main conclusions are still valid,in spite of the limited economic upturn of recent month

We have mailed other copies to many leading Americans,and judging by the acknowledgements received,our publication is well received.Members of the US Cabinet have requested additional copies.Should you or members of your staff desire to receive additional copies,please order from the above address. Due to the high cost of translation and research,and the limited edition,the price is $ 4.50 per copy.

The undersigned is a great admirer and daily listener of your well-informed broadcasts.They stand out as islands in an ocean ~~xxxgrxx~~ of programms created by half-truth-artists for an audience of escapists.

Sincerely yours,
Richard G. Stoit
Richard G. Stoit
Research Department

Stone, John L.

January 13, 1959

Dear Jack:

I enjoyed the luncheon very much and only wish I might have sat around for hours and listened to the distinguished group you gathered together. Many thanks for the set of prints.

I think the interview with Governor Almond went extraordinarily well and I have hopes that you and your colleagues will feel that we have done our level best to do a show that reflects the actual situation. I will be less than candid if I fail to tell you that I am worried about it, but we shall just have to be judged by what appears on the end of that tube.

Do give me a shout when next you are in New York.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

Mr. John L. Stone, Jr.
WRVA-TV
5221 Midlothian Pike
Richmond, Va.

Telephone 83-5461

WRVA-TV
Richmond, Va.
CBS Basic Channel 12

Studios and Offices
5221 Midlothian Pike
P. O. Box 2370
Richmond 18, Virginia

JOHN L. STONE, JR.
Promotion Manager

January 9, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
The Fred Friendly Office
CBS Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Ed:

It was nice of you to attend the luncheon yesterday and to meet the Local Press.

Several of the people called me today to say how pleased they were to meet you and chat for just a bit, among them Virginius Dabney and Jack Kilpatrick.

I am enclosing a set of the prints from the lunch and from the interview. I hope you like them.

Two sets are going under separate cover to Arthur Morse and a set to the Governor.

During the war (II) I was with ABSIE of OWI in London and met you in the Wardour Street studios and also at BBC. Perhaps we may see each other at the Overseas Press Club bar one day and swap a reminiscence.

Cordially yours,

Jack

John L. Stone, Jr.

JLS:ew

Stone, Jack

TO:

JACK STONE WRVA-TV 22nd & CARY STREETS RICHMOND VIRGINIA

WOULD BE MOST GRATEFUL IF YOU WOULD INVITE OLD FRIEND LEWIS POWELL ATTORNEY IN RICHMOND TEL NO MINSON 3-0141 TO JOIN US AT LUNCH ON THURSDAY AT THE COMMONWEALTH CLUB. REGARDS.

ED MURROW

514-70

Storey, Guinevere

April 8, 1959

Dear Miss Storey:

Thank you for your letter of March 17th, which I found awaiting me on my return from a brief trip to Europe.

I am very interested in what you have to say about the school situation, and wish that I might have an opportunity to present the type of program you suggest. However, I regret to say that there seems no possibility of my doing so in the near future, because my programs for the remainder of this season are already planned and I plan to go on a year's leave of absence starting July 1st.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Guinevere Storey
Post Office Box 275
Battle Ground, Washington

mcc

P. O. Box 275
Battle Ground, Washington
March 17, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Person to Person
Columbia Broadcasting Station
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Noted RR

You have a very fine program in "Person to Person." I frequently see it. This week I was very much interested in hearing the President of Vassar College. Her comments on education were most welcome. I agree that the quality of secondary education should be improved.

I am a high school teacher of thirty years experience. May I state some of our problems as I see them? My state of Washington is not the best in the United States as to schools, nor is it the worst. Therefore my comments probably apply generally to the picture in the United States.

My school, Battle Ground, Washington, has 523 pupils in the three year high school. In the last five years we have had an increase of one teacher but an increased enrollment of 200 pupils. Next year we probably will have one additional teacher and about 60 more pupils than this year. This growth of enrollment without growth of the staff is one of our problems, overload. This is true of the grade schools here, also. Our first grade rooms this year each has more than 30 pupils.

Because of this overload in the grades below high school, pupils do not get proper instruction and are not prepared for high school when they enter. Our grade school principal several years ago said in my presence in a meeting of administrators and teachers that he could not retain pupils who were not prepared to go on because there was no room for them since there were so many new ones coming in each year, and it must be still true because the product is coming to us the same way--poorly prepared. Therefore we have in high school some with reading ability of 2nd, 3rd, and 4th grade level and many with 5th, 6th, and 7th grade level. I have been special English teacher for these pupils, and I know. This year I have had 21 in such a class and there were others who were not scheduled in it because there were too many of them to be accommodated.

This brings up another problem. Because we have these very poorly prepared pupils and also because we have all levels of ability and an insufficient staff, there is no segregation according to capability and we have the very gifted in the same groups with the very poor. This causes an impossible situation as to motivation and interest. If the class takes the middle path, the poorest loses interest, cannot keep up, becomes apathetic, expect failing grades, and develop this attitude toward life. The very bright could do twice as much, so that their time is wasted, they develop the attitude that they don't need to exert themselves, and many become personality problems from sheer boredom.

We cannot increase our staff because there is not enough money. We are dependent upon the whims of our state legislature which meets biennially. Washington, for instance in the matter of salaries has rated 3rd in the nation a few years ago. The last 4 years we rated 10th, 13th, 6th, 10.5. The prospects this year for adequate state funds for schools is very poor. The proposed state budget includes $90 for increments for teachers (no raise), and increment less by $10 than the rise in costs due to inflation, for the minimum salary. Under the circumstances the numbers added to the staff will be at a minimum since it would mean a cut in salaries, otherwise. This viciously means an increase of the overload and less efficiency in teaching--an injustice to the children.

Another problem coming out of this financial situation is the loss of our capable teachers to systems which can pay better. Not only are we handicapped by inadequate state appropriations, but also by a poor local district. It is mostly small farms and homes with a low evaluation; we are suburban and many families with many children live in our district on small acreages of low value and earn their wages in nearby Vancouver, Washington, and Portland, Oregon. Therefore local levies are not the answer since they cannot bring in enough to solve the problem. Our school acts as a training school; the more capable young teachers leave for other districts. We are left with some young teachers and the career teachers who came here when salaries were much better, comparably, and are stuck because of length of tenure, ownership of homes, and involvement in local affairs. They have been treated shamefully in salaries, the greater percentage of the raises having been given to the less experienced and inexperienced, otherwise they could not have been hired at all. If the state appropriations are as poor as we believe they may be, our teachers will flock to other jobs, not only the ones in this school but in the state as a whole. That will leave us with a poorer staff (inexperienced) with huge loads, to train our children for high school and college.

These are not only local problems but are true to a greater or less degree in many of our states if not most. I would like to recount them.

1. Overload of teachers
2. A resulting poor quality of students
3. Lack of segregation according to ability
4. Inadequate finance
5. Teacher salaries and turnover

These problems, not only in our case but in the case of many schools in many states, cannot be solved locally with local funds. It is very easy to say, "Improve the secondary school product". There has been some publicity but much more publicity along these lines is essential, before the public will realize the problems.

There is often a feeling that the public must not know what is wrong with our schools, and that is true here. If you in your position could do more in presenting this problem, I'm sure the teachers of America would gladly cooperate, and it would be a service to our schools, our children and our country.

Sincerely yours,

Guinevere Storey

Guinevere Storey
PO Box 275
Battle Ground, Wash.

Stout, Bill

January 13, 1959

Mr. Bill Stout
KNXT
1313 North Vine Street
Hollywood 28, California

Dear Bill:

If you want an indication of how this place is run, you will find it in my memorandum to Mickelson and his reply, which reached me only today. I don't know of anything else I can do, in as much as matters of importance do not appear to be "in the province" of anybody.

As ever yours,

KRM:skh

encs.

TO: Stu

FROM: Ekm

3 58

Stanton

M

Mick

9.59

De Stanton

Stout, Bill

December 3, 1958

Dear Bill:

I have read the script. The only thing wrong with it is that it should have been done in peak evening time and on the network. I know as well as the next man that no script can be a substitute for seeing and hearing, but you and everybody concerned should feel mighty proud.

I am going to do what I can to stir up the animals here, but I am very much afraid that this well-organized irresponsibility will have the last word. But again, hearty congratulations.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

Mr. Bill Stout
KNXT
1313 North Vine Street
Hollywood 28, California

Tuesday night

Mr. Murrow:

This bundle includes the script and a transcript of the SOF portions, plus copies of a few other items left unguarded in our promotion office. There are several letters and reviews and the editorial carried by the Times. That last and the letter from Ramsdell were especially gratifying. He and his paper have made no effort to hide their contempt for broadcast news.

Let me say again that I'm not sure I have any right to bother you with this -- chain of command and all that, added to my own vague understanding of how busy you are. But the decision to bury the show and ignore the tremendous reaction it produced is just a bit too much to stomach. And I know there is no one here willing to press the issue with those in charge. All we have been told (Whitley, Rosten, and I) is that the promotion schedule has been killed on orders from Stanton -- no ads, no brochures, no tub thumping of any kind.

Despite the constant struggle with executive invertebrates, I have very few regrets about my time in this business. The greatest is that I have never met you -- and I'm sorry that our first dealings have to be on such a level of frustration. Many thanks for your willingness to listen.

1360 Ave

(A bonus item in the bundle: Freberg's study of the business approach to the Savior's birth. The Green Christmas)

Strawser, Neil

CBS NEWS

Office Communication

to: Mr. Strawser

from: Mr. Murrow

March 17, 1959

Many thanks for sending me the editorial from the Washington Post and, belatedly, let me say also my thanks for the Front Royal piece which could not have been better. I said so to my colleagues here, but neglected, until now, to say it to you.

I am off on a quick trip this weekend to London, Paris and Berlin, but will hope to see you in your fair city some time in April or May.

So many kind things have been said about me in connection with the year's leave that I am already afraid to face the prospect of coming back, because I know I can't live up to the generosity of my colleagues.

ERM/hl

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Ed Murrow

March 4,1959

from: Neil Strawser

Attached is an editorial from the Washington Post of Feb.21, the Post evidently sharing with us the regret at your planned leave of absence.

I think the opportunity for a year of rest and re-thinking is not to be passed up, but I am sure the network will miss you. My selfish regret is that for a year I can not gain that rare and momentary equality of stature which comes when you say, "That was my colleague in Washington...."

My hope is that the Front Royal piece the other night came up to the standards of the man who set them.

Neil

Life Without Murrow

Newspapermen, according to the myths of the trade, are supposed to gaze patronizingly upon their upstart rivals on television and radio, but no reporter worth his salt would look down on the abilities of Edward R. Murrow. It is sad to know that beginning July 1, Mr. Murrow will take a year's leave of absence from the Columbia Broadcasting System, evidently in part because of differences within the organization. Few will dispute Mr. Murrow's signal role in elevating radio and television news reporting to the dignity it has now achieved; moreover, he pioneered in the lucid presentation of complex issues on his See It Now program. That program, dropped by the network last year, still has its mourners; nothing has yet satisfactorily filled the void it left. Mr. Murrow spent much of his energies this year on Conversation, an engaging program of transcontinental debate but seemingly frothier than his See It Now series. Yet it is encouraging that Mr. Murrow will continue to participate in Conversation, if on a reduced schedule, while traveling about the globe during his leave of absence. Many viewers and listeners will be awaiting his full-time return—cigarette, sepulchral tone and candid discussion of serious problems.

Stoutenberg, Ellen
F

April 9, 1959

Miss Ellen Stoutenberg
WIP
35 South 9th Street
Philadelphia 7, Pa.

Dear Miss Stoutenberg:

I have just returned from a trip to Europe to find your letter of March 16.

I should like to talk to you, and suggest that a few days before you next expect to be in New York, you contact my office and make an appointment.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

W I P / 6 1 0

PHILADELPHIA'S PIONEER VOICE, WIP BROADCASTING INC., 35 SOUTH 9TH STREET, PHILADELPHIA 7, PA. WALNUT 2-6800

March 16, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
THE COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, INC.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We have been doing some soul-searching about the role of radio in a free society.

In attempt to develop new attitudes in all personnel involved with the functioning of a radio station, we are developing the idea of monthly seminars, held without publicity or outside participation.

I would like very much to take five minutes of your time, either by telephone or personally when I am in New York, to discuss this idea with you.

As a major station in a large market, WIP is in a position to set an imaginative and fresh example of programming to others who have already accepted the formula operation. I know you are concerned about the industry and I hope your own schedule will allow me a few minutes.

Sincerely,

Ellen Stoutenberg

Ellen Stoutenberg

ES/mjs

WDC

Straus, Nathan

May 6, 1959

Dear Nathan:

I enjoyed our lunch enormously and I shall make it my business to have a look at Velingby in the early autumn.

I trust you will permit me to delay a little in suggesting a date for our visit to Quarry Lake. I am going to have to spend some time in Washington and Mrs. Murrow seems to be committed to various formations having to do with commencement at Mount Holyoke. I will hope within a week or so to suggest a date in June.

I say you my thanks for Slonimsky's book and also for your somewhat exaggerated inscription. Thank you very much.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

Mr. Nathan Straus
WMCA
415 Madison Avenue
New York 17, N.Y.

wmca 415 MADISON AVENUE AT 48th ST., NEW YORK 17, N.Y. · MU. 8-1500
570 KC. · FIRST ON YOUR DIAL

NATHAN STRAUS
PRESIDENT

April 23, 1959

Dear Ed:

Referring to our most enjoyable luncheon on Tuesday, I am sending you under separate cover the book, Lexicon of Musical Invective. I think you will find it amusing and very stimulating.

Enclosed you will find some pictures that I took of Velingby when we visited it two years ago. As I said to you, I regard this as the finest planned land-use development that I have seen anywhere in the world. Of course I have not seen what has been done in West Berlin.

I hope and believe that you won't forget to make good on your promise to come and visit us at Quarry Lake. So as to identify the neighborhood for you, I can say that, driving down from your place, it is almost exactly two miles east of the Valhalla station. It is on Old Orchard Street. As another guide, I may say that, if my general calculations are correct, the line of the Kensico Dam, extended east for about 1 1/2 miles would almost exactly cut through the center of my house.

With every good wish now and always, believe me, until we meet again,

Very cordially yours,

Nathan Straus

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

P.S. Helen says that she wants me to suggest a definite date. She will call Mrs. Murrow, shortly

N.S.

Enclosures

White Plains 9-6696.

7123
C1 #22
4

7123
C1 #15
4

123
C1 #17
4

7123
C, #12
4

7123
C, #9

7123
C, #5
4

Strous, Nathan

CEIVED
1959 FEB 25 PM 4:31
C B S TELETYPE ROOM N

WU016 DL PD

FAX PHOENIX ARIZ FEB 25 1114AMM

EDWARD R MORROW, CARE CBS

INTENDED PHONING BUT CHARLES REPORTS YOU ARE IN FLORIDA
STOP EVEN YOUR TEMPORARY ABSENCE FROM AIR
IS GREAT LOSS TO OUR MEDIA OF MASS COMMUNICATION STOP WHATEVER YOU PLAN FOR FUTURE I AM EAGER TO SEE YOU STOP PLEASE CALL ME FOR LUNCHEON AS SOON AS YOU RETURN TO NEW YORK STOP I WILL BE HOME MARCH TENTH STOP MEANWHILE MY BEST WISHES NOW AND ALWAYS

NATHAN STRAUS

352P..

Strauss, Nathan

wmca 415 MADISON AVENUE AT 48th ST., NEW YORK 17, N.Y. · MU. 8-1500
570 KC. · FIRST ON YOUR DIAL

NATHAN STRAUS
PRESIDENT

December 15, 1958

Dear Ed:

My son, Peter, who is Program Director at the station, reported to me that Barry Gray read the UPI wire review on "J. B." and that, at the last minute, much to my satisfaction, succeeded in getting Raymond Massey for an interview on his program.

Cordially,

Nathan Straus

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 17, New York

Straus, Nathan

wmca 415 MADISON AVENUE AT 48th ST., NEW YORK 17, N.Y. · MU. 8-1500
570 KC. · FIRST ON YOUR DIAL

NATHAN STRAUS
PRESIDENT

October 8.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Confirming a telephone call, I wish you & Mrs. Murrow could come to Inwood Lake for luncheon next Sunday. Nothing formal. Helen & I are great Murrow fans — & we would enjoy a meal & a chat.

Hope you can come. Your own Summer home is near Inwood Lake, I believe.

Yours,

Nathan Straus

Mr. Edward R. Murrow

Phoned regrets

QUARRY LAKE
QUARRY HEIGHTS
WHITE PLAINS, NEW YORK
Tel: White Plains 9-6696

Straus

RECEIVED
1958 APR 10 PM 3:20
C.B.S. TELETYPE ROOM N.Y.

WU021 PD

ZG NEW YORK NY APR 10 157PME

EDWARD R MURROW

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

MY EDITORIAL BROADCAST ON WMCA TOMORROW FRIDAY

EVENING AT NINE THIRTY WILL INTEREST YOU REGARDS

NATHAN STRAUS

238P..

Strauss, Lew

April 22, 1958

Dear Admiral Strauss:

Candor compells me to say to you that I had hoped for a note about our fallout piece, but I had not hoped for such generous and gracious commendation.

I thank you, and I have taken the liberty of sharing your letter with some of my colleagues.

Mr. Friendly and I hope to continue our examination of this subject from time to time. In fact, the area so combines interests, information and importance that we would like to do one every week.

Sincerely,

Admiral Lewis Strauss
United States Atomic Energy Commission
Washington, D.C.

fc

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Mr. Paley

from: Mr. Murrow

April 9, 1958.

Accept Regret
Appropriate action
Background?
FYI File JSM
Note & return
Phone WSP
Reply direct
Return to sender
Status?
Suggest reply
To discuss
Comment or recommendation
Copy to WSP
URGENT

I thought you might like to see what Admiral Strauss thought of our piece on atomic fallout.

E.R.M.

Thanks for letting me see this. Couldn't be better. Would like to review this program when I return from Europe around May 10th.

UNITED STATES
ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION
WASHINGTON

OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN

3 April 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I was one of the millions of intent listeners to your program on Sunday. You and Mr. Friendly handled this radioactively-hot issue with fairness and thoroughness and a very great contribution to public understanding must be the result.

With warm regard -

Faithfully yours,

Lewis L. Strauss

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Stringer, Julia

7

January 13, 1959

Dear Julia:

Thank you so much for helping Mr. Murrow with his broadcasts from Pawling over the New Years Holiday. As always, he greatly appreciated the assistance you gave him.

Herewith the little check we owe you.

With best regards.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Julia Stringer
R. D. # 2
Carmel, New York

mcc

May 17, 1955

Stringer, Julia

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Many thanks for your recent note with check enclosed. It was a pleasure to be able to assist with the broadcasts.

Sincerely yours,

Julia Stringer

P.S. Hope you were able to plan that following weekend. We certainly have had some wonderful weather these past few weeks!

Peter Strong

September 8, 1959

Mr. Peter Strong
The American-Scandinavian Foundation
127 East 73rd Street
New York 21, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Strong:

I apologize for the delay in answering your letter to Mr. Murrow of August 21. I have only just returned from my vacation.

Before he left, Mr. Murrow asked me to write and thank you very much for your kind letter and the addresses you sent, as well as the certificate appointing him an honorary Fellow of the Foundation. He was most honoured by this appointment, and very grateful for your interest and offer of help. He took with him the addresses you sent, and will get in touch with your affiliated organizations if he needs advice or help while in Scandinavia.

Sincerely yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

THE AMERICAN-SCANDINAVIAN FOUNDATION
127 EAST SEVENTY-THIRD STREET
NEW YORK 21, N. Y.
TRAFALGAR 9-9779

CABLE ADDRESS "SCANFOUN NEW YORK"

August 21, 1959.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York City, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Upon learning of your imminent trip to Scandinavia and other points of interest, I telephoned your office to see if you would do us the honor of becoming an Honorary Fellow of the American-Scandinavian Foundation. As an Honorary Fellow you would be at liberty to use the offices of our Associated Societies in each of the Scandinavian nations. I am sure that they could help you with reservations and appointments you might wish to make and provide you with a base of operation if that should be your need.

Your secretary indicated that you might be interested and since time is short, I have enclosed your Honorary Fellowship certificate as well as the addresses of our Associated Societies and the names of the officers in charge. If I receive an affirmative response I will immediately write to these organizations to alert them to your arrival. If you would be so kind as to send me a rough itinerary, that would be helpful.

Thank you very much for your consideration. Let me take this opportunity to wish you a most enjoyable vacation.

Very sincerely yours,

Peter Strong

Peter Strong
Secretary, ASF

Encl.
PS:UH

Stuttman, Bill

CABLES AND TELEGRAMS "CHICANEWS, PARIS."

TELEPHONES: OPERA 59-38, 43-13.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS,
JOHN S. KNIGHT,
PUBLISHER.
CHICAGO, U.S.A.

Paris Bureau,
23, Rue de la Paix,
Paris,
France.

February 27 1958

Dear Professor:

We now have 15 days on the river at Olden,Norway beginning on July 12th instead of the 14th as originally planned.

We have booked a double room with bath for you two and a single room for Casey at Yri's Hotel, the pleasant hostel where one lives during the few hours when one is not baiting the local finny friends. We only hope you can make it.

I am off to Bulgaria,Roumania,Hungary and Czecho on Monday, As an old fellow traveling man I think that I ought to renew my connections behind the Iron Curtain.

Please let me know when you can how you think things will work out with the Norwegian trip. There isn't any particular hurry, as long as there is a chance of your coming, but if you have to wash it out I had better let the hotel folks know.

Love to Janet and Casey and best regards to you.

Bill

February 25, 1958

Dear Bill:

It pains me to tell you that there is just no chance at all of my joining you in pursuit of the finny creatures.

My mother, who is more than 80, lives on the West Coast and I am committed to go out there. I am terribly sorry, but as you know such things must be done. Maybe before then we can crawl near the summit together.

I shall take the first opportunity to insult Larry on your behalf.

As ever yours,

Mr. Bill Stuttman
THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS
Paris Bureau
23, Rue de la Paix
Paris, France

fc

CABLES AND TELEGRAMS "CHICANEWS, PARIS."

TELEPHONES: OPERA 59-38, 43-13.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS,
JOHN S. KNIGHT,
PUBLISHER.
CHICAGO, U.S.A.

Paris Bureau,
23, Rue de la Paix,
Paris,
France.

February 14 1958

Dear Professor:

I have finally had word from the man who owns the fishing at Olden, Norway.

The best he has to offer is " two rods " for the 13 days between July 14th and 26th inclusive. Provided there is enough water there should be sea trout as well as salmon at that time.

Since Ingrid does not fish - or will be very happy fishing for trout in a nearbye lake - this means that the two of us would have to arrange things so that Casey could have his full share of the sport. But this might easily be worked out. I am happy fishing trout and would be glad to give up a third of my time to the young man.

I have just written to Chicago this morning to see if it is allright for me to take my vacation in July.

If you think you can come over at that time I will get in touch with S.A.S. (the Skandihuvian air line) and see if they can't fix you up for several days on a nearbye river which they use for entertaining V.I.P.'s. Certainly the S.A.S. people in New York would be glad to help out too. *

We could promise them an occasional good word from the Golden Voice (L.L.).

If you want to look the place up on the map Olden lies on Nordfjord, the second fjord north of Bergen. The river runs from the fjord a distance of three kilometers before the salmon are halted by a high waterfall. When the water is right the fishing is swell. The nearbye hotel is very comfortable and is within walking distance of the salmon.

Love to all and please write soon.

Yours, Bill

* The SAS fishing at Stryn would come just before or after the other.

Flynn, Jule
May 4, 1959

Jule Flynn

Dear Ed—

Its a thrill.
I hope it works out well for you

Regards

Jule

P.S. See you May 15

Suall, Irwin

October 27, 1958

Dear Mr. Suall:

Thank you for your letter of October 23rd.

I find your idea most interesting, but since we are no longer producing SEE IT NOW, I have no suitable air time available in which to present such a program.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Irwin Suall
303 Fourth Avenue
New York, New York

mcc

Socialist Party · Social Democratic Federation
303 FOURTH AVENUE • NEW YORK 10, N. Y. • GRamercy 3-4286

October 23, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I write you to offer a suggestion in which we of the Socialist Party have a stake, but which I believe does have substantial merit in its own right.

The term "socialism" has appeared in the news in various contexts with great frequency in recent times. Kruschev, in his TV interview, stated our grandchildren would live under "socialism". Some Republicans in the current election campaign have charged that the issue at stake is whether we'll move toward "socialism" in America. In addition to the Russians and Chinese referring to their systems as "Socialism", Nehru has been called a "socialist" as have U Nu and Nkrumah. Then, of course, there are the European social democratic movements such as the British Labor Party and the German Social Democrats who are designated "socialist".

As the U.S. affiliate of the Socialist International, we of the SP-SDF have our own quite definite concept of socialism, which is shared by all the social democratic movements which are our sister parties. However, I am sure you will agree that this term "socialism", which is so often in the news, has a large number of the American people quite befuddled. Here in the U.S., it is a word which carries unfavorable connotations. In most of the world, however, it is a good word; one which evokes a favorable response, like "freedom" and "democracy". These sharply contrasting attitudes, especially within the free world, are not helpful to American foreign relations.

To some extent this clash of attitudes reflects real differences, but not altogether. To an extent it is based on misunderstanding, in which case I believe we have a duty to clarify matters.

Here is where I believe you, of all the persons prominent in the world of communication, are best equipped to perform a valuable service to the American people. I hope you will agree with me that eliminating this very great source of misunderstanding, this Chinese Wall, between ourselves and much of the free world, would constitute a real contribution toward America's best interests.

I would propose, then, that you consider devoting one or more of your programs to this topic. I believe that TV would lend itself best to this purpose, possibly with brief interviews with leading socialists in various parts of the world. However, radio could be used too.

V. G.
S.I.N.
Pohne

Basically I think the aim should be to distinguish between socialism and communism. Of course, there are those who believe the distinction is more fancied than real, and I believe their views should be presented fairly. I am not suggesting a propaganda program for socialism--and I am sure that you would in any case not present a propaganda program.

If you think there is any merit in this proposal and would care to discuss it further, I am at your disposal. I should be happy, for example, to arrange a meeting with you, Norman Thomas and myself. If you do decide you want to do this kind of show, we would go all out in helping in every possible way. In addition to Norman Thomas, for example, we could arrange for the assistance of Dr. Harry Laidler, author of a "History of Socialist Thought" and "Social Economic Movements". Other experts are available here too. In addition, we would use our good offices to smooth the way for obtaining interviews with leading Socialists anywhere in the world. We might also be able to arrange for interviews to be made even where there is no CBS man on the scene.

I await your reply and wish to thank you for your thoughtful consideration of this proposal.

Cordially yours,

Irwin Suall

Irwin Suall
National Secretary

Sullivan, Elizabeth

The Boston Globe
BOSTON 7 MASS.

Jan 19 '59

Mr Edward R Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York 22 N Y

Dear Mr. Murrow

Your speech, and a telephone call from David Susskind arrived together. I read portions of it over the phone to Mr Susskind. "Agree with him perfectly," said Susskind. "No one has done more for the industry than Mr Murrow...and I might add, Pat Weaver." So there!

I started to thank you for sending the text so must do it now...many thanks. Let's hope the networks follow your advice and feed the "8:30 to 11 pm" audiences with programs that show what a mellofahess (to quote "Andy) we're in.

Sincerely yours

Elizabeth L Sullivan
Radio-TV Editor

Summers, Gus

February 25, 1958

Dear Mr. Summers:

I have your letter of February 8th.

Thank you for sending me your article entitled, LET US FACE IT. I appreciate the time and trouble you took in doing so.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Gus Summers
3801 Lambert Avenue
West Palm Beach, Florida

mcc

Gus Summers
3801 Lambert Ave.,
West Palm Beach, Fla.,
February 8, 1958

Edward R. Murrow
C. B. S. Radio,
485 Madison Ave.,
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The enclosed article is sent to you in the hope that it may be of some value to you in your commentary and analysis of world events. If, in your opinion, it can be of value to our government in trying to fathom the thinking and strategy of the Russian mind, their intentions and possible moves, pass it along to the proper authorities, political or military or both.

The author is not interested in credit or glory for himself. Use it as you may see fit. Your word, your opinion carries weight. Your analysis on most any subject is so clear, so convincing, so broad, not one-sided, that it always is food for thought. And most all C. B. S. correspondents and commentators, your colleags, are very broadminded, tolerant and understanding. No extremists or very harsh critics.

The writer is a nobody but sincerely believes that his theory of this unusual Russian strategy has merit. Knowing Russia's plan to have others fight most of the battles to her advantage the writer foretold the attempt of Stalin to make friends with Germany so that Hitler would fight England and France first and possibly the United States come in. Hense her partition of Poland with Hitler knowing that England and France had a treaty to go to war if Poland was attacked. Also foretold the possible temporary friendship with Japan in order for Japan to cut loose in the South Pacific countries and get the United States to fight Japan for her instead of Russia fight Japan in Siberia-Manchuria, and to avoid a two front war and succeeded. Hitler feared and tried to avoid a two front war but since he could not get together with France and England and just have to march East against Russia, to destroy communism, he made the pact with Russia on Poland, hoping to crush England first and then take on Russia but he failed. So he did get the two front war that he tried to avoid. Stalin succeeded. The United States had to fight a global war.

Matsuoka, on his way back to Japan from Berlin, where he signed the triple Axis alliance, signed a pact with Russia for non-aggression in order to avoid a two front war, not to have to fight both the United States and Russia at the same time.

Now Sputniks and ICBM have come to the forefront but still, this should not change this strategy, win the easiest and most valuable assets or dangers at the least price, a bite at a time if possible, meaning countries and dangers nearest Russia itself, common sense.

Very truly yours,

Gus Summers

GUS SUMMERS
3801 LAMBERT AVE.
WEST PALM BEACH, FLA.

SEPTEMBER 15, 1957

LET US FACE IT

ATOM AGE - TWO POWERS ONLY

YES! In an all out war TWO POWERS will fight it out mainly, The UNITED STATES & RUSSIA! Our NATO allies will fall out into neutrality quickly, if not before the shooting begins. Why ? Very simple. The laws of NATURE most always prevail. As we all know the first law of NATURE, the foundation of life of all living creatures, including man, is SURVIVAL, the desire to live. And mankind, all men, will try to survive at almost any price.

Since the greatest battlefield between the TWO GIANTS is most likely to be on the soil of NATO countries, our allies, or most any country near Russia, the greatest destruction will take place there unless a country becomes neutral. But even then it might suffer the greatest destruction.

Any small country that receives " aid " for war from either side to use against another country or for civil war that country becomes a battlefield and suffers great destruction. It happened in Spain, China, Korea, Greece, Indo-China, or Germany, England, Italy, Russia. France did not suffer so much in the last war because she surrendered quickly (neutral) . The same may happen again.

RUSSIAN STRATEGY

First and foremost Russia will try to knock out American Air Bases (SAC) closest to her since they can do the greatest damage to her soil. Also any missile bases that the United States might have near her at the time. Most likely Russia may not wait until very dangerous missile bases have been built in England, Western Europe, Turkey or North Africa. She will keep on trying to force neutrality on most every country around her, to wreck NATO; to push back American destructive power as far away from her soil as possible. We most likely would do the same thing if there were enemy bases in Mexico, Cuba, Brazil, Central America, Alaska, Canada. If Russia fails through pressure and missile bases begin to be set up in England and other parts of Europe she may embark on a limited, preventive war and try to knock out England into neutrality as well as Western Europe and perhaps take over Western Europe; limited war, in hopes of preventing an all out war with the United States, even if the United States struck on Russian soil. A bite at a time if possible like Hitler tried.

Second, Russia will try to stop the flow of oil from the Middle East in order to paralize production in Europe as well as cut it off from American fighting power. We do remember what happened when the Suez Canal was closed and oil pipe lines were broken. America sent tankers with oil to Europe and that helped but in an all out war can many tankers go through ? Can there be ship convoys to Europe again ? Where will they land or unload with so many Russian submarines around as well as air power ? It will be tough as Russian submarines will form a chain from North Africa to Northern Norway most likely and especially near the British Isles since they are the greatest non-sinking aircraft carrier and our closest and strongest ally. Russian submarines will also try to choke off commerce in the Mediterranean. Russian air power will be doing the same as far as they can reach.

Of course the United States will not be standing idle. Our military leaders have their plans. The writer is trying call to the attention of our leaders a possible unusual Russian strategy, an unexpected strategy, and if it deserves merit to be better prepared to meet such a strategy, the best way possible, militarily and politically.

GUS SUMMERS
3801 LAMBERT AVE.
WEST PALM BEACH, FLA.
SEPT. 15, 1957

It has been the firm conviction of the writer for several years that the pattern of Russian strategy will be mainly to drive America out of Europe and Africa as well as Asia back to our side of the oceans and not to try to knock out America, as they know that would be almost impossible, even when they got very strong. They know our greatest allies are the oceans and our greatest defense is our navy and air force. And above all OUR TREMENDOUS PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY. But in Europe and Africa distance is our greatest disadvantage, especially to transport tremendous supplies by water and air, very risky and costly. And now even more so. That is the main purpose of their great number of submarines, to isolate America by water, the chief means of transport between continents. Air transport can never replace it. And by the same token our disadvantage is Russia's greatest advantage; our allies next door to her. She can travel by land to take over, destroy by land, air and sea, everything closer to her. And a large, fast mobile army as demonstrated so convincinly in Hungary for other countries near Russia to see, mainly for NATO countries. We still have to cross two vast oceans to supply our allies and ourselves.

We will BURY YOU Russia will repeat over and over to NATO countries. Over and over they will be warned not to allow American missile bases on their soil. That is not empty threats. If Russia can do great damage to our country across a vast ocean as our president warned us, surely she can do still greater damage to small countries so close to her and so thickly populated. Russia will take a leaf from our strategy against Japan. She probably will by-pass most of Western Europe (island hopping as by Gen McArthur) , outflank most of these countries and concentrate on England or France by first dropping a Hydrogen bomb on London or Paris as we did on Hiroshima and demand that England or France or both become neutral at once. For England not even to surrender, just to become neutral. Of course this will mean for the time being. What to expect later on nobody can foretell. If Russia keeps obtaining terrible bombs on England can England stay with us long ? Very doubtful since the atomic and hydrogen weapons are so destructive and England is so small and so thickly populated.

Then Russian submarines will begin their destruction, sinking ships and perhaps bombarding British cities even with missiles to break their will to resist, for a quick knockout. Of course the Russian propaganda machine will be in high gear to force them to become " neutral ", that their quarrel is not with the British people or even with the American people but against the American imperialist, capitalist interests, as in the past. It is possible that Russia may not try to do much damage to the United States at first, mainly to try to knock out our allies into " neutrality " , just drive America to her shores. Thatthey will be trying to free Europe for the Europeans, Africa for the Africans, Asia for the Asiatics. It will sound good to many people.

She probably will give second priority to Turkey if much damage is done to her from Turkish bases by American power but she will try to get Arab countries to handle Turkey, Syria and Egypt for instance. Russia may even hint or promise the Arabs that she cares little about Israel's independence. If it should appear that Russia may gain control of Western Europe, Arab countries may jump on the Russianbandwagon. She may promise Algerian Independence to gain the support of the Arab countries. If things are too tough for Russia she may set North Korea to attack South Korea and Red China to cut loose against Southeast Asia as well as Formosa in order to keep as much American power dispersed as possible. Again distance is our great disadvantage, especially by water. Russia can supply her allies in Europe and Asia by land.

The label of colonialism as well as imperialism will be tagged on us with great fury to Russia's advantage since we are the head of the Western World and the Western World also includes England, France, Italy, Germany, Hollans, Belgium, Spain, Portugal; all colonial powers.

GUS SUMMERS
3801 LAMBERT AVE.
WEST PALM BEACH, FLA.
SEPT. 15, 1957

All belonging to the white race, western civilization, the exploiters of the Yellow and Black races, of Asia and Africa. That is history and in Russia's favor to-day. We cannot change history, we cannot change facts. Of course communists and other extremists stretch the facts enormously.

If American massive retaliation is successful enough and destructive enough to convince Russia that she will be destroyed in the process she probably will halt her adventure and be willing to listen to reason and seat across a table to settle differences peacefully, with real disarmament and real inspection as the United States advocates all along, the one practical method.

It is unjust to blame all our setbacks on Mr. Dulles. He has been a wonderful public servant, tireless seemingly, a devoted man as our president has said more than once. Not so much blame on our president. They deserve very little blame if any. It is history and geography that create events and results to-day. Asia and Africa hate colonial powers due to historical events. Many of these countries regained their independence only in recent years. Even if most all colonial powers did bring many blessings to these countries they are still hated because they were their masters you might say.

Many of these countries are near the new GIANT who can destroy them and they know it. Russia's methods can be ruthless. Hardly any fear from America. India can be overrun by Russia power, no matter how much " aid " the United States may give her. The greater American aid against Russia the greater her destruction will be as she will become a battlefield, not Russian soil or American soil. Hence her neutrality. They know that America must defend herself first in a life and death struggle with Russia. Russia can also set Red China against India for the good of communism if necessary. So, neutrality is the safest course for India.

Stalin wanted spheres of influence. For Russia most all of Europe and perhaps most or all of Africa and Asia. For the United States the Western Hemisphere. This is mainly guesswork. But these things may come to pass in our lifetime, perhaps in the near future. It is very doubtful that Russia can ever conquer the United States on our own soil and they probably feel that way about it as they know the great productive capacity of the United States and the oceans that separate us. If our strength is concentrated on our own soil, in North America, it is tremendous. ICBM? The United States most likely can match Russia missile for missile across as ocean and do better. Isolationists might have been right in the past. Let Europe fight her wars, they said. In time China may become a threat to Russia. Will we take sides again ? People will always fight among themselves for that is the nature of man and always will be. The more countries Russia may have to control the more headaches she will have although many advantages also.

So if we see countries resorting to neutrality, even England, let us not be shocked too much, let us not become hysterical. If we see our allies or friends "desert" us because of Russian pressure or because of reasons for trading with communist countries, or in time of war, let us stay as calf and tolerant and understanding as we possibly can for our own good, for these are things that we must expect, for that is the nature of man, survival and self interest which is based on survival. To-day's friends, tomorrow's enemies and vise versa. Remember Germany, Japan, Italy ? Also Russia, Poland, Checoslavakia, Yugoslavia ?

JAN 1968

The Talley Children, 21, first cousins, two families. They are the children of Mr. & Mrs. Lambert Talley (10) and Mr. & Mrs. Lyman Talley (11) of Highlands, N. C. (Clear Creek Community).

The picture was taken on October 13, 1957, during the Golden Wedding Anniversary of Mr. & Mrs. Harrison H. Talley (Minnie Green), grandparents of the children.

Mrs. Talley recalls of helping a neighbor all day pull corn fodder on the day before her marriage, about 300 feet from their present home, where this picture was taken. Times change ?!!?

GUS SUMMERS
3801 Lambert Avenue
West Palm Beach, Fla.

Sundstrom, James

May 28, 1959

Dear Mr. Sundstrom:

Thank you for your letter of May 5th.

Your kind comments about my programs are appreciated. I hope that when I do return to CBS next year, it will be with a program worthy enough to warrant your continued attention.

Thanks, too, for enclosing your material, Operation: Ragweed. I doubt that I shall be able to use it on my 7:45 evening news program, therefore, I am returning it to you.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. James Sundstrom
38 Rye Road
Rochester 15, New York

Mrs. James Sundstrom

38 Rye Road, Rochester 15, New York

T M

May 5, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow,

As a ardent admirer of your "Person to Person", "Small World", and other T-V and radio programs programs, it's time I sent a note of appreciation. They are such worthwhile programs, and where could we meet so many interesting? I hate to think of losing you next year, but I know your leave of absence will be stimulating and refreshing.

I am enclosing some material that I have written on a topic which I feel is very important, and has never been used on a national T-V or radio broadcast that I know of. A very worthwhile program of interest and benefit to the public could be started. The idea needs a national boost, particularly in the mid-west where so much pollen originates. I know of no one whose influence could be greater that yours. You are welcome to use any of this material you wish. I have other material and letters from individuals, such as Alexander Rihm of the New York State Air Pollution Board.

I do hope you'll find time to use this. May I have the copy returned to me when you have finished with it? Thank you so much.

Cordially,

Claire Sundstrom

Mrs. James Sundstrom
38 Rye Road
Rochester 15, New York

Operation: RAGWEED
by Claire Sundstrom

While you may be enjoying those last beautiful days of August and loving every one of those early September days, one-tenth of our United States population is wishing it was quite dead. This is the growing number of children and adults who are laid low by the pollen of ragweed from early August until frost. The frost, which kills the ragweed plants, may come in September or perhaps not until October.

There is no need to go into the details of symptoms of hay fever caused by ragweed. Those of you who are cursed with it know them only too well. As the season progresses, the youngster or adult becomes more and more sensitive to pollen, heat and cold, dust, smoke. In fact, anything with an odor can be irritating to the nose, throat, eyes and chest. Gasoline, paint, and tobacco smoke are especially strong irritants.

The side effects of hay fever may last for weeks after the first frost. Victims are easy prey for colds, asthma, and Asian flu. Many hours of work may be lost, vacation plans are ruined, and the tourist business is affected.

The tragedy of this is that we could prevent much of this suffering. Unlike an unknown virus, we know the cause of this particular hay fever. It is the pollen of the dwarf and giant ragweed plant. This may come from your own yard or your neighbors, or be blown in from a state hundreds of miles away.

With skillful planning by towns, cities, and states, a great national campaign could be launched to educate people on how to get rid of this loathsome weed. It would not be an easy task, but it could be done. There will be those who say it can't be effective at all. I imagine Dr. Jonas Salk was told the same thing. A positive approach is what is needed.

This is my plan. Read it over and see what additional ideas you have.

1. Know what the ragweed plant looks like.
2. Get all of it off your property early. Start in May and continue through June, July, and August. Pull, cut or spray.
3. Tell your neighbors about the ragweed control project. Every plant eliminated in your neighborhood will help you during the season.
4. Get farmers, real estate developers, and owners of large pieces of land to spray and cut their weeds. It flourishes in newly turned soil.
5. Ask farm bureaus, granges, and farm editors to cooperate. See that your state air pollution committee is functioning effectively.
6. City highway departments should be responsible for keeping the areas at curbs and at sides of streets free of the weed. Vacant lots can be sprayed by the city, according to some city ordinances, and the bill sent to the owner.
7. Garden clubs, editors and garden publications can be a powerful influence.
8. Health bureaus and medical societies should be of great help.
9. Many organizations would welcome a chance for a new project. The Junior Chamber of Commerce, the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Cub Scouts, are a few that could help. What a wonderful plan for teen agers and youngsters looking for something worthwhile to do.

I read recently in the "Garden News" of Salem, Oregon, that the state is doing a splendid job with the control of ragweed. George Moose, the department's ragweed control supervisor, said that the department expects to control all ragweed in the 18 western counties, at least to the point of getting a zero pollen count. How much better can you do! A twenty-one gun salute to Oregon!

Anyone can develop hay fever at any age. It does not always start in childhood. You may become sensitive to ragweed when you are in your twenties, thirties, or even late in life. No one can afford to be smug about this allergy.

Last summer I phoned, wrote letters, and talked about the project. There was great interest in the idea. My neighbors were more than willing to get rid of the weeds on their property. Friends cooperated by telling others about the campaign and phoned officials who could help.

Mr. David E. Kessler, head of the WHAM radio news staff in Rochester, New York, made a tape recording and broadcast it several times to his large radio audience. Bill Struble, a reporter for the Rochester Times-Union wrote a splendid article for his paper. He included a picture of the plant causing hay fever, described what the city is doing to clean up vacant lots, and what sufferers can do to help themselves.

Are you willing to help? Let me hear from you if you are. States with successful programs could share their control plans with states lacking such a project. The governors' conferences would be an excellent setting for the exchange of these ideas.

Frankly, I'm not going to be satisfied until I get President Dwight D. Eisenhower, Governor Nelson Rockefeller, Edward R. Murrow, Dave Garroway, Charles Van Doren, among others, interested in Operation: RAGWEED.

Mrs. James Sundstrom
38 Rye Road
Rochester 15, New York

mk
2/16/59

Sunshine, Roberta

EDWARD R. MURROW
485 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

October 30, 1958

Dear Miss Sunshine:

Many thanks for your very nice letter of October 13.

Unfortunately, it will be impossible for me to see you, as requested. Lately, I have been so very busy with my radio and television programs and the upcoming elections that my schedule is very crowded and it makes it difficult for me to see anyone.

I am truly sorry Miss Sunshine. Enclosed is a copy of my biography which I hope will be of some help to you.

Thank you again for your sweet letter.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Roberta Sunshine
Seth Low Junior High School
Avenue P - 11th Street
Brooklyn, New York

mcc

Seth Low Junior High School
Avenue P. West 11th
Brooklyn 11, N.Y.
Oct. 13, 1958

Mr. Ed Murrow
C.B.S
New York, N.Y.
Dear Mr. Murrow,

At this moment I am a very nervous reporter for this is my first opportunity to try and obtain an interview with a top celebrity in show business.

I am a reporter on our school newspaper which represents sixteen hundred admiring fans.

I realize that my chances of obtaining an interview with a star in show business such as you, are very small. This is my first assignment and I would truly be very grateful if you would take a few minutes of your busy schedule and let me have the honor of interviewing you at your convience.

Very truly yours,
an anxious reporter
Roberta Sunshine

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION
TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS
DL=Day Letter
NL=Night Letter
LT=International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

Susskind

Daniel

N13D193 8R NL PD

NEWYORK NY JUN 6 1958

EDWARD R MURROW CARE CBS

485 MADISON AVE NYK

A GROUP OF RESPONSIBLE INDIVIDUALS INCLUDING RALPH BELLAMY HERBERT BRODKIN PADDY CHAYEFSKY ROBERT DOWLING FANNY HURST HARRIET VAN HORN ELIA KAZAN ARE DEEPLY CONCERNED WITH THE DIMINISHING TELEVISION PRODUCTION IN NEW YORK AND WITH THE STEADY DECLINE OF QUALITY PROGRAMS AND THE RESULTANT LOSS TO CULTURAL AND ECONOMIC LIFE OF OUR CITY THEY HAVE JOINED FORCES TO FORM TELEVISION ACTION COMMITTEE NEW YORK MAY WE COUNT ON YOU TO HELP OUR EFFORT TO IMPROVE THE SITUATION OUR REPRESENTATIVE WILL CONTACT YOU WITH DETAILS

DAVIS SUSSKIND CHAIRMAN
TELEVISION ACTION COMMITTEE NEW YORK

700P

Mr. Arnold
Judson
now called.

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

Sussman, Leonard R

The American Council for Judaism

201 E. 57TH STREET • NEW YORK 22, NEW YORK • TELEPHONE PLAZA 9-6600

A national organization founded on the basic proposition that Judaism is a religion of universal values — not a nationality. We seek for Americans of Jewish faith their increasing civic, cultural and social integration into U. S. life. The Council's active program enables American Jews to meet obligations in public affairs, religion, and philanthropy in ways compatible with our beliefs rather than in the "Jewish" nationalist pattern of Zionism. The Council affirms that nationality and religion are separate and distinct; that no Jew or group of Jews can speak for all American Jews; that Israel is the "homeland" of its own citizens only, and not of all Jews.

May 22, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Please accept our compliments on your splendid report of the immigration and refugee problem, voiced over the network last evening.

This organization was among those represented at the White House conference which you mentioned. We are also active in promoting World Refugee Year (as the enclosed resolution testifies). Next week we will be among those testifying before the Senate Judiciary Committee in an effort to liberalize American legislation.

We hope that you will continue to maintain an active interest in these affairs and will grant them your valuable support and time. We hope, in this connection, that liberalization efforts will be sufficiently successful as to deserve your coverage.

Again, our thanks.

Sincerely,

Leonard R. Sussman
Executive Director

lrs:s
encl.

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

President
Clarence L. Coleman Jr.
Glencoe, Ill.
Chairman of the Board
Lessing J. Rosenwald
Jenkintown, Pa.
Secretary
D. Hays Solis-Cohen
Philadelphia, Pa.
Treasurer
Maxwell Steinhardt
New York, N. Y.
Executive Vice-President
Elmer Berger
Executive Director
Leonard R. Sussman

Vice-Presidents
Irving J. Feist
Newark, N. J.
Alex J. Geisenberger
Dallas, Texas
Mrs. Maurice L. Goldman
San Francisco, Cal.
Elias R. Kaufman
Lake Charles, La.
Henry A. Loeb
New York, N. Y.
Modie J. Spiegel
Chicago, Ill.

Regional Vice-Presidents
Walter S. Galeski
Richmond, Va.
Howard F. Kahn
Highland Park, Ill.
Walter A. May Jr.
Los Angeles, Cal.
Mrs. Philip Heller Sachs
Baltimore, Md.
Richard L. Simon
Great Neck, N. Y.
H. Harold Wineburgh
Dallas, Texas

Mrs. Kurt Blum
Philadelphia, Pa.
Robert Hays Gries
Cleveland, Ohio
George L. Levison
San Francisco, Cal.
Thomas H. Loeb
Highland Park, Ill.
Wm. S. Louchheim
Beverly Hills, Cal.
Henry S. Moyer
Scarsdale, N. Y.
Walter Naustadt
Ardmore, Okla.

Robert S. Nyburg
Baltimore, Md.
Bert E. Reuler
Denver, Col.
August B. Rothschild
San Francisco, Cal.
Melville N. Rothschild Jr.
Glencoe, Ill.
Isadore M. Scott
Jenkintown, Pa.
Harry Snellenburg Jr.
Rydal, Pa.
Milton S. Steiner
New York, N. Y.
I. Edward Tonkon
Dallas, Texas

Honorary Vice-Presidents
Rabbi Abraham Cronbach
Cincinnati, Ohio
Rabbi William H. Fineshriber
Philadelphia, Pa.
Rabbi Samuel H. Goldenson
New York, N. Y.
Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron
New York, N. Y.
Rabbi David Marx
Atlanta, Ga.
Mrs. M. C. Sloss
San Francisco, Cal.

NATIONAL ADVISORY BOARD

BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA
MILTON H. FIES
MRS. HEROLD J. SCHWAB

MOBILE, ALABAMA
SAMUEL BROWN
RALPH G. HOLBERG JR.

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA
ADOLPH WEIL

PHOENIX, ARIZONA
FRANK FEFFER SR.
JOHN J. ROSEN

TUCSON, ARIZONA
JAMES H. FREUDENTHAL

LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS
NOLAND BLASS
SIDNEY M. BROOKS
ALFRED G. KAHN
SIDNEY L. KAHN
GUS OTTENHEIMER
HARRY W. PFEIFER JR.
ARTHUR PHILLIPS
LOUIS ROSEN
SAM B. STRAUSS

BEVERLY HILLS, CALIFORNIA
MRS. ELISE S. LEVY
WILLIAM S. LOUCHHEIM
WALTER A. MAY JR.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA
ALAN FELS
HERMAN FELS
JOSEPH P. LOEB
RAYMOND J. SELWYN
JACK H. SKIRBALL
MARTIN J. WEIL

MENLO PARK, CALIFORNIA
ALAN L. CAHN

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA
MRS. JOHN S. EHRLICH
SIDNEY M. EHRMAN
MRS. M. L. GOLDMAN
MORTIMER H. HERZSTEIN
MOSES LASKY
GEORGE L. LEVISON
ROBERT LILIENTHAL
JOSEPH B. MENDELSON
AUGUST B. ROTHSCHILD
ESMOND SCHAPIRO
MRS. M. C. SLOSS
JOHN TUTEUR

TAHOE CITY, CALIFORNIA
DR. MAX BRETZFELDER

DENVER, COLORADO
STANFORD L. HYMAN
BERT E. REULER
MAURICE REULER
CHARLES M. SCHLOSS
STANLEY C. SHUBART
WILLIAM SCHENKEIN

BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT
MRS. WALTER BRESLAV

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT
DR. BERNHARD A. ROGOWSKI

WASHINGTON, D. C.
GEORGE R. BENEMAN
MRS. MAX J. FISCHER
HERBERT S. HOLLANDER
WILLIAM G. ILLCH
JOSEPH D. KAUFMAN
WALLACE LUCHS JR.

WILMINGTON, DELAWARE
ABEL KLAW

MIAMI, FLORIDA
HERBERT U. FEIBELMAN

ORLANDO, FLORIDA
E. MARSHALL STIEFEL

ATLANTA, GEORGIA
ELLIOT L. HAAS
SINCLAIR JACOBS
RABBI DAVID MARX
ARMAND MAY
EUGENE OBERDORFER

MACON, GEORGIA
CHARLES J. BLOCH

SAVANNAH, GEORGIA
SAM G. ADLER SR.
RAYMOND M. KUHR
B. H. LEVY
I. A. SOLOMONS JR.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
RALPH ATLASS
JACK M. DREYFUS
MRS. HAROLD S. LEWIS
RICHARD M. LOEWENSTEIN
HOWARD G. MAYER
MRS. SEYMOUR OPPENHEIMER
EDGAR J. SCHOEN
CHARLES SIMON
MODIE J. SPIEGEL
DAVID B. STERN
GARDNER H. STERN JR.
LESTER L. STERN
FRANK L. SULZBERGER

EVANSTON, ILLINOIS
HERBERT KAHN

GLENCOE, ILLINOIS
DR. RALPH BETTMAN
*CLARENCE L. COLEMAN JR.
MELVILLE N. ROTHSCHILD JR.

HIGHLAND PARK, ILLINOIS
HAROLD E. FOREMAN JR.
LOUIS M. GOLDMAN JR.
HOWARD F. KAHN
ROBERT L. LEOPOLD
THOMAS H. LOEB
HERBERT T. SCHAFFNER
RICHARD F. UHLMANN

WINNETKA, ILLINOIS
MRS. S. ALLEN MACKLER
ROBERT B. OPPENHEIMER

FT. WAYNE, INDIANA
S. K. FRANKENSTEIN

DES MOINES, IOWA
JULIAN BRODY

SIOUX CITY, IOWA
LOUIS S. GOLDBERG

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY
MORTIMER GOLDSMITH
JOSEPH LAZARUS
BERNARD ROSENBLUM

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA
RICHARD K. GOLDBERGER
BYRON R. KANTROW
JOSH KANTROW
LAWRENCE MANN
DR. PAUL MARKS

LAKE CHARLES, LOUISIANA
ELIAS R. KAUFMAN

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA
MRS. GEORGE D. B. BERKETT
MRS. HARRY BLUMENTHAL
THEODORE DENNERY
JUSTIN J. HANAW
LEON HEYMANN
DANIEL L. SCHARFF
MRS. JAC STICH

SHREVEPORT, LOUISIANA
J. B. HEROLD

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND
LEONARD L. GREIF JR.
ALEX HAMBURGER
DR. FERDINAND HAMBURGER JR.
MRS. WALTER W. KOHN
ROBERT S. NYBURG
MRS. PHILIP HELLER SACHS
MRS. E. DAVID WEINBERG

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS
IRVING ZIEMAN

DETROIT, MICHIGAN
DR. JOSEPH L. FORBES
LEWIS C. FRANK

PONTIAC, MICHIGAN
NOEL BUCKNER
NORMAN BUCKNER

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA
SAMUEL G. SMILOW

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA
JACK K. HEIMANN

COLUMBUS, MISSISSIPPI
MRS. IRVINE I. WEITZENHOFFER

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI
MRS. SIMON ROSITZKY

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI
JOSEPH GLASER JR.
EDWIN GROSSMAN
JOSEPH H. SCHWEICH JR.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA
BERNARD S. GRADWOHL

HOLMDEL, NEW JERSEY
MRS. FRANK GREENWALL

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY
IRVING J. FEIST
MAX H. KRICH

BUFFALO, NEW YORK
WALTER W. COHN
MRS. HAROLD M. HECHT

GREAT NECK, NEW YORK
JOSEPH EICHBERG
RICHARD L. SIMON

NEW YORK, NEW YORK
JACK M. BROWN
VICTOR EMANUEL
RABBI SAMUEL H. GOLDENSON
LEO GOTTLIEB
RABBI MORRIS S. LAZARON
*HENRY A. LOEB
STEPHEN A. OGDEN
HERBERT C. ROTHSCHILD
MRS. DAVID A. SCHULTE
MRS. ELLEN J. SELDEN
MILTON S. STEINER
MAXWELL STEINHARDT
PHILIP L. WINTER
MRS. ISAAC WITKIN

SCARSDALE, NEW YORK
*HENRY S. MOYER

WHITE PLAINS, NEW YORK
HAROLD M. MILLER

GREENSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA
CEASAR CONE

CINCINNATI, OHIO
RALPH BLOOM
RABBI ABRAHAM CRONBACH
MRS. A. JULIUS FREIBERG
HARRY M. HOFFHEIMER
MRS. STANLEY A. SILVERSTEEN

CLEVELAND, OHIO
LEWIS J. AFFELDER
HERBERT BUCKMAN JR.
ROBERT HAYS GRIES

COLUMBUS, OHIO
MAX H. GUMBLE

DAYTON, OHIO
DAVID C. FINN
SAMUEL L. FINN

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
JEROME H. FRANKLE

ARDMORE, OKLAHOMA
WALTER NEUSTADT

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA
S. N. GOLDMAN
MRS. MILTON LEWINSOHN
AARON M. WEITZENHOFFER

PORTLAND, OREGON
MRS. LOUIS LANG
NORMAN D. SAVINAR
HAROLD WENDEL

CHAMBERSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA
HOWARD W. FINESHRIBER

HARRISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA
EDWARD W. SCHLEISNER

JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA
*LESSING J. ROSENWALD
ISADORE M. SCOTT

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA
MRS. KURT BLUM
RABBI WILLIAM H. FINESHRIBER
RABBI SOLOMON FOSTER
DR. JULIUS GRODINSKY
MRS. JEROME H. LOUCHHEIM
*D. HAYS SOLIS-COHEN
MORRIS WOLF

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA
MRS. S. IRWIN KAMIN
EDWARD G. OPPENHEIMER

RYDAL, PENNSYLVANIA
HARRY SNELLENBURG JR.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND
DR. MAURICE ADELMAN

SIOUX FALLS, SOUTH DAKOTA
SAM SPEIER JR.

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE
MRS. MILTON S. BINSWANGER
A. H. BOSHWIT

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE
A. M. LOVEMAN
DR. LOUIS ROSENFELD
SEYMOUR SAMUELS JR.
ALBERT WERTHAN

DALLAS, TEXAS
JAMES R. ALEXANDER
BERNARD P. BITTERMAN
HARRY COHEN
SHELLEY COLEMAN
JEROME K. CROSSMAN
ALEX J. GEISENBERGER
MRS. LORRAINE P. GORDON
ALAN L. KAHN
MRS. JOSEPH N. KOCH
MRS. MILTON J. LOEB
STANLEY MARCUS
ARTHUR STAR
LOUIS TOBIAN
I. EDWARD TONKON
MAX EDW. TONKON
SAMSON WIENER
H. H. WINEBURGH

EL PASO, TEXAS
JERRY HARRIS
RALPH SANDERS
MRS. R. D. WISBRUN

FORT WORTH, TEXAS
R. C. ARCHENHOLD
MEREDITH R. CARB
L. S. KARREN

GALVESTON, TEXAS
HYMAN S. BLOCK
IRWIN M. HERZ
MRS. LOUIS JACOBSON
I. H. KEMPNER
H. H. LEVY JR.

HOUSTON, TEXAS
ALBERT A. BATH
JAMES M. BAUMOHL
GEORGE S. COHEN
JACK FINKELSTEIN
MRS. I. FRIEDLANDER
CARL J. HERMAN JR.
HERBERT E. LEVY SR.
DR. MOISE D. LEVY SR.
DR. MOISE D. LEVY JR.
I. A. NAMAN
ED OPPENHEIMER JR.
DR. GERSON SCHEPS

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
EDWIN L. FRANKENSTEIN
NAT GOLDSMITH
LEON W. GORE
WALTER C. WOLFF

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
MILLARD I. BINSWANGER
HERBERT L. FRIEDMAN
WALTER S. GALESKI
MRS. ALVIN B. HUTZLER
MAURICE L. STRAUSE JR.

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA
SIMON G. LAZARUS

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
RAYMOND M. COWEN
BERNARD REITER
HERBERT A. SCHOENFELD
MORTON L. SCHWABACHER

CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA
ALVIN J. LINDENBERG

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA
RALPH L. MILLER

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN
MRS. HAROLD M. BAUM
MRS. BENJAMIN J. BIRK
DONALD MICHELSTETTER
JEROME C. SALTZSTEIN

*Member of Board of Directors.

May 9, 1959

RESOLUTION

Support of World Refugee Year by the American Council for Judaism Philanthropic Fund

The American Council for Judaism Philanthropic Fund pledges its support of World Refugee Year, beginning July 1, 1959. We shall concentrate our philanthropic as well as educational efforts in assisting the United States to lead the free world in shouldering its fair share of the world refugee problem.

A coordinated, non-sectarian and non-partisan effort to aid refugees is truly in the American spirit. We shall strive, as we have in the past, to assist persons in need without respect to religious or political affiliations. We shall continue to assist refugees to choose their place of resettlement.

Liberalization of American immigration legislation would provide appropriate machinery for this purpose. Such action would merely reinforce the traditional role America has played as a haven, especially during the unsettled years since 1933. More than 2,250,000 refugees have been warmly received here during the past twenty-five years. Of these were more than 300,000 of the Jewish faith who, with other naturalized Americans, have contributed notably to the strengthening and developing of this nation.

Neither America's record of achievement nor the passing of time should dim our vision of the tragic needs still unfulfilled. By concerted effort this year, some of the refugees' misery can be alleviated. The American Council for Judaism Philanthropic Fund will do its share.

Sussman, Richard

April 14, 1958

Dear Mr. Sussman:

Thank you for your recent letter.

I regret very much to have to tell you that I cannot grant you the interview you request since my crowded radio and television schedule makes it impossible for me to give interviews on subjects that are not directly connected with my own programs.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Richard Sussman
Barbizon-Plaza Hotel
106 Central Park South
New York 19, New York

mcc

BARBIZON-PLAZA HOTEL
106 CENTRAL PARK SOUTH . . . . NEW YORK 19

Mr Edward R Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York

Dear Mr Murrow—

I will be back in New York for a few days during the week of April 21 and would like very much to meet you for a few minutes if you can spare the time. I will be in New York April 21, 22 and 24. If you can have a few minutes I would appreciate an appointment with you on one of those three days. I have been listening to you on radio and watching you on T.V. for many years

cable address "BARBPLAZA" • telephone Circle 7-7000 and I certainly enjoy your programs. I am from San Francisco - but missed you during the Republican Convention.

Sincerely yours
Richard Sussman.

P.S. I will be at this hotel on my return.

Sutton, H.

December 3, 1959

Dear Mr. Sutton:

Thank you for your letter of November 30th, which was received here in Mr. Murrow's absence.

I regret that it will not be possible for Mr. Murrow to reply to your letter, since he is on a year's leave of absence and is traveling abroad.

Very sincerely yours,

Gabrielle Wachsner
Secretary

Mr. Horace Sutton
The Saturday Review
25 West 45th Street
New York 36, New York

The Saturday Review

25 West 45th Street, New York 36, N. Y.

Horace Sutton,
Travel Editor

November 30, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

As you undoubtedly know by now, the President has designated 1960 as "Visit U.S.A. Year," a year in which citizens of foreign countries will be encouraged to become tourists in the United States. I'm sure you have already realized as well as I the difficulties which present themselves to foreigners intending to come here. There are, in the first place, our difficult visa requirements, not to mention such deterrents as the high cost of travel in the United States, our transportation tax, and the really inadequate promotion which the whole program has received. All these difficulties aside, however, we would like to encourage foreigners to visit our shores and in this regard we are calling upon you to help.

We are asking a small number of prominent citizens in various fields of endeavor to prepare a short list of the ten places, areas, sights, resorts or things in the United States which will provide the foreign traveler with the most understanding, the clearest insight, the most interest, or perhaps, the most fun.

We are providing both paper and a self-addressed envelope for your convenience and we only ask that you be kind enough to put your thoughts in the mail the weekend of the 12-13 of December. We are delighted to send you, or anyone you specify, with our compliments, a gift subscription to the Saturday Review.

The results of our poll will be printed in our first issue of the new decade as part of our large traditional first of the year travel section. I do hope that we can count on you and I thank you in advance for your cooperation.

Cordially,

Horace Sutton

Horace Sutton

HS:gp

WHAT TO SEE IN THE U.S.A.

These are my votes for the ten places which I would urge a foreign tourist to visit in order to understand and enjoy a first-time trip in the United States:

1. _____

_____

2. _____

_____

3. _____

_____

4. _____

_____

5. _____

_____

6. _____

_____

7. _____

_____

8. _____

_____

9. _____

_____

10. _____

_____

Please send the subscription to the Saturday Review to:

_____
(Name)

_____
(Address)

_____
(City) (State)

Submitted by:

_____

Sutton, John S.

January 8, 1959

Dear Mr. Sutton:

Many thanks for your interesting letter. Please excuse the delay in replying to it. It was misplaced.

If you could see the piles and piles of correspondence on my desk, you would forgive me for making this letter short.

I did want to say thank you for taking the time and trouble to write me.

Sincerely,

Mr. John S. Sutton
Route 7
Box 226L,KLein Road
San Jose, California

mcc

Rt. 7, Box 226L, Klein Rd.,
San Jose 99, California
December 11, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Because, in general, I agree with your editorial views, and because it was on your news broadcast that I first heard the subject matter which has prompted this letter, I feel that it should be directed to you.

Last night I listened to what I believe is the most frightening announcement I have ever heard. I refer to Mr. James Hoffa's intention of unionizing the police and firemen of this country.

I cannot express the appalling sensation this proclamation gave me. To understand the implications of a nation-wide organization controlling the jobs of our community law enforcement agencies is to understand the complete destruction of our already hard-pressed personal liberties.

We, as a nation, fell into the trap of allowing one man to do our national thinking, and we have extended the authorization to congress, to local government, to business and advertizing, and to labor leaders. So much so, in fact, that when some injustice occurs in any one of those areas, we shrug it off with a "Well, what can I do" attitude.

The first half of this century has been spent in a gigantic struggle for equities between the large interest groups of the nation: business, labor, farmers, social welfare. And, in most cases of failure to reach agreement, all faces turn to Washington with the demand that Congress perform the impossible: take away our personal load of responsibility and legislate good judgment. Now Big Business, Big Labor, and Big Government are entangled in a virtual Gordian Knot, while the individual citizen is forced into the role of innocent bystander.

We take great delight in pointing our fingers at the rich man's son squandering his father's fortune. The rest of the world may well do the same as we squander our fathers' hard-won legacies.

We have sold our right to act as individual, responsible citizens of a free nation by demanding that someone else perform the dirty task of safeguarding our collective interests. The laboring man has turned his back while thieves have stolen his money and his rights as a member of a democratic organization. The farmer has accepted his cash payment for turning over his right to produce as he is able. We, the people, have told the businessman it is immoral to make a profit, also illegal.

We are relinquishing our rights as free individuals by failing to accept the responsibilities of active citizenship, and we have our rewards: Big Pay, Big Business, Bigger Labor, and Biggest Government.

Now Mr. Hoffa proposes to take over our responsibilities in the protection of our homes and communities.

No, thank you, Mr. Hoffa. I want to retain the right to fire the inept or crooked policeman or fireman. I want to retain the right to hire whom I wish, and I want him to be from my community. And, most of all, Mr. Hoffa, I do not want 10 million armed and badged men telling me that I am unfair to organized labor.

Yours very truly,

John S. Sutton

JSS:ec

Svestka, Miroslav J.

1724 TAYLOR STREET NORTHWEST
WASHINGTON 11, D. C. • RA 6-5535

Mr. Edward Murrow
New York, N.Y.

May 26, 1958.

Dear Sir:

Will you please do me the favor of reading the enclosed article. It concerns unemployment and a plan for full employment and prosperity.

Very truly yours,

Miroslav J. Svestka

A PLAN FOR FULL EMPLOYMENT AND PROSPERITY

Solution of Present Unemployment: Unemployment Compensation a Needless Waste

by

MIROSLAV J. SVESTKA

This is a new solution of Unemployment Welfare and its modernization. The idea comes from the Author's 400-page study written during World War II, assuming that Hitler came to power only through unemployment in Germany. The book was published in Prague, Czechoslovakia in the Czech language in 1946, and entitled "PRAVO NA PRACI" -- "Right to Work" (Zivnostisk Praha). The same book was published in the Italian language in 1951 in Florence, Italy (Diritto Al Lavoro, La Nuova Italia, Firenze). There is no English translation available. The author left Czechoslovakia in 1948 when the Communists took over.

A PLAN FOR FULL EMPLOYMENT AND PROSPERITY

Solution of Present Unemployment: Unemployment Compensation a Needless Waste

by

MIROSLAV J. SVESTKA

Look into history and you will find that unemployment is nothing new. It recurs in every civilization and has always been a wicked burden, both ethically and materially. Peoples, groups and states have tried to find a remedy for it. We have such an attempted remedy in operation now: Unemployment Compensation. The unemployed person receives a weekly check under certain conditions.

Without question, this is better than nothing, but is it a right solution of the problem?

Why should it not be the right solution?

Do we need a modernization? Why?

From a community standpoint, the prime objection to our present unemployment compensation plan is this: The individual is NOT PRODUCING, but receives money for doing nothing, and makes a poor living at the cost of others.

There is a golden bottom in such a REVOLVING FUND, also in the premiums paid. The money paid in will never be lost, as it is in our present form of unemployment compensation.

In this plan, money from the REVOLVING FUND, once used, must be returned over a period of years at normal interest rates. The fund must be operated on a sound, business basis. In other words, the REVOLVING FUND will actually revolve.

Consequently, the premiums for such a plan will need to be paid only until such time as the REVOLVING FUND has reached the necessary level, corresponding to the needs of the era. After that, there will be no premium, or merely a very low one, to be paid.

It will soon be possible to substantially decrease present payments to the Unemployment Compensation Board, or eliminate them entirely.

On the personal level, the premiums paid will be richly returned in another form, in the form of permanent earnings.....gradually, in higher earnings, since waste will be eliminated.

As the first step, discussion should be opened about such a PRODUCTIVE Unemployment Welfare, to consider and decide what is best....and act accordingly.

Today reasonable and useful projects are not begun because of lack of financing. But for the future, such projects should be prepared for such time that it will be necessary to create more employment, the REVOLVING FUND to finance these in the needy regions.

So far, basically and for the time being, let us see what would happen on the five million unemployed front:

The REVOLVING FUND could be established immediately. To permit an immediate start, the Government could insure private money loaned to the RF for the financing of projects.

Other more simple and half way variations of a PRODUCTIVE Unemployment Welfare could be worked out, E.g., the establishment of a new Authority for the purpose of deciding upon useful projects and working out the financing with a Government guarantee-insurance only.

The Government itself should not undertake projects and works on a larger scale than present Government budget volume can handle.

Whatever the measure undertaken, it should be executed on a strictly non-inflationary basis, with a sharp eye to a balanced budget. Lower Government receipts are likely this year; therefore, another substantial burden should not be undertaken. New Government burdens and expenses could easily lead to further inflation, to the impoverishment of certain classes, certainly to the holders of annuities, life insurance policies and Social Security insurance.

On the other hand, the operation of the REVOLVING FUND for the increase of private job-making activity could be expected to be a contribution to the dollar stability, free of cash Government burdens, with no inflationary aspect. It should create full employment and new, constant prosperity, leading to higher Government receipts.....an effective weapon against recession and unemployment.

May, 1958
1724 Taylor Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C.

#

The Washington Post

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1958 PAGE A8

Robert Swan

August 20, 1959

Attention: Mr. K. Pfaff

Dear Sirs:

I have your letter of August 6th. I have known Mr. Robert G. Swan for a considerable number of years, and it is my pleasure to inform you that I have a very high opinion of his responsibility, character, and general business reputation. I have always found him possessed of the greatest possible integrity. From my personal knowledge of him, I feel that I can assure you that you will find Mr. Swan's financial responsibility perfectly satisfactory.

Very truly yours,

Wm. A. White & Sons
51 East 42nd Street
New York 17, New York

gw

PETER GRIMM
CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

DIRECTORS

JOHN C. BOHLING
WILLIAM J. DEMOREST
EDWARD F. GALLAHER
PETER GRIMM
RUDOLPH J. GRIMM
LORING M. HEWEN
DONALD JONES
F. CHANDLER LOGAN
WILLIAM MacROSSIE
JOSEPH T. MIRTL
W. HAMILTON OWENS
HARRY SCHROEDER, JR.
WALLACE W. TRUE

WM. A. WHITE & SONS

ESTABLISHED 1868

REAL ESTATE

NEW YORK

WILLIAM J. DEMOREST
PRESIDENT

51 EAST 42ND STREET
MURRAY HILL 2-2300

50 BROAD STREET
DIGBY 4-3797

43 EAST 50TH STREET
PLAZA 5-0700

LORING M. HEWEN, VICE PRESIDENT
COMMERCIAL DEPARTMENT

MAIN OFFICE
51 EAST 42ND STREET
NEW YORK 17, N. Y.

August 6, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, New York

Dear Sir:

Mr. Robert G. Swan of 285 Madison Avenue, New York City has applied for a lease in a building under our management and has given us permission to inquire of you as to his financial responsibility.

We would be very grateful to you for a frank expression of your opinion as to his responsibility, character and general business reputation.

Very truly yours,

WM. A. WHITE & SONS
By R. Pfaff

Enc.
mwl

ALL INFORMATION FURNISHED REGARDING PROPERTY FOR SALE, RENTAL OR FINANCING IS FROM SOURCES DEEMED RELIABLE. NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE AS TO THE ACCURACY THEREOF AND IT IS SUBMITTED SUBJECT TO ERRORS, OMISSIONS, CHANGE OF PRICE, RENTAL OR OTHER CONDITIONS, PRIOR SALE, LEASE OR FINANCING, OR WITHDRAWAL WITHOUT NOTICE

February 10, 1958

Dear Bob:

Do not think you can escape this relationship with a letter. My memory is that it began somewhere in the vicinity of a bottle and it should ought to end there!

I am off to the South for a couple of weeks, but we must rendezvous when I get back.

If I can lend a hand in connection with your new association do let me know.

As ever yours,

Mr. Robert Giles Swan
20 Intervale Place
Greenwich, Connecticut

fc

(Dictated but not signed by Mr. Murrow)

ROBERT GILES SWAN

January 31, 1958.

Dear Edward:

As our long association draws to a close, I want to express my gratitude for the many years of friendship and cooperation.

I am expressing my thanks a little early because I have just resigned from The Joseph Katz Company, and I anticipate a good long rest in Greenwich before returning to the advertising wars.

I can only hope that sometime in the future our paths will cross again.

Yours cordially,

Bob

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
"Person to Person"
CBS-Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Swanson, Gloria passed to John Aa

November 24, 1958

Miss Gloria Swanson
920 Fifth Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Miss Swanson:

Thank you so much for your letter and the book about Dr. Walter Russell. I shall certainly keep him in mind for a subsequent program, and am grateful to you for thinking of us.

Sincerely yours,

EEHsmkh

Swing, Betty G.

January 9, 1958

Dear Betty:

Very many thanks for your warm and gracious note of December 31st.

We are all very proud of "The Lady from Philadelphia" and honestly feel that this is in many ways the best show we have ever done.

Apart from Mr. Gould, the response in print was overwhelmingly enthusiastic and the mail has been likewise.

With all good wishes.

As ever yours,

Mrs. Betty Gram Swing
R. F. D. 1
Westport, Connecticut

mcc

MRS. B. GRAM SWING • WESTPORT, R. F. D. 1 • CONNECTICUT

December 31,1957

Dear Ed;

Sending an accolade along with the millions of others for the magnificent Marian Anderson show last night gives me an opportunity to wish you and Janet and Casey a happy New Year and salaams for your entertainment which to a recluse like me means so much.

I seldom say that a program was perfect but to me the dignity the beauty the reticence even was down right superb, and you and Friendly deserve my and others deepest gratitude. I do not agree with Jack Gould who today dared to say the program might have been improved etc. He loves to talk that boy and usually I agree with him but I shall probably write him a note now. I so seldom write fan letters but oh, when one is so deeply moved by so graceful a perfomrmance it is shere frustration not to do so.

Of course the negro spirituals are very dear to me and I sang them and studied them with the great Edna Thomas- but what brought the tears gushing forth was the"Lead Kindly Light-" It was my father's favorite song and it was sung at his burial now thirty-five years ago. Where does time go?One asks how permanent are emotional responses? I think as long as I live I shall not forget the looks on the faces of the members of the orchestra that so tenderly accompanied Miss A. even when she did sing off key. That did not matter one whit. All I can say Ed, bless you again and again.

Afftly yrs,
Betty Gram Swing.
Betty

Szabo-Pelsoczi, M.

November 18, 1958

Dear Mrs. Szabo-Pelsoczi:

I have your letter of November 4th.

While I would very much like to give your material the time and attention it surely deserves, I am afraid that the pressure of my busy broadcasting schedule prevents me from doing so. I have no time at all to read manuscripts. I am sorry, but am sure you understand.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Miklos Szabo-Pelsoczi
1109 Warburton Avenue
Yonkers, New York

mcc

1109 Warburton Avenue,
Yonkers, New York,
November 4, 1958.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am taking the liberty of sending a manuscript written by my husband, for your perusal , comments and advice. I fully realize that your time is very precious, not only for yourself and C.B.S. , but for all of us who have been getting valuable information and honest coverage on world events for so many years. We would like to publish this manuscript at our own expense. However this is a new experience for us. We need some advice from a man who is at the forefront of events as they are happening, who can know whether this material is of value to the man in the street or the college sophomore , to whom we wish to speak. We ourselves feel that this could have a wide popular apeal, and that it is needed urgently to make the average person more politically aware. Can we ask that you read this manuscript, and offer your opinions concerning the practicality of publishing it? If we do publish it, can we ask you to add a short introduction in your own name? We do realize that this is not a usual request, but we have no indirect channels whereby we can approach reliable journalists for criticism. We shall be extremely grateful for any help which you can give to us.

Yours very truly,
(Mrs.) Miklós Szabó-Pelsöczi
(Mrs.) Miklos Szabo-Pelsöczi

My husband is a former Hungarian, escaped in 1959, now an American citizen, with a PhD. from Budapest in 1947, studies in Geneva, and further graduate work at Yale University in International Economics. He now works as an economist in a sugar brokerage form in the city.

Swiss National Tourist Office

ZURICH Haus Victoria, Bahnhofplatz 9, Tel. (051) 23 57 13, Telegram: Swisturist
Post-cheque account VIII 5715, Address for correspondence: Case postale gare, Zurich 23

Mr. Ed Murrow
c/o Hotel Beau-Rivage

Genève

Your Ref. No. Your letter of Our Ref. No. FN/FB/Ha Date November 30, 1959.

Re

My dear Mr. Murrow:

This is to extend to you a most sincere welcome to Switzerland. You may or may not realize that we are old friends. If my memory is correct, I first met you in Washington in 1949 and appeared there on a television show.

I do not know whether the four weeks which I was told you were going to spend in this country, will be entirely a holiday and relaxation sojourn or whether you may make up your mind to investigate into some new idea for your TV-shows. At any rate, I wish to let you know that I shall always be at your service whatever your plans may be. As a small present and companion for your leisurely hours I am enclosing a book which was published by this office and should be a special appeal to visitors who are not merely interested in the "touristy" angle of Switzerland.

The foremost purpose of this letter however is to wish you a restful stay in this country. You certainly should take advantage of the peaceful atmosphere for which Switzerland is known the world over. Take it easy - you are here to rest and relax!

With very best wishes and kindest personal regards, I am,

sincerely yours,
SWISS NATIONAL TOURIST OFFICE

Florian Niederer
Assistant General Manager

Encl.

Official Agencies of the SNTO:

AMSTERDAM
Koningsplein 11

BRUSSELS
Rue Royale 75

BUENOS AIRES
Florida 935

CAIRO
Rue Kasr el Nil 22

COPENHAGEN
Vesterbrogade 6D

FRANKFORT o. M.
Kaiserstr. 23

LISBON
Av. da Liberdade 158 A

LONDON
458 Strand, W.C.2

MADRID
Edificio España
Av. José Antonio 84, 1º

MILAN
Piazza Cavour 4

NEW YORK
10 West 49th Street
at Rockefeller Plaza

NICE
22, Bd Victor Hugo

PARIS
37, Bd des Capucines

ROME
Via Vittorio Veneto 36

SAN FRANCISCO
661 Market Street

STOCKHOLM
Kungsgatan 36

VIENNA
Kärntnerstrasse 20

INLAND TELEGRAMS:
"WESTBUROTL WESDO LONDON"
CABLES:
"WESTBUROTL LONDON"

The Westbury

NEW BOND STREET
LONDON. W.1
TELEPHONE: MAYFAIR 7755

Oct. 10th.

Dear Kay,

This is the package for Janet + Ed.

You've been so kind about everything — and thanks again for that nice lunch in Soho.

See you soon we hope, in Paris or New York, love,

Dorothy S.

Little Chalfont 2023

Lord Burkett

Tachau, Frank

November 18, 1958

Mr. Frank Tachau
Purdue University
Fort Wayne Center
Barr and Jefferson Streets
Fort Wayne 2, Indiana.

Dear Mr. Tachau:

Thank you for your letter of November 6th. You are quite right that Omnibus did get its start through a subvention from the Ford Foundation, but none of the foundations are financially in a position to undertake programming on the scale that is required. I don't think my scheme is going to work, but I could not think of anything better. Thanks again for writing as you did.

Yours very truly,

ERM:skh

PURDUE UNIVERSITY
FORT WAYNE CENTER
BARR AND JEFFERSON STREETS
FORT WAYNE 2, INDIANA

November 6, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow;

I have just read with great interest your article in the current issue of the New Republic on television and the fear of controversy. It is encouraging to know that someone as highly placed in the industry as yourself is concerned about the evident failure of the television networks to meet their great social responsibilities.

Perhaps you will permit a comment and point of inquiry on my part with regard to the remedies which you consider in your article. It seems to me that you have brushed off rather lightly the potentialities of the philanthropic foundations such as Ford and Rockefeller. The suggestion you appear to regard as most feasible, that is, to persuade commercial sponsors to give up one hour per year to the networks, leaves us more or less where we are now -- at the mercy of the advertisers and promoters, the purveyors of goods and services. Has anyone ever seriously explored the possibility of actually selling television time to the great foundations? Certainly it would seem that these foundations have financial resources sufficient to enable them to compete with the biggest of the television program sponsors now on the air, especially ~~xx~~ on a selective basis. In fact, I understand that Omnibus got its start in exactly this fashion. Another example of joint sponsorship by a foundation and a commercial advertiser would be the Mike Wallace interview. Why not ask Ed Sullivan to relinquish his spot not just once a year but even more often, and at no cost to himself?

I am sure that there would be many problems involved in making such an arrangement, but it would nevertheless beem to be worth an attempt. You are probably in a better position than anyone else to recognize these problems and also the tremendous potentialities . In this connection, you have already done yeoman's service not only to the television industry but to the American public as a whole.

Sincerely,

Frank Tachau

Frank Tachau
Instructor,
History and Government

Tadmor, Gideon

March 6, 1958

Dear Mr. Tadmor:

Many thanks for your cordial letter of February 13th and for sending me the newspaper clipping.

I am delighted to hear that you enjoyed the Truman program. The enthusiastic response to it was a satisfactory reward for the amount of work that went into it.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Gideon Tadmor
Embassy of Israel
Washington, D. C.

gw

EMBASSY OF ISRAEL
WASHINGTON, D.C.

שגרירות ישראל
וושינגטון

GT/17

February 13, 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Skimming through Arabic newspapers, I came across the enclosed report on your television interview with Mr. Truman as it was reported by the Lebanese daily L'Orient. It is quite interesting to note that this is not the first time that this moderate newspaper reports positive opinions and appraisals of Israel. The headline itself is also quite significant: "Israel and the Arabs are first cousins...". Needless to say how much I enjoyed this TV interview, and this pleasure did not diminish as I listened to it again on the Tuesday C.B.S. broadcast.

I am looking forward to an opportunity of meeting you again. Please give my warmest regards to Mrs. Murrow and to Mr. Fred Friendly.

Sincerely yours,

Gideon

Gideon Tadmor

Mr.Edward M. Murrow
C.B.S.
485 Madison Ave.
New York 22, N.Y.

GT/hrh

Truman à la télévision U.S.

«LES ARABES ET ISRAEL SONT COUSINS GERMAINS»

L'ancien président des Etats-Unis préconise le programme de relèvement économique susceptible de régler la question du Moyen-Orient

Feb. 3, 1958

New-York, 2 Février. — Pour résoudre le problème du Moyen-Orient, a déclaré dimanche le président Truman, il faudrait d'abord que cette région retrouve les conditions de vie qui permirent à la « Pax Romana » de régner sur le bassin méditerranéen.

Parmi ces conditions, l'ancien président des Etats-Unis a cité, au cours d'une interview télévisée, la division du travail qui s'était établie entre les grandes régions géographiques de l'empire romain : « L'alimentation était fournie par telle région. Les ateliers se trouvaient à un autre endroit, etc... » Il a préconisé une division du même type entre Israël et les pays arabes.

Planification du Tigre et de l'Euphrate

Le président Truman, qui évoquait, pour « Columbia Broadcasting System », les souvenirs de ses 7 années à la Maison Blanche, a déclaré à ce sujet « J'ai toujours été d'avis que la production agricole pourrait être augmentée dans la vallée de Mésopotamie, en Ethiopie et en Egypte ».

Selon le président Truman, «le Tigre et l'Euphrate pourraient être mis à contribution comme le fut, aux Etats-Unis, le Tennessee, pour la «Tennessee Valley Authority ».

(La suite en page 6)

La déclaration de Truman

(Suite de la page 1)

« On pourrait produire là, a-t-il dit, de la nourriture suffisante pour assurer la subsistance de 35 à 40 millions d'individus. Il existe, d'autre part, en Ethiopie, un plateau situé à l'altitude de 6 à 8.000 pieds, où le climat est égal à peu près à celui des Etats-Unis et où le sol est de la qualité de la terre noire de l'Iowa, de l'Illinois du Nord et du Nord Missouri. On pourrait y produire la nourriture suffisante pour 100 millions de personnes, alors qu'on ne l'utilise maintenant que comme pâturage ».

La valorisation du Nil

Après avoir souligné l'intérêt, dans ce même ordre d'idées, d'une utilisation plus rationnelle des eaux du Nil, le président Truman a ajouté :

« Israël pourrait devenir le pays industriel qui fournirait les produits manufacturés à tous ces Etats agricoles, et il ne pourrait y avoir rien d'autre, après cela, que la paix. Disposant de terres riches, de formidables réserves pétrolières, des machines modernes qui en permettraient l'exploitation, le Moyen-Orient pourrait redevenir, sans doute, le centre de civilisation qu'il était au début de notre ère ».

Le président a affirmé sa certitude que les pays arabes pourraient s'entendre pacifiquement avec Israël : « De toute façon, a-t-il dit, ils sont cousins germains ». (AFP).

Tappin, Ambassador John

March 7, 1958

Dear Tap:

It was very nice to hear from you.

I was distressed when I learned that you were stricken with a heart attack in February, but hope that you will soon be well enough to resume your traveling.

Thanks for sending me the clipping.

With all best wishes.

Sincerely,

Ambassador John Tappin
American Embassy
APO 231, New York

mcc

"On the other hand, once I achieved some recognition on TV I began to receive invitations to do lectures on subjects about which I knew next to nothing. I turn almost all of them down. Unless you watch it, there is a tendency for you to think that because your voice and your picture are transmitted from one end of the country to the other, you're more intelligent and more important than you were when your voice only reached from one end of a bar to the other."

[redacted]

FROM THE BED OF AMBASSADOR TAPPIN (Wheelus AFB Hospital)

DATE 1.25

To	Officer	Info	Action	Comment
	Deputy Political Attache
	Political Officer
	Economic Officer
	Consular Officer
	Administrative Officer
	Chief Maag
	PAO - USIA
	Director USOM/L
	Commander 17th Air Force
	CO Wheelus
	Return to Ambassador
✓	~~Pete~~ Mr. Murrow

Dear Ed:

I snipped this from Pete Martin's Saturday Post article on you. Hope you said it, since it expresses a nice attitude. Presume you noted I was being replaced here. Too successful.

[redacted]

(over)

We were planning to leave here Feb. 19 for Italy, returning to U.S. permanently near end of July. Then I collapsed Feb. 7 with a heart attack, of all things! Me, the big athlete!

Admittedly, I was heart-broken at being taken out as quarterback just when I had the team on the 2-yard line. But I didn't think it was physical.

Over-work, over-social-schd, over-frustration, over-everything the AF medics say. Damned nuisance; had intended to spend March on skis in Switzerland.

How are you?

P.S. When do we start the romance between Casey and Nini?

Tap 5-25

RIVAL MANUFACTURING CO.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI

H. J. TALGE
PRESIDENT

May 19, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS News
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

CBS News was kind enough to forward us the taped birthday greeting to former President Harry S. Truman, which you so kindly recorded.

Enclosed is a souvenir program of the event and under separate cover we are shipping you a bronze medallion commemorating the occasion.

We are most grateful to you for helping make the party the success it was.

Sincerely,

H. J. Talge

HJT/fhl
Enclosure

Tate, Robt. F.

AIR WAR COLLEGE
MAXWELL AIR FORCE BASE
ALABAMA

OFFICE OF THE COMMANDANT

13 March 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The information presented herewith is the follow-up to my recent correspondence in which it was indicated that details of the 1958 Forum agenda would be disseminated in March.

The National Security Forum will be held during the first week, and as an integral part, of a six-week long Air War College Study entitled, "U. S. Strategy for the Future." This study is aimed at providing an understanding of the probable impact of foreseeable developments upon U. S. national strategy for the post-1960 time period. It is therefore concerned with the relationships between military means and political ends that are likely to develop in this time period, as well as with the strategic implications of the rapid advances being made in science and technology. The Forum-Week portion of this study leads off with a strategic estimate of the world situation in the post-1960 time period. Probable U. S. objectives are projected and an estimate is made of the future relationships of military forces to political ends during that time period. The role of both total and limited wars in future strategy is analyzed. An evaluation is made to determine if the forces necessary to deter and/or wage successfully general war are sufficiently versatile to deal effectively with lesser conflicts, or if specialized forces must be developed and maintained for such lesser conflicts.

In addition to the foregoing, participants of the 1958 Forum will be provided classified briefings on the strategic significance, employment, weapons and future planning of the Air Research and Development Command, Strategic Air Command, North American Air Defense Command and Tactical Air Command. These briefings of approximately two hours will be presented by the Commands concerned and will consist of a formal presentation and a discussion period in which all are encouraged to participate.

Further details of Forum-Week activities will be found in the inclosed schedule. All social activities planned in connection with Forum-Week are informal and the usual late April temperatures in this area range from the mid-seventies to the mid-eighties. Also, since it may be of interest to you to know who your fellow participants will be, I am inclosing our current list of acceptors. In order that you may become better acquainted with the activities of the Air War College, I am inclosing a copy of the Air War College Manual.

The Air War College has been authorized to provide military air transportation to and from Maxwell Air Force Base for Forum participants. We will be limited, however, to pick-ups at central collection points, as opposed to individual pick-ups for each participant. In order to ensure maximum assistance to Forum participants in their travel planning, my Deputy for Administration will send you transportation details in the near future.

Sincerely,

R. F. Tate

ROBERT F. TATE
Major General, USAF
Commandant

3 Incls.
1. NSF Schedule
2. NSF Roster
3. AWC Manual

FORUM WEEK SCHEDULE

Sunday, 27 April 1958

Participants and military escorts will dine in the Main Dining Room of the Officers' Mess. (The Sky Room of the Officers' Mess will be reserved for all regular meals during the remainder of Forum Week.)

Monday, 28 April 1958

0700-0815	Breakfast in the Sky Room
0830-0900	Welcome by Lieutenant General Strother and Major General Tate in Room #1 of the Air War College
0915-1015	Lecture by Mr. Paul H. Nitze, "A Strategic Estimate for the Future"
1030-1115	Discussion
1115-1145	Seminar
1200-1315	Lunch in the Sky Room
1330-1515	Seminar
1530-1730	Air Research and Development Command Briefing by Brigadier General John W. Carpenter, III
1830	Informal dinner in the Sky Room

Tuesday, 29 April 1958

0700-0815	Breakfast in the Sky Room
0830-1030	Strategic Air Command Briefing by Major General Robert Terrill
1045-1245	North American Air Defense Command Briefing by Colonel J. F. Kirkendall
1300-1415	Lunch in the Sky Room
1430-1700	Jet Aircraft Orientation Rides and Static Display
1830-2130	Social Activities

Wednesday, 30 April 1958

0700-0815	Breakfast in the Sky Room
0830-0930	Lecture by Mr. Frank Pace, Jr., "Military Means and Political Ends"
0945-1030	Discussion
1045-1145	Seminar
1200-1315	Lunch in the AWC Club Annex
1330-1515	Seminar
1530-1730	Tactical Air Command Briefing by Major General John D. Stevenson
1830	Social Activities

Thursday, 1 May 1958

0700-0815	Breakfast in the Sky Room
0830-0930	Lecture by Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, "Limited Wars and Future Strategy"
0945-1030	Discussion
1045-1145	Seminar
1200-1315	Lunch in the Sky Room
1400-1700	General Review of Ballistic Missiles (Building 1404)
1830	Official dinner in the Sky Room

Friday, 2 May 1958

0700-0815	Breakfast in the Sky Room
0830-0930	Lecture by Lieutenant General Francis H. Griswold, "Future Security Through Deterrence"
0945-1030	Discussion
1045-1145	Critique by civilian participants in the AWC Library
1200-1315	Lunch in the Sky Room
1330-1700	Departures
1830	Informal dinner in the Main Dining Room of Officers' Mess

Saturday, 3 May 1958

Participants departing on this date and their military escorts will breakfast in the Main Dining Room of the Officers' Mess.

ROSTER OF PARTICIPANTS
FOR
AIR WAR COLLEGE 1958 NATIONAL SECURITY FORUM

Mr. John R. Alison
Vice President-Customer Relations
Northrop Aircraft, Inc.
Northrop Field
Hawthorne, California

Dr. Daniel Alpert
Technical Director
Control Systems Laboratory
University of Illinois
Urbana, Illinois

Mr. Dillon Anderson
Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, Attys
Esperson Building
Houston 2, Texas

Mr. E. Merritt Anderson
President
Anderson Air Activities
Malden Air Base, Missouri

Mr. Robert C. Baker
Executive Vice President
American Security & Trust Company
15th Street & Pennsylvania Ave., N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. J. Pat Beaird, President
The J. B. Beaird Company, Inc.
6200 St. Vincent Avenue
Shreveport, Louisiana

Professor Donald G. Bishop
Chairman, International Relations Committee
Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs
Syracuse University
Syracuse 10, New York

Professor Raymond L. Bisplinghoff
Department of Aeronautical Engineering
Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Cambridge 39, Massachusetts

Mr. Charles M. Bliss
Executive Vice President
The Bank of New York
48 Wall Street
New York 15, New York

Mr. Roland S. Bond
2600 Republic National Bank Building
Dallas, Texas

Mr. Matthew H. Bonebrake, President
Plaza Court Broadcasting Company
Plaza Court Building
Oklahoma City 3, Oklahoma

Mr. Lewis C. Burwell
Chairman of the Board
Overseas National Airways
1523 L Street, N. W.
Washington 5, D. C.

Mr. Paul Butler
President and General Manager
Butler Company
223 West Monroe Street
Chicago 6, Illinois

Professor Donald M. Castleberry
Chairman, Social Science Division
San Francisco State College
1600 Holloway Avenue
San Francisco 27, California

Mr. Richard T. Cella
277 Park Avenue
New York 17, New York

Mr. Marquis Childs
La Salle Building
1028 Connecticut Avenue, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Mr. C. W. Floyd Coffin, Chairman
Franklin Balmar Corporation
Lincoln Building
60 East 42nd Street
New York 17, New York

Dr. Charles L. Critchfield
Director of Scientific Research
CONVAIR
San Diego 12, California

Dr. W. Gayle Crutchfield
Chief, Neurosurgery Department
University of Virginia Medical School
Charlottesville, Virginia

Mr. J. Davis Danforth
Executive Vice President
Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, Inc.
383 Madison Avenue
New York 17, New York

Mr. Granville D. Davis
Executive Director
Memphis Adult Education Center
Southwestern Campus - 2000 North Parkway
Memphis 12, Tennessee

Mr. John W. DeWolf
G. M. Basford Company
60 East 42nd Street
New York 17, New York

Very Reverend William A. Donaghy, S. J.
President
Holy Cross College
Worcester 8, Massachusetts

Mr. Henry A. Du Flon
McKinsey Foundation for Management Research, Inc.
60 East 42nd Street
New York 17, New York

The Honorable Thomas C. Egan
United States District Court
9th and Chestnut Streets
Philadelphia 7, Pennsylvania

Mr. Samuel H. Elliott
Vice President
The Standard Oil Company
Midland Building
Cleveland 15, Ohio

Mr. James A. Garrison
Director of Logistics
Central Intelligence Agency
Washington 25, D. C.

Mr. Roswell L. Gilpatric
Cravath, Swaine & Moore
15 Broad Street
New York 5, New York

Professor Harry H. Goode
Department of Electrical Engineering
University of Michigan
Ann Arbor, Michigan

Mr. Najeeb E. Halaby, Vice President
Servomechanisms, Incorporated
12500 Aviation Boulevard
Hawthorne, California

Mr. Houston Harte
Harte Hanks & Company
P. O. Box 5111
San Angelo, Texas

Mr. August Heckscher, Director
Twentieth Century Fund
330 West 42nd Street
New York 36, New York

Major General K. F. Hertford, USA (Ret.)
Manager, Albuquerque Operations Office
U. S. Atomic Energy Commission
P. O. Box 5400
Albuquerque, New Mexico

Dr. S. Shepard Jones
Professor of Political Science
University of North Carolina
Chapel Hill, North Carolina

Mr. W. S. Jones
President, Stone and Thomas
Main, Market and Bridge Streets
Wheeling, West Virginia

Mr. Frank W. Hulse
Chairman of the Board
Southern Airways
1140 Brown-Marx Building
Birmingham 3, Alabama

Mr. W. V. Kahler, President
Illinois Bell Telephone Company
212 West Washington Street
Chicago 6, Illinois

Mr. Virgil Kauffman, President
Aero Service Corporation
210 East Courtland Street
Philadelphia 20, Pennsylvania

Mr. G. Donald Kennedy, President
Portland Cement Association
33 West Grand Avenue
Chicago 10, Illinois

Mr. Henry T. Killingsworth, Vice Pres.
American Telephone and Telegraph Company
32 Avenue of the Americas
New York 13, New York

Mr. Austin H. Kiplinger
Kiplinger's Washington Agency
1729 H Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Mr. Fred Korth
Executive Vice President
Continental National Bank
Fort Worth, Texas

Mr. F. R. Lack, Vice President
Western Electric Company - Radio Division
120 Broadway
New York 5, New York

Dr. Russel V. Lee, M. D.
Palo Alto Medical Clinic
300 Homer Avenue
Palo Alto, California

Dr. H. A. Leedy, Director
Armour Research Foundation
Illinois Institute of Technology
10 West 35th Street
Chicago 16, Illinois

Dr. Gerard J. Mangone
Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs
Syracuse University
Syracuse 10, New York

Mr. Charles P. Manship, Jr.
State-Times and Morning Advocate
526 Lafayette Street
Baton Rouge, Louisiana

Mr. J. E. Martin, President
Dana Corporation
4100 Bennett Road
Toledo 1, Ohio

Mr. J. B. Milligan, President
J. G. Milligan & Company
101 S. Second Street
Milwaukee 4, Wisconsin

Mr. James D. Moore, Director
Franklin Balmar Corporation
Lincoln Building
60 East 42nd Street
New York 17, New York

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Mr. Ed Parkes, President
United Gas Pipe Line Company
United Gas Building
1525 Fairfield Avenue
Shreveport 92, Louisiana

Mr. Mundy I. Peale, President
Republic Aviation Corporation
Farmingdale
Long Island, New York

Mr. Templeton Peck
Director, Editorial Page
San Francisco Chronicle
5th and Mission Streets
San Francisco 19, California

Mr. Gordon W. Reed
Chairman, Board of Directors
Texas Gulf Producing Company
Chrysler Building, East
New York 17, New York

Mr. R. C. Sebold
Vice President-Engineering
CONVAIR
San Diego 12, California

Mr. P. L. Siemiller
General Vice President
International Association of Machinists
Rm. 1612 Midland Building
176 W. Adams Street
Chicago 3, Illinois

Mr. John L. Simpson
Chairman, Finance Committee
Bechtel Corporation
155 Sansome Street
San Francisco 4, California

Mr. Russell G. Smith
Executive Vice President
Bank of America
300 Montgomery Street
San Francisco 20, California

Mr. W. S. Snead
Chairman of the Board
Emerson Electric Manufacturing Co.
Edgemont,
North Garden, Virginia

Mr. S. J. Solomon, President
Aeronautical Training Society
1115 17th Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Mr. Hardwick Stires
Scudder, Stevens & Clark
300 Park Avenue
New York 22, New York

Mr. H. Chase Stone, President
First National Bank
Colorado Springs, Colorado

Dean Robert G. Storey
School of Law
Southern Methodist University
Dallas, Texas

Mr. Benjamin Strong, President
U. S. Trust Company of New York
37 Broad Street
New York 5, New York

Mr. Frederick E. Terman
Provost
Stanford University
Stanford, California

Mr. Edward K. Thompson
Managing Editor
Life Magazine
Time and Life Building
Rockefeller Center
New York 20, New York

Mr. Elwood N. Thompson, President
First Trust Company
Trust Building
Lincoln, Nebraska

Mr. S. G. Tipton, President
Air Transport Association of America
1107 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Mr. Alfred M. Wilson
Executive Vice President
Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Company
2747 4th Avenue S.
Minneapolis 8, Minnesota

Mr. Harper Woodward
30 Rockefeller Plaza, Room 5600
New York 20, New York

AIR WAR COLLEGE MANUAL

TWELFTH EDITION

1 JANUARY 1957

Air War College

Air University

Foreword

1 January 1957

The Air War College Manual is published for the information and guidance of the staff, faculty and students, and to provide a convenient means of furnishing outside agencies with basic information pertaining to the Air War College. It contains the authority, mission, objectives, organization, and a brief outline of the functional aspects of the Air War College. Detailed instructions of primary interest to the staff and faculty are provided in other publications. Revision of or amendments to the Manual during the school year will be accomplished by AWC Regulations.

Robert F. Tate

ROBERT F. TATE
Major General, USAF
Commandant

Contents

SECTION 1 – GENERAL

		Page
1.	Authority	1
2.	Mission	1
3.	Responsibilities	1
4.	Objectives of the Regular Course of Instruction	1
5.	Objectives of Evaluation	2
6.	Objectives of the AWC Officer Correspondence Course	2
7.	Objectives of Air War College Studies	2

SECTION 2 – ORGANIZATION

1.	Organization	3

SECTION 3 – FUNCTIONS

1.	Commandant	5
2.	Vice Commandant	5
3.	Deputy for Evaluation	5
4.	Deputy for Academic Instruction	6
5.	Assistant Deputy for Academic Instruction	7
6.	Deputy for Administration	7
7.	Assistant Deputy for Administration	7
8.	Deputy for Extension Courses	7
9.	Director of Air War College Studies	7
10.	Faculty Board	7
11.	Academic Board	8
12.	Faculty	8
13.	Curriculum Phase Planning	8
14.	Study Directors	8
15.	Students	9

SECTION 4 – REGULAR COURSE

		Page
1.	Academic Environment	10
2.	Faculty Responsibilities	10
3.	System of Instruction	10
4.	The Thesis Program	11
5.	Solutions	11
6.	Curriculum	11
7.	Conduct of Studies	14
8.	Responsibilities of the Seminar Chairman	15
9.	Responsibilities of the Seminar Recorder	15
10.	Guest Lecturers	15
11.	Appraisal System	16
12.	Security.	16
13.	Attendance	17

SECTION 5 – SCHOOL FACILITIES

1.	Air War College	18
2.	Air University	19

GENERAL

1. AUTHORITY.–a. The Air War College was officially designated as a part of the Air University by Letter AG 352 (8 Mar 46) OB-1-AFCOR (920 (d) - M. dated 12 Mar 46, subject: Redesignation of the Army Air Forces School.

b. General Order No. 11, Hq., Air University (15 Mar 46), activated and established the Air War College at Maxwell Air Force Base, Montgomery, Alabama.

2. MISSION.–The mission of the Air War College is to:

a. Provide instruction to prepare senior officers for high command and staff duty with large Air Force Units.

b. Promote sound concepts on the broad aspect of air power to assure the most effective development and employment of air power.

3. RESPONSIBILITIES.–The Air War College will:

a. Conduct the Air War College course of instruction.

b. Foster and encourage the development of doctrine and concept within the Air Force.

c. Formulate, review, compile, and recommend military air doctrine to include:

(1) USAF responsibilities for national security;

(2) Future USAF objectives, including weapons systems;

(3) Special studies bearing on the above as directed by Headquarters USAF.

d. With the assistance of appropriate field agencies and as directed by Headquarters USAF, prepare doctrinal manuals in the fields of strategy and air force employment.

e. Prepare USAF Extension Courses as directed by the Commander, Air University.

4. OBJECTIVES OF THE REGULAR COURSE OF INSTRUCTION.–The objectives of the course of instruction are:

a. To expand the student's capacity as an individual and as a member of a group to analyze, appraise, and develop sound solutions to problems.

b. To gain a more complete understanding of international relations, the nature of conflict, the essential elements of strategy, the capabilities and limitations of weapons systems, and sound employment doctrine.

c. To further develop an appreciation of current problems facing the U.S. Air Force.

d. To prepare the student to project more effectively his inquiries, recommendations, and solutions.

5. OBJECTIVES OF EVALUATION.–The objectives of the evaluation phase of the Air War College mission are:

a. To develop doctrine and concepts for the development and employment of air power.

b. To develop new tactics, strategy, and techniques of aerial warfare for use by the Air Force or its commands.

6. OBJECTIVES OF THE AWC OFFICER. CORRESPONDENCE COURSE.–The objectives of the Air War College Extension Course are:

a. To expand the nonresident student's understanding of the nature of conflict, of the essential elements of strategy, of the capabilities and limitations of weapons systems, of sound command and employment doctrine, of joint war planning, and of Air Force planning and programming.

b. To develop appreciation of current problems facing the Air Force.

c. To develop the nonresident student's ability to find sound solutions to significant Air Force problems and to project them effectively in writing.

7. OBJECTIVES OF AIR WAR COLLEGE STUDIES.–This series of publications embraces a selection of the most important documents, lectures, and theses produced at the Air War College, up to but not including Top Secret in classification. Through this medium all general officers, graduates of the Air War College on active duty, and other key USAF personnel are kept abreast of certain areas of advanced thinking done at the Air War College.

ORGANIZATION

1. ORGANIZATION.–The Air War College is organized to conduct a resident course of instruction as well as extension courses and to perform an evaluation function. Under the Commandant and Vice Commandant, the main elements of the Air War College are organized as follows:

a. The Resident Course:

(1) Faculty:– The faculty is composed of the Deputy for Academic Instruction, Assistant Deputy for Academic Instruction, Educational Advisor, Research Advisor, Directors of Curriculum Phases I, II and III, Study Directors and their assistants.

(2) The Student Body:– The student body is composed of approximately 160 carefully selected senior officers of whom 130 are USAF Colonels. The remaining students are of comparable rank and represent the other Services, the State Department, other governmental agencies, the Royal Air Force, and Royal Canadian Air Force.

b. The Evaluation Staff:– The Evaluation Staff is composed of three divisions:

(1) Employment
(2) Doctrine
(3) Concepts and Development

c. The Extension Course:– The Deputy for Extension Courses plans and implements the extension course program.

d. Air War College Studies:– The Director, Air War College Studies, selects, edits, and prepares for publication various theses, lectures, and other studies made within the Air War College.

e. The Administrative Staff:– The Administrative Staff is composed of four activities:

(1) Guest Lecturer
(2) Officer Personnel
(3) School Services
(4) Intelligence and Bibliography

ORGANIZATIONAL CHART
AIR WAR COLLEGE

APPROVED:

ROBERT F. TATE
MAJOR GENERAL, USAF
COMMANDANT

FUNCTIONS

1. COMMANDANT.—a. Responsible to the Commander, Air University, for the operation of the Air War College.

b. Directs the activities of the Air War College so as to insure fulfillment of the mission assigned by the Commander, Air University.

2. VICE COMMANDANT.—Represents, advises, assists, and acts for the Commandant.

3. DEPUTY FOR EVALUATION.—The Deputy for Evaluation is responsible for:

a. Formulation of basic doctrine for the development and employment of air power by:

(1) Analysis and evaluation of weapons systems.

(2) Analysis and evaluation of doctrine of other services for its impact on Air Doctrine.

(3) Preparation, review and revision, with assistance of appropriate field agencies of USAF, of doctrinal manuals.

b. Formulation of concepts for the development and employment of air power by:

(1) Isolation and analysis of military air aspects of national security.

(2) Analysis and evaluation of fundamental and long range Air Force problems.

c. Maintaining liaison with all agencies working in problem areas related to activities of the Evaluation Staff.

d. Conducting studies that relate to above.

e. Supervising the following Divisions established to facilitate the discharge of the above responsibilities:

(1) Employment Division

(a) Analyzes and evaluates present and programmed air weapons systems, or component parts, as to their effectiveness in light of current USAF roles and missions.

(b) Analyzes and evaluates present and programmed air support systems, as to their effectiveness in light of current USAF roles and missions.

(c) Observes tests, field exercises, and maneuvers relating to above.

(d) Within above area of responsibility, contributes to and assists Doctrine Division in the formulation, review and revision of doctrine.

(e) Maintains liaison with appropriate agencies working in above areas of responsibility.

(2) Doctrine Division

(a) With assistance of other divisions of Evaluation Staff prepares and maintains current Air Force Manuals setting forth Air Force doctrine for the development and employment of air power.

(b) Formulates and recommends new doctrine with assistance of appropriate Air Force agencies.

(c) Evaluates the impact of new factors on current doctrine and recommends policy for Air Force guidance.

(d) Examines impact of other Services' doctrine on Air Force doctrine and recommends policy for Air Force guidance.

(e) Maintains liaison with other agencies of the Air Force engaged in the development and application of doctrine.

(3) Concepts and Development Division

(a) Isolates and analyzes the military air aspects of national security, including fundamental and long-term Air Force problems.

(b) Formulates concepts for the development and employment of air power.

(c) Develops long-range objectives and responsibilities of the Air Force within the national security structure.

(d) Within above area of responsibility contributes to and assists Doctrine Division in the formulation, review and revision of doctrine.

(e) Maintains liaison with civilian and governmental agencies engaged in similar activity.

4. DEPUTY FOR ACADEMIC INSTRUCTION.—The Deputy for Academic Instruction is responsible for:

a. Supervising the over-all academic activities of the Air War College which includes specifically:

(1) Supervision of the Faculty in developing the curriculum and schedule of instruction;

(2) Insuring efficient administration of the curriculum and schedule of instruction;

(3) Insuring that prescribed teaching methods are followed.

b. Prepares the agenda and schedules meetings of the Academic Board.

c. Maintains liaison and coordinates the academic activities with those of the Air University and its other schools and agencies.

d. Makes assignments of special problems within the faculty and to students.

5. ASSISTANT DEPUTY FOR ACADEMIC INSTRUCTION.—The Assistant Deputy for Academic Instruction assists the Deputy for Academic Instruction in the performance of his functions and acts for him in his absence.

6. DEPUTY FOR ADMINISTRATION.—The Deputy for Administration is responsible for:

a. Matters pertaining to personnel, administration, records, supply, property, public relations, security, and procedures pertaining to transportation, housing, and reimbursement of guest lecturers. Monitors communications pertaining to guest lectures. Monitors the preparation of the Air War College history.

b. Supervising the following activities established to facilitate the discharge of the above responsibilities:

(1) Guest Lecture
(2) Officer Personnel
(3) School Services
(4) Intelligence and Bibliography

7. ASSISTANT DEPUTY FOR ADMINISTRATION.—Advises and assists the Deputy for Administration, represents him as directed and acts for him in his absence.

8. DEPUTY FOR EXTENSION COURSES.—The Deputy for Extension Courses is responsible for the preparation and evaluation of the Air War College Extension Courses.

9. DIRECTOR OF AWC STUDIES.—The Director of AWC studies is responsible for the preparation and production of Air War College Studies.

10. FACULTY BOARD.—The Faculty Board will determine all matters relating to the proficiency, deficiency, graduation, and elimination of students and such other matters as are referred to it by the Commandant.

11. ACADEMIC BOARD.—The Academic Board is composed of the Deputy for Academic Instruction (Chairman), the Deputy for Administration, the Educational Advisor to the Commandant, the Assistant Deputy for Academic Instruction (Recorder) and the Directors of Curriculum Phases I, II and III. The Academic Board will:

a. Advise the Commandant on matters pertaining to the educational activities of the Air War College.

b. Assist the Deputy for Academic Instruction in the preparation, operation and evaluation of the curriculum.

12. FACULTY.—The individual members of the Faculty pursue research as approved by the Deputy for Academic Instruction, participate as required in curriculum planning, study planning, and study evaluation; prepare and present the various studies which comprise the curriculum of the Air War College. Each Faculty member is responsible directly to the Deputy for Academic Instruction.

13. CURRICULUM PHASE PLANNING.—In conformance with the broad guidance initially provided by the Academic Board, planning of the next year's curriculum in each of the three phases is commenced by the Phase Planning Committee. This planning effort begins as soon as possible after the conclusion of the preceding phase. Under the chairmanship of the Phase Director, detailed planning of mutually related as well as exclusive aspects of all of the studies is accomplished. This includes final preparation of study circulars for all studies in the Phase. This process is designed to develop more effectively the curriculum, coordinate lecture and reading assignments, design seminar problems and assure learning outcomes.

14. PHASE DIRECTORS AND STUDY DIRECTORS.—The Phase Director is responsible for the coordinated planning and implementation of all studies in his phase. Under his supervision, the Study Director who is assigned to each study performs the following functions:

a. Administers and supervises his study.

(1) Provides information on his study to the faculty and students and arranges for necessary Air War College publications and study reference material.

(2) Supervises the student body during the conduct of his study.

(3) Schedules frequent meetings to assist student seminar chairmen during the implementation of his study.

(4) Conducts critiques of the study.

(5) Makes arrangements incident to the procurement of guest speakers and insures their appropriate care while guests of the Air War College.

b. Prepares a study history to include information on the preparation of the study, the manner in which it was conducted, an estimate of its effectiveness, and his recommendations for effecting improvement.

c. Submits to the Deputy for Academic Instruction through his Phase Director any recommendations for change in methods, procedures, and techniques pertinent to the Air War College.

15. STUDENTS.—Students provide assistance in the administration of the College. The principal tasks are:

a. Class President. The senior United States Air Force officer of the student body is appointed Class President. He is the official representative of the student body and is responsible for carrying out such instructions as he may receive from time to time from the Commandant with reference to activities of the class.

b. Seminar Chairman. One member of each seminar group is designated as seminar chairman. He is responsible to the Study Director to insure that the activities of his seminar group are properly directed and that the work of the group is completed as scheduled.

c. Seminar Recorder. The Seminar Recorder assists the Seminar Chairman by maintaining a record of seminar activities.

REGULAR COURSE

1. ACADEMIC ENVIRONMENT.–The Air War College is the senior school of the United States Air Force. It is the desire of the Commandant to create for it an academic environment in keeping with the professional stature of its students and the methods of instruction followed. Therefore, administrative restrictions are kept to a minimum, and the conscientiousness and cooperation of the student are substituted in large measure for detailed rules and regulations.

2. FACULTY RESPONSIBILITIES.–The faculty of the Air War College is composed of officers who are especially selected on the basis of individual background, experience, interest, and ability. Each is assigned to a study area of particular interest to the Air Force and in support of the mission of the Air War College. Each faculty member is encouraged to pursue individual research and is expected to become a competent authority in his assigned field during his tour of duty as a faculty member. Thus faculty members not only plan and implement the instructional program at the Air War College, but are themselves engaged in a program designed to develop their capabilities and enhance their professional stature as senior officers of the Air Force.

3. SYSTEM OF INSTRUCTION.–The nature of the mission and objectives of the Air War College establishes the inherent requirements to increase the scope and depth of thinking and to develop in the student a capacity to treat military problems objectively and with facility and competence. These requirements and the high experience level of the students have resulted in the selection of a system of instruction that emphasizes the seminar method to the fullest extent. Experience has developed certain fundamentals of thinking in concrete usable form, which provide a point of departure for teaching and learning. These fundamentals generally apply to both individual and group problem solution. Recognizing that the major problems facing high command and staff officers today and in the future are of such complexity as to require staff action or group solution, the system of instruction has been designed to: (1) educate the student in the fundamentals of thinking as related to any problem, with emphasis on the military problem; and (2) to provide an opportunity for practical application of the fundamentals through solving specific problems in group discussion. Lectures, forums, and conferences are included in the curriculum, in addition to selected bibliography, as basic information and background material for seminar group discussion and problem solution. The system of instruction also provides for student presentations and critiques during certain studies.

4. THE THESIS PROGRAM.–The general objectives of this program are:

a. To increase the professional knowledge of senior officers on significant aspects and problems of air warfare and other problems of special significance to the military establishment,

b. To increase the senior officer's ability to analyze, evaluate and write effectively, and

c. To qualify individual students as more expert participants in seminar and other discussions on national security problems.

The Thesis Program is an organized research and writing program devoted to military subjects. It is conducted during Phase II of the Curriculum. Students are assigned research subjects of a scope commensurate with the time at their disposal. Each student is expected to devote at least 115 hours to his research assignment. These hours are scheduled at appropriate times during the normal duty day. Each student works under the direction of, and in coordination with, a faculty member who is engaged in the same general area of research and writing.

5. SOLUTIONS.–The Air War College does not provide approved solutions to the problems which are presented to the student body throughout the academic year, nor does it attempt to prescribe or suggest in any manner what the solutions should be. In general, the military problems that must be dealt with in the higher echelons of command and staff are so complex and diversified and frequently include so many intangible and imponderable factors as to preclude solution by formulae or by established precedents. Therefore, the student and the seminar group should arrive at solutions to problems through individual study, analytical reasoning, and reflective thinking. The value of solutions will depend in large measure upon the degree to which the student or the seminar group applies orderly, judicious, and logical thought processes.

6. CURRICULUM.–The Air War College Curriculum is a planned sequence of interrelated studies. These studies provide the student with a comprehensive understanding of: the nature and scope of international relations and conflicts, the basic concepts for the employment of military forces—particularly air forces—in both general and limited wars; and the application of these considerations to current and future national and military strategy in the attainment of U.S. and Allied objectives.

The present curriculum is organized into three phases and further into nine studies. Phase I, "International Relations" consists of three studies which provide orientation for the student officers and develop the nature and scope of international relations. The first study, "Fundamentals," introduces the student to the mission of the Air University Command. In this orientation the scope of the curriculum and standards of students performance are considered in relation to the principles and methods of learning, communication of ideas, and problem solving in group discussion by experienced senior officers.

The second study, "The Bases of International Relations" and the third, "Current World Conflict," provide a twelve-week concentrated course in international relations and conflicts. Study No. 2, "The Bases of International Relations," emphasizes the nature of power and the historical interrelationships of power elements in the nation-state system. Traditional objectives of major nation-states are studied in relation to the power elements used to support the foreign policies developed to attain national objectives. Case studies of major states prior to and during World War II are selected to insure realism in the study of power in contemporary international relations and to provide the student with standards of judgment for considering the problems and trends presented in Study No. 3, "Current World Conflict."

In Study No. 3, the foreign policy decisions made and implementing actions taken from 1945 to the present time are examined and the comparative power positions in a bi-polar world are evaluated. In the development of this study, major problems are emphasized: international rearmament programs in relation to economic strength; the nature and technique of international communism in strategic world areas; critical issues in key world areas; the influence of military strength and strategies on foreign policy decisions; and the process and pattern of decision making at the highest governmental level. Case studies of strategic world areas are developed to provide the students with a realistic estimate of the world situation and criteria for correlating "Major Factors Affecting U.S. Military Strategy," Study No. 4.

Study No. 4 is the first study in Phase II of the Air War College curriculum. This Phase, "Current U.S. Military Strategy," consists of some nineteen weeks primarily devoted to an evaluation of various strategies and concepts for the organization and employment of military forces in the conduct of unrestricted global war. The capabilities of these forces to conduct operations in limited wars is given some consideration in this examination of current U.S. military strategy. The emphasis, however, in Phase II is on the problems of unrestricted global war.

Study No. 4, is primarily concerned with the reactions of the military strategy makers to national security policy decisions, factors both within and without the Department of Defense that affect the formulation of current military strategy, and the complex machinery by which military strategy is formulated. Pertinent subject areas include the influences of weapons development, Service doctrine, Service tasks and programs, legislation, public opinion, and scientific development.

Study No. 5, "Current U.S. Military Strategy for the Attack," and Study No. 6, "Current U.S. Military Strategy for the Defense," are designed to analyze and evaluate the strategic concepts and capabilities of all the military Services in relation to the functions of the attack and defense during unrestricted global war. The two studies are considered concurrently because of the requirement in any future general war for simultaneous actions in defense and attack. In the development of these functions and studies, the following interrelated topics are considered: current weapons and equipment programs; current and projected capabilities of the land, sea and air forces of the U.S. as well as those of its probable allies and enemies; target selection and effects; alternative organizations for employment of forces; command and control arrangements; concepts of military action to terminate a war; logistic and training requirements; and the conditions which will affect the capacity of the forces to support the military objectives established by U.S. and Allied leadership.

Study No. 7, "Individual Thesis Program," is regarded as one of the studies in the Air War College program because it is designed to utilize and contribute to the other studies in the curriculum. In this study, the student is required to submit a written thesis which contains evidence of objective research and analysis of a significant military problem. The Thesis Program runs concurrently with Studies 4, 5 and 6.

Inasmuch as Phase II emphasizes the current concepts for employment of available U.S. and Allied military forces in unrestricted global war, Phase III, "Future Strategy," considers in two studies, for ten weeks, current concepts for the employment of military forces in limited wars and the directions in which Allied and enemy strategies for both total and limited wars are pointing and are likely to point in the future. Study No. 8, "The Continuing Conflict" emphasizes the military and political interrelationships inherent in planning, organizing for and directing limited war and cold war, while at the same time maintaining preparedness for unrestricted global war. In developing Study No. 8, a series of case studies are analyzed in order to (a) relate military objectives and political ends in limited and restricted strategic situations; and (b) to evaluate the composition and employment of forces for limited war.

In Study No. 9, "Major Factors Affecting Future National Security," the long term requirements for U.S. and Allied defense are studied. Technological, political, economic, psychological and military developments are considered in order to appraise their effects on future national strategy, organization and policies and to recognize the probable areas of future national security decisions.

7. CONDUCT OF STUDIES.—While there are no rigid rules for administration of the studies, a general pattern is followed throughout the curriculum.

a. Study Information. An Air War College Instruction Circular is issued for each study which contains a statement of the study title; objectives; discussion of the study, when appropriate; seminar requirements for preparation and presentation; bibliography; a daily schedule allocating time for seminar study, lectures, conferences, and presentations; and student seminar assignments. In addition, weekly schedules are issued which contain the lecture schedule for the week, together with speaker biographies.

b. Seminar Solutions.

(1) The students are divided into seminar groups for study and discussion. As a general practice, each seminar arrives at a written solution to the problem or some aspect of the problem. In some studies individual problem requirements are assigned. Usually, the last day scheduled for each study is devoted to the oral presentation of solutions. Each seminar designated to make an oral presentation selects one of its members (normally the chairman) to present its solution and support it. In the case of individual solutions, the Study Director designates the students who will present. Consistent with the Air War College position that there may be more than one acceptable solution to any problem, no attempt is made by the school to reconcile solutions. Individuals holding different views from the majority are encouraged to submit dissenting or minority reports.

(2) Each seminar group must be prepared to present solutions as required. The number of solutions actually presented and the manner of presentation of seminar solutions vary.

(3) Final disposition of group solutions will be as directed by the Commandant.

8. RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE SEMINAR CHAIRMAN.—a. The seminar chairman is guided by the applicable portion of the following publications and instructions:

(1) Air War College Directives
(2) Study Outline
(3) The Curriculum
(4) The Schedule of Instruction
(5) Seminar Group Assignments
(6) Study orientation instructions and special instructions from the Study Director.

b. At the beginning of each study, he will draw from the Intelligence and Bibliography Branch all materials to be used by his group and be responsible for their return at the conclusion of the study.

9. RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE SEMINAR RECORDER.—a. The Seminar Recorder assists the Seminar Chairman.

b. He maintains a record of conclusions, or recommendations, resulting from the seminar discussion to expedite the preparation of the written requirement. However, this does not mean that he is solely and automatically responsible for the entire task of writing the seminar paper; the paper is a joint effort.

10. GUEST LECTURERS.—a. Most lectures are presented by individuals not connected with the Air University. The Air War College endeavors to secure civilian and military speakers possessing outstanding ability in their respective fields. Generally, the lecture is scheduled for fifty minutes with a short break, followed by a fifty-minute conference or open forum discussion, during which the students are encouraged to question the speaker in order to obtain maximum benefit from his presentation and experience. However, students are not obliged to accept the views expressed by any lecturer. Rather, they are encouraged to make an objective analysis of the views advanced by the speaker. Frequently, the speaker who advances an unorthodox viewpoint creates the greatest requirement for reflective thinking on the part of the students and thus makes a particular contribution to the objectives of the Air War College.

b. To enable speakers to feel free to give their personal views, as well as the official views of the organization they represent, lecturers are informed that their remarks are considered "off-the-record" and that lectures and discussion before members of the Air War College are classified.

c. All presentations are closed sessions and attendance is restricted to enrolled students and those military and civilian personnel whose official duties require their presence.

11. APPRAISAL SYSTEM.—a. The appraisal system adopted by the Air War College is designed to:

(1) Permit self-analysis.

(2) Obtain an insight into the students' participation and effectiveness in seminar work.

(3) Provide an additional means for the College to appraise its effectiveness in fulfilling its mission.

b. It has been found that appraisal of the competence and achievement of professional men often may be accomplished effectively by their colleagues, whose judgment is based upon knowledge, experience, and observation. This is an important part of the appraisal system of the Air War College. Each officer receives comments based upon the independent judgment of his fellow students and faculty members. Such characteristics as industry, cooperativeness, initiative, perception, judgment, projection, etc., are considered. The system is realistic and demands the highest standards of professional ethics and integrity. Its use could not be justified except in a group of men whose appraisals would represent their best professional judgment.

12. SECURITY.—a. During the school year students will have occasion to use material classified up to and including TOP SECRET.

b. The seminar chairman is designated as security officer for his seminar. He is responsible for safekeeping of classified material issued for his seminar. Appropriate type safes are available for storing classified material.

c. Students WILL NOT TAKE CLASSIFIED material away from the Air War College premises without the express approval of the Commandant or Vice Commandant.

d. Request and Justification for Access to Classified Material, AU Form 23, will be filled out for all Air War College students. This card will be required by the Air University Library for access to classified information up to and including TOP SECRET. Staff, faculty, and students are issued name tags. These tags are considered part of the uniform and will be worn on the left breast pocket.

13. ATTENDANCE.–a. Duty hours for students of the Air War College are 0830 to 1200, and 1330 to 1700 daily, Monday through Friday. All activities are scheduled within the work day. The period 0830 to 1200 on Saturday is normally designated for individual study and research or study presentations.

b. Normally, Wednesday afternoon of each week is devoted to flying and physical exercise.

c. The seminar chairman is authorized to grant, for cogent reasons only, permission to individual members of the seminar group to be absent from academic activities scheduled for any particular day and hour. Requests of students to be absent for longer periods will be submitted to the Deputy for Administration for approval.

d. During those periods set aside for seminar discussion and study, it is left to the discretion of the seminar chairman to determine the manner in which the allocated time is utilized.

e. All students who leave the base area for periods anticipated to be in excess of twenty-four hours, regardless of purpose or authority, will sign in and out of the Air War College Officers' Register.

f. Students who are absent because of illness or emergencies will be reported to the Deputy for Administration by their respective seminar chairmen.

SCHOOL FACILITIES

1. AIR WAR COLLEGE.—The following Services are maintained by the Air War College Deputy for Administration:

a. Guest Lecture.

(1) Monitors and processes all correspondence to the lecturers.

(2) Insures that transportation is provided for lecturers, as desired.

(3) Insures that Air University and Air War College staff and faculty are fully informed of lecturer's schedule.

(4) Is responsible for all renumerations to lecturers.

(5) Is responsible for operation and maintenance of Room 1 and the equipment therein.

(6) Provides visual aids as required for Room 1.

b. Officer Personnel.

(1) Maintains personnel records and files.

(2) Prepares orders and reports pertaining to officer personnel.

(3) Maintains coordination with Base Civilian Personnel Office and accomplishes such civilian personnel actions as are required in connection with procurement or release of civilian personnel.

(4) Monitors administrative procedure established for flying activities for rated personnel.

c. School Services.

(1) Maintains academic archives.

(2) Exercises control of security.

(3) Prepares for distribution and file such papers as seminar solutions, theses, speeches by guest lecturers, student appraisal forms, instructional forms, etc.

(4) Accomplishes typing of official correspondence for students.

(5) Monitors preparation of academic records.

(6) Operates mailroom, message center and supply office.

(7) Insures that appearance, condition and general utility of facilities are satisfactory at all times.

d. Intelligence and Bibliography.

(1) Assembles and maintains bibliographies for the curriculum.

(2) Coordinates requirements for textbooks and materials with the Air University Library.

2. AIR UNIVERSITY.—Certain activities of Headquarters, Air University, are of special interest to the faculty, staff, and students of the Air War College. (Information about using these activities is included in the curriculum and can be additionally furnished by the Deputy for Administration, Air War College.) These activities are:

a. Air University Library.

(1) The Main Library provides on a university level a complete bibliographical, documentary and circulating reference library in quantity, quality, and operational manner sufficient to support adequately the reference and research requirements of the Air University and of the Air Force as required. It also furnishes graphics, cartographic and film library motion picture services for the schools and organizations of the Air University located on Maxwell and Gunter Air Force Bases.

(2) The Air War College Branch Library (Bldg. 802). This branch is maintained specifically for the convenience of Air War College faculty, staff, and student body. A full-time civilian librarian is assigned to provide instruction in library use and techniques and to assist in gathering research data and information. This branch maintains a current catalog of faculty and student theses by subject and a list of all transcribed lectures by subject and author.

b. Research Studies Institute. The Research Studies Institute collects, evaluates, and disseminates information of value to Air Force operations in nontemperate climates, with particular emphasis on the Arctic regions. It organizes and conducts documentary research in certain historical, political, economic, social, and geographic fields of Eurasia and related areas; and gives specialized advice and instruction in those areas. It coordinates and supervises the Air Force historical program and compiles the official consolidated history of the Air Force.

c. 3800th Air Base Wing. The Commander, 3800th Air Base Wing, maintains necessary equipment and facilities to insure that rated students will be able to accomplish minimum flying requirements. Students will be scheduled for flying on Wednesday afternoons and nights by the student flight scheduling section. (Student flight scheduling section is located in Building 838, telephone 8-3271 or 3126.) See Air War College Reg 60-1 for detailed information regarding flight schedules and navigational training flights.

AIR FORCE-GAFB, ALA.(570608)500

Tatro, Frank B.

November 28, 1958

Mr. Frank B. Tatro
Frank B. Tatro & Associates
6022 North Rogers Avenue
Chicago 46, Illinois.

Dear Mr. Tatro:

In a sometimes lonely battle for more intelligent programming, it is most encouraging to receive letters such as the one you wrote me recently. Thank you for writing as you did.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

FRANK B. TATRO & ASSOCIATES

specialists in electronic sales & sales engineering · midwest area

6022 NORTH ROGERS AVENUE · CHICAGO 46, ILLINOIS · PHONE KEYSTONE 9-4535

6.

November 17,1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
National Broadcasting Company
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Typical of you, your recent comment concerning Radio-Television news programming hit the nail on the head.

It wasn't too long ago that my own home life shattered rather explosively. It had been brewing for a long time over the very fact that television provides from six to eight hours of evening entertainment in our home. I believe fundamentally television is very difficult to compete with after I have taken a fairly good beating for eight hours a day with my customers.

It certainly is hard to compete with from the entertainment standpoint. The old "my father told me when I was a youngster" type of saying will no doubt disappear as the present generation will have been possibly raised by television grow to maturity.

I want to thank you for forcefully stating your observation that there is definitely evidence of decadence and escapism. We are now at the point where the iron is hot enough to strike. Forceful, thought provoking programs can mean a great deal to all of us in helping us pick more qualified people and to judge them with better logic and reasoning instead of being stampeded once every two or four years in "political campaign times". The public interest, convenience and necessity can only be served if you have the support.

Through this letter, I would like to assure you of mine.

Yours very truly,

Frank B. Tatro

Frank B. Tatro U.F.

FBT:hf

Member of
"THE REPRESENTATIVES"
Radio Parts Manufacturers

Taylor, Davidson

DAVIDSON TAYLOR

345 East 57
New York 22 New York
3 May 1959

Dear Ed,

Your kind note pleased me. I like what Columbia University has asked me to do, and there is no question that I shall call on friends to help me do it.

Your June is not far away, and pending that time you have done some new fine things on both television and radio. It gave us satisfaction to hear dear Janet as an educated woman (that was a good job all round).

We hope that your travels, studies, readings, reflection and adventure this next year will reward you, and I think that your idea of having Casey as well as Janet with you is ideal.

Love to each of you.

Sincerely,

Dave

Taylor, Davidson

April 30, 1959

Dear Dave:

A belated note to wish you well in the new venture. I think congratulations should go to Columbia as well as to you. If I can lend a hand in this exciting enterprise, please command me.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

Mr. Davidson Taylor
345 East 57th Street
New York, N.Y.

News Office
Columbia University
New York 27, New York
UNiversity 5-4000, Ext. 886
-
John Hastings, Director

SHIELD OF COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

Dear Ed —
this is what
Col. U. produced,
I like the job. Love to Janet, you, Casey.
Dave

FOR USE ON WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22

President Grayson Kirk of Columbia University yesterday (Tuesday) announced the appointment of Davidson Taylor as Director of the Arts Center Program for the University.

Mr. Taylor, who formerly served as Vice President for both the Columbia Broadcasting System and the National Broadcasting Company, will assume his Columbia University duties on May 15, upon completion of a consultancy to the Lincoln Center Committee of The New York Public Library.

The Columbia University Arts Center, when completed, will house a Graduate School of Modern Arts uniting the University's activities in the arts and communications. It will contain programs in Drama and the Theater Arts; Painting, Sculpture and the Graphic Arts; the so-called Communication Arts including, Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, together with all their prevailing forms of written expression; Music; and the History of Fine Arts and Archaeology. There will be two theaters for dramatic and musical practice and performance and a laboratory for the development of the new art of electronic music.

-more-

The immediate goal of the Arts Center Program, Dr. Kirk said, will be the completion of fund raising efforts for a projected $6,250,000 Arts Center Building on the Morningside Heights campus. More than 1¼ million has already been raised for the planned 12-story structure.

Dr. Kirk expressed the University's pleasure at Mr. Taylor's association with the work of the University.

"Columbia's educational plan in the field of the arts," said Dr. Kirk, "will now look to the completion of the fund raising efforts for the new Center and the facilities it will contain. Mr. Taylor's responsibilities will not be in this area alone, but also in the planning and supervision of the physical structure of the Center, and the main task of directing the activities which will be housed in it."

Dr. Jacques Barzun, dean of Faculties and Provost of Columbia, who, with the assistance of Oscar J. Campbell, Professor Emeritus of English, has served as interim head of the Arts Center Program until the appointment of a full time director, explained that the new building will provide space and equipment for undergraduate as well as graduate students working in the Arts. A balanced program of "proficiency in one and literacy in several" will be offered as the new form of studies which have been for many years conducted by several departments at Columbia. The Center, which will also include the School of Architecture and its division of Planning and Housing, will provide under one roof all necessary facilities for the arts program.

The programs in the planned building, said Dean Barzun, will pioneer in the education of gifted students who will need to balance their specialized artistic talents with the calculated range of academic knowledge and training - both theoretical and historical. In each field, there will be courses designed to train administrative specialists concerned with public enterprises in the arts. Dean

Barzun emphasized that the new Arts Program will not compete with the conservatories of music, the art schools or schools of acting, or any in-service technological training program in the communications industries.

The new Director of the Columbia Arts Center Program, Davidson Taylor, came to New York in 1933 from the Louisville Courier-Journal and its station WHAS in Louisville, Kentucky, and joined the Columbia Broadcasting System, with which he was affiliated through 1949. He was successively announcer, producer, program executive and a Vice President, both of Programs and Public Affairs. His earliest assignment was as announcer on the New York Philharmonic Sunday broadcasts during the time of Toscanini, Later he initiated the policy of commissioning works of American composers for performance on CBS. He also was responsible for the Columbia Workshop. During World Wa II he spent two years overseas as Chief of Radio for Psychological Warfare Division, Supreme Headquarters Allied Expeditionary Force, and Chief of Film, Theater and Music Control, Information Control Division, United States Forces European Theater.

After leaving CBS Mr. Taylor was, in 1950, Special Consultant to U.S. Department of State. He joined NBC the following year where he was Vice President from 1954 to 1958. At NBC he was actively associated with both public affairs and programs in the field of education and the arts. In the former capacity he supervised the national political conventions, the inauguration of President Eisenhower, the coronation of Queen Elizabeth, etc. In the latter field he supervised the production of the Wisdom Series and chose many of the great men represented, Wide Wide World, and programs from the National Gallery and the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He has also contributed to a variety of publications.

4.20.59 # 7753

Taylor, Davidson

November 24, 1958

Dear Dave:

Many thanks for your nice note. I am delighted to hear that you decided to take on the job with the Lincoln Center Committee of the New York Public Library. It sounds most stimulating. I wish you much luck and urge you please to let me know if ever there is anything I can do.

I regret very much that I cannot write the letter you suggest to the Century.

Janet and Casey join me in sending warmest regards to all of you.

As ever yours,

Mr. Davidson Taylor
345 East 57 Street
New York, New York

mce

DAVIDSON TAYLOR

345 East 57th Street
New York 22 New York
18 November 1958

Dear Ed:

Cabell Greet has nominated and I have seconded Ned Calmer for membership in the Century. I don't recall ever having discussed Ned with you. Therefore I ask in ignorance whether you would be willing to write a letter for Ned to the Committee on Admissions.

All goes well here, and I hope it does with you and Janet and Casey.

I took the consultancy to the Lincoln Center Committee of the New York Public Library, and started work yesterday. It is a good challenge and most educational.

Warm regards from us all.

Sincerely,

Dave

The talk with Agnes de Mille was first rate.

Taylor, Davidson

NATIONAL BROADCASTING COMPANY, INC.

A SERVICE OF RADIO CORPORATION OF AMERICA

RCA Building, Radio City, New York 20, N.Y.

CIRCLE 7-8300

DAVIDSON TAYLOR
VICE PRESIDENT
PUBLIC AFFAIRS

January 22 1958

Dear Ed -

It was delightful to have the talk with you, and I can't tell you how much I appreciate your understanding and kindliness, as well as your unfailing friendship.

The proposal you talked about fascinates me and I hope that we can pursue it at your early convenience.

I have another person to suggest as a possible guest at the dinner which we were talking about arranging, and that is Charles Van Doren. When we are next talking, I will tell you why.

Sincerely,

Dave

Mr Edward R Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

Taylor, George C

May 25, 1959

Mr. George C. Taylor
R2, Box 428
N. Rio Grande Blvd.
Albuquerque, N.M.

Dear Mr. Taylor:

As Mr. Murrow is away at present, I am writing on his behalf to acknowledge receipt of the material you sent him and to thank you for your courtesy in doing so. I will give it to him when he comes into the office again.

Sincerely yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

CROMWELL BUILDING

PHONE 23

GEORGE C. TAYLOR
LAWYER
ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO

DATE May 15-59 19

M Dear Mr. Murrow:

Muchas gracias Senor for interviewing Montgomery. The attached may enliven your sabbatical, viz: Interview the ghost of Thomas Jefferson(Dr. Padover's edition) and Daniel Webster vs. Stephen Girard in the Supreme Court opinion in Girard Will case or have Mr. Edwards enliven my TV with dramatizing Webster vs. heretics Jefferson and Girard. Happy vacation, but you'll soon be bored. George C. Taylor, Sr.(retired,)

Route 2, box 428, N.Rio Grande, Albq.NM

George C. Taylor Sr.

Albuquerque, N.M. 4-10-59

U. S. International Cooperation Administration,

Washington, D.C.

Gentlemen:

This refers to your grant of funds and authority to the American Bar Association to crusade for "World Peace Through Law" by developing legal concepts, standards, procedures and institutions to facilitate international economic growth, peaceable settlement of disputes WITHIN and among nations, etc.

I am a native born tax-paying citizen of USA in the law business since 1903, now retired. By that lamp of experience, plus press and ABA publications I urge modification of your grant to require the addition of a score or more laymen to the ABA committee--top scholars, scientists, newsmen, business and labor leaders, anthropologists and diverse economists, able and willing to express unpopular views in popular language. Otherwise your paramount goal and dollars must be drowned in a self-laudatory flood of legalistic ritual, red-tape and rhetoric--sounding brass and tinkling cymbals to many Americans and most of the two billion non-Americans your committee must reach for "Pax vobiscum".

Respectfully yours,
George C. Taylor, Sr.
R2, box 428, N. Rio Grande Blvd.
Albuquerque, N.M.

PS. As Exhibit A supporting my motion I attach self-explanatory copy of letter to Dr. Robert Storey, long-time leader in ABA circles, and member of its committee.

From George Taylor, Sr.
R2,428, N. Rio Grande Blvd
Albuquerque, N.M.4-10-59

Hon. Robert G. Storey, Pres't SW Legal Foundation, Dean SMU School of Law,
Dallas, Texas.

In re "World Peace Through Law" Regional Conference and ICA Committee.

Dear Mr. Storey:

Your "Challenge of the Atomic Age" recalled the 1910 Law Professors' Association "Resolved, the time is ripe for the creation of a truly American legal system" -- which was inspired by jurist President Taft's 1909 castigation of my brethren whose administration (my meal ticket since 1903), especially criminal law, was a "disgrace to our civilization". A half century later the "disgrace" is unabated: in New Mexico, sure, and in California I recently witnessed a 90 day Marathon murder trial whose jury included nine housewives frantically concerned with feeding their swarm of kids romping in the courthouse lobby; in New York Dame Justice may drag her feet through a decade of technical red-tape; and, guided by 40,000 pages of "Words & Phrases Judicially Defined", the US Supreme Court recently split 6-3 defining "Home".

Standing on precedent American Bar Association President Malone (March Journal) meets the "Challenge" with medieval stare decisis, advising Jesuit Marquette University "The law did NOT have its inception in the mind of man" "The rule of law is a concept which has existed since Moses received the Ten Commandments upon Mount Sinai". "Man-made laws" are "merely the means by which the Law of God is applied to the conduct of man." "Lawyers are the handmaidens of justice". Their "Custodianship" of the Constitution is the "secret of our nation's greatness". If not "rooted deep in the Immutable Rules of the Divine Will" "man made Law will surely wither and die."

I dissent in toto: Mr. Malone has specified our weakness, chaotic hysterics alternating with apathy; the free pioneer spirit defied Immutable Rules to create our magnificient material civilization; by smashing John Stuart Mills "despotism of custom" which is "everywhere the standing hindrance to human advancement" "unceasing antagonism"..to the "Spirit of liberty" or "progress or improvement".

July 4th '76 faced a machine age, a mechanical universe whose electricity Franklin had captured; a "crisis of the old order": the irresistable "Rights of Man" toward self-realization against 60 centuries of "Divine Will" statism. So, July 4th invoked "the laws of Nature", ("Adapt or die") "Nature's God"..."We the people.. do ordain" "establish justice" "a more perfect union"; (with all the Wisdom science and scholarship could broadcast). Such was President Taft's "All Souls" Unitarian-Universalist "religious faith", the true "American Way". The Constitution's "treaty-making power"--supreme law against the "disgrace" of all civilizations, viz: not innate, but indoctrinated provincial, tribal, racial, economic religious bias and prejudice, state's rights, national sovereignty.

World statesman Taft's faith is on your agenda April 29-30, against Mr. Malone and "Great Commoner"-"free silver" prohibition Bryan, "responsibility in law and morals" "individual and collective responsibility" in the "Christian ethic".

Let's briefly cross-examine "Christian Ethic": Has the new wine--20th century scientific knowledge and achievement--burst the old bottle? "Society today carries on as though God doesn't exist or that His existence doesn't matter". (AP April 3, 1959, quoting Executive Director Work of National Council of Catholic Men). What was its living content?

Justinian's three precepts, as cited in your 1953 ABA Presidential address? (1) live honestly, (2) hurt no one; both are moral-legal concepts prerequisite and co-eval with Neolithic community living by systematic agriculture; and sponsored by lady divinities such as Latin goddess Pax, Nordic Goddess of justice for whom we named "Friday", their prototype goddess of wisdom Zuen-Sin-Zin for whom a volcanic Mount Sin-a-i was named--BEFORE that devil Malthusian law, hungry nomadic Semites, dethroned her, and dear Venus yielded all her right to Mars. And the first command of the Mosaic thunder (Exodus) was "eternal vengeance" against the Amalekites, i.e. "massive" resistance-"retaliation", "loyalty" to "national honor-sovereignty" "immutable" antagonism to humanity.

Justinian's 3rd precept was pagan martyr jurist Ulpian's "Justice--the will to allot to every man his due"; Jefferson called it "intelligent self-interest" for the wise "pursuit of happiness;" a Golden Rule advocated by godless yellow Confusius, many centuries before the military needs of Dictator-Emperor-Pontifex maximus-Saint Constantine imposed "Christianity" upon a vast declining Roman Empire, as Lenin-Stalin forced "Communism" upon the Russian Empire; as despotic and un-American as politician-lawyer Bryan jailing science professor Scopes for teaching the laws of nature-"Evolution"; by law, our educational system became (Prof. Marsden) "a vast kindergarden" importing foreign scientists for national defense; in the New Testament ethic "suffer the little children..for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven". "Self-realization"? by annihilating a hundred Hiroshimas? OR, "turn the other cheek"? OR "take all thou hast and give to the poor?" which is our dishonest creeping socialism, a $12 billion treasury deficit, parity, oil quotas, ad nauseam, and, like Red communist philosophy, is anything BUT the "will to allot to every man his due." An appropriate commercial followed the above AP quotation--400 thousand bars in USA.

While "thousands hunger and thirst for higher values" lamented Justice Jackson in US. versus the Ballards, self-anointed "divine messengers" in the Christian ethic,--infantile American "faith" clung to "Easter Bunnies" "Santa Claus" &c. against American William James' "pragmatic" voice of experience; so 6 to 3 Supreme Court precedent must bless a "religious faith" whose content was "mental and spiritual poison", "humbuggery untainted by any trace of Truth" quoting Jackson, who personally, cordially agreed but officially must overrule, the common sense jury verdict--"Guilty" of fraud.

When King George's divine rights surrendered to George Washington's warriors at Yorktown, the bands played "The World is Turned Upside Down". Instead of Archbishops our New World "Conscience -Keeper" would be the United States Supreme Court, a compass, a guiding philosophy that commanded no Inquisition, no bayonets, and John Marshall of course, was its wet-nurse. That successful travelling salesman who founded the Mohammedan religion decreed "The words of one wise judge are of more worth (i.e. "worshipable") than the prayers of 10,000 unlearned men". No press agent, no teacher, has ever carried that wisdom to our farmhouses, or market place or schoolhouse--"in the language of the peasant" as great Doctor of Law Von Jhering put it, the paramount business of the 20th Century, so:

For your Law Day banquets and tranquilizers I give you one forgotten truly American legal-ethical precedent, guaranteed against sclerosis, and a specific for members of Uncle Sams International Cooperation Administration's Committee--Justice Storey's unanimous court and its official American Saint Stephen Girard. In the Girard Will case Girard's "higher values" challenged Philadelphia's typhoid-yellow fever plagues. Patriot-philanthropist Girard donated a sanitary water and sewer system--his "intelligent self-interest"--fought for "PREVENTIVE medicine, quarantine laws; and ridiculed mass prayer meetings to save Philadelphia from "Sin" and "divine vengeance" (Jackson's "mental and spiritual poison" against progress). Like Jefferson, alleged "atheist" Girard deemed "Ignorance", indoctrinated humbuggery our major sin--"We owe everything to Education". Students at Girard College were taught to think, question all things, and work. Girard's Will banned all divine messengers from its campus; the Reverends engaged Daniel Webster and his famed "Defense of Christianity" to break Girard's Will; instead Justice Storey's court broke all medieval precedent by upholding the Will, boldly telling Webster and his clients they could do no better than "emulate Stephen Girard"...

From Girard's international sailing ships to steam, electricity to Sputnik and nuclear power and Einstein wrote "Finis" to your Mosiac law book. Your magnificient 20th Century banquet, from Scotch to Java, created by "people", ten thousand lesser Girards, Jeffersons, Franklins, MDs and PhDs, newsmen, electricians, stevedores and cooks. If the doctors of law won't our people can invoke Judiciary Article III of the Constitution--by Presidential appointment add a few hundred of those creators to the nation's judiciary, toward World Peace in kindergarden and outer space by creating a "truly American legal system".

Sincerely yours,
George C. Taylor Sr.

George C. Taylor Sr.
R2, box 428, N. Rio Grande Blvd.
Albuquerque, N.M.

Taylor, Harold

June 26, 1959

Professor Harold Taylor
Sarah Lawrence College
Bronxville, N.Y.

Dear Harold:

Thank you for sending along the photograph and the transcript of the proceedings on May 21.

As ever yours,

(signed in Mr. Murrow's absence)

SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE

HAROLD TAYLOR

June 22

Dear Ed, 6

Here you are, at the dinner. Your remarks are recorded on the attached piece of mimeographing.

H.

To Ed, s of the liber spirit
May 21, 1959
Harold

symbol oral 59
Taylor

THE LIBERAL SPIRIT IN AMERICAN LIFE

A dinner honoring

HAROLD TAYLOR

retiring president
of Sarah Lawrence College

Waldorf Astoria, Grand Ballroom

May 21, 1959

introductory remarks	Lloyd K. Garrison chairman of the Sarah Lawrence Board of Trustees
chairman	Edward R. Murrow
speakers	Archibald MacLeish
	Robert Oppenheimer
	Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt

---

guests of honor	Miss Sarah Blanding Mrs. Catherine Drinker Bowen Miss Agnes de Mille Mr. Lloyd Garrison Miss Martha Graham Dr. William H. Kilpatrick His Excellency Mr. Arthur Lall Mr. Archibald MacLeish Dr. Alexander Meiklejohn Mr. Edward R. Murrow Dr. Robert Oppenheimer Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt Dr. Harold Taylor Mrs. Harold Taylor Mr. Roy E. Wilkins

The Liberal Spirit in America
Dinner honoring Harold Taylor
President of Sarah Lawrence College
Waldorf Astoria Hotel
May 21, 1959

Lloyd K. Garrison, chairman:

Except for Harold Taylor's immediate family, I have probably been associated with Harold Taylor over a longer period of time than anyone in this room. We met twenty years ago as colleagues at Wisconsin - he in philosophy, I in law. We became instant friends. Our philosophical outlooks, if I can credit myself with having one, were akin. So were our less serious tastes which we certainly possess, both of us. We went on family picnics together, sketched together, skiied, played tennis, and I even listened to him play the clarinet, which he did quite well. It was a golden time.

The "Wisconsin idea," pioneered by the elder LaFollette, was then still alive - the idea of a creative collaboration between the best brains in the University and the State government. Philosophers like Max Otto and Alexander Meiklejohn and their young colleague, Harold Taylor, economists like John R. Commons, Edwin Witte and Elizabeth Brandeis, lawyers like David Lilienthal, and many others, lent their talents to the State, to the solution of legislative and administrative problems; and the people responded with gratitude. In that atmosphere ideas took wings and turned into action, and there was joy in the thinking and the doing. This marriage of thinking and doing, and the joy that goes with it, has remained with Harold to this day.

He and I were separated briefly by the war. Then in 1945, he wrote me that he had been offered the presidency of Sarah Lawrence College, and he asked my advice. It was a remarkable letter, because it illustrated so well his sense of personal commitment to the values that he believes in. Senator McCarthy had by then defeated Bob LaFollette and was already sowing the seeds of his dark program. Harold was concerned about what might happen to Wisconsin, to the freedom of the University, to the cherished institutions of democracy which the State had pioneered. Tempted as he was by the Sarah Lawrence offer, he wondered if his proper course were not to stay at Wisconsin and take his part in the struggles he foresaw. I urged him to go to Sarah Lawrence because of the great contribution to education that he would make and because the defense of freedom, if it had to be made at Wisconsin, would have to be made everywhere.

In the upshot, of course, this is what happened, and the valiant stand which Sarah Lawrence took under his leadership is now a bright and permanent page in American history.

When he was inducted as president of Sarah Lawrence fourteen years ago, he asked me to give the inaugural talk. It was a proud moment for me, and I have yielded to the temptation to quote a few sentences from what I then said.

> "His is a mind stocked deep with gifts, as you who are studying under him have no doubt already discovered to your great joy; and it is a mind which is constantly growing and sending out new shoots into the future, and new sparks into the dark places, and you will never be able to catch up with it. . . . . The truth is in him and the courage to speak it."

Garrison (continued):

Then I talked about the Wisconsin idea, of a community which he and I had shared, and about the one world which science was in the process of creating, and I closed with these words:

> "Into this world community as a final and imperative goal, education must march with all its banners flying, in the age-old search for peace, justice, liberty and order, in the vanguard of a suffering and struggling humanity. Knowing Harold Taylor as I do, I can see the banners of Sarah Lawrence College already flying among the foremost in the great procession of minds and hearts that must and will rescue and carry forward to more spacious heights the enterprise of life on earth."

I like to think that those words were both true and prophetic. To them I now add only a short postscript.

Among many other characteristics, Harold Taylor is closer to his students than any college president I ever knew or heard of. He knows them all by name - 400 of them! This comes quite naturally to him. He has a genuine kinship with them. In the midst of untold burdens, he has somehow kept the freshness and spontaneity of youth. "Youth is such a wonderful state," Bernard Shaw said, "it is a shame it has to be wasted on young people." With Harold Taylor it has not been wasted. In him the noonday sun is still rising.

When he leaves Sarah Lawrence, it will not be a true departure. He has poured his spirit into it so lavishly that it will always be part of that enchanting campus and part also of all those who dwelt there in his time.

Others will speak of him tonight and I must hurry on. I now present to you our toastmaster who is known throughout the world, not merely because he has made the truth exciting, but because he has had the courage to speak it to the ends of the earth with disciplined passion and unswerving aim in the cause of human decency. Ed Murrow.

Edward R. Murrow, toastmaster

Mr. Chairman, Mr. President, Mrs. Roosevelt, and members of the most attractive thing that a broadcaster can encounter - members of the captive audience.

When I was invited here tonight, I recognized my duty and I purposed to do it. It seems to me that long introductions are occasionally embarrassing, particularly when one addresses the next speaker as though he were still a slightly ambulant corpse.

It seems to me that the British practice is rather more appropriate, for a man in a scarlet jacket merely stands up and says, "Milords, ladies and gentlemen, pray silence for the speaker."

Murrow (continued):

That I purpose to do tonight. The only reason for my bland attire is that I was unable to persuade a waiter to loan me his scarlet jacket, because he informed me the union would not permit him to work in such attire. I have done tonight very considerable research on all of your public figures who are to speak. I can tell you all their academic honors, the year in which they were born, and the contributions they have made to education and the arts.

But I believe brevity is good, both when you are and are not understood. I regard my duty tonight as being merely to maintain order, to try to end proceedings on time, and to see to it that everyone in the hall can hear. If you have any difficulty, please let me know. If you do, I shall not do what a toastmaster once did in England when a man in the far end of the hall rose and said, "Mr. Toastmaster, I cannot understand a single word the speaker is saying." The toastmaster rose and said, "I shall be delighted to change places with you."

I assure you that I am here for the duration, and I must inform you that your first speaker is in some danger of being had up on charges of monopoly proceedings by the country's department of justice because of the Pulitzer Prize, he having won three, being a scholar, a poet of some note, and, I inflate myself by saying, an old friend, and one who managed to write a play having to do with life which caused Life to cogitate in public. Very few authors can make such a claim. Archibald MacLeish.

Archibald MacLeish:

I received with my invitation to speak at this dinner a tactful suggestion which I'm sure Robert Oppenheimer also received - no one makes or needs to make suggestions to the great and beloved lady who follows us - that I should address myself not to Harold Taylor but to the Liberal Spirit. I suppose the purpose was to spare Harold's blushes, but it isn't going to work. Harold Taylor and the Liberal Spirit have gotten themselves so completely confused in the American consciousness that the second is pretty much the mirror of the first and you can blush into a mirror as easily, if you can blush at all, as into the public eye.

However, I shall obey my orders - provided I can permit myself at the outset one brief obeisance to the image in the glass. About a year ago I came upon a speech of Harold's - or perhaps I should say the speech came upon me as speeches of college presidents have a way of doing - in which a famous passage from Pericles' Funeral Oration was quoted in a translation I had never seen before. Wishing to borrow it for myself (which is, of course, why one reads the speeches of one's friends) I wrote asking for the scholarly reference without which no professor - no professor, at least, whose colleagues are members of the Harvard faculty - will quote anything. Harold replied promptly and affably that he would consult his files - and that was the last that I heard of it.

MacLeish (continued):

Now the passage as rendered in the standard translation of Thucydides by C. F. Smith reads as follows, "You must daily fix your gaze upon the power of Athens and become lovers of her." But the translation in Mr. Taylor's speech went like this: "I would have you fix your eyes upon Athens day by day, contemplate her potentiality, not merely what she is but what she has the power to be, until you become her lovers."

The difference you will agree is noticeable from any point of view including the point of view of the man who chose the second rather than the first. But I do not call it to your attention to suggest that Harold Taylor is a bad classicist (which would not be true in general and certainly would not be true in this particular instance) nor to suggest that his files are in bad order (when I finally got him on the telephone the other day, he was able to trace his version to Middleton Murray) but to make a point about this same Liberal Spirit which we have been directed to discuss. What the Liberal Spirit stands most in need of in the United States at this moment is definition - particularly definition by its friends. It is my contention, which I should like very briefly to expose to you, that the difference between these two translations, and the choice of the second in place of the first by one of the most notorious liberals in American education, helps considerably in that labor.

Consider what one of those sectarian publications devoted to the solemn task of eradicating liberalism from American life would make of this incident. "Here," its editors would say, "here we have a perfect example of the kind of thing we have been warning the country against for generations, or anyway since we started publication a year or two ago.

"Here, in this second translation, is what? Novelty - novelty for the sake of novelty, innovation for innovation's ends. The fine old classic translation, faithful to the fine old classic text (which we looked up in the Loeb Classical Library) has been replaced by a loose and impressionistic translation chosen by a loose and impressionistic mind, thoroughly characteristic of the liberal mind in general, and for no reason whatever but to destroy the old, glorify the new, and no doubt, though we have yet to decide just how, to undermine religion.

"The pattern, dear readers, is obvious. Liberalism, as we have told you more than once, is nothing more, for all its fine talk, than the practice of taking liberties: taking liberties with accepted opinions, taking liberties with Eternal Truth, taking liberties with established texts. Here in the words of this self-confessed college-president-liberal, borrowed no doubt from some equally undisciplined and incompetent classical-translator-liberal, you have a demonstration of the whole corrupting process. We urge you again (they are always urging you again) to confine your reading to sound, conservative publications like ours where good old translations, good old doctrines and good old thoughts are kept in eternal sanctity at a minimal cost per copy and where you need never fear to find a syllable in an unexpected posture."

MacLeish (continued):

I don't wish to ridicule the position. It is earnest enough and no doubt honest. I wish merely to point out that it rests on an assumption about itself and about liberalism which involves a definition of liberalism. It assumes that its passionate opposition to liberalism makes it "conservative" - that liberalsim and conservatism are the primal opposites and that liberalism is defined by that fact.

Now there are only two things wrong with this assumption. One is that it is not true, either in etymology or in fact. The other is that we liberals talk as though it were.

The word "liberal" though it has a direct Latin ancestor and a legitimate root in Sanskrit, came into modern political use through a Spanish word which Goya etched upon the conscience of Europe and then upon the conscience of mankind - the word "liberál." And the opposite of the word "liberál" in Goya's Spain was not "conservative." The opposite of the word "liberál" was "servil" which means exactly what it says. A man, that is to say, is a "liberál" when his dedication is to those things denoted by the Latin word "liberalis" from which "liberál" derives - those things which "befit a freeman" - those things in which freedom inheres. And a man is the opposite of a "liberál" when his commitment is to servility, whether the servility of Goya's time, our own or any other.

The word "servility" is not a word we use as frequently as perhaps we should but it is a word we all understand, and the element it contributes to the definition of the liberal spirit is an element which no one should mistake. When "liberal" and "conservative" are accepted as the defining poles, "liberalism" becomes nothing more than a synonym for progressivism, and progressivism is pretty vulnerable at a time in which the idea of progress is in bad repute. But when "liberalism" and "servility" are set in opposition to each other, the conception changes. For then the enemy of liberalism becomes what he really is - not the noble conservator of the richness of the human past which all men, whatever they call themselves, have common purpose to preserve, but the timid capitulator to those bony carapaces left behind it by the chronological past which men call established institutions.

And once the true role of the anti-liberal has been recognized, the liberal can more adequately recognize himself. He is a man committed, not to the cause of institutions, but to the cause of man: which is to say, the cause of the liberation of the individual human being which makes us men, makes men of us. Where his opposite is a servant of institutions - of institutions in general, or far more frequently, of some particular institution which he sets above the cause of man and reveres as fixed and final - the liberal sees institutions as existing for men and good only so long as they serve the human end of the fulfillment of men's lives - to be changed or destroyed when they no longer serve that purpose - when they obstruct the road to life. The anti-liberal, then, is servile in the precise and literal meaning of the word servile. He has submitted himself to a human master other than his human soul. The liberal is liberal because his soul is free.

MacLeish (continued):

So defined, the word, liberal, becomes the proudest title any man can claim because it becomes a title which gives honor to the others. The patriotism of a liberal, the religious faith of a liberal, is a patriotism, a faith, he chooses for himself - not be submission but by human choice, in human dignity and chosen as a man. It is for this reason I suppose that Middleton Murray's translation of Thucydides with its inward searching of the forward meaning of the Greek, moved Harold Taylor. For to Harold Taylor as, I think, to the rest of us here, liberalism is not something which takes liberties but something rather which gives them - which liberates - which sets free - which sets the human spirit free to work its wonders - to make its Athens what she has it in her to become and so, and only so, to be her lover.

Murrow:

Liberal, conservative and servile must now share my dilemma, which is, how within my own terms of reference am I to introduce to you J. Robert Oppenheimer? I must do it with brevity and, I hope, with accuracy. Once I had the privilege of doing with him what I hope was a consequential television interview. Subsequently there was criticism, and an institutional critic came into my office and said, "Why did you interview this man Oppenheimer?" And I said, "Well, it seemed like a good idea at the time." And he said, "Yes, but why did you make him out to be so intelligent, so sensitive, so perceptive, so persuasive, and so likeable?" And I said, "Sir, I admit that in the field of visual communication I am a genius, but I can present only what the camera sees, and I must therefore refer you and your complaint to Mr. Oppenheimer." So now, ladies and gentlemen, I refer you to - J. Robert Oppenheimer.

J. Robert Oppenheimer:

One of my colleagues on the Berkeley campus was a New Englander, an eminent Sanskritist, who taught me a little Sanskrit. He was much pleased with his definition of a liberal: "A liberal is a man who sees no difference in principle between right and wrong." I do not often tell that story. For the liberal spirit has many enemies; it is not without enemies today. Yet in this good company, and on this platform, I am prepared to tell it, for the little of truth that is in it. For here we are among men and women, who, by the testimony of their lives, have given expression to the liberal hope, confidence, and above all love, of man's growth, of the human adventure, and of man.

If we are liberals, we know that questions of right and wrong are for the most part such that they must be relived and relearned in every time, in every age, in every generation. We know it very well today after centuries of great change, very well in this twentieth century of unparalleled and unprecedented growth; for many of the questions come to us as quite new questions, the answers to which we cannot look up in a book; even the old questions have a new meaning. But there is a still deeper reason: that only what one has refreshed and strengthened in one's own time, and by one's own action and one's own thought, is a living part of the tradition.

Oppenheimer (continued):

One of the sources of the liberal spirit lies in a hope. It is to be found, certainly in Athens, in the Athens of Socrates, in Hellenistic times, even in one of the Hindu philosophies, the Sankhya; but for us the relevant time is the eighteenth century, which made our institutions and our style. This is the confidence that the growth of knowledge would lead to deeper understanding, would do away with superstition, would enlarge, enlighten and free men, and would thus provide both a wider range for men's choices and more awareness, and a deeper insight in their making.

I find in myself some concern, some trouble for this source of the liberal spirit; and I find grounds for it very clearly in this country, more sharply than in the Europe from which we grew, in part because our institutions are so much more open, and our idea of humanity so much more inclusive. But these troubles will come to Europe. It is sharper here than it is in Russia, in communist societies. These two great offshoots from the European tradition took, in a sense, antithetical and divergent paths. They are, from the point of view of the thirteenth century, complementary heresies, in which in Russian society - in its ideal, if not in its practice - what is common is valued as central and all-important; whereas with us, what is our own and individual and unique is valued above all else. We are not, for the most part, in this country, lonely people, though there are artists, and other men, who are. We live in multiple, intense, changing, overlapping communities, very close to one another. We hope that something like this fraternal, plural, unhierarchical society may be a useful model, and thus some help, to the many societies which are now beginning to find their new way in a new world.

There has been for us, if we think back a hundred years, or to the days when our country was founded, a large and ominous change. This is the change in the robustness, the vigor and the inclusiveness of what I may call the public sector of our lives, of what we all have in common, what we can talk to each other about, not with any certitude of agreement, but with assurance of a measure of common understanding. I am not wise enough to know all that has contributed to this change; in part it is the vastness of our country and our people; in part it is the unprecedented rate at which our situation has changed; in part the growth in all directions, in all ways, intellectual, physical and technical, of the circumstances and situations in which we find ourselves; and in part it is the great fact that our inherited institutions do not fit the present very well. Certainly they do not fit it very well with regard to the issues of war and peace, or the making of war.

Yet a part, and because of the limitations of my life I believe this to be a very large part, lies in the way in which our knowledge has grown: our knowledge of the world of nature, our knowledge of ourselves as a part of that world, even our incipient insight into the marvels and order of perception and thought and memory. It is partly because this knowledge has deep roots in specialized and sometimes quite old traditions. Mathematics, physics, astronomy, are old branches of learning by now. They have been built and transmuted by generation after generation; what they deal with today is in every sense very remote from the matrix of all our learning, from common sense, common experience, from the common trunk of the great tree of knowledge. There is an extreme specialization of the techniques by which we ask questions of nature, varying from one branch to another. There is for us, as perhaps for everyone who listens soberly, a deep, fresh awareness of the inherently partial and incomplete character of all knowledge, of the universal trait of all knowledge that it is complementary to other knowledge, that one can only know at the cost of ignorance, of the loss of other knowledge.

Oppenheimer (continued):

Often, when I talk in these terms, it is said that I am complaining only that communication is not adequate. That is indeed true; but communication, in this sense of having a common base for talking about things, this is not a luxury; this is the very basis of our being men; this is what makes us men. For public life, if it is to have a trace of nobility, must find from time to time a happy union of simplicity with truth.

There are, of course, innumerable bad cures for this trouble. In the past - we hope not forever - the system and the style of the communists has been such a cure; and so, more generally, are dogmatism, which is claimed monopoly of wisdom; and so is the control of information, the keeping of things secret, which is a forcible monopoly of truth; and philistinism, which is an enforced indifference to what is recondite and rare and beautiful and unexpected and strange or deep. These are all ways in which the public life can be kept simple, but impoverished of the resources of the time, not enriched by precisely those things which we most need; a new beauty, a new truth, the difficult, the recondite, that, as intellectuals and as liberals, we must seek to bring into our times and our spirit.

I am not sure to what extent there is a cure, to what extent one may be found. This may be second perhaps to the question of survival; but it is one of the great questions for the next half-century. I am not sure what part of our knowledge, of our cognitive and intellectual life, what part of our experience of new beauty, what part of this excellence, will truly be in the public domain, in the public sector and in common. I am sure of one thing: the extent to which this happens will depend on the dedication and the skill, in all his great variety, of the teacher, the teacher who loves to tell the truth and loves to speak of beauty, because he can no other, beauty past, beauty present, beauty just born.

For if there is to be excellence in public discourse, in public decision, in politics in its good sense, in the sense of Aristotle, there must be a far greater traffic between the realms of specialized excellence in which our times are so rich, and greater openness, and a far greater awareness on all our parts of our own limitation, of how little of the scene we see, and how modest it is, and how much and how well we could bear to learn more of it, and greater effort, and greater love for knowledge and for insight and for beauty.

I dare to say these somewhat melancholy things on this occasion, that is in some ways a day of parting, and in some ways a day of celebration; for those who speak to you tonight have all, in different ways, brought a real experience of excellence to our common life. It is to honor Dr. Taylor that we are here, who has dedicated himself to this. As Villon says for us,

"Et c'est la fin pourquoy sommes ensemble."

Murrow:

I feel rather like a conduit of ignorance between two fountains of learning. If I were to portray myself in the public picture of the profession in which I work, if indeed it be a profession, I would be disposed to ask which of these two men is the poet. And I would under no circumstances cast the deciding vote.

Murrow (continued):

Meyer Kupferman, of the Sarah Lawrence faculty, has composed a choral setting for Robert Frost's The Gift Outright in honor of Harold Taylor. Mr. Frost had wished to be present tonight but was detained in Washington and has sent the following telegram to Mr. Garrison:

> Will you take the following message to Harold Taylor on the night of the dinner to which I can't come. The great thing for me is that saying farewell to Harold Taylor as a college president is not saying farewell to him as a teacher, thinker and friend. It deepens the friendship that a poem of mine should be his choice for song and recitation tonight. I do so wish I could be with you all. Robert Frost.

Mr. Archibald MacLeish, who is reputed to have some knowledge of poetry, has agreed to read the poem. Mr. MacLeish.

MacLeish:

With considerable hesitation, for one doesn't read Robert Frost's verses lightly having heard him read them - one hears his voice in the ear. I make only one observation to begin with, that is that every word Robert Frost uses he means, and every implication that you think you hear he meant to put there. He knew this long before Empson discovered there were seven kinds of ambiguity. This is called The Gift Outright.

> The Gift Outright
>
> The land was ours before we were the land's.
> She was our land more than a hundred years
> Before we were her people. She was ours
> In Massachusetts, in Virginia,
> But we were England's, still colonials,
> Possessing what we still were unpossessed by,
> Possessed by what we now no more possessed.
> Something we were withholding made us weak
> Until we found out that it was ourselves
> We were withholding from our land of living,
> And forthwith found salvation in surrender.
> Such as we were we gave ourselves outright
> (The deed of gift was many deeds of war)
> To the land vaguely realizing westward,
> But still unstoried, artless, unenhanced,
> Such as she was, such as she would become.

THE SARAH LAWRENCE CHORUS

The Liberal Spirit in America
Dinner honoring Harold Taylor
Waldorf Astoria Hotel
May 21, 1959

Murrow:

The President of the Sarah Lawrence Student Council, Miss Shirley Bauer, will now read a statement.

Shirley Bauer:

Dr. Taylor, as a token of our respect and affection for you, the students of Sarah Lawrence College would like to give you these several volumes - the complete works of Hume and a first edition copy of Hobbes' Leviathan. We would also like, with your permission, to give to the College a portrait of you to be painted by Morris Davidson, whenever you have time to just sit.

Murrow:

Miss Bauer, I apologize for saying you would read the statement. I should have well known that anyone at Sarah Lawrence would stand up and look an audience in the eye and talk without reading. I apologize.

My self-imposed task of brevity becomes increasingly difficult. What can be said about Mrs. Roosevelt that has not been said before, except perhaps to say that in this room some of us rather proudly share some of your critics and enemies. I am entitled, I think, to tell you that a few weeks ago I encountered Mrs. Roosevelt in Paris and she came tripping and laughing - and I choose my words, Professor MacLeish, carefully - tripping and laughing down the stairs of the Crillon Hotel, and I saw her by accident and she said, "Come along for dinner, there will be only about a dozen people." I said, "I'm terribly sorry, I can't, I have a previous engagement." And she said, "Well then, come along to a certain place at Montmartre about midnight and we shall be there." And I said, "Mrs. Roosevelt, I'm terribly sorry but I am just in off an overnight flight from New York and I am exhausted." And she said, "How unfortunate. I am just in from Teheran and I feel fine." This is the price a reporter pays for the ravages of middle age, the lack of energy and drive which characterize Mrs. Roosevelt.

But it is a great privilege to be able to introduce - Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, The First Lady.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt:

. . . . President Taylor, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen. I think really there is very little left for me to say. You have had the liberal spirit far more lucidly defined that I could do it. You have heard the speech by Mr. Oppenheimer and you have heard a very beautiful group of young people sing, and you have heard the head of the student body present a gift to President Taylor.

What else is there left for me to say? This is the liberal spirit existing in this room. Here are the people who lead the liberal spirit, because President Taylor has come to mean for a great many of us the quality of character and mind that can only exist in someone who has the liberal spirit. You have to believe in freedom. You have to try to create an atmosphere in which freedom can exist and you have to fight and have the courage to fight against everything which threatens that atmosphere.

Mrs. Roosevelt (continued):

I think one learns about the liberal spirit probably far more through example than by all the words that we all speak. And it is those people who live in the liberal spirit and who gather together people who feel with them that really keep alive in our country the spirit that existed, perhaps, more evidently in the very early days and that sometimes when you find it somewhere else in greater evidence . . . . . is one place where I always feel that I am finding some of the spirit of our early forefathers. Then I have to think, "Ah, yes, but our forefathers were building a nation, and the people in this country, this little country of Israel where I always feel it strongly, after building a nation. The difficulty comes when you try to keep that spirit and have it just as vigorous and as big when the nation seems to be built. In some ways, it is perhaps. But the thing we must realize is that . . . . . toward a change, nothing's ever built, everything is always building and unless we go on and support those who are doing the building and have the courage to stand against those who are tearing down, then we will lose the strength that founded our nation and we will become old and not able to preserve the things that really made it a great nation.

So I think that the thing I want to say is simply in closing that we are grateful to Harold Taylor - grateful because he has already done something for education which needed to be done. He has shown you can have freedom and you can build free spirit in young people if you are a great teacher. Great teachers are very necessary in our country. I am very happy that while we may, perhaps for a short time, have to say goodbye to a college president, I am sure that he is just beginning to go on with the way in which he and Mrs. Taylor have . . . . together. I am quite sure that together they are going to have an even more useful career, an even more important role in preserving and building the liberal spirit in our country. We need the example which they have set. We need the color of persuasion, of teaching, of presentation, the character that he has had. I think everyone of us here tonight is saying thank you for something intangible that we would find hard to describe. But it has been done by the speakers before me better than I could do it, and all I can do now is to leave to you the thought that each of you . . . . of an example and an affection which you have are going to continue to build in this country with courage, with freedom and with the spirit which we are acknowledging and paying our deepest respect to tonight in you, President Taylor.

Harold Taylor:

Mrs. Roosevelt, Mr. Garrison, friends - I am very happy to be here and I appreciate the party. I appreciate the tribute which Mrs. Roosevelt has paid to the liberal spirit in America on the occasion of my being here at this dinner. I have never in my life seen so many people for whom I have so much respect and affection gathered in one place, and I think it is a miracle of Lloyd Garrison's friendship among so many people that he could have brought us all together and that he could have persuaded people of such substance, quality, wit and intelligence to be here as our speakers.

Taylor (continued):

These are persons of great size and quality, and I am happy that I could be here to listen to the speeches. I had some warning that at the end of the speeches something would be expected of me, and I have been worrying for about two weeks, in between tending to the duties of the college president (like wondering about the plumbing, or whether we are going to survive next year and pay salaries) what I might say. I must say I am sorry there is no discussion period here. There are many things which Archie said and which Dr. Oppenheimer said which I would like to throw open for discussion. Perhaps we could have written questions. I'd also like to hand in some of my own about the accuracy of the statements made as to the virtues of the guest of honor.

I discovered in the reading I have done over these past few years that Lincoln used to work with his door open. He was absolutely crazy. As President of the United States, he felt that he should interview anybody who came in. I understand this custom has passed.

One of Lincoln's neighbors from Springfield came in one day. He just wanted to ask Lincoln what it felt like to be President. Lincoln replied, and I refer now to the text, "You've heard about the man tarred and feathered and ridden out of town on a rail. A man in the crowd asked him how he liked it and his reply was that if it wasn't for the honor of the thing he would much rather walk."

In any case, it is due to Lloyd Garrison, who is a full-time chairman of the Board of Sarah Lawrence College, and a full-time lawyer, and a few full-time other things that we are all here. I must say that Lloyd Garrison is one of the most generous-hearted and kindly persons I have ever known, and I am proud to be his friend and to share in this occasion which he has arranged. I think he is a truly liberal spirit. He is a boon to all of us here this evening and to his country. I would like to thank him publicly on behalf of the College which I represent for everything that he has done.

As it happens, I have been thinking about the liberal spirit and I felt I should come prepared to say something about what it means. I find that most of the things, as I suspected would happen, have already been said. It occurs to me that, as Mrs. Roosevelt pointed out, the qualities of the liberal spirit are expressed in the minds and character of those who have been good enough to come to speak to us this evening. Those who have spoken to us possess a love for humanity, a concern for social justice, a passion for ideas, an insistence on their application in action.

What they share in common is shared by Emerson, by Whitman, by Thoreau, by Tom Paine, by William James, by William Lloyd Garrison, by John Dewey - a sense of the immediate, a sense of involvement in real issues which matter to the life of their own time. What they are saying is that the world is open before us, that it is a world that is "unstoried, artless and unenhanced" until we make it so. It is the spiritual triumph of J.B., not his defeat and disaster with which Archibald MacLeish is concerned; for Robert Oppenheimer it is a concern for the use of science to enrich the life of mankind, not its use to threaten and to destroy him; for Mrs. Roosevelt it has always been the politics of abundance and generosity, not of hate and exploitation; for Ed Murrow it has been the use of communication for the enlightenment and uplifting of mankind, not to manipulate and debase man's gifts and arts, his politics or his culture. In each there is an attitude of trust that man will do his best if he is given a chance to do it.

Taylor (continued):

These seem to me to be the gifts of the liberal spirit, and this is the meaning of liberalism in education.

I would like to say a word or two about liberalism in education and the liberal spirit. In doing so, I would like to talk only of students and teachers. They, students and teachers, are the content of education and everything else about education is abstract and unreal.

The student is not a unit of manpower, to be classified according to his skill and talent and put through subjects. Nor is he "youth," being prepared for life. As one student said recently, "They keep telling us that college is preparation for life. But we're alive now." A student is a person who is learning to fulfill his powers and to find ways of using them in the service of mankind. At his best he has a purity of motive which is the mark of his true function. The student wants to know the truth, to know what he can believe in and what he can care for, not merely for his own or for other people's gain, but to gain his maturity as a student. He is granted the priceless privilege of looking openly at the world to discover its secrets. For a little time, before he enters a life which will surround him with duties not as central to the concern with truth and speculation, he lives in a world of discovery and of alternatives, where nothing is yet completely settled, where everything, including the vision and achievement of greatness, is still actively possible.

The student must be given the chance to make the most of this time, for it may never come again. If his life as a student does not possess the excitement, the innocence and the hope of the true inquirer, he may never again experience a time for thoughtful and sensitive attention to the big issues of human life. If he does possess this quality in his life as a student, we can be sure that this quality will remain with him as a way of thinking and acting for the rest of his days.

The mission of the teacher, therefore, is to make this life possible for the student. For the teacher is not a man who gives grudgingly of what time he can spare from academic pursuits to the interests of the young. He is not an academic specialist paid to dispense what he knows in regulated intervals of time to those who come before him. The teacher is one whose mission is to infuse the life of the student with the spirit of the liberal arts and sciences, to convey in everything he does the sense of importance of the intellectual adventure.

"The function of a teacher," says Alexander Meiklejohn, "is to stand before his pupils and before the community at large as the intellectual leader of his time. If he is not able to take this leadership, he is not worthy of his calling. If the leadership is taken from him and given to others, then the very foundations of the scheme of instruction are shaken. . ."

Taylor (continued):

I would say that it is therefore in those qualities of the student and of the teacher at his best that we can find the qualities necessary for creating a democratic humane society.

Let us make no mistake about it. There is a real struggle going on just now about the character and aims of American education, with the future of liberal democracy at stake. At its deepest level, this struggle has to do with a moral philosophy and the character of American society. For the first time in its history, the United States now has the chance to lead the whole world in creative and democratic experiments in social planning. It is the first time that any democratic country has had the means, both in material wealth and in social structure to give to every child born an opportunity to rise to the height of his powers. It is the first time that it has been possible for the complete resources of Western and Eastern culture - in music, poetry, drama, literature, dance, the sciences - to be brought to an entire population through the schools and colleges, through television, radio, motion pictures, the mass magazines and paperback books.

Think only of the millions of Negro children who until now have been deprived of their American heritage and their chance to take their place in American society. Among them are hundreds and thousands of gifted children who have talents to give to all as soon as they are given a chance to show us what they can do.

But we could lose the possibilities of our future very easily by failing to recognize the content of our own tradition. This is a progressive tradition about which we have heard tonight, a liberal tradition, and we now must decide if we are to use our tremendous resources in America for the benefit of the individual human being, in America and throughout the world, or if we are to create a mass society in which the youth are to be trained to do what the society says it needs for its military security and its economic prosperity.

This is the central point on which all decisions about education turn. We have to decide the question of how we shall educate the individual student, not merely how we can cope with thousands more registrations, or how we can compete with the Russians in producing more engineers and technicians.

In fact, the progress of the Russians in education and in science is precisely due to their understanding that the driving force of a modern society is the energy and strength of its educational system. The lesson we have to learn from the Russians is simply that a national policy of support to education will strengthen immeasurably the growth of our culture as a whole. This is not a matter of uniform academic requirements for all American youth, but of sensitive, sympathetic and warm-hearted attention to the individual talents with which young Americans are endowed. Our schools and colleges must not be the instruments for the perpetuation of middle-class, material, American values, by which the student learns to judge his success by the number of prizes he wins or the amount of money he can earn. Our schools and colleges are agencies for the transformation and the re-creation of all human values.

Taylor (continued):

We cannot destroy the ideals of youth or of liberal democracy except by forcing their expression into insincerity by the demands we make for standard thinking, standard action, and uniformity in education. The experience of the liberal arts and sciences is a way of enriching the quality of all human experience. It is a particular kind of experience which requires for its fulfillment a discipline freely undertaken, a knowledge firmly grasped, a heightening of consciousness, and an intensity of interest in the creative and imaginativé aspects of human life. It is an experience through which the young are taken into new levels of awareness of themselves and of the world around them.

The moral value of education lies in this discovery of a world which lies beyond the material, social and political power by which the world is run and which can give guidance to the forces at work. The experience of the liberal arts leads us into questions of truth, since the response evoked in each of us by our teachers becomes part of our way of looking at the world. The ideals of the liberal spirit are carried, not in the manifestoes, catalogues, texts, or proclamations of the academies, but in the hearts and minds of the artists, the scientists, the scholars and the teachers.

"Do not go gentle into that good night," said Dylan Thomas

Do not go gentle into that good night,
Rage, rage against the dying of the light,

By the imaginative reconstruction of human experience, by thinking and acting in the service of "great, ideal enterprises," we can show to the young and to ourselves that human life is greater, more noble, more wide-ranging in its possibilities than the particular embodiment it may take in the politics and disorder of our present moment.

Thank you for the party.

Taylor

SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE
BRONXVILLE 8, NEW YORK

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

TELEPHONE
DEerfield 7-0700

June 10, 1959

Dear Ed:

Thank you for the check from the radio listener. It is encouraging that there is somebody out there. I will write to him.

As ever.

Harold

Harold Taylor

HT:hl

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Taylor, Prof Harold

June 8, 1959

Professor Harold Taylor
Sarah Lawrence College
Bronxville, N.Y.

Dear Harold:

There is at least one listener to radio. The enclosed check came to me from Kurt Oppenheimer, 33-73 163rd Street, Flushing 58, N.Y. Perhaps you would care to have someone write directly and thank him for this munificent contribution.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

Taylor

May 29, 1957

Dear Harold,

Many thanks for your nice letter. I will gladly let Jock Whitney have the Einstein speech. I am enclosing, herewith, two copies. One is for you and the other for Jock.

As ever yours,

Mr. Harold Taylor
Sarah Lawrence College
Office of the President
Bronxville, New York

mcc

SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE
BRONXVILLE 8, NEW YORK

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

TELEPHONE
DEerfield 7-0700

May 21, 1957

N.C. / Mgr

Dear Ed:

Do you have a copy of your speech from the Albert Einstein evening? I was writing to Jock Whitney about something else, and I told him that we all heard his recorded message, and that your speech was one of the best I had heard in a long time.

This morning Jock asks, "Could I have Ed Murrow's speech — or is it too local for me to crib from?"

I would like to have a copy for myself, and if you could spare me a carbon I could send it along to Jock, or if you would prefer and you agree to it, perhaps you would send it straight on to him.

It might give Jock some good ammunition, and he certainly should have a chance to hear what you said.

As ever.

Harold

Harold Taylor

HT:ra

Mr. Edward S. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

THE LIBERAL SPIRIT IN AMERICAN LIFE

a dinner honoring

HAROLD TAYLOR

retiring president

SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE

WALDORF-ASTORIA MAY 21, 1959
GRAND BALLROOM

"The ideals of the liberal spirit are carried, not in the manifestoes, catalogues, texts, or proclamations of the academies, but in the hearts and minds of the artists, the scientists,

the scholars and the teachers."

HAROLD TAYLOR

THE LIBERAL SPIRIT IN AMERICAN LIFE

SPEAKERS

Courtesy Macy Westchester Newspapers

Archibald MacLeish
Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt
Harold Taylor
Robert Oppenheimer
Lloyd K. Garrison

Harold Taylor
Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt
Robert Oppenheimer

GUESTS

Roy E. Wilkins
Agnes de Mille

Sarah Blanding
Alexander Meiklejohn

Martha Graham
Arthur Lall

Catherine Drinker Bowen
William H. Kilpatrick

OF HONOR

Lloyd K. Garrison,
Chairman

Edward R. Murrow,
Toastmaster

Mrs. Harold Taylor
Archibald MacLeish

introductory remarks — LLOYD K. GARRISON chairman, Board of Trustees
Sarah Lawrence College

toastmaster — EDWARD R. MURROW

speakers — ARCHIBALD MacLEISH

ROBERT OPPENHEIMER

The Gift Outright by ROBERT FROST sung by the Sarah Lawrence Chorus music composed for this occasion
by Meyer Kupferman

Citation read by SHIRLEY BAUER
president, Student Council

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

HAROLD TAYLOR

LLOYD K. GARRISON:

Except for Harold Taylor's immediate family, I have probably been associated with Harold Taylor over a longer period of time than anyone in this room. We met twenty years ago as colleagues at Wisconsin—he in philosophy, I in law. We became instant friends. Our philosophical outlooks, if I can credit myself with having one, were akin. So were our less serious tastes which we certainly possess, both of us. We went on family picnics together, sketched together, skiied, played tennis, and I even listened to him play the clarinet, which he did quite well. It was a golden time.

The "Wisconsin idea," pioneered by the elder LaFollette, was then still alive—the idea of a creative collaboration between the best brains in the University and the State government. Philosophers like Max Otto and Alexander Meiklejohn and their young colleague, Harold Taylor, economists like John R. Commons, Edwin Witte and Elizabeth Brandeis, lawyers like David Lilienthal, and many others, lent their talents to the State, to the solution of legislative and administrative problems; and the people responded with gratitude. In that atmosphere ideas took wings and turned into action, and there was joy in the thinking and the doing. This marriage of thinking and doing, and the joy that goes with it, has remained with Harold to this day.

He and I were separated briefly by the war. Then in 1945, he wrote me that he had been offered the presidency of Sarah Lawrence College, and he asked my advice. It was a remarkable letter, because it illustrated so well his sense of personal commitment to the values that he believes in. Senator McCarthy had by then defeated Bob LaFollette and was already sowing the seeds of his dark program. Harold was concerned about what might happen to Wisconsin, to the freedom of the University, to the cherished institutions of democracy which the State had pioneered. Tempted as he was by the Sarah Lawrence offer, he wondered if his proper course were not to stay at Wisconsin and take his part in the struggles he foresaw. I urged him to go to Sarah Lawrence because of the great contribution to education that he would make and because the defense of freedom, if it had to be made at Wisconsin, would have to be made everywhere.

In the upshot, of course, this is what happened, and the valiant stand which Sarah Lawrence took under his leadership is now a bright and permanent page in American history.

When he was inducted as president of Sarah Lawrence fourteen years ago, he asked me to give the inaugural talk. It was a proud moment for me, and I have yielded to the temptation to quote a few sentences from what I then said.

"His is a mind stocked deep with gifts, as you who are studying under him have no doubt already discovered to your great joy; and it is a mind which is constantly growing and sending out new shoots into the future, and new sparks into the dark places, and you will never be able to catch up with it. . . . The truth is in him and the courage to speak it."

Then I talked about the Wisconsin idea, of a community which he and I had shared, and about the one world which science was in the process of creating, and I closed with these words:

"Into this world community as a final and imperative goal, education must march with all its banners flying, in the age-old search for peace, justice, liberty and order, in the vanguard of a suffering and struggling humanity. Knowing Harold Taylor as I do, I can see the banners of Sarah Lawrence College already flying among the foremost in the great procession of minds and hearts that must and will rescue and carry forward to more spacious heights the enterprise of life on earth."

I like to think that those words were both true and prophetic. To them I now add only a short postscript.

Among many other characteristics, Harold Taylor is closer to his students than any college president I ever knew or heard of. He knows them all by name—400 of them! This comes quite naturally to him. He has a genuine kinship with them. In the midst of untold burdens, he has somehow kept the freshness and spontaneity of youth. "Youth is such a wonderful state," Bernard Shaw said, "it is a shame it has to be wasted on young people." With Harold Taylor it has not been wasted. In him the noonday sun is still rising.

When he leaves Sarah Lawrence, it will not be a true departure. He has poured his spirit into it so lavishly that it will always be part of that enchanting campus and part also of all those who dwelt there in his time.

Others will speak of him tonight and I must hurry on. I now present to you our toastmaster who is known throughout the world, not merely because he has made the truth exciting, but because he has had the courage to speak it to the ends of the earth with disciplined passion and unswerving aim in the cause of human decency. Ed Murrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Mr. Chairman, Mr. President, Mrs. Roosevelt, and members of the most attractive thing that a broadcaster can encounter—members of the captive audience.

When I was bid here tonight, I recognized my duty and I purposed to do it. It seems to me that long introductions are occasionally embarrassing, particularly when one addresses the next speaker as though he were a slightly ambulant corpse.

It seems to me that the British practice is rather more appropriate, for a man in a scarlet jacket merely stands up and says, "Milords, ladies and gentlemen, pray silence for the speaker."

That I shall purpose to do tonight. The only reason for my blonde attire is that I was unable to persuade a waiter to loan me his scarlet jacket, because he informed me the union would not permit him to work in such attire. I have done tonight very considerable research on all of your public figures who are to speak. I can tell you all their academic honors, the year in which they were born, and the contributions they have made to education and the arts.

But I believe brevity is good, both when you are and are not understood. I regard my duty tonight as being merely to maintain order, to try to end proceedings on time, and to see to it that everyone in the hall can hear. If you have any difficulty, please let me know. If you do, I shall not do what a toastmaster once did in England when a man in the far end of the hall rose and said, "Mr. Toastmaster, I cannot understand a single word the speaker is saying." The toastmaster rose and said, "I shall be delighted to change places with you."

I assure you that I am here for the duration, and I must inform you that your first speaker is in some danger of being had up on charges of monopoly proceedings by the trustees of the Pulitzer Prize, he having won three, being a scholar, a poet of some note, and, I inflate myself by saying, an old friend, and one who managed to write a play having to do with life which caused Life to cogitate in public. Very few authors can make that claim. Archibald MacLeish.

ARCHIBALD MacLEISH:

I received with my invitation to speak at this dinner a tactful suggestion which I'm sure Robert Oppenheimer also received—no one makes or needs to make suggestions to the great and beloved lady who follows us—that I should address myself not to Harold Taylor but to the Liberal Spirit. I suppose the purpose was to spare Harold's blushes, but it isn't going to work. Harold Taylor and the Liberal Spirit have gotten themselves so completely confused in the American consciousness that the second is pretty much the mirror of the first and you can blush into a mirror as easily, if you can blush at all, as into the public eye.

However, I shall obey my orders—provided I can permit myself at the outset one brief obeisance to the image in the glass. About a year ago I came upon a speech of Harold's—or perhaps I should say the speech came upon me as speeches of college presidents have a way of doing—in which a famous passage from Pericles' Funeral Oration was quoted in a translation I had never seen before. Wishing to borrow it for myself (which is, of course, why one reads the speeches of one's friends) I wrote asking for the scholarly reference without which no professor—no professor, at least, whose colleagues are members of the Harvard faculty—will quote anything. Harold replied promptly and affably that he would consult his files—and that was the last that I heard of it.

Now the passage as rendered in the standard translation of Thucydides by C. F. Smith reads as follows, "You must daily fix your gaze upon the power of Athens and become lovers of her." But the translation quoted in Mr. Taylor's speech went like this: "I would have you fix your eyes upon Athens day by day, contemplate her potentiality, not merely what she is but what she has the power to be, until you become her lovers."

The difference you will agree is noticeable from any point of view including the point of view of the man who chose the second rather than the first. But I do not call it to your attention to suggest that Harold Taylor is a bad classicist (which would not be true in general and certainly would not be true in this particular instance) nor to suggest that his files are in bad order (when I finally got him on the telephone the other day, he was able to trace his version to Middleton Murry) but to make a point about this same Liberal Spirit which we have been directed to discuss. What the Liberal Spirit stands most in need of in the United States at this moment is definition—particularly definition by its friends. It is my contention, which I should like very briefly to expose to you, that the difference between these two translations, and the choice of the second in place of the first by one of the most notorious liberals in American education, helps considerably in that labor.

Consider what one of those sectarian publications devoted to the solemn task of eradicating liberalism from American life would make of this incident. "Here," its editors would say, "here we have a perfect example of the kind of thing we have been warning the country against for generations, or anyway since we started publication a year or two ago.

"Here, in this second translation, is what? Novelty—novelty for the sake of novelty, innovation for innovation's ends. The fine old classic translation, faithful to the fine old classic text (which we looked up in the Loeb Classical Library) has been replaced by a loose and impressionistic translation chosen by a loose and impressionistic mind, thoroughly characteristic of the liberal mind in general, and for no reason whatever but to destroy the old, glorify the new, and no doubt, though we have yet to decide just how, to undermine religion.

"The pattern, dear readers, is obvious. Liberalism, as we have told you more than once, is nothing more, for all its fine talk, than the practice of taking liberties: taking liberties with accepted opinions, taking liberties with Eternal Truth, taking liberties with established texts. Here in the words of this self-confessed, college-president-liberal, borrowed no doubt from some equally undisciplined and incompetent classical-translator-liberal, you have a demonstration of the whole corrupting process. We urge you again (they are always urging you again) to confine your reading to sound, conservative publications like ours where good old translations, good old doctrines and good old thoughts are kept in eternal sanctity at a minimal cost per copy and where you need never fear to find a syllable in an unexpected posture."

I don't wish to ridicule the position. It is earnest enough and no doubt honest. I wish merely to point out that it rests on an assumption about itself and about liberalism which involves a definition of liberalism. It assumes that its passionate opposition to liberalism makes it "conservative"—that liberalism and conservatism are the primal opposites and that liberalism is defined by that fact.

Now there are only two things wrong with this assumption. One is that it is not true, either in etymology or in fact. The other is that we liberals talk as though it were.

The word "liberal" though it has a direct Latin ancestor and a legitimate root in Sanskrit, came into modern political use through a Spanish word which Goya etched upon the conscience of Europe and then upon the conscience of mankind—the word "liberal." And the opposite of the word "liberal" in Goya's Spain was not "conservative." The opposite of the word "liberal" was "servil" which means exactly what it says. A man, that is to say, is a "liberal" when his dedication is to those things denoted by the Latin word "liberalis" from which "liberal" derives—those things which "befit a freeman"—those things in which freedom inheres. And a man is the opposite of a "liberal" when his commitment is to servility, whether the servility of Goya's time, our own or any other.

The word "servility" is not a word we use as frequently as perhaps we should but it is a word we all understand, and the element it contributes to the definition of the liberal spirit is an element which no one should mistake. When "liberal" and "conservative" are accepted as the defining poles, "liberalism" becomes nothing more than a synonym for progressivism, and progressivism is pretty vulnerable at a time in which the idea of progress is in bad repute. But when "liberalism" and "servility" are set in opposition to each other, the conception changes. For then the enemy of liberalism becomes what he really is—not the noble conservator of the richness of the human past which all men, whatever they call themselves, have common purpose to preserve, but the timid capitulator to those bony carapaces left behind it by the chronological past which men call established institutions.

And once the true role of the anti-liberal has been recognized, the liberal can more adequately recognize himself. He is a man committed, not to the cause of institutions, but to the cause of man: which is to say, the cause of the liberation of the individual human being which makes us men, makes men of us. Where his opposite is a servant of institutions—of institutions in general, or far more frequently, of some particular institution which he sets above the cause of man and reveres as fixed and final—the liberal sees institutions as existing for men and good only so long as they serve the human end of the fulfillment of men's lives—to be changed or destroyed when they no longer serve that purpose—when they obstruct the road to life. The anti-liberal, then, is servile in the precise and literal meaning of the word servile. He has submitted himself to a human master other than his human soul. The liberal is liberal because his soul is free.

So defined, the word, liberal, becomes the proudest title any man can claim because it becomes a title which gives honor to the others. The patriotism of a liberal, the religious faith of a liberal, is a patriotism, a faith, he chooses for himself—not by submission but by human choice, in human dignity and chosen as a man. It is for this reason I suppose that Middleton Murray's translation of Thucydides with its inward searching of the forward meaning of the Greek, moved Harold Taylor. For to Harold Taylor as, I think, to the rest of us here, liberalism is not something which takes liberties but something rather which gives them—which liberates—which sets free—which sets the human spirit free to work its wonders—to make its Athens what she has it in her to become and so, and only so, to be her lovers.

MR. MURROW:

Liberal, conservative and servile must now share my dilemma, which is, how within my own terms of reference am I to introduce to you J. Robert Oppenheimer? I must do it with brevity and, I hope, with accuracy. Once I had the privilege of doing with him what I hope was a consequential television interview. Subsequently there was criticism, and an institutional critic came into my office and said, "Why did you interview this man Oppenheimer?" And I said, "Well, it seemed like a good idea at the time." And he said, "Yes, but why did you make him out to be so intelligent, so sensitive, so perceptive, so persuasive, and so likeable?" And I said, "Sir, I admit that in the field of visual communication I am a genius, but I can present only what the camera sees, and I must therefore refer you and your complaint to Mr. Oppenheimer." So now, ladies and gentlemen, I refer you to—J. Robert Oppenheimer.

ROBERT OPPENHEIMER:

One of my colleagues on the Berkeley campus was a New Englander, an eminent Sanskritist, who taught me a little Sanskrit. He was much pleased with his definition of a liberal: "A liberal is a man who sees no difference in principle between right and wrong." I do not often tell that story. For the liberal spirit has many enemies; it is not without enemies today. Yet in this good company, and on this platform, I am prepared to tell it, for the little of truth that is in it. For here we are among men and women, who, by the testimony of their lives, have given expression to the liberal hope, confidence, and above all love, of man's growth, of the human adventure, and of man.

If we are liberals, we know that questions of right and wrong are for the most part such that they must be relived and relearned in every time, in every age, in every generation. We know it very well today after centuries of great change, very well in this twentieth century of unparalleled and unprecedented growth; for many of the questions come to us as quite new questions, the answers to which we cannot look up in a book; even the old questions have a new meaning. But there is a still deeper reason: that only what one has refreshed and strengthened in one's own time, and by one's own action and one's own thought, is a living part of the tradition.

One of the sources of the liberal spirit lies in a hope. It is to be found, certainly in Athens, in the Athens of Socrates, in Hellenistic times, even in one of the Hindu philosophies, the Sankhya; but foı us the relevant time is the eighteenth century, which made our institutions and our style. This is the confidence that the growth of knowledge would lead to deeper understanding, would do away with superstition, would enlarge, enlighten and free men, and would thus provide both a wider range for men's choices and more awareness, and a deeper insight in their making.

I find in myself some concern, some trouble for this source of the liberal spirit; and I find grounds for it very clearly in this country, more sharply than in the Europe from which we grew, in part because our institutions are so much more open, and our idea of humanity so much more inclusive. But these troubles will come to Europe. It is sharper here than it is in Russia, in communist societies. These two great offshoots from the European tradition took, in a sense, antithetical and divergent paths. They are, from the point of view of the thirteenth century, complementary heresies, in which in Russian society—in its ideal, if not in its practice—what is common is valued as central and all-important; whereas with us, what is our own and individual and unique is valued above all else. We are not, for the most part, in this country, lonely people, though there are artists, and other men, who are. We live in multiple, intense, changing, overlapping communities, very close to one another. We hope that something like this fraternal, plural, unhierarchical society may be a useful model, and thus some help, to the many societies which are now beginning to find their new way in a new world.

There has been for us, if we think back a hundred years, or to the days when our country was founded, a large and ominous change. This is the change in the robustness, the vigor and the inclusiveness of what I may call the public sector of our lives, of what we all have in common, what we can talk to each other about, not with any certitude of agreement, but with assurance of a measure of common understanding. I am not wise enough to know all that has contributed to this change; in part it is the vastness of our country and our people; in part it is the unprecedented rate at which our situation has changed; in part the growth in all directions, in all ways, intellectual, physical and technical, of the circumstances and situations in which we find ourselves; and in part it is the great fact that our inherited institutions do not fit the present very well. Certainly they do not fit it very well with regard to the issues of war and peace, or the making of war.

Yet a part, and because of the limitations of my life I believe this to be a very large part, lies in the way in which our knowledge has grown: our knowledge of the world of nature, our knowledge of ourselves as a part of that world, even our incipient insight into the marvels and order of perception and thought and memory. It is partly because this knowledge has deep roots in specialized and sometimes quite old traditions. Mathematics, physics, astronomy, are old branches of learning by now. They have been built and transmuted by generation after generation; what they deal with today is in every sense very remote from the matrix of all our learning, from common sense, common experience, from the common trunk of the great tree of knowledge. There is an extreme specialization of the techniques by which we ask questions of nature, varying from one branch to another. There is for us, as perhaps for everyone who listens soberly, a deep, fresh awareness of the inherently partial and incomplete character of all knowledge, of the universal trait of all knowledge that it is complementary to other knowledge, that one can only know at the cost of ignorance, of the loss of other knowledge.

Often, when I talk in these terms, it is said that I am complaining only that communication is not adequate. That is indeed true; but communication, in this sense of having a common base for talking about things, this is not a luxury; this is the very basis of our being men; this is what makes us men. For public life, if it is to have a trace of nobility, must find from time to time a happy union of simplicity with truth.

There are, of course, innumerable bad cures for this trouble. In the past—we hope not forever—the system and the style of the communists has been such a cure; and so, more generally, are dogmatism, which is claimed monopoly of wisdom; and so is the control of information, the keeping of things secret, which is a forcible monopoly of truth; and philistinism, which is an enforced indifference to what is recondite and rare and beautiful and unexpected and strange or deep. These are all ways in which the public life can be kept simple, but impoverished of the resources of the time, not enriched by precisely those things which we most need; a new beauty, a new truth, the difficult, the recondite, that, as intellectuals and as liberals, we must seek to bring into our times and our spirit.

I am not sure to what extent there is a cure, to what extent one may be found. This may be second perhaps to the question of survival; but it is one of the great questions for the next half-century. I am not sure what part of our knowledge, of our cognitive and intellectual life, what part of our experience of new beauty, what part of this excellence, will truly be in the public domain, in the public sector and in common. I am sure of one thing: the extent to which this happens will depend on the dedication and the skill, in all his great variety, of the teacher, the teacher who loves to tell the truth and loves to speak of beauty, because he can no other, beauty past, beauty present, beauty just born.

For if there is to be excellence in public discourse, in public decision, in politics in its good sense, in the sense of Aristotle, there must be a far greater traffic between the realms of specialized excellence in which our times are so rich, and greater openness, and a far greater awareness on all our parts of our own limitation, of how little of the scene we see, and how modest it is, and how much and how well we could bear to learn more of it, and greater effort, and greater love for knowledge and for insight and for beauty.

I dare to say these somewhat melancholy things on this occasion, that is in some ways a day of parting, and in some ways a day of celebration; for those who speak to you tonight have all, in different ways, brought a real experience of excellence to our common life. It is to honor Dr. Taylor that we are here, who has dedicated himself to this. As Villon says for us,

"Et c'est la fin pourquoy sommes ensemble."

MR. MURROW:

I feel rather like a conduit of ignorance between two fountains of learning. If I were to portray myself in the public picture of the profession in which I work, if indeed it be a profession, I would be disposed to ask which of these two men is the poet. And I would under no circumstances cast the deciding vote. Meyer Kupferman, of the Sarah Lawrence faculty, has composed a choral setting for Robert Frost's The Gift Outright in honor of Harold Taylor. Mr. Frost had hoped to be present tonight but was detained in Washington and has sent the following telegram to Mr. Garrison:

> Will you take the following message to Harold Taylor on the night of the dinner to which I can't come. The great thing for me is that saying farewell to Harold Taylor as a college president is not saying farewell to him as a teacher, thinker and friend. It deepens the friendship that a poem of mine should be his choice for song and recitation tonight. I do so wish I could be with you all.
>
> ROBERT FROST

Mr. Archibald MacLeish, who is reputed to have some knowledge of poetry, has agreed to read the poem. Mr. MacLeish.

MR. MacLEISH:

I take up my assignment with some hesitation, because one doesn't read Robert Frost's verses lightly having heard him read them—one hears his voice in the ear. I would make only one observation, that is that every word Robert Frost uses he means, and every implication that you think you hear he meant to put there. He knew this long before Empson discovered there were seven kinds of ambiguity. This is called The Gift Outright.

THE GIFT OUTRIGHT

The land was ours before we were the land's.
She was our land more than a hundred years
Before we were her people. She was ours
In Massachusetts, in Virginia,
But we were England's, still colonials,
Possessing what we still were unpossessed by,
Possessed by what we now no more possessed.
Something we were withholding made us weak
Until we found out that it was ourselves
We were withholding from our land of living,
And forthwith found salvation in surrender.
Such as we were we gave ourselves outright
(The deed of gift was many deeds of war)
To the land vaguely realizing westward,
But still unstoried, artless, unenhanced,
Such as she was, such as she would become.

THE SARAH LAWRENCE CHORUS·

MR. MURROW:

The President of the Sarah Lawrence Student Council, Miss Shirley Bauer, will now read a statement.

SHIRLEY BAUER:

Dr. Taylor, as a token of our affection and respect, the students of Sarah Lawrence College would like to give you these several volumes—the complete works of Hume, and a first edition copy of Hobbe's Leviathan. Just as we would like you to have these books to take with you, we would like, with your permission, to give to the College a portrait of you to be painted by Morris Davidson whenever, in your busy and exciting schedule, you have time to just sit.

MR. MURROW:

Miss Bauer, I apologize for saying you would read the statement. I should have well known that anyone at Sarah Lawrence would stand up and look an audience in the eye and talk without reading. I apologize.

My self-imposed task of brevity becomes increasingly difficult. What can be said about Mrs. Roosevelt that has not been said before, except perhaps to say that in this room some of us rather proudly share some of your critics and enemies. I am entitled, I think, to tell you that a few weeks ago I encountered Mrs. Roosevelt in Paris and she came tripping and laughing—and I choose my words, Professor MacLeish, carefully—tripping and laughing down the stairs of the Crillon Hotel, and I saw her by accident and she said, "Come along to dinner, there will be only about a dozen people." I said, "I'm terribly sorry, I can't, I have a previous engagement." And she said, "Well then, come along to a certain place at Montmartre about midnight and we shall be there." And I said, "Mrs. Roosevelt, I'm terribly sorry but I am just in off an overnight flight from New York and I am exhausted." And she said, "How unfortunate. I am just in from Teheran and I feel fine." This is the price a reporter pays for the ravages of middle age, the lack of energy and drive which characterize Mrs. Roosevelt.

But it is a great privilege to be able to introduce—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, The First Lady.

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT:

Mr. Murrow, Mr. Garrison, President Taylor, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen: I think really there is very little left for me to say. You have had the liberal spirit far more beautifully defined than I could do it. You have heard the speech by Mr. Oppenheimer and you have heard a very beautiful group of young people sing, and you have heard the head of the student body present a gift to President Taylor.

What else is there left for me to say? This is the liberal spirit existing in this room. Here are the people who mean the liberal spirit, because President Taylor has come to mean for a great many of us the qualities of character and mind that can only exist in someone who has the liberal spirit. You have to believe in freedom. You have to try to create an atmosphere in which freedom can exist and you have to fight, and have the courage to fight, against everything which threatens that atmosphere.

I think that one learns about the liberal spirit probably far more through example than by all the words that we all speak. And it is those people who live in the liberal spirit and who gather together people who feel with them that really keep alive in our country the spirit that existed, perhaps more evidently, in the very early days, and that sometimes, when we find it somewhere else in greater evidence, makes us envious. There is one place where I always feel that I am finding some of the spirit of our early forefathers and then I have to think, "Ah, yes, but our forefathers were building a nation and the people in this country, this little country of Israel, where I always feel it strongly, are also building a nation."

The difficulty comes when you try to keep that spirit and have it just as vivid and as fervent when the nation seems to be built. In some ways it is perhaps, but the thing we must realize is that in this world of change nothing is ever built, everything is always building, and unless we go on and support those who are doing the building and have the courage to stand against those who are tearing down, then we will lose the spirit that founded our nation and we will become old and not able to preserve the things that really made us a great nation.

What I want to say in closing is simply that we are grateful to Harold Taylor—grateful because he has already done something for education which needed to be done. He has shown you can have freedom and you can build free spirit in the young people if you are a great teacher. Great teachers are very necessary in our country. And I am very happy, that while we may perhaps for a short time be saying goodbye to a college president, I am sure that he is just beginning to go on with the work which he and Mrs. Taylor have done together, and I am quite sure that together they are going to have an even more useful career and an even more important role in preserving and building the liberal spirit in our country. We need the example which they have set. We need the power of persuasion, of teaching, of presentation, which Harold Taylor has had and I think everyone of us here tonight is saying thank you for something intangible we would find hard to describe. But it has been done by the speakers before me better than I could do it, and all I can do now is to leave with you the thought that each of you, because of an example and an affection which you have, are going to continue to build in this country, with courage, the freedom and the spirit which we are acknowledging and paying our deepest respect to tonight in you, President Taylor.

HAROLD TAYLOR:

Mrs. Roosevelt, Mr. Garrison, friends—I am very happy to be here and I appreciate the party. I appreciate the tribute which Mrs. Roosevelt has paid to the liberal spirit in America on the occasion of my being here at this dinner. I have never in my life seen so many people for whom I have so much respect and affection gathered in one place, and I think it is a miracle of Lloyd Garrison's friendship among so many people that he could have brought us all together and that he could have persuaded people of such substance, quality, wit and intelligence to be here as our speakers.

These are persons of great size, and I am happy that I could be here to listen to the speeches. I had some warning that at the end of the speeches something would be expected of me, and I have been worrying for about two weeks, in between tending to the duties of the college president (like wondering about the plumbing, or whether we are going to survive next year and pay salaries) what I might say. I must say I am sorry there is no discussion period here. There are many things which Archie said and which Dr. Oppenheimer said which I would like to throw open for discussion. Perhaps we could have written questions. I'd also like to hand in some of my own about the accuracy of the statements made as to the virtues of the guest of honor.

I discovered in the reading I have done over these past few years that Lincoln used to work with his door open. As President of the United States, he felt that he should interview anybody who came in. I understand this custom has passed.

One of Lincoln's neighbors from Springfield came in one day. He just wanted to ask Lincoln what it felt like to be President. Lincoln replied, and I refer now to the text, "You've heard about the man tarred and feathered and ridden out of town on a rail. A man in the crowd asked him how he liked it and his reply was that if it wasn't for the honor of the thing he would much rather walk."

In any case, it is due to Lloyd Garrison, who is a full-time chairman of the Board of Sarah Lawrence College, and a full-time lawyer, and a few full-time other things that we are all here. I must say that Lloyd Garrison is one of the most generous-hearted and kindly persons I have ever known, and I am proud to be his friend and to share in this occasion which he has arranged. I think he is a truly liberal spirit. He is a boon to all of us here this evening and to his country. I would like to thank him publicly on behalf of the College which I represent for everything that he has done.

As it happens, I have been thinking about the liberal spirit and I felt I should come prepared to say something about what it means. I find that most of the things, as I suspected would happen, have already been said. It occurs to me that, as Mrs. Roosevelt pointed out, the qualities of the liberal spirit are expressed in the minds and character of those who have been good enough to come to speak to us this evening. Those who have spoken to us possess a love for humanity, a concern for social justice, a passion for ideas, an insistence on their application in action.

What they share in common is shared by Emerson, by Whitman, by Thoreau, by Tom Paine, by William James, by William Lloyd Garrison, by John Dewey—a sense of the immediate, a sense of involvement in real issues which matter to the life of their own time. What they are saying is that the world is open before us, that it is a world that is "unstoried, artless and unenhanced" until we make it so. It is the spiritual triumph of J. B., not his defeat and disaster with which Archibald MacLeish is concerned; for Robert Oppenheimer it is a concern for the use of science to enrich the life of mankind, not its use to threaten and to destroy him; for Mrs. Roosevelt it has always been the politics of abundance and generosity, not of hate and exploitation; for Ed Murrow it has been the use of communication for the enlightenment and uplifting of mankind, not to manipulate and debase man's gifts and arts, his politics or his culture. In each there is an attitude of trust that man will do his best if he is given a chance to do it.

These seem to me to be the gifts of the liberal spirit, and this is the meaning of liberalism in education.

I would like to say a word or two about liberalism in education and the liberal spirit. In doing so, I would like to talk only of students and teachers. They, students and teachers, are the content of education and everything else about education is abstract and unreal.

The student is not a unit of manpower, to be classified according to his skill and talent and put through subjects. Nor is he "youth," being prepared for life. As one student said recently, "They keep telling us that college is preparation for life. But we're alive now." A student is a person who is learning to fulfill his powers and to find ways of using them in the service of mankind. At his best he has a purity of motive which is the mark of his true function. The student wants to know the truth, to know what he can believe in and what he can care for, not merely for his own or for other people's gain, but to gain his maturity as a student. He is granted the priceless privilege of looking openly at the world to discover its secrets. For a little time, before he enters a life which will surround him with duties not as central to the concern with truth and speculation, he lives in a world of discovery and of alternatives, where nothing is yet completely settled, where everything, including the vision and achievement of greatness, is still actively possible.

The student must be given the chance to make the most of this time, for it may never come again. If his life as a student does not possess the excitement, the innocence and the hope of the true inquirer, he may never again experience a time for thoughtful and sensitive attention to the big issues of human life. If he does possess this quality in his life as a student, we can be sure that this quality will remain with him as a way of thinking and acting for the rest of his days.

The mission of the teacher, therefore, is to make this life possible for the student. For the teacher is not a man who gives grudgingly of what time he can spare from academic pursuits to the interests of the young. He is not an academic specialist paid to dispense what he knows in regulated intervals of time to those who come before him. The teacher is one whose mission is to infuse the life of the student with the spirit of the liberal arts and sciences, to convey in everything he does the sense of importance of the intellectual adventure.

"The function of a teacher," says Alexander Meiklejohn, "is to stand before his pupils and before the community at large as the intellectual leader of his time. If he is not able to take this leadership, he is not worthy of his calling. If the leadership is taken from him and given to others, then the very foundations of the scheme of instruction are shaken. . . ."

I would say that it is therefore in those qualities of the student and of the teacher at his best that we can find the qualities necessary for creating a democratic humane society.

Let us make no mistake about it. There is a real struggle going on just now about the character and aims of American education, with the future of liberal democracy at stake. At its deepest level, this struggle has to do with a moral philosophy and the character of American society. For the first time in its history, the United States now has the chance to lead the whole world in creative and democratic experiments in social planning. It is the first time that any democratic country has had the means, both in material wealth and in social structure to give to every child born an opportunity to rise to the height of his powers. It is the first time that it has been possible for the complete resources of Western and Eastern culture—in music, poetry, drama, literature, dance, the sciences—to be brought to an entire population through the schools and colleges, through television, radio, motion pictures, the mass magazines and paperback books.

Think only of the millions of Negro children who until now have been deprived of their American heritage and their chance to take their place in American society. Among them are hundreds and thousands of gifted children who have talents to give to all as soon as they are given a chance to show us what they can do.

But we could lose the possibilities of our future very easily by failing to recognize the content of our own tradition. This is a progressive tradition about which we have heard tonight, a liberal tradition, and we now must decide if we are to use our tremendous resources in America for the benefit of the individual human being, in America and throughout the world, or if we are to create a mass society in which the youth are to be trained to do what the society says it needs for its military security and its economic prosperity.

This is the central point on which all decisions about education turn. We have to decide the question of how we shall educate the individual student, not merely how we can cope with thousands more registrations, or how we can compete with the Russians in producing more engineers and technicians.

In fact, the progress of the Russians in education and in science is precisely due to their understanding that the driving force of a modern society is the energy and strength of its educational system. The lesson we have to learn from the Russians is simply that a national policy of support to education will strengthen immeasurably the growth of our culture as a whole. This is not a matter of uniform academic requirements for all American youth, but of sensitive, sympathetic and warm-hearted attention to the individual talents with which young Americans are endowed. Our schools and colleges must not be instruments for the perpetuation of middle-class, material, American values, by which the student learns to judge his success by the number of prizes he wins or the amount of money he can earn. Our schools and colleges are agencies for the transformation and the re-creation of all human values.

We cannot destroy the ideals of youth or of liberal democracy except by forcing their expression into insincerity by the demands we make for standard thinking, standard action, and uniformity in education. The experience of the liberal arts and sciences is a way of enriching the quality of all human experience. It is a particular kind of experience which requires for its fulfillment a discipline freely undertaken, a knowledge firmly grasped, a heightening of consciousness, and an intensity of interest in the creative and imaginative aspects of human life. It is an experience through which the young are taken into new levels of awareness of themselves and of the world around them.

The moral value of education lies in this discovery of a world which lies beyond the material, social and political power by which the world is run and which can give guidance to the forces at work. The experience of the liberal arts leads us into questions of truth, since the response evoked in each of us by our teachers becomes part of our way of looking at the world. The ideals of the liberal spirit are carried, not in the manifestoes, catalogues, texts, or proclamations of the academies, but in the hearts and minds of the artists, the scientists, the scholars and the teachers.

"Do not go gentle into that good night," said Dylan Thomas

Do not go gentle into that good night,
Rage, rage against the dying of the light,

By the imaginative reconstruction of human experience, by thinking and acting in the service of "great, ideal enterprises," we can show to the young and to ourselves that human life is greater, more noble, more wide-ranging in its possibilities than the particular embodiment it may take in the politics and disorder of our present moment.

Thank you for the party.

MR. MURROW:

It is customary at this point for one in my position to utter some thunderous and well rehearsed improvisations and to thank you for your attention to the speakers. I would not so offend your senses, your sensibility or your appreciation. I think we are all exceedingly fortunate to have been here. So rather than uttering the usual platitudes I would like to tell you that a group of Harold Taylor's friends, members of the Board of Trustees, parents, alumnae and others, have created a fund in his honor to be used to carry out the expansion of the College and to carry forward the ideals of education for which he stands. In other words, a lot of friends of Harold's have raised some dough or put up some scratch and part of the new campus will bear Harold Taylor's name. The total in the fund to date is $219,000, and the lists are not closed.

It remains now only to end as I began—by saying, milords, my lady, ladies and gentlemen, thank you very much, good night.

Photographs by Gary Gladstone

Taylor, Harold

May 28, 1959

Dear Harold:

'Twas a most pleasant evening and I felt privileged to be there. Thanks for your gracious note.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

President Harold Taylor
Sarah Lawrence College
Bronxville 8, N.Y.

SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE
BRONXVILLE 8, NEW YORK

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

TELEPHONE
DEERFIELD 7-0700

May 25, 1959

Dear Ed:

You were absolutely perfect in your role as chairman of last Thursday's dinner and without you the evening could not have been the occasion it was. Everyone to whom I have talked about the evening has commented on the wit and grace with which you moved things along. The occasion was transformed from one of those Waldorf dinners into a happy family party, and we have you to thank for setting a happy tone and giving it the momentum which broke through all limits of formality.

I appreciate too the honor you paid to me and to Sarah Lawrence College by agreeing to be chairman and to associate yourself with our crowd.

Thank you from the bottom of my heart.

As ever.

Harold

Harold Taylor

HT:hl

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Harold Taylor
Dinner

SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE
BRONXVILLE, NEW YORK

TELEPHONE
DEERFIELD 7-0700

May 8, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Mr. Lloyd Garrison may have already written to you giving you details on the May 21st dinner in honor of Harold Taylor.

However, I thought it would be helpful to send you the enclosed schedule giving the program and indicating the order in which you will introduce the speakers. I also thought it might be useful to you to have the enclosed background material on Mr. Taylor.

We are all looking forward to what promises to be a distinguished and happy evening.

Sincerely,

Doris Riker

Doris Riker
Director of Public Relations

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

DR/dd
enc.

Taylor, Harold

DINNER IN TRIBUTE TO HAROLD TAYLOR - May 21

ARCHIBALD MacLEISH

J. ROBERT OPPENHEIMER

MEYER KUPFERMAN, of the Sarah Lawrence faculty, has composed a choral setting for Robert Frost's "The Gift Outright" in honour of Harold Taylor. Mr. Frost had hoped to be present, but was detained in Washington and has sent the following telegram:

"DEAR MR. GARRISON, WILL YOU TAKE THE FOLLOWING MESSAGE TO HAROLD TAYLOR ON THE NIGHT OF THE DINNER TO WHICH I CAN'T COME: 'THE GREAT THING FOR ME IS THAT SAYING FAREWELL TO HAROLD TAYLOR AS A COLLEGE PRESIDENT IS NOT SAYING FAREWELL TO HIM AS A TEACHER, THINKER, AND FRIEND. IT DEEPENS THE FRIENDSHIP THAT A POEM OF MINE SHOULD BE HIS CHOICE FOR SONG AND RECITATION TONIGHT. I DO SO WISH I COULD BE WITH YOU ALL.

ROBERT FROST "

ARCHIBALD MacLEISH has agreed to read the poem (pause for members of the chorus to assemble).

A group of Harold Taylor's friends - members of the Board of Trustees, parents, alumnae, and others, have created a fund in his honour, to be used to carry out the expansion of the college and to carry forward the ideals of education for which he stands. Part of the new campus will bear Harold Taylor's name. The total in the fund to date is $.....

The Presi dent of the Sarah Lawrence Student Council, Miss SHIRLEY BAUER, will now read a statement.

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

1201

SYMBOLS

DL = Day Letter

NL = Night Letter

LT = International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

[01]

NA115 DL PD=TBH WASHINGTON DC 18 1155AME=

LLOYD GARRISON=

575 MADISON AVE=

DEAR MR GARRISON, WILL YOU TAKE THE FOLLOWING MESSAGE TO HAROLD TAYLOR ON THE NIGHT OF THE DINNER TO WHICH I CANT COME: "THE GREAT THING FOR ME IS THAT SAYING FAREWELL TO HAROLD TAYLOR AS A COLLEGE PRESIDENT IS NOT SAYING FAREWELL TO HIM AS A TEACHER, THINKER, AND FRIEND. IT DEEPENS THE FRIENDSHIP THAT A POEM OF MINE SHOULD BE HIS CHOICE FOR SONG AND RECITATION TONIGHT. I DO SO WISH I COULD BE WITH YOU ALL=

ROBERT FROST=

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

PAUL, WEISS, RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON
575 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

MURRAY HILL 8-5600
CABLE: LONGSIGHT, N.Y.

ADLAI E. STEVENSON*
SIMON H. RIFKIND
ROBERT E. SAMUELS
JOHN F. WHARTON
LLOYD K. GARRISON
MYER D. MERMIN
HOWARD A. SEITZ
H. RUSSELL WINOKUR
SAMUEL J. SILVERMAN
ALEXANDER HEHMEYER
ADRIAN W. DEWIND
W. WILLARD WIRTZ*
CAROLYN E. AGGER
LOUIS EISENSTEIN
MORDECAI ROCHLIN
PAUL J. NEWLON
JOSEPH S. ISEMAN
JAMES B. LEWIS
SIDNEY R. NUSSENFELD
MARTIN KLEINBARD
RICHARD H. PAUL
WILLIAM McC. BLAIR, JR.*
NEWTON N. MINOW*
NORMAN ZELENKO
JOHN E. MASSENGALE

*MEMBER ILL. BAR ONLY
MEMBER D.C. BAR ONLY

IN CHICAGO
STEVENSON, RIFKIND & WIRTZ
135 SOUTH LA SALLE STREET

IN WASHINGTON, D.C.
STEVENSON, PAUL, RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON
1614 EYE STREET, N.W.

ARTHUR J. COHEN
COUNSEL

RANDOLPH E. PAUL (1946-1956)
LOUIS S. WEISS (1927-1950)

OK EV

May 11, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Ed:

We are now quite far along in our plans for the May 21 Dinner in honor of Harold Taylor. A copy of the invitation is attached. We hope that Janet will come with you. We will make sure that she sits at an interesting table.

As you will see from the timetable attached, I will open things up by making a few remarks on the significance of the occasion, etc., then I will introduce you.

The three speakers are scheduled for 10-15 minutes, with each speaker tackling the topic of the evening in terms of his own experience and interest - the arts, for example, in the case of Archie MacLeish, politics and the young by Mrs. Roosevelt, and I believe Robert Oppenheimer expects to talk about some of the challenges facing this country.

A member of the Sarah Lawrence faculty, Meyer Kupferman, has set Robert Frost's The Gift Outright for the Sarah Lawrence Chorus and the Chorus is to sing following Robert Oppenheimer's talk. You will introduce the Chorus and its conductor, Harold Aks, and announce the fact that Meyer Kupferman wrote the work for the occasion. There is some chance that Robert Frost will be present to recite the poem before it is sung. He is to let us know. The president of the Sarah Lawrence Student Council has a citation to make to Harold which would properly follow the Chorus. Shirley Bauer, the Student Council president, will not need to be introduced since her citation would start, "As President of the Sarah Lawrence Student Council" and her name would be listed in the printed program.

Harold would not rise to acknowledge the student citation since we are saving him until the last. Following the Student Council president, you will introduce Mrs. Roosevelt, who will speak and following her talk will introduce Harold directly.

Harold is then scheduled for 10 minutes, following which you will close the Dinner. If you have any suggestions or need any more information, please let me know.

We are having a cocktail party on the evening of the Dinner at six o'clock in the Jansen Suite in the Waldorf, and hope that you will be able to join us then. And of course you must bring Janet with you. Enclosed are two tickets.

Sincerely yours,

Lloyd

Lloyd K. Garrison

lkg:ls
Enclosures

Taylor

SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE
BRONXVILLE 8, NEW YORK

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

TELEPHONE
DEerfield 7-0700

May 14, 1957

Dear Ed:

I can't resist writing to you about your talk last Sunday night. It was superb, very strong, courageous, and exactly the kind which means the most for the support of principled political and social action.

I do not think that anyone who was present will forget for a very long while the passion and the intelligence which you put into the expression of your views. I am happy that Ben, Alvin and I had the privilege of making the award to you. There is no one who deserves it more richly nor who could carry it so proudly.

Yours admiringly,

Harold Taylor

Harold Taylor

HT:ra

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

Taylor, Pres Harold

March 23, 1959

Dear Harold:

I write to say my thanks for your gracious and generous note.

As you know - better than anyone I know - it wasn't an easy decision to take.

Sincerely yours,

Edward R. Murrow

President Harold Taylor
Sarah Lawrence College
Bronxville 8, New York

kt

SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE
BRONXVILLE 8, NEW YORK

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

TELEPHONE
DEerfield 7-0700

LOA

February 20, 1959

Dear Ed:

I read of your leave of absence plan, and I am writing to congratulate you on having the courage and strength of mind to drop things for a year in order to let the world surround you in its own terms rather than poking at it to make it give up its secrets. At least that is my conception of what you are doing, and it is a thing that too few people in positions like yours have the presence of mind to do.

May your year be a happy of fruitful one.

Very sincerely,

Harold Taylor

Harold Taylor

HT:hl
Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Taylor, Jacqueline

May 7, 1959

Dear Miss Taylor:

Many thanks for your letter of April 27th.

Unfortunately, it is not possible for me to do a program on Hungary, at this late date.

As you know, SEE IT NOW, is no longer on the air, and that would be the perfect spot for it. Shortly, I am off on a year's leave from CBS, which means I shall not be doing any other programs next year, except a few SMALL WORLD programs. I am sorry.

Sincerely,

Miss Jacqualine Taylor
939 Woodycrest Avenue
Bronx 52, New York

939 Woodycrest Ave.
Bronx 52, New York
April 27, 1959

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Is it possible for you to do a program about Hungary and the deserted refugees, before you leave the airwaves?

That our countryhas been so heartless, on the one hand, and so lacking propoganda-wise on the other hand, in not coming to the rescue of the freedom loving people who left Hungary, in part probably from our propaganda and influence of Voice of America etc., encouraging their thirst for freedom, is the greatest shame in our present history.

Not only did we take in fewer refugees than some other countries, and percentage-wise less than most countries, but we could and should take in the whole few hundred thousand who are not living but dying a little more each day in the Austrian camps, unable to live married lives, raise a family-children existing like cockroaches. And our country with such space and wealth, and in two years now, Congress has packed up and said to the Devil with them.

Only spotlighting on the situation, the most tragic single human predicament today, by such a person as you in such a prominent position as yours, can get any action. The President took almost 2 weeks even to condemn the Russians at the time of the revolt, and Mr. Dulles made the mildest milktoast statement, adding sympathy for the Russians about their border neighbors etc. So there is no help to come from the most effective high place, and only newsmen andwriters who reach the people as well as the government, are able to help.

I hope if you cannot now arrange a whole program on the Hungary(not to mention the other lost refugees) refugees you will be able to at least speak out for some action on your nightly broadcasts.

Too bad there are not two dozen Edward R. Murrows.

Sincerely,

Jacqueline Taylor

Taylor, Marvin C.

December 10, 1958

Dear Mr. Taylor:

I have your recent letter.

It was very nice of you to take the time to write in and tell me about your outline of a new program. Unfortunately, even though it may have merit, I cannot use it.

My radio broadcasts deal with day-to-day news and my SMALL WORLD and PERSON TO PERSON television shows consist of conversations.

Since I have no control over any programs other than mine at CBS, I am returning your material to you.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Marvin C. Taylor
3816 Jenifer Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

mcc

Ret'd material 12/10.

3816 Jenifer Street, N. W.
Washington 15, D. C.
November 17, 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your comments on current TV programs, as recently reported in TIME, suggest that you might be interested in the enclosed general outline of a new program.

It is a product of a searching for a vehicle to stimulate thinking and afford an outlet for a wide reservoir of reflectiveness which I believe exists in this country.

A well-known agency to which the enclosure was recently sent replied,

> "We understand what you are trying to do in taking the emphasis off encyclopedic knowledge and trying to shift it to matters of judgment and wisdom. As it stands, the format you have suggested would be difficult to handle as a quiz show. If its potentialities were to be fully explored it would really enter into the area of public service programing; this rules it out, since the networks keep a firm hold on any programing that even vaguely resembles education and public affairs."

If such be truly the policy of the networks, correction can be accomplished only through pressure from persons of insight and influence like you.

Sincerely yours,

Marvin C. Taylor

MARVIN C. TAYLOR

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
c/o CBS, New York,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, New York

Taylor, Preston

1 file

20024 Lichfield Road
Detroit 21, Michigan.

February 27, 1959.

C.B.S.
New York City
N.Y.

Inorganic amphibole paper.

Dear Mr.Murrow:

According to a letter from the National Bureau of Standards, it appears that I have a successful formula for making paper from amphibole, a short fiber asbestos abundant in Georgia and North Carolina.

I am seeking to have this product on the market, and to accomplish this will need some assistance financially. To one interested to join in this venture, I should be glad to cooperate entirely to their wishes.

I imagine that The Herty Laboratory, at Savannah, Georgia would be glad to review my formula as well as the National Bureau Of Standards, as to the merits of my formula for a " furnish " to manufacture such a paper if prospective individuals were to contact them after requesting a copy of my material. The National Bureau of Standards are more or less familiar with my work, but I have not contacted The Herty Laboratory.

I shall be glad to submit details of former connection with the paper industry, and other industrial and marine ownership.

If Herty would investigate, this proposal I would to have them make some runs of this paper which could be accomplished at small expense.

Thanking you in advance for any information you may extend.

Yours very truly
Preston Taylor.
Preston Taylor.

Taylor, Ruth

July 10, 1959

Dear Mrs. Taylor:

Many thanks for your kind letter of June 22nd.

It is nice to hear that you have enjoyed my programs in the past. As you probably know, I shall be leaving for Europe shortly on my sabbatical year.

I hope that when I return to CBS next year, it will be with a program worthy enough to warrant your continued attention.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Ruth E. Taylor
E. Alstead Road
Alstead, New Hampshire

E. Alstead Rd.
Alstead N. H.
June 22 1959

Mr Edward R Murrow
New York City N.Y.
Dear Sir:-

My heartiest wish is that you have a completely happy vacation - where ever you may be - and that you may return to your work as news commentator at the end of that time. I respect your comments and listen for your "word for the day." I do, however regret your final word "Good Luck"

There is already too much evidence of luck - or chance on TV and in much salesmanship. Something for nothing - money - gifts - vacations - unearned; - unexpected received just by luck.

Our forfathers took a chance but they felt sure of divine guidance and tho mis guidance was evidenced a some periods it was not from resource to luck. I am sure you will know what I mean. I have marked one article in the enclosed publication

I shall hope to hear your "good night" a year from now with a more challenging final word -

yours sincerely
(Mrs) Ruth E. Taylor

Teeter, John H
F

April 7, 1959

Mr. John H. Teeter
Damon Runyon Memorial Fund for Cancer Research Inc.
730 Fifth Avenue
New York 19, N.Y'

Dear John:

I am just back from Europe and find your letter of April 2.

I don't know the source of the story about the paint company. I have not invested in it, had never heard of it and know absolutely nothing about it.

Sincerely yours,

KRM:skh

DAMON RUNYON MEMORIAL FUND
FOR CANCER RESEARCH, INC.
730 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

Tel. JUDSON 2-5400

April 2, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

Happy to hear you are "painting the town" in Tampa, Florida.

The Damon Runyon Fund is establishing a germ free Research Institute in Tampa under Professor J.A. Reyniers, formerly of Notre Dame.

We would be delighted to have you on our team in Tampa if you are interested.

Best wishes,

DAMON RUNYON MEMORIAL FUND

John

John H. Teeter
Executive Director

JHT:cw

Teeter, John

November 20, 1958

Dear John:

Many thanks for your letter of November 13th.

I think the show referred to in the MIT newsletter is THE HIDDEN REVOLUTION which goes on every four weeks or so on Wednesday night at 8:00 PM. It may be that the title got changed somewhere along the way.

My schedule does not permit me time to do anything other than the narration. Lining up all the people interviewed is all done by the producers. I will pass your letter along to them.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. John H. Teeter
Damon Runyon Memorial Fund
for Cancer Research, Inc.
730 Fifth Avenue
New York, New York

mmc

Sending letters to Jim Fleming

Television Digest

Names make news. Thought you'd like to know you're in the news on page 16 of this week's Television Digest.

Cordially,

JBD

James B. Delehanty
Asst. Business Manager

Television Digest

PUBLISHED BY TRIANGLE PUBLICATIONS, INC.
WALTER H. ANNENBERG, President

PUBLICATION OFFICE Box 700, Radnor, Pa. MUrray 8-3940

JAMES T. QUIRK, Business Manager
JAMES B. DELEHANTY, Asst. Business Mgr.
MERRILL PANITT, Editorial Director
HAROLD B. CLEMENKO, Managing Editor
DAVID LACHENBRUCH, Associate Editor
PAUL STONE

WASHINGTON BUREAU
Wyatt Building
Washington 5, D.C.
Sterling 3-1755
ALBERT WARREN, Chief
WILBUR H. BALDINGER
WM. J. McMAHON Jr.

NEW YORK NEWS BUREAU
625 Madison Ave.
New York 22, N.Y.
Plaza 2-0195
CHARLES SINCLAIR

WEST COAST NEWS BUREAU
6362 Hollywood Blvd.
Hollywood 28, Cal.
Hollywood 5-5210
DAVID KAUFMAN

MARTIN CODEL
Associate Publisher

WEEKLY NEWSLETTER Published Mondays
TV & AM-FM ADDENDA Published Saturdays
AM-FM DIRECTORY Published in January
TELEVISION FACTBOOK Published in March & September

Copyright 1959, by Triangle Publications, Inc.

Personals: Edward DeGray to be promoted from ABC radio v.p. to pres. of radio div. at next AB-PT board meeting.

Lawrence E. Spivak of Meet the Press (NBC-TV & radio) has received an honorary doctor of laws degree from Wilberforce U., Wilberforce, O. . . . James S. McMurry, ex-station mgr. of off-air WVUE Wilmington, Del., appointed national sales mgr., WSIX-TV Nashville . . . Si Palmer promoted from production supervisor to program dir., KOA-TV Denver, succeeding Heyward Siddons, transferred to sales dept. as an account exec. Dick True becomes asst. program dir. & chief director . . . Charles T. Donley, WSTV-TV Steubenville sports dir., promoted to PR & special events v.p.

Dean Borba appointed program mgr. of Corinthian's KXTV Sacramento . . . Hugh Hole, ex-Maxon Inc. named coordinator of ABC Western div. . . . John R. Allen named United Artists TV central div. mgr. . . . Jacob H. Karp, recently named administrative head of Paramount Pictures Hollywood studio, elected a v.p.

Clifford J. Barborka Jr., v.p. & Midwest (Chicago) office mgr., to head new creative & mktg. services div., John Blair & Co. Robert E. Galen, ex-Daren F. McGavren, named John Blair & Co. research dir. Charles C. Allen, ex-BBDO, named to head research & merchandising, Blair-TV and Blair Television Associates . . . Stephen J. Rooney named gen. mgr. of NBC's radio WAMP Pittsburgh.

Herb Pearson, ex-Guild Films, appointed asst. sales dir., Official Films . . . Jack Lynn, ex-program dir., WNTA-TV Newark-New York, named program mgr. of WNEW-TV New York, succeeding David Yarnell . . . Walter Liebler, ex-secy. of Allied Artists International Corp., has joined Samuel Hacker & Co., CPAs representing motion picture & TV producers . . . Paul A. Wagner, former pres., Video Pictures, named public information dir. of National Foundation (March of Dimes) . . . Jerry Bower, ex-WGN-TV Chicago named chief engineer of WPTA Ft. Wayne. Bob Carter promoted to production mgr.

■

Clark B. George, gen. mgr. of CBS's KNXT Los Angeles and the CBS-TV Pacific Network, was presented May 21 with NAFBRAT's Lee De Forest Award—3rd time the award has been made since its establishment in 1953. George was cited for "KNXT's program series which have so consistently . . . served the cultural & social interests of the Los Angeles area."

Hill & Knowlton Inc. has moved its Washington office to the Solar Bldg., 1000 16th St. NW (Sterling 3-0270).

Mementos of broadcasting will be collected by Broadcast Pioneers in a "visual history" project to be headed by W. D. (Dub) Rogers, pres. of KDUB-TV Lubbock, Texas. He'll recruit a committee with members in every state, to gather manuscripts, photos, early equipment, & significant film, tape or recorded firsts. John F. Patt, pres. of WJRT Flint & WJR Detroit, heads the committee to explore the construction (Vol. 14:20) of a permanent Archives-Museum building to house the relics.

Edward R. Murrow & Eric Sevareid, CBS news commentators, have been honored by the Belgian government for their "contributions in the field of understanding of foreign affairs." Murrow was named an officer of the Order of Leopold, and Sevareid an officer of the Order of the Crown.

Videotape recorder, contributed by the Ampex Foundation, was put into use May 25 on a special "5th Anniversary Show" by educational KQED San Francisco. Ampex Foundation chairman T. Kevin Mallen made the formal presentation during the show, explaining that the recorder had been donated "for use in experimental programs."

Kern Tips, McCann Erickson Houston v.p. & former football announcer, has been honored by the Assn. of Bcstg. Execs. of Texas (ABET) for his contributions to the broadcasting industry. This will be the first of ABET's "Betty" awards, to be presented annually.

Some kind of TV milestone was passed when 4 Providence (R.I.) movie-theater exhibitors—members of a business group which, of all groups, has probably harbored the harshest feelings toward TV (because it was hurt most)—went before the cameras of WJAR-TV's panel show, The World Around Us.

Total of 17 station reps are now members of TvB, says pres. Norman E. Cash. Latest to join is NBC Spot Sales. Two recently-added Canadian stations have brought the total of Canadian members to 3. In addition, Associated TV Ltd. of London, and TV Corp. Ltd. and Amalgamated TV Services, both of Sydney, Australia, have become international TvB members.

John Lewis chair in Jazz Composition will be established by the School of Jazz Inc. through a $1000 grant by BMI. The school holds 3-week sessions each summer.

Obituary

Edward T. Cheyfitz, 49, Washington labor-management consultant and onetime admin. asst. to Motion Picture Assn. of America pres. Eric Johnston, died in Washington May 24, after suffering a massive coronary thrombosis. He is survived by his wife, 2 sons, his mother, his father and 2 sisters.

Ethel Blume, wife of Washington TV-radio attorney Jack Blume, and sister of Joseph Nelson, chief of FCC's renewal & transfer div., died of cancer May 27. Also surviving are a son & a daughter.

Dr. John Wesley Holland, 82, who had retired in 1958 after 26 years as radio pastor of Little Brown Church of the Air (WLS Chicago), died May 15.

Joe Kelly, 60, quizmaster on the venerable radio Quiz Kids, died May 26 of a heart disease. He is survived by his widow and a son.

Harry A. Treyz, 69, father of Oliver Treyz, ABC-TV pres., died May 26 in Livingston Manor, N.Y., following a heart attack.

Teller Ed

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Mickelson, Murrow

from: Irving Gitlin

April 22, 1958

Message from Ted Ayers re: Dr. Edward Teller's appearance on FACE THE NATION:

> "Edward Teller told me directly today that in view of his recent acceptance of the directorship of the Livermore Atomic Energy Laboratory, he cannot talk publicly or write publicly except before Congressional committees, and has asked me to call him back in about a year."

IG

Teller, Edward.

MISS GENEVIEVE GRETEMAN

SECRETARY TO EDWARD TELLER

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

RADIATION LABORATORY

BERKELEY 4, CALIFORNIA

MARCH 10, 1958

I HAVE SET ASIDE FRIDAY MARCH 14TH AT 4:30 FOR DR. TELLER AT MR. MURROW'S OFFICE AT 485 MADISON AVENUE ROOM 1701. I WILL CALL DR. TELLER AT THE BILTMORE THURSDAY EVENINGE TO CONFIRM.

FLORENCE CRISSAN,
SECRETARY TO MR. MURROW

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

RADIATION LABORATORY
BERKELEY 4, CALIFORNIA

March 7, 1958

Thursday 4:30
Mr. Teller
14

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York City 22

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Dr. Teller has asked me to let you know that he plans to be in New York City next week, March 13-16, and he would like very much to see you or talk with you if you would have a few free minutes.

He will arrive at the Biltmore the evening of the 13th and will leave the afternoon of the 16th. Perhaps your secretary could leave a message for Dr. Teller at the hotel as to whether you would be available any time on the 14th, 15th or 16th. Thank you very much.

Sincerely yours,

Gen Greteman

(Miss) Genevieve Greteman
Secretary to Edward Teller

Excerpts From the Comments of Senator Johnson, Dr. Teller and Dr. Bush

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25—Following are excerpts from the opening statement by Senator Lyndon B. Johnson and the testimony of Dr. Edward Teller and Dr. Vannevar Bush at today's Senate Preparedness subcommittee hearing on the missiles program:

SENATOR JOHNSON—We are here today to inquire into the facts on the state of the nation's security. Our country is disturbed over the tremendous military and scientific achievement of Russia. Our people have believed that in the field of scientific weapons and technology and science, that we were well ahead of Russia.

With the launching of Sputnik I and II, and with the information at hand of Russia's strength, our supremacy and even our equality has been challenged. We must meet this challenge quickly and effectively in all its aspects.

The newspapers have been filled with columns about satellites and guided missiles, but nowhere is there a record that brings together in one place precisely what these things are and exactly what they mean to us.

We hope to produce that kind of record today.

We hope that when the testimony is finished, we will have a clear definition of the present threat to our security, perhaps the greatest that our country has ever known.

When we conclude with the scientific witnesses, we will examine the known information on Soviet and American capabilities. This testimony will necessarily be highly classified.

There are a few things I wish to make clear about the committee's attitude.

It would appear that we have slipped dangerously behind the Soviet Union in some very important fields.

But the committee is not rendering any final judgments in advance of the evidence on why we slipped or what should be done about it.

Our goal is to find out what is to be done. We will not reach that goal by wandering up any blind alleys of partisanship.

It is not necessary to hold these hearings to determine that we have lost an important battle in technology. That has been demonstrated by the satellites that are whistling above our heads.

But to me, and I think to every other American, a lost battle is not a defeat. It is, instead, a challenge, a call for America to respond with the best that is within them.

I do not believe the facts will invite our people either to a siesta or to a hysteria. I believe the facts will inspire Americans to the greatest effort in American history.

And this committee seeks only to determine what can be done, what should be done, what must be done now and for the long pull.

The American people have the capacity to do it, and we are confident that they will do it.

Dr. Teller Testifies

EDWIN L. WEISL, committee counsel — Dr. Teller, the people of the United States were taken by surprise when they discovered that the Russians were able to launch a sputnik or a satellite into the outer space and put it in orbit. Does the launching of such a satellite in outer space have any military and scientific significance?

DR. TELLER—It has great military significance, because, among other things, it shows that the Russians are far along, very far along in rocket development. But it has also some intrinsic military significance. In addition, it has all kinds of scientific developments because it allows us to find out a great number of things about the outer space, looking back on earth, some of the properties on our own globe. It has great significance in both these directions.

Q.—Dr. Teller, looking again at the immediate danger and the short-range program, have you any opinion as to what the United States should be doing now to meet the danger?

A.—Well, I would say that the immediate danger very obviously is in the missile field.

As I have said, we have ourselves a very healthy missile program, and we had it for a few years.

First of all, I would like to say what I would not do. I think that I would not recommend to embark on a rapid reorganization of the effort. This could rock the boat so that our effort is actually retarded rather than advanced.

At the same time, I would say that I am sure that the effort, which is an excellent effort as it stands today, is not good enough. I am quite sure that once an emergency has become clear to the American people, as this emergency has become clear, there are ways and means by which further acceleration is possible.

One very important thing will be that we must be generous with money, and that we must apply more money to the program in any place where it can be applied in an effective manner, and there are many such places.

I think that unless such reasonable expenditures are made right away in fields like the Atomic Energy Commission and also, I am sure, in fields like the missile fields, we will have fallen far short of the kind of response which we should make to the present situation.

Q.—What other suggestions have you, Dr. Teller, to accelerate our present effort to meet the danger that we face?

A.—I have no very specific suggestions. I would think that you here have a most excellent opportunity to find out from the companies which are working on this project, and from other companies which would like to be working on the project, and which have available manpower, you can find out from them what kind of additional efforts are possible without dislocating other efforts.

Because I feel very strongly that, across the board, everybody is most eager to go ahead with the program, and that we must go ahead with it, we must accelerate, without stopping other efforts.

I have perhaps this one specific suggestion which I am also sure does not require any great wisdom, and everybody is aware of it. We have quite a few programs in the Air Force, in the Army, in the Navy. Very nice things can be said about all of these efforts, and I should like to say that it is important to make, to bring about as close cooperation, as close exchange between these various efforts, as well as between the efforts going on in the competing industrial companies; in other words, the competition, which is in general a good thing, should not be carried to the point where we are keeping secrets from each other.

Now, I don't think this has been done, but one should do one's very best to foster exchange of information.

I should think that as far as the efforts within this country are concerned, these are the simple and general things that I can say.

Cooperation is Urged

Q.—Have you any other views as to the strengthening of our alliances abroad in connection with this effort to defend our security?

A.—I have been this fall over in England and looked at their air industry show, and I was most impressed by this show, by the excellence of the British effort, not in the rocket field, but in a field close to that of the rockets.

I think that it is most important that we cooperate with our very able friends, not only in Britain but I would like to see this done across the board in the NATO countries, and maybe with other allies.

I think that the present emergency is perhaps greater than the emergency was at that time [World War II], and it is greater for the simple reason that it is less apparent. We are more apt to forget about the fact that we are in a very dangerous situation because no actual shooting is going on.

I think that the situation is dangerous enough to justify, in fact, absolutely to require, the fullest cooperation with our allies in the general field of developing technical things in the scientific field and most particularly in the application of science and technology to the development of weapons.

I would like to see such a cooperation go on jointly and closely and without barriers.

Sees Any Danger Justifiable

Q—Do you think there is any danger in exchanging information and cooperating with our NATO and other allies?

A—I think there is. We cannot fully cooperate without sharing our secrets. I think that if we share our secrets, if the secrets are become known to more people, then the probability of a leak will necessarily increase. I think that this is a danger.

I think that this is, however, a danger which we must accept, because I think the danger of not cooperating, of falling behind, is, in my mind, much greater still.

Secrecy is still important, but less important than it used to be; and speed of development, on the other hand, is more important than ever.

I would advocate the closest cooperation with our allies, even if that means that some of our secrets will be lost a little faster, because we will, on the other hand, by cooperating with our allies, produce new secrets faster.

I don't know whether this is the right time for me perhaps to say at least a few words about our defense in the strict sense of the word, and about our meeting the immediate emergency that is facing us * * *. Well, it seems to me that there are two very obvious ways in which we can defend ourselves.

One is this: We must be prepared to strike back if we are hit, and we must be prepared in such a way that our ability to strike back cannot itself be destroyed by a surprise attack.

This is a difficult thing to do. In my opinion, it is possible.

Better Warning System Asked

First of all, it is possible because we have some organizations which have functioned extremely well, and which are functioning well, and I mean, in particular, the Strategic Air Command.

I believe that by being on the alert, by continuing to look to our defenses, and by strengthening them, by making our bases harder to attack, by dispersing our retaliatory force in every way possible, we can continue to make it certain, and clearly certain, that we can return any attack to which we are subjected.

This is one very important phase of our immediate defense.

One thing that this requires, of course, is an early warning system, a radar system, where we have done a lot, where we should be doing more, where we must spend more money wherever money can help, where we can be helped in turn, very greatly, by the observation of our allies, by the bases that our allies allow us to use.

In all these ways we can prepareour defenses and, of course, we have to be prepared to strike back with missiles as soon as we possibly can do so; in other words, develop our intermediate-range missiles and long-range missiles at the fastest rate possible.

There is, however, another phase which can be more properly called defense, the passive defense * * * which I will describe as essential defense by shelters and similar means.

I, first of all, believe that we can do more and we should do more, very much more about shelters. I think that if we go at the development of shelters at a reasonable rate, at a reasonable pace, if you do not require that shelters give absolute security but just do the best we can, and couple the construction of shelters with other useful projects wherever this is possible, we can gradually build up a shelter program.

I have in mind, first of all, shelters against fall-out. A shelter against fall-out can be very easily and very cheaply constructed, and in areas which are not closely built up but in areas to which the wind may carry radioactivity, such shelters could be put up at relatively small cost.

Connected with that, of course, we need a program which exists today but which I am sure is not vigorous enough, a program of making available to people cheaply and in an appropriate form, radiation meters so that they should be able to find where are the dangerous spots.

Then, I mean something more and something slightly more difficult. In the closely built-up regions in our cities there is a danger greater than the fall-out, and also greater than the much advertised shock. Of course, immediately below a powerful bomb or in the immediate neighborhood of a bomb, you may find that there is not very much you can do unless you go to really terrific expenses.

However, most of the damage of the bomb is not direct. Most of the damage, even in those cases where we have experience, is done by the fire storm, by the conflagration which follows such an explosion. Houses are knocked down, a great number of small fires are started, and in the updraft that results, all these coalesce into the kind of a fire which we have seen in the two cases at the end of the last war, and this fire storm is likely to claim more victims than anything else.

In the closely built-up areas, we have to face the difficult problem, and it won't be faced, it won't be solved within a year or two, but it can be solved gradually—how to get a system of shelters which can withstand the fire storm where people can go and stay for the hours while this fire storm is raging, and be supplied with the necessities, including air.

We have great stores of food supplies which at present we consider a nuisance. In time of war these food supplies for the next two years may be a life-saver in the most literal sense of the word. A very simple and easy measure which I would advocate now, to take this food supply and distribute it throughout the country in such a way that it should be safe from fall-out, out of the range of the immediate probable targets, and disposed in such a way that in case of emergencies it should be readily available to people.

At the same time we have to build up stocks, stockpiles of those commodities which have a key importance in rebuilding our industry. This may mean some transportation equipment, trucks; this may mean some raw materials; this may mean machine tools; it may mean a lot of things.

A country where the masses are starving, as Russia, I think will be in a very difficult position to match us along this purely defensive line, and we might be able within a few years to put ourselves into a position where the Russians can hit us badly but not so badly but that we can recover, and at the same time we shall be able to retaliate in such a way that they won't be able to recover.

Under those conditions, I think we can begin to feel sure that as long as we keep up these defenses, the all-out danger will not occur. We can avert war by real preparedness, including this defensive preparedness.

DR. BUSH — Dr. Teller's exposition [on the Satellites] was so complete that I don't think there is anything that I can add.

We know that the Russians have now exceeded our performance in that area, that they have put into an orbit a projectile weighing half a ton while we have thrown a few particles into outer space.

It has been a great shock to the country thus to learn that in a field where we thought we were doing well, we have been exceeded by their performance.

MR. WEISL — Would you like to add anything else to what has been stated about the ballistic missile which projected a half-ton satellite in an orbit?

A — The problems underlying the sputnik and underlying the ballistic missile are very similar. In the case of the satellite, it was necessary to get a very high velocity of the body and to guide it sufficiently well to bring it into an orbit.

In making an intercontinental missile, it is necessary to do both those things, but to do the second one very much better and, in addition, to solve the re-entry problem into the atmosphere.

I think another word can be said on this matter of the precision. In order to put such a missile into an orbit above the earth, A precision of perhaps one degree in guidance is sufficient.

In the days when we considered only the a-bomb as a warhead, if the missile were to be of really practical use, it would have been necessary to increase that precision by a factor of a hundred.

With the advent of the hydrogen bomb, however, the problem became very much easier if that was the warhead, and a precision of ten times that necessary for the precision of a sputnik would have sufficed.

Problem of Guidance

I think that had a great influence on that whole development, because that guidance problem is an exceedingly difficult one. It means to take a body traveling at very high velocities in the order of 18,000 miles an hour, and to guide that during the first few miles of its flight, while it is being accelerated through the air, with such precision that it can be brought to earth at a chosen point thousands of miles away.

I am quite frank to say that when this work began soon after the war, I was exceedingly skeptical whether that very tough problem could be solved.

It has been solved. I feel very sure by—whether it has been solved with sufficient precision by the Russians, I do nt know—but I agree with Dr. Teller if they have not solved it, in their progress in other ways we should expect them to solve it soon.

MR. WEISL—Could you in your own words state what you would do to expedite the program of defending our country in the best possible and most effective manner?

DR. BUSH—It is a grim enough world if two countries face each other with such weapons that if all-out war broke out, both countries would be completely demolished. That certainly is grim enough.

But we feel that under those circumstances, all out war would not break out, because no man would deliberately throw us into that sort of holocaust where he and everything else would be destroyed. It would break out perhaps by accident or possibly by desperation, but it would not be brought about deliberately.

Stresses Retaliatory Power

But that is a grim situation. But it would be a far more grim situation if we faced a situation in which the enemy could devastate us and we could not reply. We must never let that condition come about, because that would be altogether too inviting for those who reside in the Kremlin.

So this is far more than merely an advance in weapons. This country now faces definitely a situation where it must prevent at all costs being in the position where it can be overcome without the possibility of answering.

* * * the first priority is to be sure that we do not get in that condition, by utilizing properly the means already at our command.

We must be sure that S. A. C., on which our dependence sets, cannot be put out of action by a single salvo when the Russians have the intercontinental missiles to use in that manner.

Second, we need to accelerate, we need to extend our guided missiles program, to see that it goes forward at the greatest possible speed and effectiveness.

In that connection, I feel that there is nothing wrong with American scientists or with American engineers, or with American production men, for that matter.

Confident of Action

We have been complacent, and we have been smug.

When I say "we," Mr. Chairman, I include myself. We, all of us in this country, have had a rude surprise. Now that we have had the surprise, I am far more optimistic than before the sputnik influence, because I have every confidence that the American people, now aroused, will move forward effectively.

We need to be sure that the [missiles] program from here on moves smoothly and effectively at maximum speed. It must not lag because we hold a five-day week somewhere where it should be an around-the-clock affair.

It must not lag because of contests between services, which have been damaging in the past and which sometimes are, in my opinion have been, disgraceful.

The reason that we are in a tangle on this proram, in my opinion is because of the absence of over-all planning. Many years ago the Unification Act was passed by the Congress of the United States, the primary objective of which was to bring about unified war plans, unified programs for the development of our weapons and for their utilization.

That Unification Act has never worked for its intended purpose.

Wants Unified Planning

And the next thing I would recommend to you gentlemen most seriously is that you, over all that, put it in order so that we can have in this country unified central military planning that transcends the interest of any particular service, that gives us the best possible utilization of our facilities and our manpower, to the end of putting us ahead of them again in the race.

MR. WEISL—Dr. Bush, in what respect has the Unification Act failed to work?

DR. BUSH—The primary objective of the Unification Act was to prepare unitary plans, and for that purpose the Joint Chiefs of Staff were charged with the duty of preparing unified war plans, unified programs.

They have never done so.

I have a great many friends on the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and I have sympathized thoroughly with their predicament.

I think the difficulty has always resided in the form of the organization that was set up. You cannot expect a man to be a forceful leader of a service, the commanding general responsible for keeping the morale of that service at a high pitch, responsible for seeing that that service is at the peak of effectiveness, and at the same time expect that man to sit down with two others, forget all of his service responsibilities, and plan actions from a national standpoint for all three services.

And the Joint Chiefs of Staff have never done that. They could not have been expected to do so, and they haven't.

MR. WEISL—You spoke of interservice rivalry. How would you eliminate that if it does exist?

If we had an effective, central planning body acting as a staff to our commander in chief, digesting all of these things, putting them into their relative framework, and out of it producing a program for the country, that program, when approved by the commander in chief, would in my opinion, have the loyalty of every service, and the bickering would stop.

Tells of Long Advocacy

MR. WEISL—Dr. Bush, have you suggested this plan in the past?

DR. BUSH—Oh yes, I have had a number of arguments with the Joint Chiefs of Staff in regard to it. I think probably if you were to call some of the old Joint Chiefs to the stand, you would hear about those in an interesting way.

But one time it came up very strongly. Four years ago the Rockefeller Board struggled with this matter. They did not go nearly as far as I had hoped they would, but they went a long distance in advocating changes which would improve the situation.

They in fact advocated taking the primary job of planning out of the hands of the Joint Chiefs themselves.

That recommendation was seconded by every member of the committee, which included Mr. [Robert A.] Lovett, General Bradley. It was not objected to by the military services, [General] Marshall, [Admiral] Nimitz, [General] Spatz. It was approved by Mr. [Secretary Charles E.] Wilson and Mr. [Roger M.] Kyes [Deputy Secretary]. The President of the United States seemed to like the report. That particular thing has never been put into effect.

MR. WEISL—What happened to it? A.—I do not know. I asked the Secretary of Defense a year ago, and I do not think he knew.

Q.—You spoke, Dr. Bush, of the long-range plan that we should adopt to defend out security and protect our leadership in the fields of science and technology. Do you wish to comment on that?

A.—We have gradually in this country come to the point where we have become very convinced that we are awfully good.

Now, out of that come many difficulties, and in our educational system in particular, we have been taking the easy way. If a youngster wants to go to school and study science, well, they will yet him. But if he would prefer to study something that is much easier and sweeter and less demanding, they let him do that, too, and that is because we have been complacent.

And I think the primary thing that needs to happen to us here in this country is that we wake up to the fact that we are in a tough competitive race where we have got to do a lot of good, tough work, and that that begins just as soon as the youngster goes to the school.

And we have got to expect him to struggle with tough subjects, so that out of that great group of youngsters, there may be selected and trained those scientists, those engineers of the future that we must depend on for our continuing security.

Associated Press Wirephoto

MISSILES INQUIRY OPENS: Dr. Edward H. Teller, lower right, H-bomb scientist, testifying before Senate Preparedness subcommittee in Washington. At committee table are, from left: Senator Estes Kefauver; Cyrus Vance, assistant council; Edwin L. Weisl, chief counsel; Senator Lyndon B. Johnson; chairman, and Senators Leverett Saltonstall, Ralph E. Flanders, Margaret Chase Smith, Francis Case, Alexander Wiley, Frank A. Barrett.

TELLER BIDS U. S. DISPERSE BASES

Continued From Page 1

storehouses of food and raw materials.

¶Enlarge the program for building nuclear-powered submarines.

¶Improve the nation's facilities for scientific education with special emphasis on techniques that would change the public's attitude of regarding scientists as "highbrows" who command curiosity rather than respect.

Dr. Chipman Test Fires

Another witness today was Dr. John Chipman, head of the metallurgy department of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who returned last month from a conference in the Soviet Union.

Dr. Chipman described visits to Soviet steel plants and said their steel industry "is smaller than ours but is growing fast."

Senator Johnson announced that Dr. John P. Hagen, Director of Vanguard, the United States earth satellite project, would be the first witness tomorrow. Other witnesses will include Neil H. McElroy, Secretary of Defense, and Allen W. Dulles, head of the Central Intelligence Agency, in closed sessions.

With only slight guidance from Edwin L. Weisl, the subcommittee counsel, Dr. Teller expounded on the properties of ballistic missiles and satellites and advanced his opinions why the Russians must be credited with possession of an intercontinental ballistic missile.

Such a missile, with a range of about 5,000 miles, Dr. Teller pointed out, receives its guidance and power in the initial stage of flight, then continues at supersonic speed to its target.

Because of newly available warheads for hydrogen bombs, which can cause wide areas of destruction, the inaccuracy caused by great distances from targets can be compensated, he said.

Dr. Teller said—and Dr. Bush endorsed this testimony—that the Soviet satellites showed that the Russians had solved the propulsion problem and probably the guidance problem and the problem of re-entry of the warhead. That is the problem of protecting the warhead against disintegration when it returns to the earth's atmosphere in the course of flight.

Bits of Humor

Dr. Teller, a brown-haired, bushy eyed man was born in Hungary and educated in Germany. He now is a United States citizen.

The scientist who speaks with a heavy Teutonic accent, held the committee members in silent attention as he testified.

His testimony was relieved occasionally with bits of humor. He professed a desire to go to the moon out of curiosity and asked for respect for scientists equal to that of sports heroes.

"This is one of the most interesting two hours and a quarter that I have spent since I have been in the United States Senate," said Senator Leverett Saltonstall, Republican of Massachusetts. Each of the committee members in turn expressed similar tribute.

Using notes, the University of California scientist, who came to the United States in 1935, emphasized that this country was late in ballistic missiles development because it first sought refinements in the development of nuclear warheads.

He added that he was among those who did not at first realize all the possibilities in ballistic missiles development, although, if asked, would have urged working on them.

But the prevailing attitude even after the war, Dr. Teller said, was that there was little purpose in seeking long-range ballistic missiles without first producing a compact nuclear warhead that could be attached to it.

Dr. Teller emphasized several times that he thought the ballistic missile program was "excellent and excellently managed."

He warned against any drastic rearrangement in the program, even as he advocated its acceleration and expansion. Changes in organization now might have a "retarding effect," he said.

One of the reasons for the Russians' outstripping of the United States in developing ballistic missiles, he declared, is their willingness "to take greater gambles in their development program."

"We are not taking the kind of risks which in war, cold war as well as in hot war, one necessarily has to take," he said.

Notes Soviet Advantage

Afterward, under questioning by Senator Stuart Symington, Democrat of Missouri, he reiterated a statement he made some time ago that whatever the United States did in the next ten years, the Russians would be ahead in scientific development. He attributed this to a greater intensive effort in educating youths that already has been made.

Also under questioning by the committee chairman, Dr. Teller appeared to hint that he had opposed a greater research and development effort in nuclear propulsion of rockets and airplanes.

He noted that as a scientific adviser to the Atomic Energy Commission he had participated in decisions concerning the utility of such efforts. However, he refused to testify in open session on the subject.

As he testified on the Soviet progress and what the United States could do to match it, Dr. Teller advocated continued testing of the hydrogen bombs in order to perfect "clean" bombs—Those with no radioactive fall-out outside of the blast area. He called for more money on basic research and cited certain scientific projects where relatively little more money was needed yet being witheld, despite the shock of the Russian success with satellites.

In advocating for increased ballistic missiles development, he warned that it was too late to reorganize the present management of the programs. He said rash reorganization "could rock the boat," but he advocated progressively stronger and more unified direction.

Dr. Teller emphasized cooperation with the Western Allies in the exchange of information, probably through the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. He said important studies in weather prediction and oceanography could be carried on through NATO.

In enhancing the retaliatory capacity of the Strategic Air Command, he said, attention must be given to the further development of radar for Distant Early Warning systems. He said the United States had no assurance it was still better than the Soviet Union in radar devices, in view of other examples of lost leadership.

Discussing the need for "passive defense" and the building of fall-out shelters, Dr. Teller mentioned other major programs that he thought important—the storage of food and raw materias for rebuilding, and radiation meters for the use of individuals in order to make recovery possible after attack.

The United States is a rich country and could easily go into such a program, he asserted, whereas the Soviet Union does not have the economic capacity to attempt such preparedness.

Dr. Teller advocated the reorganization of the nation's school programs, including a specific proposal for scientists in industry to teach at elementary and high schools.

Referring to scientific education, he said it was necessary to create an atmosphere in this country in which science and scientists were appreciated. In the Soviet Union, he said, scientists were encouraged by prestige and avoidance of the general misery others suffer. In this country he expressed a hope for prestige for scientists equal to that of sports heroes.

Dr. Teller made a plea for restoration of the Air Force patrols of the Atlantic as part of weather observation duties. He advocated research in the ocean shelfs for minerals and vegetables. He warned that the Russians would embark on such programs ahead of us, which would pay off handsomely.

Dr. Bush, who endorsed most of Dr. Teller's scientific arguments, stressed his proposal for revising the Unification Act. But he said he did not favor a single service, with one uniform, for all military arms.

According to Dr. Bush, it was not possible and it would be unfair to the military commanders, for the Joint Chiefs of Staff to carry out war planning at the same time they were responsible for the military operations of their services.

He suggested a central military policy planning board, composed of officers and civilians, some who were about to retire from service and others called back after retirement.

He ridiculed the idea that the National Security Council performed an adequate planning function in this respect.

He pointed out that the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture and others whose field were not specifically and directly involved were on the national secrurity council.

When he goes to a hospital, he said, he does not want to have his case diagnosed by lawyers.

As did his predecessor as a witness, Dr. Bush warned against rash pushing for a reorganization of the missiles program. He said the program is too far along. So far as a "czar" is concerned, Dr. Bush said that the Secretary of Defense had all the authority he requires by law to coordinate the missiles program.

2 U.S. Groups Work to Translate Soviet Research in Planes, Arms

By HARRY SCHWARTZ

A major gap in United States coverage of Soviet scientific advance in aeronautics and rocket flight is likely to be remedied soon, Government officials reported yesterday.

Two groups in this country are arranging for translation of the Soviet Journal of Applied Mathematics and Mechanics. Soviet results of major importance for designers of airplanes and rockets are reported in this journal, but until now the magzine's contents have been available only to those who can read Russian.

Proposals for systematic translation of this important journal have been advanced by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Pergamon Institute, a research foundation in this city. Financial support for the translation is reported likely to come from the National Science Foundation.

The case of this journal was cited yesterday by specialists in translation of Soviet scientific material as an illustration of the serious gaps still existing in United States coverage of Soviet scientific research.

But a somewhat brighter picture was drawn by these specialists that seemed indicated by a report from Washington that the Government sponsors the translation of only thirty of 1,200 Soviet scientific journals.

Counting Government and non-Government efforts, it was reported, more than forty Soviet scientific journals are now regularly translated in this country.

In addition, various agencies comb through Soviet scientific publications and make available a significant number of translations of the most important articles. Thus, much of the most important Soviet material is said to become available.

Two major private groups that appear to do the bulk of the translation of Soviet scientific material are situated in this city—the Pergamon Institute and Consultants Bureau, Inc.

Representatives of these organizations asserted that the most important Soviet journals in key fields such as chemistry, physics and biology are now being translated. Other sources indicated the chief lacks are in the fields of engineering and earth sciences.

Temple, Douglas

April 15, 1958

Dear Mr. Temple:

Many thanks for your letter of April 2nd offering to supply me with material upon your return from Europe. However, we have a fairly adequate foreign staff, and there seems very little likelihood that I would be able to make use of the material you are offering.

Thank you for taking the time and trouble to bring it to my attention.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Douglas Temple
20-14 43 Street
Asteria 5, New York

mce
enc.

Douglas Temple
20-I4 43 Street
Astoria,5,New York

April 2,I958

No

Edw.R.Murrow

Dear Sir:

Do hope you do not mind this letter since,I have a reason. As you can see on my I2 photostates,I shall visit many Mayor's in Europe.I have about forty more invations.At this time,I had a thought,that I might film this visits.Believe,if these Mayor's and cities would be shown on T-V,many people would look at these, because many of our people came from these places.

If,I could talk to you about it in person,you might be of great help or we could work something out,in this matter.Please, let me know,if we could met.

Thanking you,for your kind attention.

Yours truly,

Douglas Temple

Douglas Temple

Included I2 photostates.Please,return same.Thank you.

Teplitsky, L.

Mr. Edward R. Morrow
C.B.S.

Dear Mr. Morrow
I thought the material enclosed might be of interest to You and to the people of America.

I thank You

Sincerely
Louis Teplitsky

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

1207 (4-5)

December 30, 1957

General Dwight D. Eisenhower
President of the United States
Gettysburg, Pennsylvania

MAY ONE WHO CAME FROM THE STEPS OF THE UKRAINE TO THIS GREAT LAND WHICH HAS TAKEN HIM IN AS AN IMMIGRANT BOY, AMONG SO MANY OTHER HOMELESS ONES, AS A CHILD OF HER OWN, WHO CAME TO THIS NEW WORLD IN SEARCH FOR FREEDOM, OF A BETTER EDUCATION, OF BETTER OPPORTUNITY TO DO WHAT HE WANTED TO DO WITH HIS LIFE, AND WHO NOW LOVES HIS ADOPTED COUNTRY WITH HIS WHOLE SOUL, WITH HIS WHOLE HEART AND WITH HIS WHOLE MIND, TAKES THIS OPPORTUNITY TO WISH THE BELOVED AND ADMIRED PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES GENERAL DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER, MRS. EISENHOWER AND YOUR BELOVED CHILDREN A VERY HAPPY, JOYOUS AND PEACEFUL NEW YEAR. MAY GOD BLESS YOU, GUIDE YOU, WATCH OVER YOU AND GRANT YOU STRENGTH IN THIS TROUBLED WORLD.

MAY THE SAME MIRACLE THAT HAS ENABLED YOU TO RECOVER FROM YOUR RECENT ILLNESS GRANT OUR COUNTRY AND TO THE WORLD A JUST AND EVERLASTING PEACE. MAY THE INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE TABLE REPLACE THE BATTLE FIELD. MAY 1958 ASSEMBLE A SUMMIT MEETING BETWEEN YOU MR. PRESIDENT, KHRUSCHEV, BULGANIN AND MACMILLAN. MAY THE RESULT OF SUCH A SUPREME EFFORT END THE STALEMATE, WORK OUT SOME SOLUTION AND REACH CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRESS TO STOP THE WORLD'S MAD RACE FOR SUPREMACY IN DEATH DEALING WEAPONS.

MAY THERE BE PEACE BEFORE THESE INSTRUMENTS OF MASS DEATH WILL COME INTO HANDS OF MANY NATIONS RATHER THAN BEING POSSESSED ONLY BY RUSSIA, ENGLAND AND AMERICA. OTHERWISE A WAR FOUGHT WITH OUR NEW WEAPONS WILL TURN THE WORLD INTO A GIGANTIC SLAUGHTERHOUSE AND BURY THE HOPES AND MONUMENTS OF OUR RACE BEYOND RECOVERY. MAY WE SEARCH OUR SOULS FOR A WAY OUT AND DRIVE THE HATRED, DISTRUST AND SUSPICION FROM OUR HEARTS AND LIGHTEN UP THE SOULS OF MANKIND AND THE CHORD THAT SEEMED BROKEN BEGIN TO VIBRATE AGAIN. MAY GOD BLESS THE UNITED STATES AND ITS KIND HUMANITARIAN PEOPLE WHO CARRY IN THEIR HEARTS THAT DEEP SENSE OF HUMANITY WHICH IS CHARITY AND LOVE, AND WHO ARE NOW THE LIGHT THAT IS SHINING ON THE WORLD. MAY PEACE DESCEND UPON THE EARTH. MAY HUMANITY BE SAVED.

LOUIS TEPLITSKY 3181 ROCHAMBEAU AVENUE NEW YORK - 67

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

THE ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT

January 6, 1958

Dear Mr. Teptitsky:

The President received your wire of December thirtieth and has asked me to thank you for your kind thought of him and Mrs. Eisenhower.

The President appreciates the concern of those who, like yourself, are sufficiently interested in the world situation to take the time to wire and submit their views to him. In connection with your comments and observations, it is thought that you might like to have the complete text of the remarks by the President at the public session opening the NATO meetings of the Heads of Government held in France. He also wants you to have the accompanying transcript of the report to the Nation on the NATO Conference which he and Secretary Dulles made from the White House on the evening of December twenty-third.

Sincerely,

Sherman Adams

Mr. Louis Teptitsky
3181 Rochambeau 67
New York, N. Y.

Enclosures

Teplitsky, Louis

Louis Teplitsky
3181 Rochambeau Ave.
New York 67, N. Y.

January 18, 1958

"We The People Speak"

****

"An open letter" to the President of the United States and Commander and Chief of the Armed Forces.

General Dwight D. Eisenhower
White House
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. President:

I thank you very much for the letter of Jan. 6, 1958 that I have received from Mr. Sherman Adams, who wrote that you've asked him to write to me.

Enclosed were the complete text of your remarks at the public session opening the NATO meeting in Paris, and the accompanying transcript of your report to the Nation of the NATO Conference.

I think that it was very thoughtful of you to go to all that trouble specially when I am fully aware of the crushing burden that you Mr. President carry on your shoulders at this critical stage of the Atomic era.

For all that I again thank you from the bottom of my heart. I assure you that I was deeply inspired by your gesture. I read the material with great interest.

****

Mr. President, I will now try to clarify further the views of the people of America about the World situation. As one who loves the American people as I do, and only through love alone could man learn to understand one another, with that view in mind I will try my very best to interpret and express the feelings and desires of the American people.

As "We The People Speak", Mr. President, the World today is a sad, frightened place. The bright hopes for peace, so often frustrated, grow dim. Confident expectations of progress is dying as man begins to lose faith in himself and in the future.

The Senate Preparedness Hearings already have created the impression that the United States is lagging seriously behind the Soviet Union. The evidence strongly suggests that the gap is steadily widening. Also the Rockefeller Brothers Fund "Report" and the Gaither-Foster official "Survey" conveyed a sense of "Urgency"... We are honestly scared about the position in which our country finds itself. This is indeed a grave hour...

"We the People" believe that the fate of our country and its survival as a nation will live or die unless we respond to the gravest challenge our people has ever had to face. We furthur believe that the challenge must be met with all resources of mind and material that the United States can master. As Mr. Khrushchev has bluntly told us, a war of many phases, military, political, economic, psychological, a contest for men's minds, or a race for outer space. It is a total war, calling for all our resoluteness, our determination, our patriotism, and our faith. The Soviet Union by its well-directed and energetic program to achieve and assert scientific pre-eminence in order to gain economic, political and cultural supremacy. There is ample evidence that the Soviet Union is bending every effort in this scientific revolution to achieve its goal of World domination...

The problems we face are the most momentous in our history. They are not merely military problems. It is a question of survival, and therefore, "We the People" appeal to you Mr. President. We want you to lead us in this grave hour and it is indeed very grave and let no one minimize the seriousness or we are doomed!

Mr. President, you've given over 40 years of your life to our country. You've shown in war and in peace the capacity to meet the obligation of leadership, that have won you popular support for your concept of it. We love and admire you for your kind humanity. We shall never forget your great contributions you've made to our Nation. Now our country is again in peril and we call upon your greatness...

"We the People" want solutions. We will follow a policy of boldness, courage and vision. We will respond to greatness because we are awakened to the dangers. We have the will and capacity. We have the physical, the mental and the moral resources and power effectively to defend our future in the nuclear age that is fast approaching.

From the moment the Sputnik illuminated the technological sky there was only indignation, but no panic. Hurt pride isn't panic, Alarm isn't panic. This is no time to panic, to lose hope, or to give way to our fears and disappointments. We were only disillusioned and disgusted. So be it, disillusionment is enlightenment. Disgust with ourselves can be the beginning of wisdom, as blindness was almost its end. Our richest year can be 1958, if we profit from the lessons of 1957. What we need is a positive and practicable implementation among our people and unite us with our allies. We must increase our speed enough to win. There will be no second chance, no opportunity, if we fail.

Mr. President, your State of the Union message, delivered in person to the joint session of Congress on Jan. 9, 1958 was one of the most important documents in American history. Your speech attained your fines hour. We have been thirsting for action and for leadership. It was indeed a great and inspiring speech, it created the needed confidence and unity of purpose, both in Congress and in the people. You displayed realism of your summary and the "Eight Point Program" you submitted to Congress provides the leadership for which both Congress and "We the People" have been asking. In fact, Mr. President, we have been crying - and indeed praying - for decisive Presidential leadership. It was needed because we needed evidence as never before. Now you have issued the candid call for action. The program forms the basis of a realistic forthright and courageous attack on the major problem. Mr. President, the picture you drew of peril was a grim one, and the measures you proposed to avert were more drastic than any in our previous history.

"We the People" who listened to your State of the Union address or read your words were impressed by your vow to wage total peace... We have no doubt that the will to peace was your most dominant characteristic; and in this you reflect the hopes and prayers of our people...Your outline of the momentous question of this age was apparent that you have accepted the challenge fully and firmly to lead the United States and Hence the free World and in this you underwent the greatest test of your public career and you passed it...You performed a chore that would have taxed any in your audience when you read steadily a major state paper for almost 45 minutes and under the most critical observation you have faced in the conduct of the greatest affairs of war and peace. The power and prestige of your office as President and the personality of the President was sufficient to further reinforce your popular leadership to the one office of the United States where with the help of "Almighty God" you will exercise with full effectiveness.

"We the People" know that a national emergency now exists in our beloved country and therefore we as Americans must cast aside all the mean and unworthy motives that tempt men in public life. There are no more Republicans or Democrats when our country is facing peril. "We the People" believe that now is the time for Congress in both houses, to precieve what is at stake and to act accordingly, together with the President of the United States. Let's go on with the subject. Let's make it clear that "We the People" will defend our liberties our freedom and those of our friends by all the means we can summon...

We pray that an attempt will be made to remedy our peril, if the United States is to maintain its security and avert international domination by the Soviet Union. Now the greatest danger is, that we expect government to do it all. "Let Washington take care of it". The greatest leadership of all must come from the daily actions and expressions from "We the People".

In short, what we need is for all of us to get back to the American spirit of cooperation, mutual respect, decent humility, and realization that every last one of us has something to contribute to the general welfare.

And so we believe that we are now in a mood to roll up our sleeves and go to work. If we can do that "We the People" feel that the Sputniks will prove to have been the greatest thing that has happened to us.

****

As a citizen I took the initiative, with my own private resources and appealed to Mr. Khrushchev in the course of four letters: Aug. 1, 1957 - Sept. 25, 1957 - Oct. 10, 1957 - and Oct. 27, 1957.

I am not ashamed to admit that sensing the menace, the potential power of destruction, that I appealed to Mr. Khrushchev. I wanted to turn him to peaceful persuits because then only would I feel safe in the world of my fellow men, then only would all men feel at home in this world...

In my last letter of Oct. 27, 1957 - I wrote, quote: "I hereby appeal to you Mr. Khrushchev, to the leaders, to the government and to the people of the U.S.S.R. again, and again, Lead the Way...We must do everything possible to save the World from the imminent catastrophe which is now approaching." Perhaps my appeals did make some impression on Mr. Khrushchev. I don't know. But the Soviet Union did open up a Peace Campaign. Mr. Khrushchev did take the initiative.

On Monday, Dec. 30, 1957 I again took the initiative and cabled 4 New Year greetings: To Mr. Khrushchev, Mr. Bulganin, Mr. Macmillan and a 352 word telegram to you Mr. President. I shall now quote the 70 word cable I sent to Premier Nikolai A. Bulganin: "May I wish you, the government and the Soviet people a Very Happy and Peaceful New Year. May there be Peace between the United States people and the Soviet people. The friendship between our two countries has undergone the test of blood and fire in war, and now may we reach an understanding in Peace. May we find a way to coexist on this planet."

Perhaps my cables to the Soviet Union influenced Mr. Khrushchev to cable New Year's messages to all the NATO countries. Who knows, perhaps my appeals to Mr. Khrushchev and Mr. Bulganin contributed more to the cause of peace than a million diplomatic notes could.

Yes, Mr. President, it is much better to talk about peace than about war and hate. Nevertheless, the Soviet Union has given us no choice but to strengthen our military might and build up our defenses. Perhaps, we must rely on mutual terror to keep the peace, plus our own strength and courage, may bridge the chasm between East and West.

And so, as Senator Linden Johnson said: "We certainly spend as much to defend our freedom as the Soviets are willing to spend to destroy it." For the first time in our history, we live on the front lines of international warfare, where destruction comes without warning and without time for mobilization. For with the development of the Intercontinental (five thousand mile range) ballistic missiles, it becomes technically possible for the United States and the Soviet Union to hammer each other into dust without attacking intervening areas. It can overlap whole continents, and so America is now in the front line and Europe is now in the rear line. Both the United States and the Soviet Union have acquired the power to destroy a people and all its wealth by a single blow.

Let us now look beyond the dark clouds of the international horizon to the promise of the future. There are those who feel that to negotiate with the Soviet Union is a danger to America, and that our security and salvation lie in a steadfast and stony refusal to be drawn into serious diplomatic conversation. "We the People" believe that those who take this view are greatly mistaken, and that if we persist in making a policy of not wanting to negotiate, we shall do incalculable and perhaps irrepurable harm, to our position in the World.

For forty years the Soviet Union and the United States waged a ceaseless cold war hoping that one or the other will collapse. For forty years there was and tragically still is hatred, distrust, and suspicion between our two countries. Now the hour has come to put a stop to all that. "We the People" are sick with prolonged anxiety and deeply troubled with the thought that the possibilities of insuring peace are not being effectively exploited, although we don't know what is behind in the recent Soviet "Peace Campaign", or how sincere it is. Nevertheless we must not refuse to negotiate, and thereby secure even a partial relaxation of international tension. We must not be obsessed that military might is the sole road to peace.

What "We the People" want is simple enough: Peace! But peace is not merely the absence of war. It is the absence of frenzied fearful and destructive preparation for war. The United States craves no other territory. We want no additional power in the world, or domination over any other people. We need no greater extent of territory or of riches. We want nothing but a peaceful world in which all peoples can share in the great happiness and betterment that a just peace can bring.

When we begin serious negotiations, we must not assume that what seems good to us, a country governed by many millions of voting citizens, will also seem good to the Soviets or to Red China, where a tiny minority makes the decisions, and gives orders where freedom is the criminal and the convict in the Communist world and rights have no meaning. But we must search for some formula, some device, some understanding that will at least, achieve the negative benefit of avoiding world-wide mutual suicide. God did not intend mankind to commit suicide. He gave man freedom and his birthright. Despite the numerous discouraging experiences we have had with the Kremlin, negotiations between the East and the West must go on. There is no other way if the world is to be spared certain catastrophe. We may not like our adversaries. We may not even trust them. But we must live with them. Cold war - frustrating and infuriating, though it may be - is still preferable to hot war.

And now Mr. President you have begun your "own diplomatic offensive" to counter Moscow's persistently skillful initiative. The first was of course, your Message to Congress. The second is contained in your reply to Mr. Bulganin's Christmas note, opened the way to private United States-Soviet diplomatic discussions which we hope will take place in the near future, in our effort to regain some momentom for a lasting peace... "We the People" believe your letter to Premier Bulganin was friendly but firm; it was calm and reasonable tone; it expressed your positive instinct for peace. Perhaps, we are at a stage in our relations with the Soviets, where a road has opened up, to an eventual Summit Conference.

You Mr. President, have offered proof that you meant it when you said: "That you will be willing to go an extra mile with anybody to achieve peace." It was indeed an earnest effort to find common ground for world survival. We further believe that you have made a generous move. We now earnestly hope that the Soviet Union will not attempt to misuse and distrust this opportunity that may be fatal to all dreams...You Mr. President, have belatedly and unmistakably cleared the air; Let no man on either side try to poison it...

But even while arming, even while redoubling our efforts in every field of activity, all America will continue to ask questions; How can we ever get our Soviet brothers to stop this mutual madness? Knowing all too well that the logical end of a total arms race must be an eventual explosion, we search our souls for a way to end it. We wish that the Soviets would search their own souls.

Perhaps 1958 could mark the beginning of a golden era for all mankind in which the limitless sources of energy around could be devoted to the uses of peace. As we are projecting New Vistas into outer space to conquer new planets, in this journey we must not escape from the human problems of this planet of ours, which has been our home since creation. The cry for peace is universal; the longing for food and freedom remains no less deep. The hunger and misery that a vast majority of the people of this world suffer daily; these problems must not take a second place in our minds. These should be our weapons.

As Lincoln said in one of his debates with Douglas almost a century ago, "Our defense is the spirit which prized liberty as the heritage of all men, in all lands, everywhere." Not all our new program of education, not all our feverishly accelerated research, not all our expenditures on missiles, satellites and ships, can make our defense more than a brute struggle for survival unless we build also the weapon of the spirit...

We are the wealthiest and the freest nation on earth. We are an energetic and courageous people. We shall meet this crisis resolutely and be triumphant. If we fail, the light of the world will be dimmed. The destiny of our great country depends if we meet this challenge with determination. We must succeed, we must not fail...We cannot and dare not fail...

In conclusion I pray that this little effort of mine will stimulate the American people's interest and focus attention strongly on the fact that a full scale national emergency now exists in our country; if my effort succeeds it will have served its purpose.

I thank you and God Bless You.

Sincerely yours,

Louis Teplitsky

Louis Teplitsky

Louis Teplitsky
3161 Rochambeau Ave.
New York 67, N. Y.

October 27, 1957

Mr. Nikita S. Khrushchev
First Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union
The Kremlin
Moscow, U.S.S.R.

Dear Mr. Khrushchev:

This is my fourth and final appeal to you, in my "One Man Crusade for Peace"...

I hope that this letter finds you in the best of health. Again I beg of you please do forgive me for troubling you. I trust that you will be tolerant and patient while reading this urgent...communication, which I honestly believe is of the utmost importance not only to our two great countries but to the entire world.

I also pray and hope you will not minimize my sincere and humble efforts.

Although I am only one man, and could speak only for myself, yet, I could hear voices of men, women, and children of the world "Pleading"...with the same words as I do..."Please give us Peace"..."Remove from us the Terror of War"... Yes, they are the voices of the men, women, and children of the Soviet Union who are now so proud of the Soviet Union's marvelous achievements, in industry, in science, in medicine, in technology, in general education, that won them the respect of the entire civilized world.

Yet I doubt if the people of the Soviet Union are really happy, or even able to enjoy the great triumph of Soviet achievement which the Soviet people made possible, with their sweat and toil. The question is, how could the Soviet people enjoy, or be happy, as long as the "Terror" of a "Thermonuclear" war hangs over the Soviet Union?

Yes, I also hear the voices of men, women, and children of the United States who are unable to enjoy our way of life because of the same "Terror" of a "Thermonuclear" war that hangs over the United States, and that "Terror" of war...hangs on every country on the face of the globe...Now, those voices are somewhat calm, but frightened, as I am....But when the Hydrogen bombs will begin to fall on Moscow, on New York, on Washington, on Leningrad, those bombs will fall all over the Soviet Union and all over the United States. I believe that no city in the Soviet Union and no city in the United States will escape, and what about Prague, London, Berlin, Rome, Paris, Tokyo, Peking, etc. Then there will be no time to plead...then there will be only screams...death... and silence....Rivers of blood will be shed. Yes, it will be Soviet-blood and American-blood and blood of all mankind the world over. Why do we have to resort to war and desolation? And for what purpose?

Having seen the way Hiroshima, Japan was destroyed by the Atomic Bomb, I could well imagine what will happen after the Thermonuclear destruction. Even in some areas many miles from the scene of disaster people would be affected by "Radioactive" fall-out that even the unborn generations will suffer from this new war that is coming. So what will be the gain?

Because of that knowledge above what we are facing, I am trying very hard with my limited resources to do all I can, which is not enough...

Would you Mr. Khrushchev be so kind and offer me some encouragement in this vital campaign for the benefit of all mankind? Believe me...it is very difficult to go on when there is not even an acknowledgement, only silence...

As I have stated in my letter of Sept. 25, 1957 that I have sent the text of my appeal to Chiefs of States of many Governments in Asia, in Europe, to Communist, and non-Communist countries. I am happy to report to you that those Governments were kind enough to encourage me in my efforts for peace. Nevertheless, the question is Have I failed? Or is there still some hope? If I have failed, then mankind has lost the last chance for survival, and peace.

I hope that I am wrong.

I pray that I am wrong.

Perhaps you will be interested to know Mr. Khrushchev that on Oct. 14, 1957 I went to see the General Secretary of the United Nations and after my conference with Mr. J. Pallaster, secretary to Mr. Dag Hammarskjold, I picketed the United Nations from 10 A.M. to 4 P.M. A Soviet Union photographer of the "Moscow Central Television Station" made a 20-minute movie of my "Placard" and my "Peace Appeal". Perhaps the people of the Soviet Union will be able to see my Peace efforts.

And so before we begin to drop hydrogen bombs on one another, let us first try the peaceful way...the human way... the right way...And as long as the Governments of the world have not been taken over yet by their respective high commands, then perhaps we still have a chance before we destroy ourselves and all our achievements, with it.

I am writing all this because, time is of the essence. We must act quickly before it is too late.

We are now living upon the volcano's edge, and it may errupt at any moment if we do not stop the cold war by threatening one another with thermonuclear destruction. And so my appeal to Reason...my intercession for the United States, and for Peace, Perhaps there is a puzzled question: Why does he do these things?

The reason is I just couldn't sit back and do nothing; I therefore set my heart and soul to find some way that our two countries may live in peace...What concerns me, is if possible to prevent a major calamity, a devastating conflegration that will penetrate in all the lands of the earth.

The gravity of the cold war has now reached a dangerous explosive stage, with threats to annihilate the United States and counter threats to annihilate the Soviet Union fully justifies my apprehension. I believe that the greatest danger is that the Soviet Union due to over-confidence might underestimate the determination of the United States to resist, if the United States or its allies are attacked.

What makes the cold war more dangerous is that the Soviet Government is doing today, what the United States refrained from doing between 1945 and 1951 during the period the United States held a monopoly on atomic weapons. The United States did not brandish the atomic bomb; it did not threaten that "bombs would go off" if the Soviet Union did not free the satellite peoples of Eastern Europe. It did not use the atomic bomb to turn back the invasion of South Korea.

Again I repeat as I have stated in my letter of Sept. 25 1957 "I Believe that a line...has been reached, and neither the United States nor the Soviet Union dare...not cross that line without participating a 3rd World War".

Although I am somewhat disappointed because I have received no reply to my appeal, nevertheless, I am not yet discouraged, and my faith...in you has not diminished...I have faith in you Mr. Khrushchev not of the errors that you may have committed, not of the pain that your errors may have caused to others. But my faith in you, is how much good, you may have done, how much good, you could do Now...for the Soviet people and for all mankind, and therefore I refuse to believe...that my appeals to you for peace between the United States and the Soviet Union has been ignored...

I refuse to believe...that Soviet statements made at the United Nations and your statement to the New York Times that the Soviet Union desires peace with the United States was really just propaganda. I refuse to believe...that the U.S.S.R. has finally come to a final decision, that war with the United States is inevitable...What I do believe is that the Soviet people bears us no ill will, and we bear them none. I further Believe that if there is a war between the United States and the Soviet Union, neither country will be victorious...In fact I Believe, that the United States and the Soviet Union has accumulated enough Thermonuclear weapons and the means to deliver them that would destroy both our countries and possibly their extinction.

The United States will soon launch Sputniks, and the Soviet Union will launch more Sputniks and the probability is, that the heavens will be so full of them in due course that they will bump into each other and go off in gases which we shall undoubtedly not even see, or if we do, they shall do little harm.

The real danger of Sputnik - if there is danger - lies in the continued drain on the National Treasury as the Soviet Union and the United States concentrates on building bigger and better earth satellites to outstrip the other. And yet, there is no choice, really. Ultra-expensive unconventional as they may be, Sputnik and its successors are no longer figments of science fiction. They are a reality.

Of course, Mr. Khrushchev, I realize that, neither the United States nor the Soviet Union - now that the race is in earnest - can permit the other the advantage of a permanent lead, regardless of cost. Despite the whirl of an iron ball around the world in ninety-six minutes, there is as yet no effective means of communication between the people of the United States and of the Soviet Union and both governments show a surprising indifference to the problem, a willingness to acknowledge error in ourselves, and a willingness to furnish an example. There is great need of an intercontinental missile, but a missile that should be aimed at destroying the evil in the human heart. For it isn't the atom bomb or the ballistic missile that constitutes a threat to mankind - It is the mind and hand of Government that triggers the use of these lethal weapons.

Yes indeed, Mr. Khrushchev, we need intercontinental ballistic missiles, but not for organized murder...but missiles that could stimulate people to rid themselves of hatred...

One can argue about the causes of the situation today, and about who was most at fault, and who or what is to blame, the Soviet Union or the United States.

Perhaps this Appeal is the opportunity that knocks rarely and sometimes only once. If the Soviet Union could begin a new era of good will towards the United States. It is the present and the future that counts, not the past. My appeal is not to argue over the past, but to seek some way that holds promise for a better future for our two countries, and for the world.

The key to victory is not war but understanding and good will. If either or both our countries miss this appeal for peace the results could be tragic...Perhaps Mr. Khrushchev by recording and televizing your reply in English and my appeal in Russian simultaneously recorded and televized in the Soviet Union and in the United States, might contribute to a better understanding and thereby ease tension. Also perhaps to have your reply and my appeal published in Russian and in English in a small booklet form so that every man, woman and even children would have the opportunity to read our statements. I am very anxious that my appeal and your reply should receive the widest publicity possible. If and when your reply is received the New York Times will probably publish the full text of your reply and my appeal. I am prepared to go before the United States people and campaign for friendlier relations between our two peoples, if only the Soviet Union will reciprocate...with deeds...Somewhere along the line there has to be a beginning.

In conclusion Mr. Khrushchev I hereby appeal to you, to the leaders, to the Government and to the people of the U.S.S.R. again, and again. Lead the way...We must do everything humanly possible to save the world from the imminent catastrophe which is now approaching.

I am only human. I have done all I could to forwarn the Soviet Union and the United States of the imminent disaster that both our coutries is facing. Now the decision of war...or peace... is up to the Soviet Union together with the United States. It is "a most serious challenge" to mankind.

Will the Soviet Union take the initiative...to stop the cold war? And meet the challenge squarely, honestly, sincerely, and with deeds...

Will the Soviet Union develop a new instrument for peace?

Will the Soviet Union develop a new instrument to prevent war?

Will the Soviet Union develop a new instrument that will create an atmosphere of cordiality and friendship with the United States?

Will the Soviet Union with its growing military and scientific might which is now concentrating its intercontinental missiles in the direction towards the United States and its allies Begin a New Era of Good Will, and for a better future for the World?

I believe that there is no time to lose. We have everything, but time. Every minute delayed is precious time lost. The slogan should be "Act today, Tomorrow may be too late"...

I thank you again from the bottom of my heart for your kind consideration.

May I take this opportunity to wish you, the Government, and the people of the Soviet Union on the 40th Celebration of the October Revolution...Health, Happiness, and above all, Ever-Lasting Peace...

May God guide you, and the Soviet government wisely...

Hoping for an early reply,

I remain

Respectfully yours,

Louis Teplitsky

Louis Teplitsky

Louis Teplitsky
3181 Rochambeau Ave.
New York 67, N. Y.

October 10, 1957

Mr. Nikita S. Khrushchev
First Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union
c/o Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union
Andrei Gromyco

Dear Mr. Khrushchev:

This is my third communication. I do hope that you will forgive me for troubling you again. I also hope that you had a pleasant vacation and are well.

Again on October 6, 1957 I had the pleasure listening to your voice. The Interview with Mrs. Franklyn D. Roosevelt, via tape, over the Mutual Broadcasting System W.O.R. New York. I was glad to hear the frank statements you made. I also read with great interest your interview with the New York Times reporter James Reston on October 8, 1957.

I pray, and all mankind is praying, that your desire for peace and understanding with the United States to cease tension, may soon become a reality.

On October 4, 1957 the Soviet Union launched a man made "Space Satellite" that is now moving through space 560 miles above the earth's surface at the rate of 18,000 miles an hour around our globe; I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the Soviet Union for the great achievement. I know that you must be proud that you were able to launch the "Space Satellite" before the United States.

It was Soviet scientists and technicians who built and launched this symbol of man's coming liberation from the forces which hitherto bound him to earth. To them must go the congratulations of all humanity.

Every great achievement of modern technology opens up two roads before humanity. One is the road of hope and promise, a road made possible if men of all nations and all beliefs will work together for the good of humanity. The other is the road of despair and disaster, the road which is followed if the great achievement of universal science is used for the purpose of aggression, death and destruction.

The "Space Satellite" can be used to aid mankind, or they can be incorporated into intercontinental ballistic missiles delivering hydrogen bombs upon defenceless millions. It is for the Soviet Union and the United States to decide which of these two roads shall be taken. And the fantastically rapid tempo of modern scientific and technical advance permits no dawdling over reaching the decision. Because of this dramatic event that has just taken place I firmly believe that it is possible that the Soviet Union and the United States will have in a very short time missiles to place every major city and base of the Soviet Union and the United States under threat of annihalation.

Yes, Mr. Khrushchev, the race is on in full swing... and from now on do not underestimate the people of the United States. Just as we underestimated the people of the Soviet Union, because, it may well be a tragedy to all mankind. Over confidence sometimes does strange things to men, it delays progress

prayers and at times it drives us to commit great errors, and even self destruction.

Perhaps, we were complacent, Perhaps we were asleep, but we have now got the message....

As I have mentioned in my previous letter of Sept. 25, 1957 That "Pearl Harbor" is still Fresh in our memory....Therefore, the stimuly we got from the "man made moon" was as excellent therapy I assure you, and we are now quite awake....

Now, Mr. Khrushchev, what is the answer to all that?

The truth is that the greatest adventure of all is not to go to the moon or to explore the rings of Saturn. It is rather, to understand the heart and soul of man and to turn away from wrath and destruction and toward creativeness and brotherly love. We cannot look at the world today without realizing that our mastery of ourselves has not kept pace with our mastery of inanimate nature. We now have the power to destroy each other and all the works of civilization, but we have not yet invented a sure way to control this power. In a sense, a part of us never came down from the tree, never came crawled out of the cave. Now we must arise out of our long childhood and play the part of wise, mature and humane men- all of us,.... all mankind,....of whatever political or religious faith...or we shall surely die...

This Mr. Khrushchev is humanity's long range problem. I am writing all this to you because, if I wouldn't have faith in you as a man with a soul...I would not be able to express my feelings, so frank, so sincere.

The world can take some hope from the "Atom for Peace Conference" that has opened in Vienna. There...a thin sliver of light has broken through the clouds of the cold war, for the whole world to see. However, it is a faintly glimmering light, which only the Soviet Union together with the United States should work ceaselessly so that the light of hope is not blotted out....Just as the launching of the "space satellite", will go down imperishably in the annals of humanity as the date on which one of man's finest achievement was accomplished. So will the birth of the "International Atomic Energy Agency" which before long eighty-two governments will join. This is a date which will appear in the history books. It may well be an epochal date in history itself.

I pray and hope that mankind everywhere will always remember that it was the United States through President Eisenhower who initiated the "Atom for Peace."

In conclusion I like to leave you Mr. Khrushchev with the following thought: The Soviet Union has made mistakes and the United States has made mistakes. But our errors need not to be final. We are not perfect. We are not expected to be perfect. We are human. We can transform our errors that separate the peoples of the Soviet Union and the United States, into good, which will bring our two peoples together.

This is the great possession of man. We must accept responsibility for our errors, and the hurt we caused others.

I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your kind consideration.

Hoping to hear from you soon.

My best wishes to you.

I remain

Respectfully yours,

Louis Teplitsky

Louis Teplitsky

Louis Teplitsky
3181 Rochambeau Ave.
New York 67, N. Y.

I consider the contents of my letter to be of primary interest and concern not only to the Soviet Union and the United States, but to the entire civilized world.

Accordingly, I am forwarding the full text of the letter I have sent to Mr. Nikita S. Khrushchev to the following Chiefs of States:

Dwight D. Eisenhower
The President of the United States

John Foster Dulles
Secretary of State

Harold Macmillan
Prime Minister of the United Kingdom

Maurice Bourges-Maunoury
Premier of France

Mr. Dag Hammarskjold
Secretary General of the United Nations

Sir Leslie Munro
Ambassador from New Zealand and President of the 12th General Assembly of the United Nations

His Excellency Prince Wan
Walthayaken of Thailand
Former President of the United Nations

Mau Tse-Tung
Chief of the Communist Party of the People's Republic of China

Jawaharlar Nehru
Prime Minister of India

Abchiro Fajiyama
Foreign Minister of Japan

Dr. Charles Malik
Foreign Minister of Lebanon

Konrad Adenauer
Chancellor of West Germany

General Romulo
of the Phillippines

S. W. R. D. Bandanaike
Prime Minister of Ceylon

Senator Herbert Humphrey
United States Senate
Foreign Relations

John G. Diefenbaker
Prime Minister of Canada

David-Ben-Gurion
Prime Minister of Israel

Marshal Tito
President of Yugoslavia

Malik Firoz Khan
Foreign Minister- Pakistan

His Holiness Pope Pius XII
The Vatikan

Harry S. Truman
Former President of the United States
Independence, Missouri

Louis Teplitsky
3181 Rochambeau Ave.
New York 67, N. Y.

~~October 1, 1957~~
Sept. 25-1957

Mr. Nikita S. Khrushchev
Chief of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union
The Kremlin,
Moscow, U.S.S.R.

Dear Mr. Khrushchev:

I am taking the liberty and am writing to you my second letter and it is my sincere hope that you will grant this letter your kind consideration, and if possible to find some way to have my two letters published uncensored in the Soviet Press.

Although I have received no reply as yet, nevertheless, as I have stated in my previous letter of August 1, 1957 that I have faith in mankind and I am a determined man who does not accept so easily defeat, especially of such a vital subject that concerns every man, woman, and child, not only of the Soviet Union, but of the United States as well; in fact, it concerns the entire civilized world. With that thought in mind I will try to clarify the reasons, why I have undertaken to communicate such a message. There are several reasons.

First, I am addressing you personally because you have proven by your actions that you are a leader of a great people.

Second, you have granted the Soviet people a certain amount of freedom that they did not have before. You have expressed interest in their welfare, and I admire you for such courage. The Soviet people suffered much, and certainly deserve to share the fruit of their labour. It is a recognition of the sweat and toil of the Soviet people who have struggled so hard and have rebuilded the country that was so ravished by World War II.

Third, As I watched you on the first televised appearance "Face the Nation" interview over the Columbia Broadcasting System in the United States, you appeared in my home, in my living room, As though you were my guest, so close I felt your presence. Perhaps other people in the United States felt the same. I don't know as I speak only for myself. You seemed to me to be human as any other being, You were responding to questions as any other Government Official. Again you are human, you have a heart, and I believe that within you there is goodness. Despite what other people may think, I for one believe that there is goodness in every human being, just as there is bad. But in this letter I am not even thinking about the bad or evil side of man.

I am addressing you Mr. Khrushchev to the good side within your soul. As human you desire love, you desire happiness, you desire kindness, for yourself, for your loved ones, and for the Soviet people.

Fourth, in my previous letter of August 1, 1957, I expressed my feelings Why I love the United States? Why our sons have made the supreme sacrifice with their lives for the American way of life and why we are ready to do it again if necessary.

As I am writing this letter I cannot help but wonder what has happened to the friendship that existed during World War II between the Soviet Union and the United States? During that period when our mutual friendship was so sincere and goodwill towards the Soviet Union was felt by all the American people. My residence was then in Los Angeles, Calif. I also travelled around the United States, and wherever I went I heard Soviet Red Army songs. Over the radio, and in the American homes everyone was singing Russian songs, even on the Concert Stage. The American people from the poorest to the richest gladly and with all their hearts gave direct aid to the Soviet people. Economic and Military we spent about $11,000,000,000 during 1941-45 when the Red Army reeled back under the Nazi attack. It enabled the Soviet Union to survive the inferno of Hitler's might.

I recall when the United Nations was formed twelve years ago, and when the U. N. Charter was signed June 26, 1945 in San Francisco.

I also recall a Special Concert given by the City of Los Angeles in honour of the Soviet Delegation on their way home from the San Francisco United Nations Conference. Headed then by Soviet Foreign Minister Vyacheslav M Molotov. I personally had the privilege to participate in my profession as a concert singer at that reception at the Los Angeles Shrine Auditorium, with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra under the direction of the world renound orchestra conductor Bruno Walter. Thousands of people came to the Shrine Auditorium Concert to greet and to cheer the Soviet Union Delegation. And everytime a Soviet delegate appeared on the stage he was enthusiastically received by the American people with a tremendous reception of applause. The Soviet people's "Heroic stand at Stalingrad" was still fresh in our memories then. Even today the American people have not forgotten "Stalingrad."

As I stood on that stage and as I looked around on that large auditorium that was packed to capacity and as I admired that tribute and ovation that was given to the Soviet people from the American people I couldn't help thinking then, that we fought...we endured...and together we defeated our common enemy. I was overwhelmed with joy, and I thought then that, that friendship between our two countries would never be broken and were destined to endure forever.

How friendly and how neighborly was the atmosphere then!

The United Nations was just created, where hope for peace was established. But today. Where is that unity? Where is that mutual trust that existed then? Where is that peace that the people of the world is so longing for? Today when a Soviet citizen meets a United States citizen we stare at each other as though we have come from another planet. We are even afraid to speak to one another so as not to be accused to be pro communist, or pro capitalist. Day by day we are drifting farther and farther apart, day by day we are moving closer and closer to a third World War.

One day I read in the Press that the Soviet Union is sending arms to Syria and Egypt, the next day I read that the United States is sending arms to Jordan and Turkey.

The Soviet Union has a Warsaw Pact, The United States and the West has a Nato Pact. The Soviet Union has a Pact with Communist China. The West has a Baghdad Pact. The Soviet Union controls East Berlin, The West, West Berlin. The Soviet Union controls North Korea, the West, South Korea. Yes, it is a vicious circle. Where and when will it all end?....

We hear talk that there is not going to be a third world war, because the Soviet Union and the United States have the hydrogen bombs, the intercontinental ballistic missiles, etc.

I believe that, that is wishful thinking. Because as long as we continue to spread twenty four hours a day a barrage of hostile propoganda and counterpropoganda of hatred towards one another, and as long as that propoganda is to incite to stir and to rouse passions of hatred, which cause to undermine friendly relations. And all what the United States has done for the Soviet Union is completely forgotten.....

As long as the charges and countercharges, accusations and denials continue uninterrupted, I regret to say that there will never be Peace. That inflamatory propoganda of hatred cannot go on indefinitely, some of these days it will explode right in our face; then it will be a black day for civilization.

I read in the Press statements that in the next war we will use clean bombs with less hazardous Radio fall out. I personally believe that, that is also wishful thinking. Because if there is a third World War, don't let us kid ourselves... The High Command of the Soviet Union and of the United States will probably use every weapon in their command to wipe out our cities and kill its inhabitants not by the hundreds, not even by the thousands, but by the millions.....

Now when we are thinking of another world war let us not forget those millions of human beings from all over the world who have died in World War II. There they lie in the fields and in woods and valleys and jungles; In the bottom of the sea; on the battlefields in the Phillipines; in the death march of Bataan, Corregidor, Okinawa, Formosa, Guadalcanal, Hiro-Jima, etc. Somewhere on the battlefields in France, in Germany, in Italy, in Africa, Yes and in Korea.... Our young men, once so handsome and so joyous taken from us. The son from the mother, the husband from the wife, the dear friend from the dear friend. Our sons lie dead scattered all over the world. War is no life. It is death. War is the filthiest, rottenest, it is the most damnable disease that man has invented.

The American people has not forgotten the last war. The wounds has not been healed yet. The Army, Navy, and Veterans Hospitals are still filled with wounded and sick, crippled, blind and emotionally disturbed from the last war and the Korean campaign.

Yes, Mr. Khrushchev and what about the millions of Soviet people killed in the battle or murdered, or Soviet prisoners left to die, of starvation, or frozen to death, or died in gas-chamber and whose bodies were reduced to ashes in crematories. Yes, I also had a share in it, my father, my brother, my three little sisters ranging from three to seven years of age were among those who were murdered by the Nazis in the Ukraine....

The Nazi period was the lowest point in German history and the world must not forget it. The German people must not forget it. The Soviet people and the American people must not forget it They have not died in vain. Let us pay homage to those millions who died so that we may be free. But are we Free?.....

Yes, indeed I am profoundly alarmed, and I pray that you Mr. Khrushchev should be profoundly alarmed and all the leaders of the Soviet government should be profoundly alarmed, Yes and the leaders of the United States government should also be profoundly alarmed, then perhaps I pray to God that mankind will begin to act, because eventually if this cold war continues any longer, an armed conflict is inevitable. We have perfected new weapons to kill more people in less time more efficiently. Any future major war with use of modern weapons would wipe out civilization. Great distances will no longer play a decisive role. The means of conveyance for hydrogen bombs, the most formidable weapons, make it possible to bring them instantly to the remotest areas of any continent of the world by intercontinental ballistic missiles.

Above all these stands the fact: that a Soviet city destroyed by a hydrogen bomb delivered by an American plane or an American intermediate range missile has its inhabitants just as dead as those of an American city destroyed by a hydrogen bomb delivered by a Soviet intercontinental ballistic missile, or a bomb dropped from a plane. Let us not forget these tragic facts, that man's new ability to destroy himself and all life on this planet.

The fundamental problem remains that of reaching understanding and harmony among all nations and all peoples. Specially the United States and the Soviet Union. We dare not lose sight of that key imperative. Thus far, neither the United States nor the Soviet Union has found a formula for lasting peace, although that is the announced purpose of our two countries, and our allies. The people of the United States want peace and friendship, we don't want war with the Soviet Union. Perhaps the Soviet Union will not attack the United States. And certainly the United States will not attack the Soviet Union. The United States has never attacked any country. Nevertheless, the people of the United States will never forget "Pearl Harbour" and therefore we will always be vigilant...and remain on guard...to safeguard our security and be ready for any eventuality. If the policies of the Soviet Government are not changed, it is only a question of time before the cold war that is raging now will become a hot war. And that could only bring great calamities on the world.

I do not believe that the Soviet Government would wish to bring a thermonuclear destruction upon the Soviet Union that took them a century to build; just as I do not believe that the United States government would wish to bring the thermonuclear destruction upon the United States.

I hope that the Soviet Government is well aware of the capabilities of the United States in case the United States is attacked.

I also hope that the United States government is well aware of the same capabilities of the Soviet Union.

The question is Now where do we go from here? And what are we going to do about it? The cold war has been on for such a long time that even a child would be able to predict what will happen next. For example. If the Soviet government encouraged Egypt or Syria to attack Jordan or Iraq or Turkey the United States will instantly countermove perhaps against Syria. If the Soviet army moves against Norway the United States will counter-attack. If the United States should attack East Berlin, the Soviet Union will attack West Berlin. If the Soviet Union or Communist China attacks South Korea, the United States will counter-attack some other place. And so whenever the Soviet Union moves, the United States moves, and whenever the United States moves the Soviet Union moves.

This is it. It is as true as day. As far as I can see the United States and the Soviet Union have established a Line... and neither the United States or the Soviet Union dare not cross that line without a third world war.

I also believe that if the Soviet Union would encourage Syria or Egypt to attack and destroy that little country Israel that the Soviet Union has helped to create, and murder those two million Jewish refugees like Hitler did.

Then despite the present silence of the United States government if Israel is attacked I believe that the United States armed forces, by land, by sea, and from the air, will act swiftly and without hesitation to defend that little country Israel. Just as the United States would defend Jordan, Iraq, Turkey or Lebanon. How do I know it? Because the memories of Hitler and his extraordinary brutalities who destroyed 6,000,000 Jewish people has not been forgotten by the American people and by the Congress of the United States and the United States government is responsible to the Congress of the United States, and the Congress are the American people.

So if any country or countries would misinterprete the silence of the United States government that it will let Israel be destroyed I believe that, that will be a terrible miscalculated mistake. So let us face it. Israel will never be destroyed unless there is a third world war, then we will all perish.

I further believe that we have reached a dead end street. And if there are small countries who are contemplating to attack their neighbors with the hope or promise that the Soviet Union or the United States will come to their aid I think that these countries better think twice before undertaking such adventures, they might be starting something that they might never be able to finish.

Believe me Mr. Khrushchev I have no inside track for my information neither from the Soviet Union High Command nor from the Kremlin foreign office. Neither do I have the inside track from the United States High Command, or from the State Department. I am sure that what I have stated is really not news to the Soviet Government or to the United States Government.

On the other hand, perhaps the people of the Soviet Union and the people of the United States are not aware of the danger that is facing our two countries. So perhaps it is news to our two peoples.

I am stating facts as they are. It is reality...I speak as I see it, honestly, frankly, and sincerely. And the sooner the Soviet people and the American people begin to realize the state of affairs of our two countries perhaps the sooner something constructive will be done. Perhaps by pointing out the dangers of another war will bind the Soviet people and the American people closer together.

* * * * * *

Historic changes has taken place in the Soviet Union. You have made such tremendous progress in the scientific and technical fields. The Soviet people are now highly educated, they are technologically competent in the field of industry that have won them the respect of the world. Now perhaps the Soviet people would probably like to have a more normal life and enjoy a higher standard of living and perhaps more luxury. The Soviet people would perhaps like to spend more time with their loved ones, with their wives and children or with their parents, instead of being with the Armed Forces.

Those things not only applies to the Soviet Union but to the United States as well, and to every nation that has to keep an army for defense.

Thus far, neither the Soviet Union nor the United States has found a formula for lasting peace, although that is the announced purpose of both our countries. Actually at the present time our two countries are expending our wealth and our resources in defensive armament and in the training of troops who could, to advantage, be engaged in production enterprises. We are wasting the wealth of our citizens. It is impossible to believe that the current armament race can continue forever without impoverishing our two countries.

Certainly the United States is slowly and dangerously moving into an economic recession because the Government demands too large a share of each person's earnings.

The Soviet Union has not been able to raise the standard of living of her people, to appreciably increase the availability of consumers goods because of the enormous cost of armaments. With that wealth we spend on armaments, we could eliminate poverty and disease in both our countries.

To begin with I believe that the first step is to declare a cease fire to the cold war that is going on, and end the hostile propaganda waged towards one another. Lately it has been rising in intensity. The second step is to stop the armament race and that should be taken up through the United Nations.

We should be thankful that there is a United Nations. Perhaps had the Nations of the world forced to live the past twelve years without a common meeting place: without the basic rules by which they should conduct themselves; without the machinery for peaceful settlement of international differences; without a place to air disputes and seek agreements, the world might not have survived these twelve years. The stresses and strains have been so great, the idiological conflict so sharp, and the destructive power of weapons available so immense that without the unifying power of the United Nations we could by this time have destroyed ourselves.

For the best interests of all the world's people I pray and hope that the Soviet Union will initiate at the twelfth General Assembly good will towards the United States and to begin to work ceaselessly to effect an end to the cold war. Instead of a great wall separating the people of our two countries so that any fruitful conversation even is impossible, there ought to be on the part of all a readiness and a desire to talk together in a spirit of neighborly and trust, to meet together and to work out an understanding of our problems. We should meet together to find viewpoints held in common and thus help us to understand one another. I believe that there is nothing more important than by helping people understand one another. We know so little about each other and have so little confidence. I therefore firmly believe and I hope Mr. Khrushchev that you will agree with me that the people of the Soviet Union and of the United States deserve a release from fear, from the burden of a terrible uncertainty.

The people of the world are tired and exhausted from this cold war, we all long for such a release. Perhaps we could find a common ground of agreement and perhaps most important a key that could unlock the Soviet people's and the American people's "therapeutic resources" that will help us to love one another, instead of hating one another.

Dear Mr. Khrushchev I appeal to the Soviet Government to take the initiative and let us banish that fear and distrust of one another. Let the Twelfth General Assembly of the United Nations become the Assembly that endeth the cold war. Let it be the beginning of a new era.

Although the American people would be proud if the United States Government could undertake such a drive that will end the cold war, nevertheless I sincerely believe that the people of the United States would be willing and happy to undergo that honour and pride and give the credit to the Soviet Union. Yes, I believe that the American people are well aware that the United States cannot do it alone, just as the Soviet Union cannot do it alone. I do sincerely and honestly believe that the American people will be willing to make more sacrifices for the cause of peace as long as it didn't endanger our way of life, our freedom, our liberty, and our security, if the Soviet Union could reciprocate by also making sacrifices.

The United States and the Soviet Union ought not to be enemies. It would mean much to the peace of the world if our two great countries became cooperative, settling our problems beneficially.

It would mean much to the world if there were an assurance that there would be no further unpleasantness between the United States and the Soviet Union. I firmly believe that if more people of the Soviet Union and of the United States could get to know a little more about each other, it might help in some small way to ease the bitterness and suspicion that have dominated our relations in recent years. I am sure that a good many of Soviet people would like that, if the Soviet Government could do something about it.

Despite all the propaganda in the cold war there are signs that all is not black. It is gratifying to hear that tourists from the Soviet Union will soon begin visiting the United States, now that the regulations requiring fingerprinting of visitors has been relaxed by the Congress of the United States. Cultural exchanges of television programs between the United States and the Soviet Union will soon become a reality. Also there is official assurance from Washington that athletes from Communist China will be admitted to the United States without discrimination.

By now I am sure that the Soviet Government realizes the fact that capitalism cannot be destroyed short of a third world war. I believe that the leaders of the Western World had also come to a similar realization regarding Communism.

Therefore, whether the Soviet Union likes it or not, it is going to have to live with capitalism. And whether the Western World likes it or not, it is going to have to live with communism. It is only by so doing that a decent world can be made for either of them.

Finally perhaps the Soviet Union who is about to celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary of the Octobur Revolution will begin a new era,

Not with more resolutions,

Not with little wars or big wars,

Not with hatred,

but....

With peace, with stability, with understanding, with reasoning, with friendship, with love, with kindness, and with good will....Specially towards the United States. And knowing the American people as I do I can assure you that our people will reciprocate twofold for your kind deeds.

I am writing all this because I have confidence in the ultimate success if the Soviet Government undertakes such a step forward.

I am writing all this because I have faith in God. I have faith in mankind; I have faith in you Mr. Khrushchev, and I have faith in the Soviet people.

I know that the easiest thing is to be bad, or to do bad, or to hurt some one, to attack or to make war; but to make peace, to be good or to do good is the hardest thing in the world. But from goodness we are richly rewarded with happiness. It is time that the people of the world begin to realize, and breath fresh air of peace...

The world hasn't had Peace for a long-long time... If the Soviet Union could give the world that gift of good will expressed through deeds.... It would be the best contribution that the world has ever received from a nation....

I do hope Mr. Khrushchev that you will forgive me for writing such a long letter. I thank you for patience and your tolerance towards this communication.

Perhaps, by writing this I am now giving myself up to the miracle that is being accomplished within me. Who can tell... Perhaps this letter might create such a chain of reaction that will electrify the entire world.

Perhaps this is the door through which the world will pass from the cold war to friendship and love, and above all, ever lasting Peace....

I like to close this letter with the following thought

"There is only one earth....If we do not live together, we will die together...."

Perhaps you do not believe in God or in Prayer, But I do believe, and I hereby envoke a prayer.

May God Bless the Soviet People with happiness and peace....

May God guide you wisely.

Please do honour me with a reply.

I thank you again.

Respectfully yours,

Louis Teplitsky

Louis Teplitsky

Louis Teplitsky
3181 Rochambeau Ave.
New York 67, N. Y.
U.S.A.

August 1, 1957

Mr. Nikita S. Khrushchev
First Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the Kremlin
Moscow, U.S.S.R.

Dear Mr. Khrushchev:

I am taking the liberty of addressing you a letter, and it is my sincere belief that you will grant this letter your kind consideration.

I am writing to you because you are the only person who could assist me.

Recently the New York Times has published a letter written by a Soviet citizen of Leningrad. While reading and rereading that letter I thought how much such an exchange of open letters could contribute to a better understanding of our two peoples and thereby cultivate a better atmosphere which will lead to a friendship and peace to the two great and powerful countries in the world.

I therefore have decided to write an Open letter to the people of the Soviet Union. My subject is "Why I Love the United States of America."

It is a subject that is close to my heart and I am therefore able to express my feelings frankly and sincerely. Although some of my friends where I work have tried to discourage me not to write the letter, that it was a waste of time and effort, that no Newspaper in the Soviet Union will be permitted to publish it. However, I am a determined man and this is a vital subject and my faith in mankind is strong, and because of that faith I have full confidence in my undertaking. I therefore shall greatly appreciate it if you could find someway to have this open letter published uncensored in the Moscow Pravda, or any other paper you may recommend.

I also firmly believe that a similar letter written by a Soviet Citizen expressing His or Her love for the Soviet Union to be published here in the U.S.A. uncensored in the New York Times or any other Newspaper at your choosing.

Although no newspaper has any advance knowledge of what I am doing, nevertheless, I am sure that it will be published here in the United States if requested.

I appreciate that your time is invaluable with affairs of state, but I think a few minutes of your time to consider my attempt, might be of immeasurable value to our two countries.

First, a few words about myself. I am a disabled World War II veteran, am now temporarily employed as a Bus Boy at a Long Island Hotel. I am not a politician. I am not a rich man. The war has disabled me for life...What I desire is peace...above everything else, and so this little attempt of my part might bring me a little happiness. That is all I desire of life...is to make other people happy.

An Open Letter to the People of the Soviet Union

"Why do I love the United States?" I, of course, speak only for myself as a U.S. citizen, but I know that the words expressed herein are the sentiments of the people of the U.S.A.

I Love the U.S.A. because the people of the U.S.A. are a charitable people, a kind humanitarian people, because it is in our blood and in our veins to help mankind, our forefathers came to the U.S.A. from all over the World because of oppression and persecution, seeking not riches, but freedom, liberty, and justice, and therefore we know and, above all we feel through personal experience, the sufferings of mankind the world over. We feel the misery, the pain, the hunger, and we react to those feelings.

And therefore it doesn't really matter what kind of an Administration we have had in Washington, D.C. or will have here in the U.S.A. be it, a Republican or a Democratic...

The American people from our first President of the U.S. George Washington, to Abraham Lincoln, Woodrow Wilson, Herbert Hoover, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, and now President Dwight D. Eisenhower...have always had a plan, and always will have a plan to aid humanity wherever they may be.

The people of the United States have proved their friendship to the Soviet people during World War II when we have fought together as comrades, the same enemy, for the same cause, for freedom against brutality and the tyranny of Hitlerism. And now I sincerely believe that that attitude of the American people that existed when we were fighting our common enemy has not changed, despite our two political idiologies.

I love the United States, because we have a Constitution that was created over 170 years ago, and today it is as though it was born yesterday, and it is as fresh as the air we breathe. I love the United States because the American people like the Soviet people are a determined and courageous people. When we set our task towards something, we do not rest until our goal is attained.

I Love the people of the United States because the people of the U.S.A. and I sincerely believe so do the people of the Soviet Union hate war, because war is Hell....

I Love the United States and its way of life---I love the lakes and the hills, the parks and the valleys. And I love the souls of the men and women who look upon the lakes and hills.

I Love the people of the United States for their hatred of oppression, and their love of their right to know that they are free, and the willingness they have to die for that love.

I love the United States because the people of the U.S.A just like the people of the Soviet Union are a simple people. We are a God loving people. The people of the United States do not carry hatred to our former enemies of yesterday, or our would be enemies of today.

I love the United States, because the U.S. people, regardless of race, color, or religion, try their best to live up to the teachings of Christ-- "Peace on Earth and Good Will Towards Men."

This is the United States that I am proud of. This is the U.S.A. that our sons made the supreme sacrifice for with their lives so that the U.S.A. may be free...

This is my way, why I love my country, and its people. And as long as the way is made of strength and beauty and respect of human beings, as long as it permits each man, to be the man he wants to be, then I will love it to the end of my life, no matter what the pattern may be."

In conclusion, I do sincerely hope and pray that you will grant me my request and permit this open letter to be published in the Soviet Union.

I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your kind consideration.

May I wish the Government and the People of the Soviet Union Health, Happiness, and Peace....

I thank you again.

Please honour me with a reply.

Respectfully yours,

Louis Teplitsky

Louis Teplitsky

Terbush, Donald M

February 16, 1959

Mr. Donald M. Terbush
122 Morningside Drive
Bridgeport 6, Conn.

Dear Mr. Terbush:

I must first apologize for the long delay in answering your letter of January 9. Mr. Murrow has been involved in a number of extra documentaries which have filled his time so completely that his correspondence has fallen sadly behind.

Mr. Murrow has no copy of his introduction to AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS, and suggests that you might get one from Michael Todd Productions, at 729 7th Avenue.

Sincerely yours,

Sheila Hogg
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

I22 Morningside Drive
Bridgeport, 6, Conn.
January 9, I959

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am a Junior at Central High School,here in Bridgeport, Connedticut. Our English class has been discussing the film " Around The World In Eighty Days", and I am very anxious to obtain a copy of the introduction delivered by you at the beginning of the picture. I maintain that there were many well chosen words used, and that they expressed a great deal, but I have been challenged by another pupil, taking the opposite stand.

Is it possible that you might have a copy of this in your files, or that you might be able to lead me to a source? I have tried both libraries here in town, but they do not seem to have the introduction, just the story itself.

I would certainly be more than grateful if you can possibly help me on this matter. Thank you for any courtesy you might have the opportunity to lend.

Sincerely,

729 7th Ave

Donald M. Terbush
I22 Morningside Drive,
Bridgeport, 6, Conn.

Terrien, F. W.

SAN FRANCISCO STATE COLLEGE
1600 Holloway Avenue
San Francisco 27, California

May 27, 1959

Chic
Sp.

Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Gentlemen:

I wonder if you would be kind enough to send me two copies of Mr. Edward R. Murrow's excellent speech, delivered at the Radio and Television News Directors' Convention in Chicago last October 15.

I should be most grateful for this favor.

Sincerely,

Frederic W. Terrien
Associate Professor of Sociology

FWT:sah

Rec'd
5/30

TO.....

FROM.....

Dave Williams 12th floor
Jim Kane 4th floor

both in 485 Madison Ave both currently involved in project concerning people at CBS from North Carolina.

EM Letterton

F

922 Park Drive
Washington, N. C.
June 17, 1959

Bob Richards
General Mills, Inc.
Misseapolis 26, Minn.

Dear Sir:

I am writing you in regards to a program I am sure you will be interested in. A program to help on Juvenile Delinquency. This is something we all talk about but never seem to do much about. As you are on the National Committee, a track champion, and a Minister I am sure you have tried to do something so I would like to have your o opinion and possible your help on what I am trying to do.

I am interested in building Youth Centers and Community Buildings. This would be a memorial to some great person from the State in which the building would be built. Here in Washington we hope to build one to the Lafayette Escadrille as the youngest member came from here. Also, there is no memorial in the United States to these men who became our first Air fighters, In this there would be plaques and pictures of these men and other great Americans so that our children would always have men of great ideals before t them. Today they have no ideals before them to look to even in our schools.

I would like for a man of Science connected with a branch of our Armed Services once a month to make a talk to the Youth here. Also one of the special service groups play here. This will let the youth know that the Government cares for them and also reach some who otherwise might never hear from such men. I would like to see an annex built on this building by the Recruiting Departments so that they could talk with and show films ofour Armed Service to thes Youth. By this they would know something of the services so we would get a higher grade of people to enlist. They would also not go into the service when drafted hating it as they now do.

Continued -

I have a way I think to raise money to start building these buildings. This can be done by men and women as yourself. I have worked out a television show which I think and the people I have talked with also thinks would do it. Today television is doing a lot to help. This not only would help but be a series of shows seventy-five percent of the people would enjoy.

This would be done here in North Carolina by "The North Carolina Shower of Stars". Stars such as Andy Griffith, Edward R. Murrow, Ann Jefferies, Katheryn Grayson, Kay Kyser, John Scott Trotter, Sketch Henderson and others in sports, art, and science from North Carolina would appear on a show and donate their services to this cause so that the sponsor would give the money toward this building. I have no doubt that people like yourself would give ten minutes to combat the memories we have today.

I would appreciate an answer and opinion on this. I also believe that this sis the type show your sponsor would like as it is reaching so many people.

Sincerely,

E. M. Tetterton

Terrell, Edw

TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS
94 TEMPLE.
TELEPHONE
CENTRAL 2725.

4, BRICK COURT,
TEMPLE, E.C.4.
London.

3rd March, 1959.

My Dear Edward Murrow,

So the years have brought us together again. I was delighted to hear from Mr. John Fleming that you were willing to write the foreword to "Admiralty Brief" for the American edition and the commentary to a film. I could ask for no one more fitted to introduce the work to the American public.

May I say how much your television broadcasts in "Little World" are admired in this country.

I understand that you will be coming to England this month when we could meet and discuss the matter.

Yours sincerely,

Edward Terrell

(Edward Terrell, O.B.E.,Q.C.)

Mr. Edward Murrow,
580 Park Avenue,
New York, 21,
U.S.A.